Eccleſia Catholica utitur gentibus ad materiam operationis ſuæ, hæreticis ad probationem doctrinæ ſuæ; ſchiſmaticis ad documentum ſtabilitatis ſuæ: alios invitat, alios excludit, alios relinquit, omnibus tamen gratiæ Dei participandæ dat poteſtatem: ſive illi informandi adhuc, ſive reformandi, ſive recolligendi ſunt.
The true Catholike Church doth uſe the Gentiles as matter to worke upon, Heretikes for the triall of their doctrine, Schiſmatikes to prove their conſtancie: the firſt ſhe inviteth, the ſecond ſhe excludeth, the third ſhe leaveth, yet to them all ſhe offereth the grace of God: in inſtructing the Gentiles, reforming of Heretikes, and bringing home againe Schiſmatikes.

AD OMNIPOTENTEM DOMINVM, DEVM OPTIMVM
MAXIMUM, MUNIFICENTISSIMUM
& Benigniſsimum Servatorem noſtrum, Dominum Ieſum Chriſtum: Euchariſticon.

CLementiſſime Domine) Noachus bonus ille ſervus tuus; cum ex Arca ex graviſſimis undarum & fluctuum periculis elapſus, ſalvus in terram evaſiſſet, ſacrificium grati animi teſtimonium obtulit: Moſes fidelis tuus Miniſter, ſuperato maris profundo, & diſſipatis Pharaonis inſidiis, in litus egreſſus Canticum laudis tibi cecinit: Ego itidem ad iſtorum exemplum licet ſervus tuus indigniſſimus, poſt varia diſcrimina, poſt multos exantlatos labores, tanquam naufraga puppis ſcopulos minaces prætervecta, ad operis iſtius exitum veluti ad portum appellens, tuæ Majeſtati ſimiles gratias teneor perſolvere: Equidem huic operi ſuſtinendo vires meas longe impares fuiſſe, & tu noſti (Domine) & ego lubens agnoſco, ut ſuccumbendum mihi hic neceſſariò fuerit, niſi tu ſublevaſſes: huic operi pertexendo nullo modo ingeniolum meum ſuffeciſſet, niſi tu acumen indidiſſes: Verè jam in hujus operis ſucceſſu, & oneris iſtius levamine expertus ſum, quod gratioſe in Evangelio tuo promiſiſti: Venite ad me omnes, qui laboratis, & onerati eſtis, & ego reficiam vos. Matth.11.28. Quod olim ſtrenuus ille tuus athleta Sampſon de ſociis ſuis dixerat, idem ego verius de meipſo proferre poſſum: ſi non araſſem vitula tua, non inveniſſem ænigma hoc: Judic.14.18. Nec ego, niſi tuo auxilio ſuffultus aliquid in hoc negotio præſtitiſſem: Tu Domine, habes clavem Davidis, qui aperis, & nemo claudit: Apocal.3.7. Tu mihi aperuiſti fores, & reſeraſti januam, qua mihi ad ſecreta fidei myſteria, tanquam in domus abdita penetralia aditus patefactus eſt: Tuæ igitur bonitati, gratias, quas poteſt mea tenuitas, habeo maximas, cujus ſolius auſpiciis ad hoc opus ingreſſus ſum, cujus auxilio adjutus ad hunc qualemcunque exitum idem perduxi: Dico igitur cum Propheta: Lauda anima mea Dominum, laudabo Dominum in vita mea, pſallam Deo meo, quamdiu futurus ſum. Pſal.146.2.

Si quid in iſtius operis penſo abſolvendo peccaverim, ſi alicubi vel incuria, vel ignorantia titubaverim (ſicut me utrobique erraſſe ingenuè fateor) pro infinita tua miſericordia mihi condona Domine: Tibi animus meus innoteſcit, tibi intimi cordis receſſus patent, tu ſcrutaris renes meos: tu noſti Domine, me veritatis maximè indagandæ & propagandæ ſtudio inductum hoc opus ſuſcepiſſe: Tuo lumine præeunte me veram inveniſſe viam ſpero, & in recto tramite veſtigia fixiſſe: ſi alicubi à trita ſemita deviatum ſit, tu lux mundi ſplendidiſſima, & dux tutiſſimus me in viam revocabis: et illud Apoſtoli tui me conſolatur: Qui perfecti ſunt hoc ſentiunt, ſi quid aliter ſentitis, hoc quoque vobis Deus revelabit. Philip.3.15.

Nunc poſt hanc qualemcunque gratiarum actionem, et errorum humilem deprecationem, pergo bona tua cum venia, vota et poſtulata mea in tuæ clementiæ veluti gremium et ſinum effundere et expromere. Primo Majeſtatem tuam ſuppliciter rogo, ut Evangelicæ veritati, cujus me defenſorem et vindicem in hoc opere, tuo nutu et juſſu evocatus profiteor, proſperum ſucceſſum, et amplos progreſſus digneris dare: ut veritas paſſim prævaleat et dominetur, et Papiſtica ſuperſtitio indies decreſcat, et diminuatur. Eccleſiæ tuæ fines dilata, funes extende, hoſtes ſubjuga, Satanæ impetus reprime, Papiſtarum nefarios conatus cohibe. Agimus tibi pro rege noſtro Iacobo gratias maximas, quod illum ex tot pontificiorum conjurationum periculis incolumen ſervaveris: & diutiſſime precamur illum Eccleſiæ tuæ Anglicanæ ſalvum velis: ut tanquam alter Zorobabel Eccleſiæ ædificium, cujus

Pro meipſo jam homunciano obſcuro & infimo preces vehementes fundo, ut cum, poſtquam in arenam hanc deſcenderim, me multorum telorum ictibus objecerim, & paſſim tanquam in faciem meam malevolorum ſagittæ intentæ volitent: ſic imbecillum pugilem tuum gratia tua corrobores, ſpiritu fortitudinis imbuas, vires adaugeas, ut tam ſpe mercedis humanæ neglecta, cui tam multi apertis faucibus inhiant, & ſpretis minis, quibus tam facile terremur, invicto animo in veritatis tuæ profeſſione ad ipſum extremum ſpiritum perſiſtam: fac Domine Ieſu, ut me divinæ tuæ Majeſtati, totum in poſterum in ſervitutem dedam, nec hominibus placere ſtudeam. TO THE MOST CHRISTIAN, RIGHT NOBLE, MOST EXCELLENT AND Mightie Prince Iames, by the Grace of God King of Great Britaine, France, and Ireland, Defender of the true Chriſtian Faith, &c.

I Now preſent unto your Majeſtie (Moſt Gracious Sovereigne) this * third time this Treatiſe, in the which are handled all the Controverſies of Religion, wherein Proteſtants diſſent from Papiſts: thrice formerly I exhibited the ſame likewiſe, in the three former Editions to our late renowned Sovereigne of bleſſed memorie Queene Elizabeth: and now it of right belongeth to your Majeſtie, the true heire both of her Crowne and Vertues: Her Highneſſe while ſhee lived, brought us peace, and true religion with it: your Majeſtie hath procured continuance of both. Concerning the firſt, I may ſay (but more truly) as Tertullian in his time of the Roman Empire: Re vera orbis cultiſſimum hujus Imperii rus eſt, eradicato omni aconito hoſtilitatis, & rubo ſubdolæ familiaritatis, conſitum & amœnum ſuper Alcinoï pomarium & Midæ roſetum: Indeed Britaine is as the tilth field of your Empire, poyſonfull hoſtilitie being rooted out, and craftie familiaritie, well planted and pleaſant beyond Alcinous orchard, or Midas garden, &c. Publike hoſtilitie (God be thanked) we feare not, if ſubtill inſinuating, and fawning familiaritie might as well be ſhunned: And of the other, the eſtabliſhment of true religion, I may alſo ſay with Auguſtine, Modo nemo inſultat Chriſtianis aut ſi inſultat non publice inſultat; ſic loquitur mala, ut plus timeat audiri, quàm velit credi: Now no man inſulteth againſt Chriſtians, or if he inſult, he inſulteth not publikely, ſo that hee is more afraid to be heard, than willing to bee beleeved, &c. By your Chriſtian care this land is lightened with the knowledge of the Goſpell, as the Sunne with his bright beames doth illuſtrate the creature. Oppoſitions there are againſt the truth, but with like ſucceſſe, as they which kick againſt the prick; and as children run one at another with reeds inſtead of ſpeares: Papiſts object againſt the truth, ſubtilly, but not ſoundly, ſometimes wittily, but not pithily, they fight with vaine ſophiſtrie, not true Theologie: as Auguſtine hath an elegant ſpeech: Videte acumen, ſed vitreum, quaſi lucet vanitate, ſed frangitur veritate: See his wit, but brittle as glaſſe, it ſhineth with vanitie, but is broken with the veritie.

De verb. Apoſt. ſerm. 11.

Tertullian complained thus of the iniquitie of his times: Omne animi bonum, aut naſcitur, aut eruditur, aut cogitur — bona jam nec naſci licet, ita corrupta ſunt ſemina, nec erudiri, ita deſerta ſunt ſtudia, nec cogi, ita enervata ſunt jura: Everie good gift of the minde either groweth, is learned, or compelled — but now good things are neither ſuffered to grow the ſeed is ſo corrupted, nor yet can be learned, good ſtudies are ſo neglected, nor urged, the lawes are ſo weakened, &c. The two firſt are moſt true of the Romane Sectaries and Popes Diſciples: their ſeed and doctrine is corrupt, that grace cannot grow, the ſtudy of Scriptures neglected, that they cannot learne: yet the third we truſt they ſhall not finde, but that authoritie ſhall conſtraine them, whereunto their owne diſpoſition will not encline them. Now for the reſt of your Majeſties ſubjects, who love the truth, but fully underſtand it not, I have framed this Treatiſe, that they may be acquainted with the queſtions of religion controverted betweene us and the Papiſts, that having weighed the reaſons alleaged on both ſides, they may follow the Apoſtles rule: trie all things, and keepe that which is good. And thus ſhall it come to paſſe, that if they be φιλομαθεῖς, deſirous to know and learne, they ſhall bee πολυμαθεῖς, attaine to much learning and knowledge of the truth, as Damaſcene well ſaith:

But as your Majeſties Chriſtian deſire and endevour hath beene firſt to maintaine the veritie of doctrine; ſo I truſt it is your ſecond care alſo to provide for puritie of manners and diſcipline: for both theſe doe ſtand and fall together: as that ancient writer ſaid of one: Primo regulam adulterans fidei & ita ordinem adulterans diſciplinæ: Firſt hee adulterateth the rule of faith, and ſo alſo corrupteth the order of diſcipline, &c. And here I truſt your Excellent Majeſtie will give a faithfull ſubject leave, out of his love and dutie freely to diſcharge his conſcience: I have divers times heretofore preſented my ſelfe in this manner to your Highneſſe, neither ſtaying here did I take my ſelfe fully to have ſatisfied my dutie, untill I had offered my ſervice in this kinde to all your royall Iſſue and *neereſt Allies. This having by Gods gracious aſſiſtance, and your princely acceptance in ſome ſort performed, I now reſolve to reſt, and no more by my writing to importune or trouble your Majeſtie: And therefore as the laſt words of welwillers are moſt regarded, and beſt remembred; ſo I truſt this my laſt writing to your Majeſtie ſhall finde the like entertainment. Give me leave (my Soveraigne Lord and King) to ſay as Ambroſe did to that great Emperour Theodoſius: Neque imperiale eſt libertatem dicendi negare, neque ſacerdotale, quod ſentiat, non dicere: It is neither Princelike not to give libertie to ſpeake, nor Prieſtlike not to utter what hee thinketh: And that other ſaying of his I hope your Majeſtie will not miſlike: Audire eum, quem pro te audiri velis: You will not refuſe to heare him, whom you would have heard (in his prayer to God) for your ſelfe. There is then ſomewhat yet both in the Church and Common-wealth, which hath need of your princely cure; where the remedy is refuſed, the malady ſtill remaineth, as one excellently ſaith: Remedia vacabunt, cum crimina indulgentur, & crimina manebunt, ſi remedia vacabunt: In the Common-wealth in many places there is heard the cry of oppreſſion, by encloſures, diſpeopling and deſolation of townes, taking away of commons, overthrowing of ancient tenures and coppy-holds, and ſuch like: They which enrich themſelves by ſuch meanes, conſider only what they gaine, they regard not what other loſe: Ambroſe ſaith well unto ſuch, Fructus te putas poſſe capere gemitibus alienis, non compungeris Chriſtiane, cum vides in hoſpitio tuo lachrymas alienas: Doſt thou thinke to gaine by other mens groanes, art not thou pricked in thy heart, O Chriſtian, when thou ſeeſt other mens teares in thy houſe? Your Majeſties prudent and pious care hath ceaſed hoſtilitie abroad, but there is rapacitie at home: you have moſt happily quieted the lawleſſe borderers and outriders without, and we doubt not but you will ſee alſo in good time unto the pitileſſe diſorderers and inriders within: Ambroſe doth moſt gravely tax ſuch in this manner: Aiunt lupos leonum ſequi veſtigia, ut aliena rapina ſatientur, ſic iſti avaritiæ lupi prædonum veſtigia ſubſecuti ſunt, ut quod illorum rapacitati ſupereſſet, ipſorum cederet feritati: They ſay that the Wolves follow the Lions, to ſatisfie themſelves with the rapine of others, ſo theſe covetous Wolves ſucceed the robbers, that what remained after their ravening, may ſerve for their cruell taking, &c. So it is a pitifull caſe, that what was free from the theeviſh borderers, ſhould be ſpoiled by peeviſh oppreſſours: They are by Damaſcene well reſembled to the fire, which devoureth and conſumeth all: and to a violent ſtreame, that carrieth all things along with it: your Highneſſe princely equitie only as water can quench this fire, and as with the floud-gate and ſluce of juſtice ſtay the current of theſe raging waters: and with David give ſentence againſt them, that having many ſheepe, doe take from the poore that one which they have: your Majeſtie as another Iehoſophat hath often charged your reverend Judges, to execute juſtice without reſpect of perſon, or receiving of reward, that your ſubjects may bee delivered from wrong and oppreſſion: and ſo I truſt, (and God ſo grant,) that we ſhall have no occaſion to complaine of corrupt Judges, as Cyprian did in his time: Inter leges ipſas delinquitur, ſedet Iudex, & ſententiam vendit: qui ſedet crimina vindicaturus, admittit, & ut reus innocens pereat, fit nocens Iudex: conſenſere jura peccatis, & cœpit licitum eſſe quod publicum eſt: In the middeſt of the lawes offences are committed, the Judge ſitteth, and ſelleth his ſentence: he that ſitteth to puniſh offenders, is himſelfe an offender, to make the innocent guiltie, he firſt becommeth a nocent Judge, ſo the Lawes ſeeme to conſent with ſins, and that is taken to be lawfull, which is publike.

Geneſ.18.27.

I will here ſay with Abraham, Behold now I have begun to ſpeake unto my Lord, I will crave leave to touch one other great enormitie and that among great perſons, even of the Nobilitie: with whom it is too common to decide their quarrels by the ſword, and by ſingular combats to end their ſtrife and life together: they thinke it a diſhonour not to entertaine a challenge ſent unto them: but the Scripture ſaith otherwiſe, It is a mans glorie to paſſe by an offence: they which are provoked thinke by this meanes to right their wrong, and declare their innocencie: but the Wiſe man giveth other advice, Goe not forth haſtily unto ſtrife, leſt thou know not what to doe in the end thereof: the event is an uncertaine evidence: neither hath innocencie alwayes the maſterie: ſuch then ſinne of preſumption, and are found to be tempters of God, preſuming of his help, which he hath not promiſed: as there is extant an wholſome decree of this matter: Monomachiam non aſſumimus—nuſquam ut pro lege teneatur, divina ſanxit authoritas, cum hoc & hujuſmodi ſectantes Deum ſolummodo tentare videantur: We admit not of monomachies or ſingular combats, for although we read of ſome that did undertake them, as David with Goliah, yet no where is it appointed as a law by divine authoritie: but they which follow ſuch things ſeeme onely to tempt God, &c. This was the reſcript of Nicolaus Biſhop of Rome to Carolus the French King, who ſuſpecting his wife Theoberga of adulterie, deſired to have it tried by the ſpeciall combat of two Champions, but his demand was rejected as unchriſtian and unreaſonable. The like practice was condemned in a generall Councell * when as certaine Souldiers being hired, did uſe to combat together to ſhew their valour, and ſo many were ſlaine: Such an abuſe of the Sword-players Cyprian long before reproved: wherein Homo occiditur in hominis voluptatem, ut quis poſſit occidere, peritia eſt, ars eſt, ſcelus non tantum geritur, ſed docetur: Man was killed for mans pleaſure, and it was counted an act and skill to be able to kill a man, and ſo (ſaith he) a wicked act is not only practiſed, but preſcribed and taught, &c: This exorbitant courſe can only be reduced to order, by your Majeſties ſtrait Edicts and Lawes to bee made on that behalfe: as if the Cornelian Law were revived, Quæ non minus eum qui occidendi hominis cauſa cum telo fuerit, quam eum qui occiderit, puniat: Which as well puniſhed him that was found to have a weapon of purpoſe to kill a man, as him that killed him, &c. But this motion may ſeeme here to bee ſuperfluous, ſeeing your Majeſtie hath already by your princely * Proclamation taken ſome order herein; thus wiſely taxing the preſumptuous and prepoſterous attempts of ſome in this kinde: No quarrell of any ſubject can be lawfull except in defence of their Prince and Countrey: the revenging of all private wrongs only belonging to us under God, into whoſe hands he hath put the ſword for this purpoſe.

Now may it pleaſe your Majeſtie, that I may move ſome things touching matters Eccleſiaſticall, as more properly belonging to mine owne element and profeſſion: As for thoſe reverend perſons, which are preferred to the chiefe places of the Church, we have no occaſion to complaine; nay, wee have cauſe to rejoyce, and to give God and you thanks, for ſo well providing for this Church, in furniſhing the ſame with ſuch learned Biſhops, diligent Preachers, and faithfull Paſtors, as this age hath not afforded better: that we may here ſay with Ambroſe, Non mirum ſi is qui in pontificio primatus honorem obtinet, obtineat etiam in prædicando primatus eloquium: It is no marvell, if hee, that hath the prioritie of honour in the Pontificall Dignitie, have alſo in preaching the primacie of ſpeaking, &c: Yet ſome other things there are, which require you princely help: Firſt, the people in many places yet want inſtruction being deſtitute of ſufficient Teachers; and Teachers are wanting becauſe of ſcant maintenance: In divers Churches that ancient complaint of Ambroſe may bee taken up: Eget in ſede Presbyter, in altari Levita, in lectione Lector—mendicat infelix Clericus in plateis—totum, quod Levitarum eſt, in uſus ſuos vendicant alii: The Presbyter wanteth in his ſeat, the Levite ſtarveth at the altar, the Reader faileth in his reading—the poore Clergy-man beggeth in the ſtreet—all that which is the Levites (namely the tithes) others take to their owne uſe, &c. This inconvenience might eaſily be helped, if your Majeſties Lawes yet in force were executed: which make all Appropriations of Churches to bee void, where the Vicar is not convenably endowed, to informe the people, and keepe hoſpitalitie: But I leave this to your Majeſties princely and prudent conſideration: who is an Angell of God (as the woman of Tecoah ſaid to David) in hearing of good and bad. Now as ſome may complaine of want, ſo of others I would Hieromes complaint might not be renewed, De dignitate transfertur ad dignitatem, de cathedra ad cathedram, de ſuperbia ad ſuperbiam. Concerning the adminiſtration of the diſcipline of the Church a common complaint there is, that many inferiour officers convert the Eccleſiaſticall cenſures to their owne advantage, and ſo make a gaine of the ſins of the people, and turne the keyes of the Church rather to the * vexation, than reformation of your Majeſties ſubjects: I would commend unto ſuch Hieromes advice, Ne lucrum ſeculi quæras in Chriſti militia: Seeke not the lucre of the world in Chriſts warfare: I doubt not but that our reverend Governours of the Church will in their ſeverall Juriſdictions have a care of theſe things: But yet ſeeing the chiefe ſtroke in ſuch matters muſt proceed from your Majeſties royall authoritie, which wee neither with Papiſts utterly exclude, nor with Schiſmatikes too narrowly confine, I am bold thus to write.

* Some may be offended with this ſpeech, but I ſay with Auguſtine, Liberavi animam meam.

And for as much as the King is Cuſtos utriuſque tabulæ, as your Majeſtie doth profeſſe your ſelfe to be: as I have diſcovered ſome tranſgreſſions of the ſecond table, which have need of your princely cure; ſo I beſeech your Highneſſe to give mee leave to touch one or two principall breaches of the firſt table, which doe abound in this land; namely, the uſuall cuſtome of ſwearing, and taking in vaine the holy name of God, and the profanation of the Lords day. Concerning the firſt, God grant that this Land by repentance may eſcape the judgement denounced by the Prophet Ieremie: The land is full of adulteries, and becauſe of ſwearing the land mourneth. Among the Romaniſts this fault was diverſly cenſured: If hee were a Noble-man that was faultie herein, hee payed a pecuniarie mulct: if a Clergy-man, he was degraded: if an ordinarie man, he was excommunicate, or faſted with bread & water, or if he corrected not his fault, hee was caſt into priſon, or ſent to the gallies: But our righteouſneſſe ſhould exceed the righteouſneſſe of the Scribes and Phariſies. Some may in their haſte herein ſhew their infirmitie: but to make a cuſtome of ſwearing, and to doe it, as in a braverie, can have no excuſe: ſuch remember not that wiſe counſell, Accuſtome not thy mouth to ſwearing, neither take up for a cuſtome the naming of the Holy One, &c. Concerning the ſanctifying of the Lords day, the Prophet teacheth us to conſecrate it as glorious to the Lord, not doing our owne wayes therein, or ſeeking our owne will. But now many quite contrarie make it a day, wherein to ſerve their owne turne and pleaſure, ſpending it in riotous and exceſſive drinking, and in vaine ſports and delights, many not forbearing to travell with their beaſts and carts upon that day, without any great neceſſitie: Ambroſe well ſheweth how this day ſhould be beſtowed: All the day let us be occupied in prayer or reading: he which is unlearned, let him reſort to ſome holy man, to be inſtructed by his conference: let no worldly buſineſſe hinder divine; let not table play call away the minde, nor the pleaſure of hunting withdraw the ſenſe. This ſeemeth to have beene the uſe of Chriſtians then in hallowing the Sabbath: herein it were to be wiſhed that your Majeſties ſubjects both in Court and Countrey would follow the preſident of theſe times: And as your Highneſſe is a conſpicuous example to all the Land, in the intermiſſion of your princely recreation upon that day; ſo of late the *ſecond Citie in this Kingdome, (to the honour of God, and due commendation of thoſe Chriſtian Citizens be it ſpoken) hath to the joy of many taken order, that their ordinarie Carriers in their journey ſhould have allowance to reſt upon that day.

In all theſe things which I have mentioned, God I truſt will direct your royall heart to doe that which ſhall bee moſt to his glorie, the good of his Church, the diſcharge of your princely dutie, and your endleſſe comfort; that by a ſpeedy reformation of theſe and the like ſins, Gods ª judgements, which have ſhewed themſelves already in ſome part of this Land may be ſtayed: Then may your Highneſſe confidently pray unto the higheſt Majeſtie with faithfull Nehemiah, and ſay, Remember me according unto this, and pardon me according to thy great mercie. And thus craving pardon for my boldneſſe, aſſuring my ſelfe that your Majeſtie better approveth thoſe, which ª utter the truth in love, than uſe ᵇ flatterie by deceit: I end with the prayer which Tertullian was wont to make for the Emperour: I wiſh unto your Majeſtie long life, a ſecure government, a ſafe houſe, valiant armies, a faithfull Senate and Councellors, a good people, a quiet world, and whatſoever King or Subject can deſire: Which the gracious God grant for our bleſſed Lords ſake Chriſt Jeſus: to whom be praiſe for ever.

Queene of England, France, and Ireland,
Defender of the Faith, &c.

CHriſt Ieſus, the Prince of Princes, by whom Kings and Queenes doe reigne, who hath put the royall Scepter into your princely hand, under him to governe his people righteouſly, grant your Majeſtie long to ſit, and many happie yeares ſtill to reigne over us in all godlineſſe and peace, to his glorie, your endleſſe comfort, and the true joy of all your ſubjects.

This Epiſtle onely of the former Edition, I thought good ſhould ſtand, that the memorie of this Bleſſed Queen ſhould ſtill live and remaine among us.

Moſt gracious and dread Sovereigne, I have preſumed now this third time, to preſent this generall Treatiſe to your ſacred Majeſtie: wherein is contained the whole ſum of that holy faith and religion, which your Highneſſe maintaineth, and the Church of England profeſſeth, which your royall Scepter upholdeth, and this Chriſtian Realme beleeveth. Moſes built unto the Lord a tabernacle of tents, Salomon reared a temple made with hands: God hath raiſed up your Majeſtie to build him a ſpirituall houſe, to reforme religion, and to reſtore the ruines thereof: as the Prophet Iſay ſaith, Vocaberis inſtaurator ruinæ; & reſtitutor ſemitarum: You ſhall be called a repairer of the breaches, and a reſtorer of the decayed paths: As by Moſes rod, Eliſha's ſtaffe, Zorobabels ſtone of tin; ſo by your Highneſſe Scepter hath the Lord wrought wonders in this Nation.

Eſay 58.12.

The Prophet David maketh theſe three the ſupporters of Princes thrones, Veritie, Clemencie, Equitie: as he thus ſweetly ſingeth: Proſper with thy glorie, ride on, becauſe of the word of truth, of meekneſſe, of righteouſneſſe. Theſe whether as the brazen oxen, that held up the ſacred Laver in the Temple, or the ivorie Lions that ſupported Salomons Kingly ſeat, or as the fierie Horſe that drew Eliahs chariot, are the maintainers and upholders of the Princely ſtate: by theſe your royall Throne was firſt erected, and is ſtill maintained, and ſhall for ever be preſerved.

One thus commendeth the chaſtitie of Teuta Queene of Illyricum, Teuta Illyricorum Regina, ut longo tempore viris fortiſſimis imperaret miraculo meruit caſtitatis: Teuta by her miraculous chaſtitie obtained, that ſhe a long time a valiant people governed. The ſame thus writeth of Moſes clemencie: Omnium manſuetiſſimus prædicatur, & ideo per 40. annos principatum obtinuit: Moſes is reported to have beene a man of a moſt meeke ſpirit, and therefore his government continued fortie yeares. Another thus writeth of the ſingular temperance of the good Emperour Valentinian: Etiam ludo juventutis putavit abſtinendum: He in his ſporting youth uſed to abſtaine. And againe, Cœpit ita frequentare jejunium, ut plerunque ipſe impranſus convivium ſolenne ſuis comitibus exhiberet: Hee uſed ſo often to abſtaine, that when hee feaſted his Nobles, hee himſelfe faſted. If theſe three vertues then, Chaſtitie, Clemencie, Abſtinencie, as ſhining Diamonds adorne the princely dignitie, and as moſt ſtedfaſt props uphold their regall authoritie; we doe well ſee them all (I ſpeake not with flatterie, but that God may have the glorie) with a long and proſperous reigne by the Lords mercie crowned in your princely Majeſtie.

Cod. lib. 1. tit. 1. leg. 4.

Concerning the ſecond princely ornament of Pietie and true Religion, there can be nothing whereby Imperiall States are more ſafely preſerved, & the princely throne more ſurely eſtabliſhed: as the Lord himſelfe ſaith of that thrice vertuous King Joſias: Did hee not eat and drinke and proſper, when he executed judgement? and was not this becauſe he knew me ſaith the Lord? That ſaying is excellent which is inſerted into the Law; Nihil eſt quod lumine clarius præfulgeat quàm recta fides in principe; nihil eſt, quod ita nequeat caſui ſubjacere quam vera religio: There is nothing that ſhineth more brightly in a Prince, than the right faith; nothing leſſe caſuall than true religion. Among all other honours, which God hath vouchſafed to your Highnes, this is the greateſt, that he hath made you a nurſing Mother to his Church, a chiefe Patroneſſe of the Goſpell, and a Defender of the true faith: How may your Majeſtie rejoyce in this, yea and all true Chriſtians thorow the world have cauſe to joy therein; that by the Goſpell (ſet forth by your authoritie) ſo many ſoules are converted to God, that ſhould otherwiſe have periſhed in ignorance; ſo many lives ſaved, that ſhould have bin loſt for the defence of the truth; ſo many hereſies diſcovered, wherewith the world hath been deluded: So that in this behalfe we may well ſay of your Majeſtie as the wiſe men in the Proverbs, Many daughters have done vertuouſly, but you ſurmount them all: and as Ambroſe of noble Theodoſius: Etſi in aliis quoque laudabilis, tamen apex tuorum operum pietas ſemper fuit: Although in other things you are moſt commendable, yet your piety is the grace of all your works.

Prov.10.29.
Epiſt.8.ad Theod.

God hath not forgotten your faithfull ſervice to his Sonne Chriſt, but richly rewarded the ſame in earth, reſerving further an everlaſting crowne for the ſame in heaven: from hence commeth the peace and proſperity, the length and diuturnitie, the fame and magnificencie of your happy reigne: in you is fulfilled, that which was ſpoken of the Prophet David, Becauſe the King truſted in the Lord, and in the mercy of the moſt higheſt hee ſhall not ſlide: and as hee prophecieth of the reigne of Salomon: The Kings of Tarſhiſh, and of the Iles, ſhall bring preſents; the Kings of Seba and Sheba ſhall bring gifts. In like manner hath God honoured your Highneſſe, making your name famous in remote Kingdomes, ſo that both Sheba from the South, and Tarſhiſh from the Northerne ſeas, do preſent themſelves before your Highneſſe: and therfore we doubt not, but that you do moſt thankfully confeſſe with that Chriſtian Emperour Juſtinian; Per Chriſtum jura imperii ſuſcepimus, &c. By Chriſt, we have received our Empire: and againe, Faciat nos ſecundum voluntatem ejus regere: God grant I may governe according to his will.

But yet notwithſtanding this great honor abroad, there yet remain ſome diſloyall perſons at home, who miſlike the ſincerity of religion, and prefer the obſcurity of ſuperſtition; whoſe daſled eies the owle-light of Rome doth better pleaſe, than the Sun-ſhine of the Goſpell. When the Iſraelites went out of Egypt, there was not a dog to move the tongue againſt them; in the building of Salomons temple, the noyſe of a hammer was not heard: but we ſince wee have left the Egyptian darkneſſe, are continually barked againſt, and the building of the ſpirituall temple is hindred with the noyſe of contrarie hammers. To ſtop therefore the clamour of theſe mouthes, and to ſtay the beating of theſe hammers: I have brought the whole body of papiſtry in this book into every mans view, confuting the ſame, by ſcriptures, Counſels, Decrees, our Martyrs, and their owne writers. This I thought to be my part, that as under your Highneſſe peaceable reigne, I have growne up to this ſmall light and knowledge of the truth, (having been a ſimple Preacher thereof now theſe eighteen yeers) ſo, though not as a chiefe builder, yet as a ſerver and under labourer, I might bring ſomewhat toward the building of the Lords houſe.

Exod.11.7.

And now it is hight time (may it pleaſe your Majeſty) that every man ſhould arme himſelfe to fight for, and defend the truth: ſeeing, as ſerpents, when the ſun beginneth to decline, creepe out of their holes; ſo, many falſe ſeed men in this cold and declining age of the world; are diſperſed in corners to corrupt Religion; and to ſow falſe doctrine. They imagine that Religion was but the heat of your Majeſties youth, who ſhall well underſtand, that the Lord hath made you, as the Cedars of Libanus, that are tall, and ſtoope not, greene and flouriſhing, and fade not; and one of thoſe of whom the Prophet ſpeaketh: Adhuc abundabunt in canitie, They ſhall bring forth more fruit in their age. Now then it behoveth your Majeſty to be bold in Chriſts cauſe, to proceed in your moſt Chriſtian courſe, to confirme what is decaying, to remove what is letting, to ſupply what is wanting in Gods houſe: as Ambroſe well ſaith, Non in principiis perfecta quæruntur, ſed de principiis, ad ea quæ perfecta ſunt pervenitur: In the beginning we ſeek not perfection, but from the beginning we proceed to perfection. And the ſame Father elſwhere asking the queſtion, why God in the creation, as ſoone as he had made the creatures, ornatus congruos non dedit, did not produce them with their ornament, as the Heaven with Stars, the earth with flowers, giueth this anſwer: Imitatores nos ſui Deus eſſe voluit ut prius faciamus aliquid, poſtea venuſtemus: which eſpecially may bee applied to Princes: that they herein ſhould be like unto God; firſt to lay the foundation, then to adde perfection; firſt to produce the creature, then to give it his feature: as in a beautifull picture, firſt the lineaments are deſcribed, then the ornaments added. If either your Majeſties earth, that is, the civill adminiſtration want flowers, or the Heavenly ſtate Stars, and ſhining ornaments, your Highneſſe is to play Gods part in earth to ſupply them: The lamps of the Temple wax dim, where oile faileth, and the word is precious yet in many places, where the maintenance of the Miniſter is ſhort: your Princely care next under Gods providence, is only able to helpe this, and your Majeſties moſt Chriſtian deſire, hath therein well appeared, that the mouth of the Oxe be no more muſled, that treadeth out the corne; nor the Levite any longer conſtrained to ſerve in Michas houſe for meat and drinke and a ſuit of apparrell. So many foxes then would not breake into the vineyard, if the vines wanted no keepers: nether would the enemy be ſo bold if every watchtower had his skilfull and carefull watchman.

Your Majeſties moſt humble Subject,

ANDREW WILLET.

The Preface to the Chriſtian Reader.

It may ſeeme ſtrange (good Chriſtian Reader) that the Goſpell having beene taught amongſt us by Gods eſpeciall goodneſſe and mercie, now theſe four and fiftie yeeres, with great evidence of truth, plaine demonſtration out of Scripture, and moſt apparant conviction of the adverſarie, that there yet ſhould bee found among us, whoſe eares are open to heare, and their hearts more ready to beleeve lies, than to receive the truth. What elſe ſhould bee the reaſon hereof, I cannot judge, but that which the Apoſtle rendreth, Becauſe they received not the love of the truth, that they might bee ſaved : God ſhall ſend them ſtrong deluſions, that they ſhould beleeve lies, 2 Theſſal. 2. 11.
And therefore we may ſay of them, as Hierome of ſome in his time : Vnum tibi confiteor, mores meorum optimè novi, facilius eos vinci poſſe, quàm perſwaderi : I will confeſſe one thing unto you, I know their manners very well, they may be ſooner overcome, than perſwaded : adverſ. Luciferian. For if our Saviour Chriſts rule doe hold, as it muſt needs ſtand : Ex fructibus eorum cognoſcetis, &c. Yee ſhall know them by their fruits, Matth. 7. 16. how can that Religion be judged to bee good, that bringeth forth ſuch bad fruits as treacherie, conſpiracies, practices againſt Prince and countrie, which things are ſo notoriouſly knowne, and ſo freſh in every mans memorie, that for proofe hereof I need not deſcend to particulars. What aileth then theſe men, that they cannot conſent in religion with us?
we build our faith onely upon the Scriptures, wee ſeeke onely the glory of Chriſt, abaſing our ſelves, and our corrupt nature, only extolling grace : which of theſe can offend them : they injoy their livings, whereas Proteſtants were denied their lives ; they have libertie, we were kept in thraldome and miſerie ; they grow rich and purchaſe, the Proteſtants could not hold their owne. I cannot ſee then, what it is that ſhould diſcontent them : did not the Prophet Ezechiel well propheſie of ſuch ? They doe eat the good paſture, and tread downe the reſt with their feet : they have drunk of the deep waters, Geneſ.49.17. and troubled the reſidue with their feet. They are not content themſelves to eat the fat, and drink the Ezech.39.18.
ſweet of the land, but ſome of them (for I accuſe not all) have laboured and practiſed to diſturbe our peace, and to trouble our quiet ſtate. But let not us (good brethren) bee offended at theſe things.
Firſt, let us not be aſtoniſhed, as though ſome ſtrange thing had befallen us : for Saint Paul hath ſaid, 1 Cor.11,19.
That hereſies muſt be among us, that they which are approved may be knowne : in time of perſecution exercebant patientiam Eccleſiæ, they did prove the patience of the Church : but now as Auguſtine ſaith, exercent ſapientiam, they do exerciſe the wiſdome of the Church. Let not the number and multitude offend us of thoſe which do band themſelves againſt the Church : for ſo it muſt bee, Chriſts flock is but a little flock. Let us not be afraid of their wiſdome, power or ſtrength : the Scripture teacheth Luk.12.3
us, that they in their generation are wiſer than the children of light : yet the Lord our God, that is with us, and fighteth for us, is wiſer and ſtronger than they. Let them not deceive us with a ſhew of holines: for Satan can transforme himſelf into an Angell of light: neither let it move us becauſe they endure 2 Cor.11.14.
ſome trouble & loſſe of their goods, and impriſonment of their bodies for their religion (which is faſly ſo called) for Saint Peter ſaith, That men may ſuffer as evill doers, and ſo doe theſe. And Saint Auguſtine ſaith, Si pœna martyres faceret, omnes carceres martyribus pleni eſſent, omnes catenæ martyres 1 Pet.4.15. traherent: If the puniſhment only, and not the cauſe made Martyrs, all priſons would be full of Martyrs, In Pſal.34. and all that are bound with fetters and chaines ſhould be Martyrs. But let us (not ſtumbling at Conc.2. any of theſe ſtones) be conſtant in the faith, and go forward in the profeſſion of the Goſpell, which is grounded upon the Scripture, ſealed with the blood of Martyrs, waited and attended upon theſe many yeeres, as the miſtreſſe with the handmaid, with peace, proſperitie, and abundance of all bleſſings.
With them there is no peace to be had : their owne Doctors teach, that no reconciliation can be made Bellarm.de between us: and indeed ſo it is, for there is no fellowſhip between light and darkneſſe. The Iſraelites laicis.lib.3. were commanded, not to ſow their ground with divers ſeeds, nor to plough with an Oxe & an Aſſe. cap.19.
What is this elſe, but that the Church of God cannot conſiſt of beleevers and Idolaters, of true Chriſtians Deut.22.10. and hippocrites, Catholikes and Heretickes, Proteſtants and Papiſts ? Their ſeed and ours is divers:
they ſow the doctrine of men, and humane traditions ; wee ſow the ſeed of Gods word. The Oxe is onely fit for the Lords plough, that chaweth the cud, and divideth the hooſe; the Aſſe doth neither: Who is he that divideth the hooſe and chaweth the cud? Auguſtine telleth us, Fiſſa ungula pertinet ad diſcernendum quid dextrum, quid ſiniſtrum: ruminatio pertinet ad eos, qui cogitant poſtea quid audierint: Hee divideth the hooſe, that divideth and diſcerneth what is good, and what evill: and they chaw the cud, that do meditate of that which they heare out of the word. But ſuch are not the common Catholiks among the Papiſts: for they do not allow every one, the miſtreſſe, the maid, the ploughman and artificer to talke of Scripture, or move queſtions and doubts in Religion: and ſo make them Aſſes, not Oxen to chaw the cud. They ſay it belongeth not to every Chriſtian, to diſcerne between true and falſe doctrine, but they muſt take their faith of their ſuperiours, and obey them in all things: and ſo neither would they have them divide the hooſe, taking from them their diſcerning judgement. There is no agreement therfore to be looked for at their hands: no more than iron or clay can be tempered together. Their old veſſels cannot receive the new liquor of the Goſpell: but they muſt firſt become new themſelves: they muſt firſt put off their beggerly rags of popiſh ceremonies and ſuperſtitions, or elſe they ſhall never put on Chriſt: And to be ſhort, Revertantur illi ad te, ne tu revertaris ad illos: Let them returne unto us, we will not returne unto them, as the Lord ſaith to Ieremy.

Rhemiſt. 1. John 4. ſect. 1.
Dan. 2. 33.
Jer. 15. 19.

But leſt now wee ſhould bee thought to ſpeake without booke, deepely charging our adverſaries with hereſies, lies, falſe doctrine, and proving nothing: we will take ſome paines to ſet downe ſome principall opinions of the Papiſts, which have in the purer ages of the Church beene condemned for hereſies.

1 Marcellina the companion of Carpocrates the arch-heretike, worſhipped the Images of Jeſus, and Paul, and offered incence unto them, Auguſt hæreſ. 7. So the Papiſts do worſhip the Image of Saints and in the ſecond Nicene Counſell it was decreed, that the Image of God ſhould be worſhipped with the ſame honour that God himſelfe was.

2 The Heracleonites did anoint their ſick which lay a dying, with oyle and balme, Hæreſ. 16. So the Papiſts have found out extreame Vnction and made it a Sacrament.

3 The Cajani did hold, that the ſin of Iudas in betraying Chriſt, was a benefit to mankind, Hæreſ. 18. The Papiſts come ſomewhat neere: one of them affirmeth, that the Jewes had ſinned mortally, if they had not crucified Chriſt: Ex Iuel, defenſ. apolog. p. 676.

4 The Pepuzians judged hereticks, becauſe they permitted women to be prieſts, Hæreſ. 27. So it was decreed in the Florentine Councell among the Papiſts, that in the caſe of neceſſitie, not onely a lay man, but an heretick, pagan, and a woman too, may baptize.

5 The hereticks called Angelici were condemned, becauſe they worſhipped Angels, Hæreſ. 39. So the Rhemiſts teach, that Angels may be worſhipped, Annot. in Apoc. 3. ſect. 6.

6 There was a ſect of hereticks that walked with bare feet, becauſe God ſaid to Moſes, put off thy ſhoos, &c. Hæreſ. 68. And ſo are there of Friers that goe barefoot, as the Friers Flagellants, and Franciſcans.

7 The Priſcilianiſts did make the Apocrypha, that is, bookes not Canonicall of equall authoritie with Scripture, Hæreſ. 70. So doe the Papiſts, the bookes of Tobie, Iudith, Machabees, and others, which are not found in the Canon of the Hebrew, they make them bookes of Canonicall Scripture, and part of the word of God: yea, they ſay, that whatſoever the Paſtors of the Church doe teach beſide Scripture in the unitie of the Church, is to be taken for the word of God, Rhem. Annot, 1. Theſ. cap. 2. ſect. 12.

8 An arch-heretike called Marcus, did hold that Chriſt did not verily ſuffer and indeed, but in ſhew only and appearance, Hereſ. 14. The Appollinariſts alſo affirmed, that Chriſt took humane fleſh without a ſoule, Hæreſ. 55. I pray you, how far are the Papiſts from theſe hereſies? for they affirme that Chriſt ſuffered not in ſoule: Nay the Rhemiſts hold, that it is a blaſphemous aſſertion ſo to ſay, Annot. Hebr. 5. v. 7. What is this elſe, but with Marcus to ſay, that Chriſt ſuffered but in ſhew, and that he felt nothing in ſoule, when he cried out upon the Croſſe, My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken mee? for if there were no ſuch matter indeed, Chriſt muſt have uttered thoſe words onely in outward ſhew and pretence. Againe, they cannot ſhift off handſomely from them the Apollinariſts hereſie: for why did Chriſt take upon him our fleſh and ſoule, but to redeeme man, that was loſt both in body and ſoule? and therefore he muſt needs have ſuffered both in bodie and ſoule: for if there were no uſe of the humane ſoule in the worke of our redemption, you might as well ſay with the Appollinariſts that Chriſt had no ſoule at all. Thus Auguſtine reaſoneth: Si totus homo periit, totus beneficio ſalvatoris indiguit; ſi totus beneficio ſalvatoris indigebat, totum Chriſtus veniendo ſalvavit: If the whole man both in body and ſoule were loſt, hee wholly had need of a Saviour: and if hee wholly needed a Saviour; Chriſt by his comming did wholly ſave him. Ergo, it followeth that Chriſt muſt wholly have died and ſuffered in body and ſoule to redeeme man, that was wholly loſt in body and ſoule.

9 The Anthropomorphites did imagine, that God was in ſhape and proportion like a man, Hæreſ. 50. Do not our Rhemiſts ſavour ſtrongly of this hereſie, which allow the Image of God to be pictured like an old man with gray haires in their Churches? Annot. Act. cap. 17. v. 29.

10 The heretikes Abiliani thought it not lawfull for their ſect to live without wives, and yet they never uſed, nor kept company with their wives, Hæreſ. 87. Doe not the Papiſts come neere them, which hold that their Prieſts which were married before orders, ought not afterward to have acceſſe to their wives, yet are they their wives ſtill, neither is the marriage knot diſſolved betweene them? *Rhemiſt.Act.*21 *ſect.*1.

11 The Pelagian heretikes did hold three pernicious opinions. Firſt, that a man may bee perfect in this life and keepe all the Commandements, Hereſ. 88. So the Rhemiſts ſay, it is poſſible to keepe all the precepts of the Law, Annot.Iohan. 14. ſect. 1. Secondly, the Pelagians ſay, that grace is given unto men only to this end, that they may more eaſily do thoſe things which they are commanded to doe by their owne freewill, *Hereſ.*88. So the Rhemiſts ſay, that a man was never without freewill, but having the grace of Chriſt, it is truly made free. Annot. Iohan. 8. *ſect.*2. What is this elſe, but that his free will is made more free, and that grace helpeth him not wholly to worke, but more eaſily only? Thirdly, the Pelagians hold, Gratiam Dei non ad ſingulos actus dari: That the grace of God is not needfull to be given at every aſſay, but that their free will in moſt things is ſufficient, Auguſt. Epiſt. 106. So the Rhemiſts ſay, that though the Gentiles beleeved ſpecially by Gods grace, yet they beleeved alſo of their owne free-will, Act. 13. *ſect.*2. What ſay they elſe but that a man may beleeve by his owne free will without grace?

12 The Manichees condemned the eating of fleſh, as being uncleane and impure, Hereſ. 46. So the Papiſts alſo forbid at certaine times the eating of fleſh. And herein they perhaps differ from the Manichees: They held that fleſh was uncleane by creation; The Papiſts by reaſon of the curſe; for God curſed the earth, and not the waters (ſay they) and therefore upon faſting dayes fiſh is preferred before fleſh, Durand. lib. 6. capit. de aliis jejuniis. So they both agree in this, that fleſh is a thing impure and uncleane: for if they had not ſo thought, why did not that popiſh Biſhop of London Stokeſlye, rather ſuffer the pigge to be eaten, which was found in one Frebarnes houſe in Lent time, his wife being great with child longing for a peece thereof, than command it as an uncleane thing to be buried in Finsbury fields, and ſo the good creature of God to be ſpoyled and loſt?

Frebarne. Fox.p.1585.

There was alſo another moſt blaſphemous opinion of the Manichees: for they held that the parts and members of Chriſt were diſperſed every where, and that in their meats and drinks, they did deliver the members of Chriſt which were tyed and bound in the creatures. Tales (ſaith Auguſtine) ſunt electi eorum, ut non ſint ſalvandi à Deo, ſed ſalvatores Dei; liberant enim membra Chriſti, cum manducant: The elect amongſt them (for ſo they call their principals) doe make themſelves the Saviours & redeemers of God, for they doe ſet at liberty (as they imagine) the members of Chriſt, hee is not their Saviour. Compare now the opinion of the Papiſts with theſe heretikes: ſee if they bee not coſin germanes: for as they made themſelves ſalvatores Chriſti, ſaviours of Chriſt: ſo it is a ſaying among the Papiſts, that Sacerdos eſt creator creatoris ſui: The Prieſt at Maſſe, which by five words ſpeaking maketh the body of Chriſt, is a maker, ſay they, of his maker, a creator of his creator, *Ex Iuell.lib.artic.pag.*615. But herein the Papiſts goe beyond the Manichees, for they delivered the body and members of Chriſt from the priſon of the creatures, and ſent them up to heaven: the Papiſts bring them downe from heaven, and cloſe them in the creature, under the ſhape of bread and wine.

Auguſt.in Pſalm 104.

Thus farre we thought good to ſhew, how neere the Papiſts come to the heretikes of olde time: that it might appeare to the world, that we doe not unjuſtly charge them with hereſie, & that we have good cauſe to ſhune and abhorre their poyſoned doctrine. Many other hereſies I could have produced; which are revived by our adverſaries, and raked againe as it were out of their graves, where they did quietly reſt: But that I am not of purpoſe now to deale in this matter: which in a ſeverall Treatiſe annexed I have handled more at large.

In Tetraſtilon

I have only by the way given a taſt of the bitter and ſowre doctrine of Popery: that our countrymen, which have beene any thing that way infected, may take warning, that if they have ſipped of the whore of Babylons cup of fornication, they ſhould leave off, before they have drunke more deepely, leſt they in the end be conſtrained to draw out the very dregs thereof, and to bee drunken with their intoxicate cup. If they will in time be warned, they may: a word to a wiſe man is ſufficient: and if they be wiſe, they will alſo take heede in time; I ſay unto them, as Auguſtine did ſometime to the Donatiſts: Si ſapitis, bene & recte, ſi autem non ſapitis, nos veſtri curam geſſiſſe non pœnitebit, quia etſi cor veſtrum ad pacem non convertitur, pax noſtra tamen ad nos revertitur: If you will bee learned, it is well, and as we wiſh: but if you will not, it repenteth us not, that we have had ſome care of you: for although your hart be not cõverted to the peace of the Goſpell, yet our peace returneth to us againe.

Contra Petiliſ anum.3.59.

Here by the way, I muſt remember my ſelfe of one thing, which I had almoſt overſlipped Every where both in this Preface & in this whole booke, ſpeaking of our adverſaries, I call them Papiſts, as we are knowne by the name of Proteſtants: I ſuppoſe our Engliſh Romaniſts will take no offence, or griefe hereby ſo to be called: although I have heard that ſome of them hold great ſcorne to be named Papiſts, yet I ſee no reaſon, why they ſhould ſo doe. The Rhemiſts like this name well enough, becauſe it is not derived from any one man, but from their Popes and chiefe Biſhops, to whom (ſay they) we are bound to cleave in Religion, and obey in all things: So to be a Papiſt (ſay they) is to be a Chriſtian man, a child of the Church, & a ſubject to Chriſts Vicar. Seeing then this name pleaſeth their ghoſtly Fathers of Rhemes ſo well, there is no reaſon why they ſhould miſlike it: and therefore wee will uſe it ſtill, as beſt expreſſing their profeſſion, who are pinned upon the Popes ſleeve for their faith and religion. As likewiſe the name of Proteſtants we refuſe not, which name I thinke, though elſewhere before in uſe,yet in England tooke beginning in K. Henry the eights daies, when there was a generall Fox.p.108.3. proteſtation made in the name of the King, the whole Councell and Clergie of England againſt the Pope : In the which proteſtation, thus we find : England hath taken her leave of Popiſh crafts for ever, never to be deluded with them hereafter : Roman Biſhops have nothing to doe with Engliſh people: the one doth not traffique with the other : at the leaſt, though they will have to deale with us, we will none of their merchandiſe, none of their ſtuffe. Thus wee ſee how a Papiſt and a Proteſtant are defined: a Papiſt is hee that cleaveth to the Pope in religion, and is obedient to him in all things : a Proteſtant is he, that profeſſeth the Goſpell of Jeſus Chriſt, and hath renounced the Juriſdiction of the Sea of Rome, & the forced and unnaturall obedience to the Pope. Theſe names therefore as beſt fitting both our profeſſions, ſeeing no cauſe to the contrary, I purpoſe every where to uſe and retaine throughout this Treatiſe.

I would here finiſh and make an end of this Preface, but that firſt I muſt make the reader acquainted with the order and method, which I have followed in ſetting downe the controverſies : The whole body therefore of the controverſies betweene the Papiſts and us, our worthie and learned countriman D. Whitakers hath digeſted and diſpoſed into a ſingular Method, the which I have propounded to my ſelfe throughout this diſcourſe to obſerve.

The hereſies and error, therefore of Popery, doe either impugne the offices of Chriſt, with his benefits and merits, or his perſon : the moſt of them are of the firſt kind, ſome errors they maintaine againſt his perſon but not many.

Firſt, the name of Chriſt ſheweth his offices : for it ſignifieth annointed : he was annointed to bee our Prophet, King and Prieſt : Jeſus betokeneth a Saviour, & ſetteth forth the benefits of our redemption and ſalvation. Firſt then of his offices, and then of the benefits that doe ariſe and ſpring thereof.

The firſt office of our Saviour Chriſt, is to be our heavenly teacher and Prophet. His heavenly doctrine is contained no where elſe but in the Scriptures. The firſt generall controverſie then muſt bee of the Scriptures : where there ariſe many queſtions : as of the Canonicall bookes of the Scripture : of the vulgar tranſlarion of Scripture, of the perſpicuity, and plainnes, authority, interpretation and perfection of Scripture, with ſuch other.

The ſecond office of Chriſt is to be our King : and becauſe his kingdome is his Church: here we are to handle the controverſies about the Church : which is either the Church Militant upon earth, or the Church Triumphant in heaven.

The Church militant is to bee conſidered, either in generall, where theſe queſtions are moved, what the Church is, whether it be viſible or not, by what marks it is knowne, whether it may erre, what authority it hath. Then the parts of the Church, which are either aſſembled and gathered together, as in generall Councels: where theſe doubts muſt be diſcuſſed, whether generall Councels be neceſſary, by whom they ought to bee ſummoned, whether they can erre, whether the Pope bee above Councels or not, and ſuch like : Or elſe the parts of the Church are ſeverally to be conſidered, and they are of three ſorts, either the cheefe parts, the middle and meane parts, the loweſt and baſeſt parts of the Church : The chiefe member they make to be the Pope : where there are many queſtions and of great waight, as whether the regiment of the Church be Monarchicall, whether Peter were appointed head of the Church, whether the Pope be Peters ſucceſſor, whether hee may erre, whether the Pope be Antichriſt, with ſuch other. The middle parts, are their Clerkes, which are either ſecular, as they call them, which have any eccleſiaſticall function, where wee muſt enquire of their election and degrees of their ſingle life, and ſuch like ; the Regular Clerks are their Monks, and other of that profeſſion, where we muſt entreat of vowes, of their ſolitary life, their habit, their Canonicall houres, with other matters. The loweſt members are the lay men : where the queſtions about the Civill Magiſtrate muſt be handled : as whether he may put heretikes to death, whether he have any power and authority in Eccleſiaſticall matters, and hitherto of the Militant Church.

The Triumphant Church conſiſteth either of Angels, or other Saints departed : Concerning the Angels we diſſent about the orders and degrees of them, about their miniſtery and office, and whether they are to be prayed unto.

Concerning the Saints departed, there are many queſtions in controverſie, as of Purgatory, Limbus patrum, whether they are to be prayed unto, of their Reliques, Images, Temples, Holy daies, and ſuch like.

The third office of Chriſt is his Prieſthood, whereof there are two parts, his interceſſion, where we muſt enquire, whether Chriſt be the onely Mediator of interceſſion, and his ſacrifice, where the maine and great controverſie concerning the Sacraments doth offer it ſelfe : for by the Sacraments the power and efficacie of the death of Chriſt is derived unto us.

Here firſt we muſt intreat of the Sacraments in generall, as of their number, their efficacie, the difference betweene the Sacraments of the old and new Teſtament : then in particular, as of Babtiſme, and the ſeverall queſtions thereto belonging, of the Lords Supper, where alſo the great controverſie about their Idolatrous ſacrifice of the maſſe, and other neceſſary queſtions muſt be handled. Then follow in order five other popiſh Sacraments to be conſidered of, Confirmation, Penance, Extreame-unction, Orders, Matrimony. And theſe are the controverſies concerning the offices of Chriſt.

The controverſies which concerne the benefits of our redemption, with other ſeverall queſtions, are theſe. Firſt of the ſtate of man in paradiſe before his fall : where we are to diſcuſſe of the ſtate of Adams ſoule, and of his body, whether it were created immortall, of Paradiſe, whether it were a place knowne, and yet remaining. The ſecond Controverſie is concerning Adams fall, where the queſtions are handled, of Adams tranſgreſſion, and of originall ſinne, with the ſeverall parts thereof. The third Controverſie conſiſteth of the reparation of mankind : where theſe principall queſtions are decided, of Predeſtination, of Grace, Free will, Faith, Juſtification, Good works.

Laſtly, there remaine ſome queſtions about the perſon of Chriſt, as whether hee bee αὐτόθεος, that is, God of himſelfe, whether he encreaſed in wiſedome, whether he ſuffered in ſoule, whether he merited for himſelfe, with ſuch other.

Thus have we the ſumme and body of Antichriſtian doctrine, which wee purpoſe by the grace of God to goe through, beginning at the firſt, and ſo proſecuting every particular queſtion, till wee are come to the laſt. My purpoſe is not to ſet downe all the hereſies, which impugne the Chriſtian faith, but onely thoſe which are maintained by the Church of Rome this day ; who are the chiefe troublers and diſquieters of the peace of our Church: I ſay therefore with Auguſtine, Omnis Chriſtianus Catholicus iſta non debet credere, ſed non omnis, qui iſta non credit, conſequenter ſe debet Chriſtianum credere : Every true Chriſtian is bound not to beleeve theſe things, but yet not ſtraightway every man, that beleeveth them not ; muſt hold himſelfe to bee a good Chriſtian, for there are many errors and hereſies in the world beſide papiſtry : But this we have only choſen to deale againſt in this treatiſe, as being moſt dangerous to our ſtate, more plauſible to carnall men, and moſt like to infect. I have now this fourth time, for thy benefit, Chriſtian Reader, peruſed, corrected, and augmented this worke, and publiſhed it for thy uſe. The ſecond edition was in theſe foure points enlarged more than the former : firſt, I have anſwered more objections of the adverſarie, and propounded more arguments for the truth : Secondly, I have added the Canons of the ancient Councels throughout for the more lively evidence of truth : Thirdly I have adjoyned to every place of greateſt waight the ſeale and teſtimony of the holy Martyrs. Fourthly, this booke containeth one hundred more of popiſh Errors than the firſt : where I have breefly touched Bellarmines chiefe arguments in ſome maine controverſies of our Faith, as he hath lately cauſed them to bee publiſhed in the third volume of his controverſies : which came forth ſince the firſt edition of this booke. In this third edition I have performed more than in the former, in theſe foure points : Firſt I have anſwered all ſuch places of waight, which our adverſaries alleage out of Scripture, and removed many more objections of the adverſarie than before. Secondly, I have inſerted more teſtimonies of the Fathers for the proofe of the truth, and anſwered their ſhew of the Fathers in ſome principall controverſies. Thirdly, I have convinced them by the Lawes Imperiall, and their owne Pontificall decrees, and by their owne writers. Fourthly, I have adjoyned a confutation of Bellarmines firſt booke of Indulgences and Jubilee pardons, and added one Centurie more : ſo that the whole is increaſed to five Centuries, that is, ſo many hundreds of popiſh errors and hereſies.

In this fourth edition I have in theſe foure things enlarged this worke. 1 I have inſerted certaine queſtions not handled before : as of popiſh equivocating : Controv. 3. Centur. 1 Of our juſtification as well by Chriſts active as paſſive obedience : Centur. 4. and divers other : 2 I have throughout confuted the arguments of the Doway tranſlators, which they produce in defence of their errors in their late edition of a part of the old teſtament. 3 I have in every queſtion adjoyned the conſent, of the Eaſt, and South Churches, and of the reformed Churches in the weſt, ſetting downe alſo the opinion of ſome chiefe writers of the Roman Church. 4 I have made theſe additions : there is in the end of this worke a catalogue of the principall charitable works, which have bene done in the cities of London, Cambridge, and Oxford ſince the times of the Goſpell : beſide two tables, one of the places of Scripture, the other of the chiefe matters handled in this booke.

This, through Gods gratious aſſiſtance I have performed in this worke, and throughout the ſame, as neere as I could, I have followed Auguſtines rule, Ita ſtylo, ſi potuero moderabor, ut huic operi in Dei voluntate peragendo, nec ea, quæ ſuperſint dicam, nec ea quæ ſatis ſunt prætermittam : My care hath beene ſo to temper my ſtyle, that neither things ſuperfluous ſhould be inſerted, nor things neceſſary omitted. Lib.17. de civitat.Dei.c.1. Theſe my labours, farre beyond my ſtrength, though not above my hope, by the Lords extraordinary aſſiſtance (I muſt needs confeſſe) I have brought to an end. Recompence I looke for none, but thy good acceptation (Chriſtian Reader:) it is the good of Gods Church, which I ſeeke : other encouragement (the Lord helpe) in theſe daies we have ſmall : I now commend my ſelfe to thy prayer, my labours to thy diligent reading (Chriſtian brother) and both you and them to Gods good bleſſing : who give us grace to diſcerne truth from error, and having diſcerned them, power to ſhun the one, and embrace the other : that as he well ſaith, (Supremus, quæ Chriſtus promiſit, & ſequamur, quo præceſſit :) that hoping and truſting here to that which Chriſt hath promiſed, wee may follow at length, whither hee is preceded and gone before us : Amen. *Dat. THE
LIFE AND DEATH OF ANDREW WILLET,

Doctor of Divinitie.

THe venerable and ſacred commemoration of the renowned lives and deaths of holy men, as it is [a] profitable to poſteritie, ſo it is likewiſe acceptable and pleaſing unto God; who in their fame is chiefly honoured, as the ſole Author of everie good and perfect gift, Iam. 1.17. according unto that of S. Gregory Nazianzen, ſpeaking of holy Athanaſius. [b] Commending Athanaſius, I commend vertue it ſelfe, it being all one to praiſe him or vertue, becauſe hee was a ſtore-houſe of all vertues: And while I extoll vertue, I give glorie unto God, by whoſe grace alone man is made vertuous. Nor [c] is there any way more expedite of inſtruction to good life, (as Polybius wiſely obſerveth) than by the knowledge of things paſt, and of the noble acts of famous worthies: Their hiſtories are our documents, and their honours our incitements; whereas [d] fame contemned brings contempt of vertue. We are not eaſily moved with precepts; [e] examples are more powerfull; practice having proved that facil in performance, which to our ſluggiſh diſpoſitions, by the precept onely, ſeemed verie difficult.

That God may have the praiſe, and man the profit of an excellent and exact patterne, [f] by long ſilence almoſt wholly loſt; I have here adventured briefly to ſummon up [g] ſome remarkable paſſages of the life and death of the learned and laborious D. Andrew Willet, [h] whoſe worth in the full latitude thereof cannot readily be expreſſed.

And in this Diſcourſe, I dare confidently profeſſe, that I have not, out of private affection, ſought the advancement of his name, with the prejudice of truth: For though his memorie and what not of his, be deare unto me; (as the Ethickes obſerve)

[k] loving friends are wont to bee:)[l] yet truth muſt ſtill be dearer; and love it ſelfe rejoyceth in the truth, 1 Cor 13.6. And therefore my continuall guide herein ſhall be, either certaine knowledge, or moſt credible relation.

¶. To [m] begin from whence he himſelfe tooke his beginning, I muſt firſt make mention of his birth and and parentage. It was a cuſtome amongſt the Indians, (ſaith Philoſtratus) after the death of any worthy man, to inſcribe his acts upon the doores of his houſe, for the ennobling of his iſſue. So [n] it was ever eſteemed no meane bleſſing to be well deſcended: [o] and though thy Fathers goodneſſe ſhall availe thee little, if thou beeſt not good, [p] yet it availeth much to make thee good. Such a good Father had this worthy man, by name M. Thomas Willet a grave Divine, who in his younger time was Subalmoner unto that reverend Prelate D. Coxe Eleemoſynarie, and Schoolemaſter under Edward the ſixth, our Englands young Ioſiah, of moſt bleſſed memorie. After whoſe death D. Coxe being in exile during the reigne of Queene Marie, this M. Willet was not onely deprived of his ſervice, but was likewiſe enforced, for his conſcience, to forſake his firſt promotion in the Church of Windſor, and to betake himſelfe to the houſe of a truly noble Gentleman, who as a faithfull Obadiah hid him in thoſe dayes of perſecution. His wife in the meane time lived in a Farme neere Redding, whither ſecretly he had recourſe unto her now and then. And here to paſſe over many dangers, which both hee and his wife hardly eſcaped oftentimes, before thoſe clouds of trouble were blowne over.

At laſt Queene Marie being dead, the gracious Lady Elizabeth was proclaimed Queene of England, to the great joy and comfort of the poore afflicted Proteſtants.

Now D. Coxe, with other of the Clergy, were recalled from their baniſhment, and hee by Queene Elizabeth was advanced to the Biſhoprick of Ely. His ancient Chaplaine then repaires unto him, is lovingly embraced, and preferred to a Prebend in his Church; and afterward by his meanes he had the Parſonage of Thurkiſton in Leiceſter-ſhire. Nor this alone; For a meſſenger not long after came unto the good Biſhop, and told him that the Parſon of Barley in Hertford-ſhire was dead: to whom the Biſhop made anſwer, Hee is not dead. But the partie avouching that hee was dead and buried: the Biſhop againe replies; I tell you the Parſon of Barley is not dead, for there he ſits, pointing to M. Willet, who was then ſitting at his table.

This Rectorie being thus added to his other meanes, did now enable him to doe works of charitie: And as hee had freely received, ſo hee freely gave. The whole revenue of Thurkiſton, which (as I heare) is a living of good value, (beſides the ſtipend of his Curate) he ſpent amongſt his neighbours there, [q] releeving ſome way or other everie one of them; the better ſort of them by hoſpitalitie and entertainment, the poorer by his almes. For the time of his abode there, once or twice in the yeare, he refuſed no gueſt that came, remembring [r] the Apoſtles exhortation; and fearing, (as S. Hierome ſaith of himſelfe) [s] leſt Mary and Ioſeph ſhould want roome in the Inne, or Ieſus himſelfe excluded might ſay another day; I was a ſtranger, and yee tooke mee not in, Matth 25.43. And for his almes, hee remembred that hee had beene the Diſpenſer of a Prince his almes, and ſtill retained a magnificent minde that way. Hee never loved to clap up money, ἐν πλούτε δεσμωτηρίοις, in wealths priſon, as an [t] Orator of old called cheſts of treaſure. Nay rather, as it is ſaid [u] of a good Biſhop of Lincolne, he could ſcarce beleeve that ever hee poſſeſſed that money which hee had not given away. His wife on the other ſide, (not as the wife of M. Antonius, [x] who hindred her husband all ſhee could from works of liberalitie) was as nobly minded, (and indeed anſwerable to her birth, as I have heard) and as free. Much like unto that worthy woman the mother of S. Gregorie Nazianzen, of whom he ſaith, That had ſhe [y] an Ocean of wealth, ſhee would have emptied it all into the bellies of the poore. In her elder yeeres, when her children were diſpoſed of in the world; her manner was to call her poore neighbours in, and feeding them, to ſay, Now againe have I my children about mee. Thus they laid up bleſſings for their ſeed, according to that of the Prophet David, ſpeaking of the righteous, Pſalm. 37.26. He is ever mercifull, and lendeth, and his ſeed is bleſſed. Thus alſo they obtained that great bleſſing for themſelves, in thoſe perillous dayes, whereof before I ſpake, according to that promiſe, Bleſſed is the man that conſidereth the poore: the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble. The Lord will preſerve him and keepe him alive, and he ſhall be bleſſed upon earth; and thou wilt not deliver him unto the will of his enemies: Pſalm 41. verſ. 1,2. And they thus preſerved, enjoyed yet another bleſſing; in being inſtruments to bleſſe our Church with this worthy Ornament of learning and pietie, D. Willet.

¶. Concerning the place of whoſe birth, give me leave to ſay a little, the rather becauſe hee alſo ſpent his childhood, and had his education there.

or ill: Who regardeth what ground beares it, if the fruit bee good? [a] Vertue is a ſtrong and fruitfull plant, ſuch as with induſtrie and paines will take root any where.

And [b] Plato made choyce of ſuch a ſoyle as this, the Countrey of Attica, [c] as moſt convenient for the plantation of his Academy. Such was the towne of Hippo, whereof S. Auguſtine was the Biſhop: It was called Hippo Diarrhytos, a fluore, being ſituated in paluſtri loco, in a fenny place: ut videre eſt apud Lud. Viv. in Aug. de Civit. Dei, lib. 16. cap. 8. Such alſo was Bœotia, [d] as coaſting upon Attica, the countrey of that famous Plutarch. No marvell then if this ἔμψυχος ἀνάθημα, (as I may call him) this Living Univerſitie, (while hee remained with us) had his birth and breeding in this fenny ſoyle.

In the Collegiate Schoole of this Citie hee was inſtituted in the rudiments of Grammaticall knowledge. [e] And as thoſe beginnings are worthy of obſervation, which are foundations of a more excellent ſtructure: So let mee tell you what I have heard from the mouth of a grave old man lately dead, who was 60. yeeres agone his Schoolemaſter in that Schoole; how that hee was the moſt induſtrious of all his Schollers; paines having beene alwayes [f] both in youth and age a pleaſure to him, as if with Chryſippus, he thought the true [g] ſcholaſticall life, of all others the moſt voluptuous. [h] His eye and countenance had the characters of ingenuitie, and grace naturally written in them, which many have taken notice of; and anſwerably, (as I have it from the ſame faithfull Relatour) in quickneſſe of apprehenſion, ſtrength of memorie, and ſolid judgement, and by theſe helps in proficiencie he outſtript all his fellowes, and ſo became the ſole [i] delight and ſolace of his Teacher.

And as Plutarch teſtifieth of Themiſtocles, ſo have I heard of him, [k] that when other boyes, at houres of libertie tooke all licence for diſport & play, then would he be at his private meditations, as accompting recreation [l] a thing unprofitable, & an impediment to his ſtudies, even in that age. Inſomuch that his prudent and indulgent parents, ſeeing this intemperantiæ genus, (as Seneca cals it) this his intemperancy in the purſuit after knowledge; and [m] knowing how needfull refreſhing is, eſpecially to children after any vehement intention of the minde and underſtanding, were forced to invent and procure παιγνιά τινα, καὶ ἀθύρματα, ſome ludicrous toyes or other, which they thought would beſt delight his fancie, to take him off a little from his eagerneſſe at his book. Thus hee began [n] that painfull courſe, even in his childhood, which he continued all his life. Which putteth me in minde of that ſaying of Salomon: Even a childe is knowne by his doings, whether

6. At fourteene yeeres of age, or thereabout, his father ſent him to the Univerſitie of Cambridge, where hee was admitted into Peter-houſe, under the care of D. Andrew Perne, then Maſter of that College, and his God-father. But not long after, (for what cauſe I know not) he was removed thence to Chriſts College. And as Herbaliſts have obſerved, that planta tranſlatio eſt planta perfectio: The tranſlation of a plant is the perfection of it: So meeting in that Houſe with many, who were his σύγχρονοι, ϗ ἰσότιμοι, equals in time and learning too, whom he might have cauſe to emulate, as D. Downham the Biſhop of Dery in Ireland, and M. William Perkins, with others, he applyed himſelfe ſo ſeriouſly to his ſtudies, that in ſhort time he had not onely gained a good meaſure of knowledge in the learned tongues; but likewiſe in the Arts, and all neceſſarie literature, [o] that hee might have nothing of theſe to learne, when he was to teach them unto others; Knowing [p] that youth (as Seneca ſaith) muſt prepare that which age muſt uſe. Hee did not ſpend his time, as too many young ſchollers doe, diſhonouring [q] an Athenian life with Dorick manners. Like to the father of D. Franc. Iunius, [r] to whom his grandfather writing when he was at the Univerſitie, was wont thus to ſuperſcribe his letters; Dionyſio dilecto filio miſſo ad ſtudendum: To my beloved ſonne Dionyſius ſent to ſtudy; when as it ſeemes he did nothing leſſe than that which he was ſent about. But this induſtrious Student ſo ſeriouſly applyed himſelfe to attaine unto the beſt perfections; that being but 22. yeares of age, hee gave a publike teſtimony of his proficiencie, οὐκ ἐν τῇ περὶ φιλοσοφίᾳ, ϗ ταύτῃ ἰδιώτης; (as S. Baſil ſpeakes) not in naturall philoſophie alone, but ſupernaturall and divine; in his firſt imprinted booke, De animæ natura & viribus: where you may read and finde him, even then, φιλοσοφούμενον θεολογεῖν, [s] philoſophically theologizing in five ſubtill and abſtruſe queſtions, [t] which many ancient and learned Clerks have beene ſometimes gravelled in.

Hee was already initiated in Sacred Orders, and hereby made good that ſaying of Syneſius, elegantly expreſſed in his language. The [u] Prieſthood is not an ending, but an aſcending in Philoſophy. He began, I confeſſe, verie timely to exerciſe this weightie Function in ſome meaſure; but yet (as that booke alone can witneſſe) not unfurniſhed of learning, pietie, and gravitie beyond his yeares; not like many whom I would ſend to ſchoole to Cato Iunior, who being asked when hee would come forth, and ſpeake in publike audience, replyed, [x] I will then begin to ſpeak, when I ſhall be able to ſay that which were not fitter to be kept in ſilence.

Amongſt other acts of his in Cambridge, this I have heard of ſome yet living; That he upon an unexpected accident befalling a Proctor of their College, undertooke his office at the Commencement, and being (as Thucydides ſaith of Themiſtocles) κράτιστος αὐτοσχεδιάζειν τὰ δέοντα, verie dextrous and ready to performe any thing well and decently upon the ſudden; his Orations eſpecially were ſuch, as gained the approbation and applauſe, if not admiration of all his Auditors, both their owne and ſtrangers; who knew the ſtreights of time wherein he was confined.

§. He had ſpent but thirteene yeeres in that Univerſitie, when his father now growne old, reſigned his Prebend in the Church of Ely, which by the favour of Queene Elizabeth ſede vacante, was conferred upon him. Hereupon he left his Fellowſhip, which he had in Chriſts College, and betook himſelfe to the ſocietie of a wife, which was worthily commended unto him, out of the houſe and kindred of old D. Goad, the reverend Provoſt of Kings College, his entire and truly loving friend. In this eſtate God bleſſed him with a numerous iſſue: He had eleven ſonnes and ſeven daughters, whereof nine and foure remaine at this day. A man would thinke here was ſomething to be done now: But as cares for the moſt part [y] are but in opinion; ſo children, which to many are occaſions of great trouble, to him were but the ſubjects of his delight and recreation. For having a meet helper in his œconomick affaires, a carefull yoke-fellow, he without any the leaſt diſtraction, purſued his old courſe of ſtudy: This was his ſolace, [z] and it was never weariſome unto him. His manner was to ariſe early in the morning, and to get halfe way on his journey, before others could ſet out: Hee came downe at the houre of prayer, taking his family with him to the Church, (after he was preferred to the Rectorie of Barley, upon the death of his Father.) There ſervice was publikely read, either by himſelfe, or by his Curate, to the great comfort of his Pariſhioners, before they went forth unto their daily labours: which cuſtome he obſerved duly, for divers yeares before his death. Prayers being ended, hee returnes unto his taske againe untill neere dinner time; when his manner was to recreate himſelfe a while, either with playing upon a little organ, which he had in his houſe, ſinging unto it; or elſe ſporting himſelfe with his young children, as [a] Ageſilaus was wont to doe; or [b] condeſcending (as Tully ſaith of Lælius and Scipio) unto any kinde of delight, which was not unlawfull or uncomely. Sometime hee would uſe cleaving of wood for exerciſe, πᾶν διαπονῶν τὸ σῶμα, as Socrates ſpeakes in Xenophon, labouring with the whole body, and ſo keeping the whole in health and ſoundneſſe.

At his table hee was alwayes pleaſant and delightfull to his company, telling ſome prettie apothegme, or facete tale or other, which commonly hee would ſeaſon with ſome profitable application, [c] making even his verie ſports remarkable: he knew well that of Salomon, Prov. 15.26. טהורים אמרי נעם Pleaſant words, (or words of delight) ought to be pure words, and that rule of S. Ambroſe, directing Clergie men [d] in telling tales, to take heed of offending againſt the gravitie and ſeveritie of their Profeſsion. Certaine it is, [e] that ſome are naturally diſpoſed unto mirth and cheerfulneſſe more than others; whoſe hearts being likewiſe filled with the true joyes of the [f] ſpirit of God, and made glad with heavenly comforts, no other than wholeſome mirth can bee expected from them, ſuch as I have often heard proceed from this grave and godly man.

After dinner his cuſtome was, according to the Ancient, ὀλίγον μεσημβριάζειν, and to refreſh himſelfe a little, ſometime ſitting a while diſcourſing, ſometime walking abroad, and now and then taking ſome little view of the buſineſſe of his husbandrie about his grounds, [g] which when hee had directed and ſet in order, ſtraight way hee to his ἴδιον ἔργον, to his better imployments againe till ſupper time.

And though the Epigrammatiſt ſaith of old, ſix [h] houres ſpent in the labours of a mans function, were thought ſufficient; and that the reſt cry (ζῆθι) Take care of life and health. Yet his manner was [i] ſo to divide the day, that commonly (without extraordinarie avocations) he ſpent no leſſe than eight houres in his ſtudy.

By which long continued courſe hee had read the Fathers, Councels, Eccleſiaſtick Hiſtories, a great part of the Civill and Canon Lawes, together with ſome Schoole-men, and many other Writers, eſpecially ſuch as are Polemicall, and handle Controverſies betweene the Church of Rome and us; not omitting the frequent reading of all ſorts of Commentaries upon the holy Scriptures: as his bookes publiſhed, beſides many volumes of paper-books, [k] fraught with choice collections (which not without aſtoniſhment I have ſeene) doe fully teſtifie. His [l] Librarie indeed was not great; (if I looke not upon books borrowed by him:) But for his papers, wherein hee had couched the whole ſubſtance of his reading, you may give him leave, varying that of Martial, to ſay;

Exiguis Patres arctantur pellibus omnes,
Quos mea non totos Bibliotheca capit.
Loe here few leaves th'old Fathers all infold,
Whom whole at once my ſtudy ne're could hold.

§. He did not here, ſibi & muſis canere, ſeeke his owne private contentment, as many doe; [m] His aime was ever at the publike good, and his care was to improve his talent, [n] not to hide it. He had no ſooner once ſuffered the Preſſe, but everie yeare after during his whole life, the Printer heard ſome thing or other of him: either ſome new booke, or ſome renewed edition of an old was prepared for him. Witneſſe that Catalogue of his works prefixed before his Hexapla in Levit. wherein two of his printed Books are omitted, (Limbomaſtix, and Lædoromaſtix) which added make up the number [*] 33. We live, I confeſſe, in a ſcribling age; and while wee accuſe it, [o] we condemne our ſelves. And though (as hee ſaid wiſely) [p] letters were invented, not onely to teach men to write, but to know what they ſhould not write: Yet how many Pamphlets are daily vented forth, ſince thoſe unhappy quarrels in the Low-Countries, and for the moſt part upon the ſame argument; not unlike the various diſhes wherewith Flaminius was entertained at Chalcis, being πάντα χοίρεια σκευασίαις διαφέροντα, all nothing but ſwines fleſh, differing in the manner of dreſsing? Whereas this our Author, beſides his leſſer Tractates upon ſeverall ſubjects, hath much varietie of matter in his larger ſix-fold Commentaries: For [q] as skilfull Maſons gather many ſtones together, and fit them for ſome faire building; ſo thoſe things which you have σποράδην, ſcatteringly, in many ſeverall books, he hath collected, and judiciouſly diſpoſed in ſuch wiſe, that at one view you may behold in him that which with long ſearch wil not eaſily be found in thoſe many writers: [r] and not referring you unto them, which everie one cannot eaſily purchaſe; but ſaving that coſt and paines, hath molded up together the choyceſt flowre that could be boulted out of the whole heape of Commentaries, old and new, that appeare upon thoſe parts of holy Scripture.

Painters and Statuaries, to make the world to know their excellencie, are wont to make ſome curious peece, wherein you ſhall have all their skill: So learned Authors have their Maſterpeeces too; as S. Auguſtine his *De Civit. Proverb, and our owne hue is faireſt ever. So theſe Novices caſt aſide theſe books, as not worthy of their reading: they may have the place amongſt Lucilius[x] his lucubrations; not fit indeed for everie vulgar capacitie; but yet as unfit for men of profound knowledge like themſelves. And yet [y] Barley-bread ſometimes hath reliſhed well, even to the daintieſt palates. But good Sir Cenſor, let me be bold to aske:

Quis tibi, ſæve puer, dedit hoc in carmine juris?

Whence derive you this power, thus to ſlight thoſe labours which have preſented themſelves before ſoverigne Kings and Queenes, illuſtrious Princes, reverend Prelates, and other noble Lords, and have beene in their times graciouſly honoured with their Patronage? Neither have they beene, as we ſee many everie day, onely [z] like (as hee ſaid) unto new ſhooes, eſteemed of a while; but a little ſlurred, and then throwne by. But diverſe of them have beene printed and reprinted. And this thou ſeeſt is now the fifth time (and that by eſpeciall recommendation from his Royall Majeſtie) publiſhed, and (as I have heard) of verie many much deſired, as having gone at an high rate a long time. Beſides ſome things of his, have beene tranſlated into Latine; whereby together with his owne performances in that tongue, he is made famous amongſt the learned of other nations, who have likewiſe made publike mention of him, not without reſpective titles now and then. And laſtly our elegant, and exquiſitely learned D. Hall Biſhop of Exon, (whoſe judgement in this kinde [a] no man, I thinke, will haſtily oppoſe) [b] hath numbred D. Willet, (who was ſometime his Collegue in his ſervice to Prince Henry) amongſt thoſe Worthies of the Church of England, to whom he gives this Elogie: Stupor mundi Clerus Britannicus; The Engliſh Clergie the worlds wonder.

As for his private opinions, which peradventure you may finde ſcattered here and there, [c] remember him a man ſubject to erre as others, and to be read with judgement, and ſometimes with favour; knowing that, Civilitatis eſt commodè quod ſcriptum eſt interpretari: Civilitie requireth (ſaith Eraſmus) that we ſhould put the beſt conſtruction upon our Authors words; and to conſider the times he lived in. And laſtly, let me require of any one, who ſhall happen to contemne theſe paines, that hee would but firſt thinke upon our Saviours words, Luk. 10, 37. Goe thou, and doe likewiſe: and that alſo of S. Hierome, [e] Either bring forth greater dainties, and then make me your gueſt; or elſe take in good part theſe our preparations.

knowne to them who never ſaw his bodily face: [g] But moſt happily did they know him, who had often heard him, and were acquainted with his converſation; unto which my ſpeech now haſteneth.

¶. Amidſt all theſe paines in writing, and his other ſtudies, he never omitted, nor ſo much as intermitted (without the caſe of neceſsitie) his uſuall exerciſe of preaching, after he had once undertaken τὴν ψυχῶν ποιμανσίαν, the charge and care of ſoules. Hee was none of thoſe brave ſpirits, of whom Eſpencæus ſpeaketh, [h] who hold it a ſervile and ſordid thing to trouble themſelves this way. He thought upon that, Woe is me if I preach not the Goſpell: and tooke that as ſpoken to him by our Saviour, [i] Feed my ſheepe.

Tityre dum redeo, brevis eſt via, paſce capellas.

In his younger time he read the Lecture for three yeares together in the Cathedrall Church of Ely: for one yeare in S. Pauls in London; in both, with ſingular approbation of a moſt frequent Auditorie. Sometimes he preached in Cambridge, (eſpecially when he came for his degrees of Bachelour and Doctor in Divinitie,) both Ad Clerum, and Ad Populum, diſcovering himſelfe the onely man, Quem rus non infuſcavit, whom the countrey had not ſtained. And therefore at this laſt degree of his, he amongſt many excellent Collegues, being ten in number, of whom were Doctor Downam Biſhop of Dery, Doctor Meritton that famous Preacher, and others of no meane note, was choſen to anſwer the Divinitie Act in the Commencement-houſe.

Which Acts being over, he returnes to his people againe, daily teaching and inſtructing of them in a plaine familiar way, [k] applying himſelfe to their capacitie. And though he knew how to tune his tongue unto the Courtiers eare, having beene Chaplaine in Ordinarie to that thrice-noble young Prince Henry: Yet hee more affected (as Gregory Nyſſen ſpeakes) τὸ ἰδιότροπον τῆς ἁπλότητος κηρύγματος, the ſimplicitie of plaine preaching. Not [l] trifling away the time (as ſome doe) in captious diſputations, in tying and untying knots: But [m] being guided by that heavenly light, and wiſdome of the ſpirit of God, he ſpake with power, and to the edification of the people. I have heard him declaime vehemently againſt too much affectation of eloquence in preaching; and for himſelfe, as hee was full of matter, ſo hee knew how (as it is ſaid of Thucydides) to [n] uſe apt words and ſignificant; but high and loftie formes, or figures of ſpeech, hee did of ſet purpoſe ever decline. Indeed I well remember, that he would ſometimes ſharpen his ſtile, when he did ἐλέγχειν ἀποτόμως, cut them up roundly for their ſin: then you ſhould have him [o] thundring and lightning too, like one of thoſe Boanerges, Marc. 3. 17.

And on the other ſide, when hee had occaſion to ſpeake unto them words of conſolation; then he was wholly compoſed of [p] ſweetneſſe, and ſeemed [q] as if looking downe from heaven hee had preached unto them. And alwaies in denunciation of judgements, he would put on the bowels of compaſſion, and the ſpirit of meekneſſe; [r] ſugring everie bitter pill (like a wiſe Phyſitian) that it might goe downe more pleaſantly. Neither were his labours employed in vaine, enjoying ſuch a people as received his inſtructions with delight. [s] His verie preſence indeed was powerfull and perſwaſive, (mildneſſe mixed with gravitie being the beautie of his countenance) inſomuch that one word from him [t] was able to effect more than many thouſand from another man. But eſpecially his godly converſation, exemplifying what he gave in charge out of the word of God, did moſt of all convince their judgements, and ſubdue their affections to obedience. [t] This harmony and ſweet concord beeweene the life and doctrine, the old Fathers of the Church, as they obſerved, ſo they require it in everie Miniſter of the Goſpell of Chriſt, as ſounding moſt melodiouſly in the eares of God and man. This conſonancie was moſt eminent in this reverend man, [u] whether we looke upon him, as at home, or as abroad with others.

¶. Ἀφ' ἑστίας ἀρχή, ſaith the proverb: Let us begin at home; [x] there everie wiſe mans care ſhould firſt be ſeene, but eſpecially the vigilancie of a prudent Miniſter of God. For if a man know not how to rule his owne houſe, how ſhall he take care of the Church of God, 1 Tim. 3.5. It was my happineſſe to make abode under his roofe, ſo that I can truly ſay of him, as Irenæus ſaid of Polycarpus: I knew [y] his goings out and commings in, the forme of his life, the figure of countenance, his diſcourſes with his neighbours, and his fatherly admonitions to his family. And as I heard them diligently, ſo I ſet them downe not in paper, but in my heart. His houſe was a little modell of a Church, and Houſe of God: Here morning and evening ſacrifices were offered unto God daily: His children after ſupper read ſome part of holy Scripture, and hee required of everie one preſent, that they ſhould remember ſome one ſentence or other; and afterward he himſelfe, as he thought convenient, would rehearſe the ſame againe, adding ſome expoſition, and now and then ſomething of application unto them. Hee knew the precept, Deut. 6.7. And thou ſhalt [z] rehearſe them continually unto thy children, &c. And the practice of Abraham commended of God, for that hee would command his children and his houſhold after him, that they keepe the way of the Lord, to doe juſtice and judgement, Gen. 18.19. And the reſolution of faithfull Ioſhua, But as for me and my houſe, wee will ſerve the Lord, Ioſh. 24.15. Others may thinke this too much preciſeneſſe; but [a] for my part I honour the verie memorie of theſe things; The rather becauſe together with theſe private exerciſes of pietie, no man more religiouſly obſerved the publike Congregations than he did, [b] continually calling upon his houſhold to follow him to Gods holy houſe, where eſpecially hee is to be worſhipped. Thus his children (as Gregorie Nazianzen ſaith of his Father) πνευματικὸν αὐτὸν πατέρα εἶχον ϗ σωματικόν, found him as well a ſpirituall as a bodily father. Beſides all this, his endevour was to order [c] his houſe, like to a little Common-wealth: Hee had his lawes and ordinances ſet up in tables, directing his family in their ſeverall offices and duties, both œconomicall and morall: to theſe hee annexed ſome penall comminations for offenders; which yet, [d] unleſſe the crimes were hainous, requiring ſome ſeveritie, were verie rarely put in execution. And in all things, ſo much as might become his place, [e] hee made himſelfe an exact patterne and example to them all. It may be ſome ſearching eye may hap to ſpy out one trained up under his good diſcipline, who yet peradventure groweth not after the ſeed firſt ſowen in him. [f] It is a bleſſed gift of God to have all good children; but it is not an omnibus datum, [g] everie man, nay, everie good man cannot enjoy it. [h] Not Eli, Samuel, David, nor the old Patriarchs, as ſacred hiſtorie hath left recorded. And that lot of [i] Polemon the Orator befalleth divers men everie day, the honour of whoſe family determined with himſelfe. Well: howſoever it may happen; yet vouchſafe him the favour, eſpecially now dead, which S. Auguſtine challenged of his Clergie and people of Hippo, when a ſcandalous crime was charged upon a domeſtick Chaplaine of his, by name Bonifacius: Hee willeth them not to bee over-credulous; why, it may bee falſe that is laid to him: But yet true or falſe, (ſaith hee) let not my reputation ſuffer. For [k] though I keepe a watchfull diſcipline over my houſe, yet I am but a man, and they are men that live under me. Neither dare I arrogate to my ſelfe, that my houſe ſhould be better than the Arke of Noah, where yet amongſt but eight perſons there was one reprobate found: or better than the houſe of Abraham, where it was ſaid; Caſt out the bond-woman with her ſonne. Or better than the houſe of Iſaac, to whom it was ſaid touching his two twins, Iacob have I loved, Eſau have I hated. Or better than the houſe of Iacob himſelfe, where yet a ſonne inceſtuouſly polluted his fathers bed. Or better than [l] the family of Chriſt our Lord, where eleven endured one perfidious theefe Iudas in their ſocietie: Aut melior poſtremo ſit quam cœlum, cœlum, unde angeli ceciderunt. Or laſtly better than Heaven, the houſe of God from whence the Angels fell. And then let mee boldly conclude, applying that Fathers words to this Fathers houſe: [m] Though we may grieve to ſee there any purgament, we have much more cauſe of joy for many ornaments. And truly, when I call to minde his many bleſſings of his children, why may I not ſay, varying a little [n] thoſe words of a good Biſhop to the mother of S. Auguſtine; Fieri non poteſt, ut filius iſtarum benedictionum pereat: It cannot be, that any ſonne of ſo many bleſsings ſhould be utterly loſt?

¶. But I feare I have dwelt too long upon this ſubject: I muſt now bring you abroad a little, and ſhew you what hee was amongſt his neighbours; of whom many ſtill living can juſtifie the truth of what I have to ſay.

And here I will ſpeake principally of his charitie, wherein he followed the ſteps, if not outſtript his parents. It is wee know, the undoubted character of a diſciple of Chriſt, Ioh. 13.35. It is the new commandement of the Goſpell, verſ. 34. It is the complement of the whole Law, Rom 13.8. Gal. 5.14. and [o] all Scripture, all religion is ſummed up in this.

Moſt eminently will his charitie appeare, when we ſhall conſider quantum ex quantillo, how much out of how little meanes he freely gave unto the needy. His chiefeſt aime for wealth was to be rich in good works, [p] rich for God, for the poore, and firſt for thoſe of his owne houſhold. Hee entertained two of his neereſt Allies, being fallen into ſome want, at his owne table many yeares, and maintained for the moſt part, a ſonne of either of them at the Univerſitie. And although fourteene children living had beene a [q] faire pretence to withhold his bountie, yet I am verily perſwaded he was of the minde of S. Cyprian; [r] The more children the more charitie: thou haſt the more to deprecate God for. Theſe dranke the waters of his ciſterne: (for he was no improvident father for them.) And his fountaines (neverthelesſe) were diſperſed abroad, Prov. 5.15,16. * And the poore drank freely of them. It was uſuall and annuall with him, to give a dole of bread unto the poore, on the Coronation day, and on the day of the Powder-Treaſon. At Chriſtmas he gave corne to ſome of the poore of the pariſh, to others money, to others, yea to all the reſt of his neighbours liberall and loving entertainment. In time of harveſt, when the fields were crowned with Gods bleſsings, I never knew another like him, that would ſay unto the poore, as Boaz did to Ruth; Goe not to gleane in another field, neither goe from hence, but abide, &c. Ruth 2.8. And to his work-men concerning them; Let them gleane even among the ſheaves, and reproach them them not. And let fall alſo ſome of the handfuls of purpoſe for them, and leave them, that they may gleane them, and rebuke them not, verſ. 15, 16.

And when he came into the fields himſelfe, hee would ſcatter of his heapes with a full hand, and with cheerfull heart much delighted to ſee that (whereas commonly the Owners preſence is a terrour to the Gleaners) they would bee even ready to leape for joy at his comming in upon them. And I am verily perſwaded, (ſuch were his bowels and compaſsion) that hee never gave an almes grudgingly in all his life.

If he ſet any on worke, no maſter paid more freely, nor more ſpeedily than he. He continually cried out againſt [f] that crying ſinne, the detaining of the reapers hire, or any hirelings wages.

If the poore bought corne of him, (as they did often) they were ſure to gaine both in price and meaſure, in compariſon with other ſellers. And if he bought any thing of them, he contradicted the conceit of that fellow in in S. Auguſtine, who undertaking to tell everie mans deſire, cried out, [t] You would all buy cheape, and ſell deare: For conſidering the neceſsitie of the poore ſeller, and the common underprizing of the labours of ſuch, hee would many times give them more than they demanded; and ſo willingly, as if [u] he gained by giving. And without all doubt he loſt nothing by it: For [x] as wels drawne ſpring more freely; ſo his ſubſtance encreaſed with his bountie.

Hee was otherwiſe in many things an able and a moſt ready helper to them, being ἐς τὰ πάντα δραστήριος, active and dextrous in everie thing, doing the office, [y] and deſerving the attributes of all the Pagan Deities, as Gregorie Nazianzen ſaith of Athanaſius. Had we many ſuch, we ſhould not need ſo many Lawyers, [z] which the world of old moſt happily wanted. Had they ſuits and troubles abroad, he was their Counſellor, whom they alwayes, [a] even the meaneſt of his Pariſhioners, found εὐπρόσιτον καὶ εὐπροσήγορον, eaſie of acceſſe, and as friendly to be ſpoken with. Had they need of the aſsiſtance of ſome great perſons, or the favour of ſome honourable man, he would intercede for them, either perſonally, or [b] by letters not accompting it, (as even S. Auguſtine himſelfe did) an avocation from, but an addition to his beſt labours.

Had they jarres and janglings amongſt themſelves, he [c] would call both parties, and handle them ſo with milde and courteous ſpeeches, that he would ſoone compoſe their differences. And ſuch was his humilitie, that hee would condeſcend to any office for their good: [d] himſelfe would ſometimes write their bils and bonds, and other inſtruments, to ſave them expences, and to keepe them from acquaintance with cunning Scriveners, and ſuch kinde of men. And ſuch things being ended, (as Gregorie was wont to ſay,) A cauſis ad cor, he would returne from theſe ſecular, and in ſome ſort but ſordid buſineſſes, with great alacritie, to his higher and much better contemplations.

And laſtly to cloſe up all, touching his love and charitie to the towne of Barley where hee lived; not long before his death, [e] being not able to doe what his heart deſired, hee bought a little Tenement, out of which hee gave twentie ſhillings per annum to the poore for ever: and hee perſwaded D. Pierce of Cambridge, by his will, to give them three pounds per annum. One M. Chapman of London, borne in that towne, at his earneſt motion hath given twentie ſhillings per annum more. One M. Dobinſon of S. Martins in the Field (while he lived) was by him induced to give twentie ſhillings per annum, and fortie pounds more in money, to be imploied for the uſe and benefit of the poore of that towne; and twentie pounds hee gathered of ſeverall perſons, to remaine together with the other for the like charitable imployment. Hee was indeed a powerfull perſwader unto works of pietie, [f] a verie Load-ſtone (as he ſaith of holy Athanaſius our ordinarie parallel) able to draw iron after him; as may appeare in theſe and other acts of his: but in none more than in ſolliciting that old Gentleman M. Sutton, to that heroike worke of his, in the erecting of his Hoſpitall; whom hee earneſtly deſired not to bee like that Antigonus, ſirnamed δώσων, that is, the Future-Giver, but to doe ſomething in his life. And doubtleſſe he, during life, projected that which after death was honourably effected.

∂. Thus I have led you out (by a little digreſsion) from his houſe and home at Barley; and therefore I ſhall, before I returne thither againe, ſhew you how his love and care was not confined to that place alone.

He was ready in any office of love, within his power, for any of his Countrey, or elſewhere, when occaſion was adminiſtred unto him. But chiefly it was his ſtudy, to doe good unto poore Miniſters his Fellow-Labourers in the worke of the Goſpell of Chriſt. Some that lived not farre from him, (whoſe meanes were ſmall) taſted of his owne private bountie many times; receiving from him wheat or malt, in no ſcant proportion. Hee knew the ancient [g] Canon, ſtiled Apoſtolicall, that ſtrictly enjoyneth this dutie upon everie Clergy-man, under the penaltie of ſuſpenſion, for the firſt omiſsion of ſupplying the neceſsities of ſuch, & of deprivation upon the perſeverance in that kind of want of bowels. In this way he made uſe of all his Rhetorick, here he diſcovered his perſwaſive facultie, and with great good ſucceſſe; As eſpecially appeareth by his prevalencie with the Deane and Prebendaries of the Church of Ely, hee being one of them. Hee obtained obtained of them the grant of 6. l. 13. s. 4. d. per annum, for the Vicar of Melbourne in Cambridge-ſhire, out of their appropriate Rectorie of that Towne, and 4. l. 13. s. 4. d. per annum, for the Vicar of Foxton in the like manner. And the moitie of the Tith-hay for the Vicar of Witchford in the Iſle of Ely, to iſſue out of their Appropriation in that Towne. And laſtly, meeting with a ſubject plyable, hee induced that worthy and much deplored Eſquire, old M. Caſtell of Eaſt Hatley in Cambridge-ſhire (ſome few yeares ſince deceaſed) to yeeld out of his Impropriation of Tadlow, ten pounds per annum, to the better livelyhood and maintenance of the Vicar of that Towne. Never may they want their due honour with men, and reward with God, who religiouſly take care to cheriſh and continue theſe good works ſo happily begun.

¶. It may be expected that I ſhould now at laſt ſpeake of his other vertues, as his Humilitie, Meekneſſe, Temperance, Prudence, and Patience, which were all moſt eminently ſeene in his whole courſe of life. But I have entred into this pleaſant field of love, and I cannot leave it. Bonum eſt eſſe hic. Let us pitch our tabernacles here; Upon this let us dwell, I meane, ὁ λόγῳ ὁ γλώττῃ, ἀλλ' ἔργῳ, ϗ ἀληθείᾳ. Not in word and tongue, but in deed and truth, 1 Ioh. 3. 18. And becauſe[h] no act without this, though ſeeming faire and beautifull, is worthy of the name of vertuous, as may bee gathered from the Apoſtle, 1 Cor. 13. 3. and this[i] alone is able to produce the ſeverall acts of everie vertue, verſ. 4, 5, &c.

I will therefore diſcover unto you one other moſt noble and genuine fruit of his, the exerciſe whereof was even hereditarie in him from his parents, to wit, that much commended Hoſpitalitie: He well remembred, that the Apoſtle bids us, not forget it, Heb. 13. 2. This Abraham ſo loved, nay ſo loveth ſtill, ſaith Chryſologus, [k] that he would ſcarce thinke himſelfe happie in Heaven, if he were deprived of the uſe and exerciſe thereof: if he may not have Lazarus lying in his boſome. Syneſius ſaith, [l] by being harborous, he entertained God himſelfe. And the fore-cited Scripture affirmeth, that thereby ſome have entertained Angels unawares. But withall the ſame Spirit hath told us, that Satan can transforme himſelfe into an angell of light; 2 Cor. 11. 14. So this liberall and godly man, (whoſe doores were open to any worthy of entertainment) enjoyed the comfort of many happy gueſts, ſome of them ſtrangers, men of other Nations, who having heard the fame of him in their owne Countries, travelling to ſee this Land, have in their way reſorted to his houſe, as ambitious of his acquaintance. But now and then a transformed Pilgrim dropt in, moſt ingratefully encroaching upon his bountie; as you ſhall briefly heare in two or three examples.

First of a certaine Jew, borne (as he ſaid) in Italy, and I thinke in Venice: who in his journey pretended to Cambridge, came to his doores and enquired the way thither: It was his hap to light upon this reverend Doctor, who after a word or two in Latine enterchanged betwixt them, invites him into his houſe. Hee was a young man of a comely preſence, a ſmiling countenance, and of gracefull behaviour: [m] And who knoweth not that much deceipt often lurketh under theſe accoutrements. He was no ſtranger [n] in the old Teſtament, but moſt familiarly acquainted with [o] the letter of it, and knew everie Criticiſme of the Hebrew Dialect. His company was verie delightfull to this learned man; who, as hee had once writen in his youth a Latine Treatiſe, De generali & noviſsima Iudæorum vocatione: Touching the generall and laſt calling of the Jewes: So beſide that famous [p] and publike expectation, hee beleeved that ſome of them were [q] called everie day, and inſtructed in the faith of Chriſt. And here was his rejoycing, that hee hoped hee might bee able to help forward that good worke, by the converſion of this man. During a moneths ſpace, or more, (as I remember) much altercation was betweene them, about that queſtion, Whether Chriſt be already come, and whether hee was the ſame who ſuffered once upon the croſſe, which the Jewes deny; ſaying onely thus; [ſ] that if he be come, he remaineth yet unknowne and unrevealed, yea even to himſelfe, till Elias ſhall appeare anoynting him, and publikely denouncing him to be the promiſed Meſſiah. Till at length hee ſo powerfully prevailed with him, [t] by enucleating the prophecies concerning Chriſt, diſcovering the kernell that before lay hidden [u] in the ſhell to him, that he confeſſed his ſight was cleared, and the veile was now removed from his eyes. Hee called him father, his wife mother, and gave the titles of brother and ſiſter to his children, challenging a ſpirituall alliance with them, and nothing now remained, but that he ſhould be waſhed in that Laver of regeneration, Tit. 3. 5. The fountaine opened to the houſe of David, and to the inhabitants of Hieruſalem for ſinne and for uncleanneſſe, Zach. 13. 1. It is [x] recorded of the Emperour Baſilius, that he induced many Jewes to yeeld to the profeſsion of Chriſtianitie, meerely by gifts and promiſes. And it is ſaid, that Siſibutus ſometime King of the Goths, brought 9000. Jewes, blanda exhortatione, by faire exhortations, unto our holy Baptiſme, Ioh. Magn. Gotth. hiſt. lib. 16. c. 14. So the kinde and courteous uſage of this Jew, a man would thinke might worke much upon him. But ſuch is the obſtinacie of that Nation, and ſuch their perfidious diſpoſition and diſsimulation; that as S.

Auguſtine ſaith; Though the Goſpell be preached thorowout the world, Difficile Iudæus fidelis inveniatur; You ſhall hardly finde a faithfull and beleeving Jew, Quæſt. ex vet. Teſt. 44. [y] Some you ſhall have pretending themſelves converted, and ſuffering themſelves [z] to be baptized, onely that they may deceive and pervert the ſimple. Many of them in the dayes of the Emperour Leo, apoſtatizing, did [a] diluere baptiſma, in a contemptuous manner waſh off their baptiſme: and like thoſe Converts of Childerick King of France, and (as the ſtorie ſaith) his God-ſons, [b] who violating their Chriſtian vow, returned to their former vomit.

And you muſt expect no better from this brother of theirs; who though he carried it out fairely for a time; yet [c] diſſimulation, we know, laſts not; and the Ape (as Gregorie Nyſſen ſaith) cloathed like a young Gallant, and taught to behave himſelfe mannerly, if you throw him but a nut, will preſently ſhew [d] himſelfe an Ape. Forſooth this man muſt needs ſee the Univerſities; he goes to Cambridge, and returnes to his father againe: then he is furniſhed for Oxon, letters are written to commend him to ſome Profeſſors there, and by theſe hee gaines kinde entertainment. Now Barley is too obſcure a place for the baptizing of this Catechumen, it may bee done with more ſolemnitie in the ſight of many Doctors and other learned Clerks. In a word, his new birth-day was deſigned, and at hand: But as [e] Socrates relateth of one of this Nation, that comming to be chriſtened, the water miraculouſly vaniſhed, and the Font filled againe, was ſuddenly againe dried up. So on the other ſide, [f] the water was here ready and remaining, but our Jew vaniſhed, and was run away; nor did he ever returne to give thanks for all the courteſies received from our reverend Doctor. --- ἴδ' αἱ χάριτες ἐς τὸ πυθμένι, Theocr.

¶. It was not long after, before this charitable mans hoſpitalitie was aſſaulted by another hypocriticall Impoſtor, who profeſſed himſelfe a Roman Catholike, and one who from his childhood had beene trained up in that religion. But now at length, by what meanes I know not, hee would faine ſeeme ſomewhat ſcrupulous, as doubting of the truth of many points, which hee before-times had held unqueſtionable. Here he hoped to get ſatisfaction to everie Quære, and nothing need to dwell with him long unreſolved. He was going and comming divers times, untill at laſt, (as wee read of Firmus the Manichee his comming to S. Auguſtine) * falling upon his knees, he caſt himſelfe downe at his feet, powring out teares, earneſtly beſeeching him to pray to God for him. Hee confeſſed unto him many ſinnes, and one amongſt the reſt (as I have heard) verie foule. The maladies were diſcovered, and the medicine was, in appearance, earneſtly implored.

plored. He prayed, that upon this his humiliation & repentance ſwimming in teares, that hee might be admitted to the holy Euchariſt. This credulous good man, [g] being himſelfe free from guile, and conſequently not ſuſpitious, (for charitie beleeveth all things, 1 Cor. 13. 5.) accepteth of him; and ſoone after gave notice of a Communion to bee celebrated of purpoſe for this new reformed Penitent. ¶. Let me tell you a ſhort ſtorie of one Intruder more, ſuſpected (I beleeve) of ſome to be as * verie a κίβδημα, or juggling Varlet[e] as either Jew or Papiſt. He was, by your good favour, a brother of the Phariſaicall Fraternitie, a Separatiſt, one whom I have often ſeene; hee preſumed ſomewhat upon a little remote touch of affinitie with D. Willet, but more upon his bountie and goodneſſe, and therefore thruſt himſelfe divers times into his houſe. Sometime [h] hee roamed up and downe from place to place, and from one Countrey to another, and more than once (if I miſtake not) to Amſterdam. From thence hee brought his papers, from ſome of the great Rabbins that then lived there, [i] who worthily exiled from our Church, ſpared not even in the moſt irreverent manner that might be, even to caſt dirt in their holy Mothers face, the moſt renowned Church of England, and to [k] load her with all kinde of blaſphemies and falſe imputations. They were no ſooner exhibited to this great Divine, but preſently hee gave them a ſharp anſwer, taking up roundly thoſe impudent calumniators. At laſt this Meſſenger, (who for a long time ſeemed wavering) was ſo tranſported with the frenſie of thoſe malignant Zelots; that now, though hee was loth to loſe the advantage of his ancient lodging, yet hee did wholly ſequeſter himſelfe from everie exerciſe of pietie uſed in that family: and though he muſt be preſent at Grace, for feare of loſing his dinner, yet hee would not ſo much as uncover his head during that action. Which was no ſooner obſerved, but [l] forthwith (Grace being ended) this devout man of God, forgetting thoſe jura hoſpitalia, [m] lawes of hoſpitalitie, ſnatcht his hat from his head, caſt it into the midſt of the roome, and thruſt him from his table, ſaying to this effect, [n] He ſhall not lodge, or eat, or drinke with me, that will not give God thanks with mee. Thus ſent away in his owne language, (Procul hinc procul eſto) We heard no more newes of him.

I have ſtood the longer upon theſe ſtories, not onely for the advancement of his hoſpitalitie; but to demonſtrate to the

A godly man, a Doctor 'mongſt the chiefe,
A Pillar ſtrong of th'Orthodox Beleefe.

Such titles his great and well-deſerving paines, in the defence of our Religion, together with his holy life, have truly merited: but moſt eſpecially will you acknowledge them his due, [p] when you ſhall have read the manner of his bleſſed death; whereunto my ſpeech now tendeth.

¶. Here I intend to omit many things, which I have fit opportunitie to treat of; his frequent contemplations & ordinarie diſcourſes touching death: his continuall practice [q] of preaching at every buriall in his Pariſh, without reſpect of rich or poore, good or bad, ſave only in ſome apt commemoration of them: whereby [r] he made himſelfe familiar, as it were, with death, and his whole life (in the words of Gregorie Nazianzen) μελέτην θανάτου, a meditation of death, or (as Seneca ſaith) a [ſ] walking towards it. And I will onely tell you of his laſt journey, and other neceſſarie circumſtances of the depoſition of his tabernacle; and departure from the world: which were I not like Pauſanias the Sophiſter called Magirie in Philoſtratus, [t] that is, Cooke, but ſuch an one as marred good diſhes with ill dreſſing, might reliſh well to any rightly affected palate.

It happened about the end of Michaelmas Terme, Anno 1621. that ſome occaſions called him up to London; where other buſineſſes being tranſacted, hee fell into ſome parley with a Stationer, about the printing of his Hexapla in Levit. which he had then in hand, and intended after his returne home to have finiſhed. But God had a greater worke in hand, the finiſhing of his life, [u] whereby his purpoſe was prevented. For in the midſt of his way home-ward, his horſe ſtumbling, both horſe and Rider fell unto the ground, in which fall his right leg was broken: being lifted up, and ſet upon his horſe againe, hee rode on a little to a towne called Hodſdon, where he turned into an Inne, and ſent for a Bone-ſetter, by whom after his leg was ſet, he was directed to keepe his bed ten dayes; unto which direction hee willingly ſubmitted, reſolving to make that place his ſtudy for the time, and I had almoſt ſaid his pulpit too: [x] for on two Sundayes falling within thoſe ten dayes, he gave ſome concionatorie exhortations unto the people of the houſe, who upon pretence of attending upon him, ſtayed from Church. And on the other dayes he commanded one of his ſonnes, who there waited upon him, to write from his mouth certaine ſweet and heavenly meditations, upon that ſong of Hezekiah King of Iudah, when he had been ſicke, and was recovered of his ſickneſſe. I ſaid in the cutting off of my dayes, I ſhall goe to the gates of the grave: I am deprived, &c. Iſa. 38. verſ. 9, and 10, &c. Wherein hee applyed many things unto himſelfe; eſpecially (as I remember thoſe words, verſ. 13. I reckoned till morning, that as a Lion, ſo will hee breake all my bones. And thoſe againe, verſ. 15. What ſhall I ſay? he hath ſpoken unto mee, and himſelfe hath done it: I ſhall goe ſoftly, all my yeares, in the bitterneſſe of my ſoule. Theſe papers I have ſeene and read; and I wiſh I had beene their Depoſitorie: I would not have ſuffered ſuch ἀμβρόσια, [y] ſuch rich jewels to have beene loſt. Thus he continued till the tenth day (being December the 4th.) when early in the morning, about two of the clocke, hee was awakened by the tolling of a paſſing bell; which I may probably conceive, occaſioned in him [z] a ſtrong apprehenſion of his owne death approaching. After hee had by his prayers commended the partie then dying to the mercie of God; he fell into a diſcourſe with his wife, (who had beene with him ſince the day of that ſad accident, and lay in the ſame chamber) concerning death, and our bleſſed hopes expected after death: And amongſt other things, (as ſhee related to mee ſoone after his departure) touching the mutuall knowledge that the Saints in glorie have of one another. [a] It was propounded as a doubt to M. Luther, immediately before his death; and ſo this good woman made a Quære of it to her husband: who reſolved her with the words of Luther, (unto which [b] Chemnitius, and many others do ſubſcribe;) Thas as Adam in the eſtate of innocencie, when God firſt preſented Eve unto him, whom he had never ſeene before, asked not whence ſhe came, but ſaid, This is now bone of my bones, and fleſh of my fleſh, Gen. 2. 23. Even ſo the Saints in Heaven, beatifically illuminated with knowledge beyond Adams in his firſt condition, [c] ſhall know not only thoſe whom here they knew not, but even thoſe whom before they never ſaw. He added likewiſe that of Peter, raviſhed with an heavenly viſion, in the transfiguration of Chriſt, Matth. 17. 4. taking notice of Moſes and Elias,[d] When as he never ſaw (ſaith Tertullian) ſo much as either of their pictures, the Law prohibiting ſuch things to the people of the Jewes. Againe, [e] the rich man (ſaid he) knew Abraham and Lazarus, Luk. 16. being himſelfe in torments; and therefore much rather may we beleeve, that Abraham and Lazarus knew one the other. And our Saviour telleth the Jewes, that they ſhall ſee Abraham, and Iſaac, and Iacob, and all the Prophets in the Kingdome of God, Luk. 13. 28. upon the death of his deare brother Cæſarius, in [f] hope that he ſhall one day behold him again in that glorious eſtate. And that ſweet ſaying of S. Cyprian, me thinks, ſhould not be forgotten of him: [g] a great number of our deareſt friends expect us there, our parents, brethren, ſonnes, &c. Nor that Conſolatorie Epiſtle of S. Auguſtine to the Lady Italica after her husbands death, [h] aſſuring her that ſhee ſhall know him amongſt that bleſſed Societie, and know him better, yea and love him better too, than ever ſhe had done here in this life. Becauſe our knowledge ſhall bee [i] no outſide knowledge in the fleſh, or in the face; (for, Though wee have knowne Chriſt after the fleſh, yet now henceforth know wee him no more, 2 Cor. 5. 16. but by the true diſcerning eye of the ſoule; which ſhall then ſee moſt cleerely, [k] when it ſhall be freed from this darkſome and dull body.

¶. This comfortable diſcourſe being ended, ſoone after the day approaching, they began to ſing an Hymne (which he himſelfe had compoſed) giving thanks to God with heartie melody, for their reſt that night, and praying a bleſsing upon them and theirs for the day enſuing. A cuſtome which they had uſed many yeares, and which he had learned of the old Chriſtians of the Primitive Church, [l] whoſe imitation he affected much. That ſo often-cited Father, ſirnamed The Divine, [m] reporteth how his father and mother were wont in this manner alwayes to begin the day. And Tertullian more ancient than he, ſaith, [n] that this was the practice of Chriſtian Conſorts in his dayes. This kinde of ſinging is generally commended of the Fathers, [o] as uſefull both by night and day, as powerfull for the quieting of all paſsions, and to eaſe our mindes of all perturbations. And to this purpoſe the Schollers of Pytboras [p] uſed ſinging everie night, profeſsing it the onely way to procure quiet reſt, and freedome from ill-affrighting dreames. Pardon mee this digreſsion, I returne againe. I told you of the Dittie which they ſang everie morning: But this now ſatisfied him not: his heart and tongue were well tuned, and he began a Pſalme of David, a perfect Hallelu-jah, which both begins and ends with, Praiſe yee the Lord. It was Pſalm. 146. which was his [q] Cygnea Cantio, like old Simeons Nunc dimittis. As Gregorie Nazianzen [r] relateth of his ſiſter Gorgonia, that immediately before her death ſhee ſang, Ἐν εἰρήνῃ ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ κοιμηθήσομαι καὶ ὑπνώσω, I will both lay me downe in peace, and ſleepe; Pſal. 4. 8. And as that learned and religious Biſhop Iewel, waiting everie moment till his change ſhould come, [ſ] forced his voice while his ſpirit began to faint in ſinging the 71. Pſalme, applying, as they ſay, ſome things of it to himſelfe. So this holy man had no ſooner uttered one verſe of that 146. Pſalme, but preſently hee brake out into theſe words; Oh this is a moſt ſweet Pſalme: and ſo went on, but pauſing at the end of everie ſtaffe, till hee had uttered a ſhort paraphraſe upon it. And comming unto thoſe words, v. 7. And looſe the fetters ſtrong: and againe to thoſe, verſ. 8. The lame to limbs reſtore: Hee applyes both to himſelfe, calling the ſplinters upon his leg his fetters, and comforting himſelfe in this, that God would reſtore him from his lameneſſe. But in concluſion, ſinging was no ſooner ended, but ſighing followed. For having occaſion, for ſome eaſe to ſtirre himſelfe a little, hee ſuddenly fetcht a deepe groane, and ſo fell into a trance. His wife cryed out for help, and preſently ſome came in, and upon meanes uſed, he began to rouze himſelfe a little, and to looke about. And then uttered theſe his ἔσχατα ῥήματα, his laſt words, wherewith hee breathed out his ſoule, Let me alone, I ſhall doe well; Lord Ieſu---- At the ſound of which thrice-bleſſed name, the Lord who knoweth the meaning of the ſpirit, who heareth before we aske, and preventeth us with the bleſsings of good, uncloathed his ſoule of the garment of mortalitie, and inveſted it with immortalitie and glorie. Auguſtus[t] when he heard of any who died ſuddenly, and with little paine, was wont to wiſh ſuch εὐθανασίαν, ſuch an eaſie death to him and his. This was indeed vere εὐθανασία, a good and eaſie death, eſpecially conſidering the good life preceding, and thoſe celeſtiall Songs and Pſalmes, meditations and applications (as you have heard) which did accompany, and as immediate fore-runners make way for it. What accident in nature might happen, occaſioning this unexpected alteration, I leave unto the ſonnes of Æſculapius to determine: His leg was thought to bee well ſet, and no danger feared that way, he continued to the tenth day heartie and pleaſant. He was 59. yeares of age, but of a ſtrong and able body, and an athleticall conſtitution: he was of a faire, freſh, ruddy complexion, temperate in his diet, faſting often; he was laborious in his ſtudies, but without defatigation; and at times of intermiſsion, eſpecially at his table, verie cheerfull and merrie. Onely this I have learned, that by reaſon of ſinne, wee are expoſed unto many dangers continually, as S. Auguſtine largely ſheweth, giving inſtance in one, [u] who, as he ſaith, returning from the Market homward, ſound of limbs, chanced to fall, and in falling brake his leg, and of that fracture died. Beſides this, well may wee beleeve the hand of God was here in a more eſpeciall manner, to call him to his heavenly rewards, who had laboured ſo long, and had fought in Gods cauſe ſo valiantly, and [x] with ſo ſmall a ſalarie. For while others were negotiating (as I may ſay) [y] In templo fortunæ viſcatæ, in the temple of birdlime. Fortune, ſticking [z] cloſer to their profits, than to the paines of their vocation, hee was diligently officiating In templo Fortunæ parvæ, in his little Church, [a] as deſirous rather of labors than of honors. So that thoſe words of Æneas in Virgil, to his ſon Aſcanius, may well become his mouth,

9. The next day after his death, his body was conveyed by coach to his towne of Barley, and on the third day there enterred in the Chancell, and covered with a faire grave-ſtone of marble. At whoſe Funerals there flock'd together of all ſorts verie many, Knights, Clergy-men, Gentlemen, and others, who much honoured him in his life, and now deſired to ſee thoſe laſt rites ſolemnized. Nothing was wanting to the condecorating of his exequies. In the fore-noone, M. Thomas Newcomen then Parſon of Heydon, a grave Bachelour of Divinitie, after an elegant and paſſionate Encomiaſtick Oration upon the Dead, made a godly Sermon to the Living. Then the corps was committed to the chambers of death. And after dinner, the Congregation repaired to the Church againe, where the like offices were performed by M. Greene of Royſton. The Funerals were then over, but not the dayes of mourning: For I remember well, how the ſeverall Lecturers of Royſton in their courſes, for a long time after, making ſome worthy commemoration of their friend departed, bewailed the loſſe of him, and beſprinckled his aſhes with their teares before the people.

Thus briefly I have collected [b] ſome few things of many that might truly have beene ſpoken of him, that [c] you may heare and read what you may learne to imitate, according to the exhortation of the bleſſed Apoſtle, Hebr. 13.7. Remember thoſe that guide you, who have ſpoken unto you the word of God, whoſe faith follow, conſidering the iſſue of their converſation.

THE FIRST BOOKE OR CENTVRIE CONTEINING THE Controverſies of Religion, which ariſe in queſtion betweene the Church of God and the Papiſts, about the word of God conteined in the Scriptures, and the Church Militant here upon earth, with the parts and members thereof.

The firſt generall Controverſie of the holy Scriptures.

ACcording to the method which I have propounded to my ſelfe (God aſſiſting mee by his ſpirit) to obſerve thorowont this whole Treatiſe of the Controverſies, and as I have ſet it downe in the end of the Preface, in the firſt place wee are to entreat of ſuch matters as conceme the Propheticall office of Chriſt. Hee is our Prophet, our heavenly Teacher, and Doctor, Matth. 23. verſ. 8. from him proceedeth all holy knowledge : wee have not ſeene God, nor the high things of God : But the onely begotten ſonne, which is in the boſome of the father, hee hath declared him, Iohn 1. 18. Wherefore all the true ſheepe of Chriſt will heare his voyce, Iohn 10. 3. His voyce is not elſe-where heard but onely in the Scriptures : Wee muſt heare Moſes and the Prophets, Luke 16. 29. and as Saint Ambroſe well ſaith, Qui vult ad Chriſti pervenire myſterium, non ingreditur ad illud niſi per Serm 57. evangelica ſcriptura ſecretum : No man can attaine to the knowledge of Chriſt, but by the ſecret of evangelicall Scriptures. Firſt of all therefore this great and moſt famous controverſie betweene us and our adverſaries concerning the Scriptures muſt bee handled : which is diſtributed into ſeven ſeverall queſtions.

1. Concerning the Canonicall Scripture, what bookes are to bee received into the ſacred Canon, what bookes to be rejected and counted apocryphall.

2. Concerning the authenticall Edition of the holy Scriptures, whether the Hebrew, Greeke, or Latine tranſlation is chiefly to be followed.

3. Whether the Scriptures ought to be tranſlated into the vulgar and Engliſh tongue : and whether publike prayers and divine ſervice ought to be uſed in the ſame tongue.

4. Whether the Scriptures are authorized by the Church, and not rather ſo knowne to bee of themſelves.

5. Concerning the perſpicuity and plainneſſe of the Scripture, whether it bee ſo hard, that the common people may not ſafely be admitted to the reading thereof.

6. Concerning the interpretation of Scripture : which queſtion is divided into three parts : firſt, whether the Scripture admit divers ſenſes and expoſitions : ſecondly, who hath the chiefe authority to expound Scripture : thirdly, what meanes ought to be uſed in expounding of it.

7. Concerning the perfection of the Scripture, three parts of the queſtion. Firſt, whether the Scriptures be neceſſary : ſecondly, whether they bee ſufficient to ſalvation : thirdly, whether there bee any traditions beſide neceſſary to ſalvation.

The firſt Queſtion concerning the Canonicall Scripture.

Of the ſtate of the firſt Queſtion.

VVEe have not in this place profeſſedly to deale with thoſe heretikes, which deny either the whole Scripture, or any part thereof: but onely with our adverſaries the Papiſts, that holding all thoſe bookes to be Scripture, which we doe acknowledge, doe adde unto them other bookes which are not canonicall : ſo that they offend not as other heretikes, in denying any part of the Scripture, but which is as bad, in adding unto it ; for both theſe are accurſed, Revel. 22. 18. And here I could have wiſhed that they would have followed S. Hieromes counſell, writing thus unto Lata, as touching the canonicall bookes of the old Teſtament, which after hee had reckoned up, as wee now hold them, giveth this caveat concerning the Apocrypha : Caveat omnia Apocrypha, & ſi quando ea, non ad dogmatum veritatem, ſed ad ſignorum reverentiam legere voluerit, ſciat non eorum eſſe, quorum titulis prænotantur, multaque his admixta vitioſa, & grandis eſſe prudentiæ aurum in luto quærere : Let her take heed of all the Apocrypha, which if ſhee will reade, not for the truth of doctrine, but reverence of the ſtorie, let her know, that they are not their writings, whoſe title they beare, and that many corrupt things are intermingled ; and herein lieth great wiſdome, how to gather gold out of durt. Hieron. ad Latam.

Firſt of all briefly before wee proceed, let us ſee who they were that did offend in the firſt kind, namely, in denying, and detracting from Scripture. Some heretikes generally rejected the whole Scripture, ſome certaine parts thereof. The Sadduces received no Scripture, beſides the five bookes of Moſes ; the Maniches condemned the whole old Teſtament, and ſo did wicked Marcion.

The bookes of Moſes the Ptolomaits refuſed, the booke of the Pſalmes the Nicolaitanes, and the Anabaptiſts in our dayes : there wanted not which condemned the booke of the Preacher and the Canticles as wanton and laſcivious bookes : and the Anabaptiſts are not here behind with their parts. The holy and excellent booke of Iob hath alſo found enemies, and ſome of the Rabbines, which doe thinke that the ſtory is but fained : which hereſie is confuted, Ezech. 14. 14. for there Noah, Iob, Daniel, are named together : ſo that it is manifeſt, that ſuch a man there was. Wicked Porphyry refuſeth Daniel as forged.

The new Teſtament the Maniches moſt impiouſly affirmed to bee full of lies. Cerdon the heretike condemned all but Lukes Goſpell. Cerinthus received none but Markes. The Valentinians could away with none but Iohns Goſpell. The Alogians of all other hated Iohns writings. The Ebionites onely admitted Matthewes Goſpell. The Acts of the Apoſtles the Severian heretikes contemned. The Marcionites the Epiſtles to Timothy, to Titus, to the Hebrewes. The Ebionites could not away with any of S. Pauls workes. But the Church of God hath even from the Apoſtles time acknowledged and received all the bookes of the new Teſtament, as they now ſtand together, as by Origen a moſt ancient Writer of the Church is in theſe words confeſſed : Sacerdotali tuba primus in Evangelio ſuo Matthæus increpuit ; Marcus quoque, Lucas & Ioannes ſuis ſingulis tubis ſacerdotalibus cecinerunt, &c. Firſt, Matthew ſoundeth forth his Evangelicall trumpet ; then follow Marke, Luke and Iohn, ſinging with their Prieſtly trumpets ; Peter alſo ſendeth forth the trumpet of his two Epiſtles ; Iames alſo and Iude, and Iohn maketh melody with his trumpet in his Epiſtles, and the Apocalypſe, and Luke in the Acts of the Apoſtles : Et Paulus in quatuordecim Epiſtolarum ſuarum fulminat tubis ; And Paul thundreth out in the trumpets of his fourteene Epiſtles. Unto theſe former heretikes adde the Zuinckfeldians and Libertines that refuſe to be judged by the Scripture, calling it a dead letter, and flye unto the inward and ſecret revelations of the ſpirit. And by your leave, the Papiſts are not farre from this hereſie ſome of them : although the Jeſuite cry never ſo much with open mouth, that wee belye them, De verbo Dei lib. 1. cap. 1. Take but a little paines to peruſe that worthy learned mans and reverend Fathers defence of the Apologie, p. 521. there you ſhall find how that Lodovicus, a Canon Lateran in Rome, ſaid in the Councell of Trent, that the Scripture is but mortuum atramentum, dead inke. The Biſhop of Poitiers ſaid, that it was but res inanimis & muta, a dead and dumbe thing. Albertus Pigghius, that the Scriptures were but muti Iudices, dumbe Judges. Eckius calleth it Evangelium nigrum, & theologiam atramentariam, the blacke Goſpell and inkie divinity : and it is naſus cereus, a noſe of wax, ſaith hee. And now in commeth Hoſius with his part : that it is but loſt labour which is beſtowed in the Scripture : for the Scripture is a creature and a certaine bare letter. But the Jeſuite ſaith, that wee abuſe the name of that man, for thoſe are not his owne words, but he reporteth them of Zuinckfeldius. Bee it ſo for this time, though M. Iewel beſtow ſome paines to prove them to be according to his owne meaning. Though theſe ſhould not be Hoſius owne words, yet theſe are not much better, yea, farre worſe, who ſpeaking of Davids writing of the Pſalmes, ſaith thus, Quid ni ſcriberet, ſcribimus indocti doctique poemata paſſim, why might not he write (ſaith he) being a temporall Prince, as Horace ſaith, wee write ballads every body both learned and unlearned? Hoſ. lib. 2 cont. Brentium.

Homil. 7. in Joſu.

I pray you now how much doe theſe Papiſts differ from the Libertines and Zuinckfeldians, unleſſe it bee in this, that the Libertines cleave to ſecret revelations ; the Papiſts are pinned upon the Popes ſleeve, affirming that it is no Scripture nor Goſpell without the determination of the Church. Nay one of them ſaith, Determinatio Eccleſiæ appellatur Evangelium, the determination of the Church is called the Goſpell, Iohannes Maria. Will you yet heare of greater impiety ? Anno Domini 1240. or thereabout, there was a booke ſet forth by the Friers, called Evangelium æternum, full of their owne fables, and abominable errors : they taught that Chriſts Goſpell was not to bee compared unto it, and that the Goſpell of Chriſt ſhould bee preached but fifty yeares. This booke with much adoe was condemned by the Pope, (but after long diſputation) and it was burnt ſecretly, leſt the Friers ſhould have beene diſcredited : and withall, the booke of Gulielmus de S. amore, which hee had written againſt the Friers, and therein diſputed againſt their Goſpell, was commanded to bee burned with the other. reſies, their opinion alſo is to bee rejected, that thinke that the holy Writers might in ſome things bee deceived, as miſtaking one thing for another, or failing in their memory. To this opinion Eraſmus inclined, whom Bellarmine taketh paine to confute, lib. 1. cap. 6. He might as well have turned his argument upon Melchior Canus their owne champion, who thinketh that Stephen, Act. 7. in telling ſo long a ſtory, might forget himſelfe in ſome things, Can. lib. 2. cap. 18. But we herein miſlike both Eraſmus conceit, and Canus his fancie, and who elſe have ſo thought of the Scriptures; and ſay rather with Saint Auguſtine: Tantummodo ſcripturis canonicis hanc debeo ſervitutem, &c. I doe onely to the canonicall Scriptures owe this ſervice, and obedience, which I doe ſo follow, that I thinke the Writers thereof erred not any whit at all. And againe, Omnem falſitatem abeſſe ab Evangeliſtis decet, non ſolum eam, qua mentiendo promitur, ſed etiam eam qua obliviſcendo: All falſity, it is fitting to bee far off from the Evangeliſts, not onely that which is drawne out in lying, but alſo in forgetting, lib. 2. de conſen. Evangeliſt. c. 12. And I ſay alſo with Hierome, who, whereas ſome accuſed S. Matthew of forgetfulneſſe, as though he ſhould have named Ieremy for Zachary, Matth. 27. 9. thus writeth: Abſit hoc de pediſſequo Chriſti dicere, &c. Farre be it from me ſo to ſay of the follower of Chriſt, who in alleaging the Prophets, hunted not for words or phraſes, but had a care to ſet downe the ſenſe and doctrine: for he thinketh that place there cited to be taken, though not word for word, out of Ieremy. But now to the queſtion.

Epiſt. 19.

Hieron. ad Pammach.

Certaine Queſtions about ſome of the Canonicall bookes of Scripture.

THe bookes of Scripture whereof we now intreat, are of three ſorts: ſome are both by us and our adverſaries judged to be Canonicall, as all the bookes of the new Teſtament, wholly as they ſtand: and all theſe bookes of the old Teſtament, ſo many as are found in the Hebrew: Some are both of us and our adverſaries rejected, and thruſt out of the Canon: what bookes they are, ſhall be declared in the next ſection.

A third ſort there is, which our adverſaries would gladly bring into the number of the bookes of ſacred Scripture, but we herein doe by warrant of Gods word reſiſt and withſtand them: and of theſe alſo afterward.

Concerning the firſt kind, namely ſuch bookes as are both by them and us acknowledged for Canonicall, there is no queſtion betweene us for the authority of them: onely about the booke of the Preacher, there ariſeth ſome controverſie betweene Bellarmine and us, whom eſpecially I purpoſe to trace throughout this Treatiſe. We are agreed of the booke it ſelfe, that it is Canonicall; of the Author, that hee was Salomon: but theſe two points wee vary about: firſt, Bellarmine thinketh that Salomon made that booke before his fall: we thinke he ſet it forth after, as a token of his repentance: ſecondly, he thinketh that Salomon was a reprobate and a caſt-away for ever: we hold the contrary; let us firſt examine his arguments, and then ſet downe our owne.

The Papiſts.

THat this booke of the Preacher was compoſed by Salomon, before hee fell: thus the Jeſuite would prove it.

Argum. 1. The Preacher ſaith, that his wiſdome remained yet with him, chap. 2. ver. 9. But it is not like, that the heavenly gift of wiſdome continued with him after his heart was turned from God to Idolatry: Ergo, it is like this booke was made before his fall, while he was in the ſtate of wiſdome, lib. 1. de verb. cap. 5.

Eccleſ. 2. 9.

Anſwer. 1. Salomons wiſdome was not onely in divine, but in humane things, and in the knowledge of nature; for he ſpake of trees, of herbs, of beaſts and fowles, and therefore hee is ſaid to excell in wiſdome the children of the Eaſt, and the wiſe of Ægypt, whoſe knowledge was in naturall things, 1 King. 4. verſ. 30. 33. And this wiſdome might remaine with Salomon, in the middeſt of pleaſure, as we ſee it was not denied to the vitious and Idolatrous heathen Philoſophers; yea, and Salomon ſaith of himſelfe, that hee thought to give his heart to wine, and yet to lead his mind in wiſdome, chap. 2. verſ. 3. ſo that it ſeemeth, that the gift of wiſdome did not wholly faile him, no not in his fall.

1 King. 30. 33.

2. And what if it were granted, that the ſpirit of wiſdome departed from him all the time of his dotage? Why might it not returne to him againe afterwards, when he began to repent him of his fall? as the ſpirit of ſtrength and fortitude being gone from Sampſon, for a while, came to him againe.

3. Or thus rather the place may be underſtood: I was great, and increaſed above all (ſaith hee) that were before me in Ieruſalem, alſo my wiſdome remained with mee: that is, hee maketh a large and ample confeſſion of his ſinne, that while he was in honour and wealth, with wiſdome, even then his heart was intiſed from the true worſhip of God, even in the middeſt of Gods bleſſings: ſuch was his unthankfulneſſe to God, and forgetfulneſſe of his benefits. So then the time of the continuance of his wiſdome, is not to be referred to the inſtant of making this booke, but hath reſpect to his fall: for he ſaith, that his honour, riches, and wiſdome continued yet, (I was increaſed;) but it is to be thought, that as he being drowned in pleaſure, decayed in wiſdome; ſo alſo his credit and ſubſtance was empaired, which were given him as handmaids to wait of his wiſdome.

Argum. 2. Salomon doted when hee was an old man, 1 King. 11. 4. to what time then will you aſſigne his repentance? Againe, if this booke had beene made after his fall, it is like, that whereas hee maketh a particular rehearſall of all his pleaſures, hee would not have omitted his pleaſure and delight in ſuch a multitude of wives and concubines : And is it like that hee being beſotted with the love of ſo many women, could endite ſuch excellent ſayings? Bellarm. ibid.

Anſ. 1. Salomon was old when hee gave himſelfe unto women, yet it is like hee was older, when hee weaned himſelfe from his pleaſure, and returned unto God by hearty repentance : for there are divers degrees of old age. Secondly, it was not neceſſary that Salomon ſhould reckon up all his pleaſures, neither indeed doth hee : for hee ſpake of trees, and beaſts, and fowles ; in the knowledge whereof, no doubt it was a great delight unto a wiſe man, to be occupied and exerciſed : yet thereof he maketh no mention in the 2. chap. Neither is hee altogether ſilent concerning his delight in women : for hee ſaith, I provided me men ſingers, and women ſingers, the delights of the ſonnes of men, verſ. 8. And, I have gotten mee men-ſervants, and maids, and had children borne in my houſe : or as the Latine text readeth, I had a great houſhold. Hee may in this place have relation to the multitude of his wives and concubines : why not? 3. To the third point, we anſwer, we ſay not, that at the ſame time, while Salomon gave his minde to pleaſure, that he wrote this booke ; but afterwards, when hee was come to himſelfe, and awaked out of his long ſleepe.

Argum. 3. Both 1 King. c.4. 32. and Eccleſiaſtic. 47. where mention is made of Salomons acts : firſt, his bookes and writings are mentioned, and then his amorous paſſions. Bellarm. lib. 1. de verb. Dei. c. 5. ſec. Sed nec illud, &c.

Anſwer. 1. The ſequell or conſequence of this reaſon is denied, for alwayes that which is firſt recorded in Scripture, was not firſt done. Infinite examples there are thereof : as Geneſ. 2. the creation of woman is ſet downe after the inſtitution of the Sabbath, yet was ſhe created the day before, the ſame day of Adams creation. 2. Neither are all Salomons ſayings and writings ſpoken of in the firſt place : it is ſaid, he ſpake three thouſand proverbs, and his ſongs were a thouſand and five : We grant, he uttered many proverbs and parables, and made many ſongs before his fall ; but it followeth not therefore, that he made none after. 3. Yea, there is expreſſe mention made of Salomons words, even after his fall, 1 King. 11. 41. therefore ſome things he both ſpoke and writ after his fall.

The Proteſtants.

AT what time the booke of Eccleſiaſtes was written by Salomon, though it bee no materiall point of our faith to know ; yet becauſe the truth every where, ſo much as by diligent endevour may bee attained unto, is to be ſought out : It ſhall appeare by theſe reaſons following, that both it is moſt like and probable, that it was endited after Salomons fall, and that it is moſt ſafe ſo to thinke, becauſe there can no other time be aſſigned for Salomons repentance, as it ſhall even now be ſhewed.

Argum. 1. Firſt, it is made manifeſt by the inſcription and title of the booke : the words of the Preacher ; for whence is it that Salomon being a King, to whom it pertaineth not to teach the people, but to the Levites and Prieſts, doth give himſelfe ſo ſtrange a ſtile? It is not becauſe by his writing hee preacheth : for then in his two other bookes of the Proverbs and Canticles, by the ſame reaſon, he might have ſo named himſelfe : but of a King he is now become a Preacher, preaching unto the people by the example of his converſion. The word קהלת choheleth properly ſignifieth Eccleſiaſten, ſeu Eccleſiaſticum, a Churchman, or a man of the congregation : And ſo Salomon calleth himſelfe, either becauſe he was now reſtored, and made as it were a man of the Church againe : or becauſe publikely he had ſome ſpeech after his returning to God, as is the manner of thoſe which publikely ſhew repentance for their ſinne, ſic Iunius in hunc locum.

Argum. 2. The Preacher in this booke doth every where urge his owne experience : as I turned me to behold, 2. 12. I have ſeene under the ſunne, 3. 16. I have ſeene all things in the dayes of my vanity, 7. 17. Hee alſo Eccleſ. 2. 12. c. 7. 17. profeſſeth as much, that he ſought in his heart by his owne experience to find out, wherein conſiſted the chiefe goodneſſe of men under the ſunne, 2. 3. And having run thorow the courſe of all things in his owne knowledge and experience, he at the length, as a man of much obſervation and great continuance concludeth Vanity of vanities, (ſaith the Preacher) all is but vanity, chap. 12. 8. Ergo, it is like that Salomon wrote Eccleſ. 12. 8. this booke, being now thorow aged, and of long experience : wiſdome indeed goeth not by yeares, but experience is the daughter and off-ſpring of old age.

Argum. 3. Further, the Preacher ſaith, he ſought in his heart to give himſelfe to wine, and to apprehend Eccleſ. 2. 3. folly, Eccleſ. 2. 3. But when elſe did he lay hold on folly, than, when he fell into the ſnares of women, and was ſeduced to Idolatry? Ergo, this booke was made after his fall. It will here I know bee anſwered, that there is no ſuch thing in the Text, as I have alleaged : Indeed, in the vulgar Latine there is not, which tranſlateth cleane contrary to the Hebrew : for in ſtead of, Cogitavi pertrahere animum ad vinum, & prehendere ſtultitiam, I thought to draw my ſelfe to wine, and to apprehend folly : it is read, Cogitavi abſtrahere me à vino, & devitare ſtultitiam : I bethought to withdraw my ſelfe from wine, and to ſhun folly ; quite contrary. But Bellarmine taketh upon him to juſtifie the vulgar tranſlation, and ſaith, that the Hebrew Lib. 2. de verb. cap. 9. reſp. ad arg. 3. letter ב beth, ſignifieth in conſtruction as well from as to ; and therefore we may as well reade from wine, as to wine : and this is more agreeable to the Text, ſaith hee, becauſe it followeth, and to lead my heart in wiſdome, &c.

Anſ. 1. The Ieſuite, that maketh himſelfe ſo skilfull in the ſignification of the Hebrew, ſhould have quoted ſome place, where this letter ב, following in conſtruction the word משך maſhach, that ſignifieth Iudg. 4. 6. to draw, is tranſlated from : but that can he not finde, but the contrary : as Iudg. 4. 6. Deborah biddeth,

Baruk

Baruck draw the people not from, but to the mount Tabor. 2. But hee ſaith nothing of the other word אחז achaz, which never ſignifieth, devitavit, hee ſhunned, but the contrary, apprehendit, hee apprehended. 3. This reading agreeth better with the Text: for the Preacher ſaith, that even while his wiſdome remained with him, hee gave himſelfe to wine and pleaſure: as afterward in the tenth verſe.

Argum. 4. Laſtly, wee hold it a very firme and ſure thing, that Salomon recovered his fall, and was reſtored to favour before he dyed: as in the next place it is to be ſeene: and that this booke was ſet forth as a ſeale and ſure ſigne of his repentance, which it could not bee, if it were written before, and not after his fall. And of this judgement is S. Hierome, that the booke of Eccleſiaſtes was written after Salomons fall, and to that purpoſe he expoundeth thoſe words, 2 Chron. 9.29. The reſt of the workes of Salomon firſt and laſt, are written in the booke of Nathan the Prophet, &c. Priorum antequam pravaricatus, poſteriorum poſtquam pravaricatus: His firſt workes were thoſe before his fall, and his laſt after his fall. But what workes of account were more like to follow after his fall, than his repentance, and the writing of this booke? and therefore in the ſtory of the Kings it is ſaid, The reſt of the words of Salomon, 1 King. 11.41. Wherefore Salomon even after his fall uttered many wiſe words, and his wiſdome returned unto him: and it is like to have beene ſome notable thing, that Salomon did in his latter time, ſeeing that three Prophets, as Nathan, Ahiah, Ieedo in their bookes made mention thereof: as in 2 Chron. 9.29.

2 Chron. 9.29.

1 King. 11.41.

The Papiſts.

The ſecond point of the difference here betweene Bellarmine and us, is, that hee thinketh, Salomonem à Deo reprobatum fuiſſe, that Salomon was reprobate of God: though (he ſaith) he is not ignorant, that the Jewes and Hierome alſo are of a contrary opinion, yet he rather followeth Auguſtines judgement herein, who ſhould ſo write (as he ſaith) in Pſal. 126. that Salomon was rejected of God. Other arguments beſide the credit of Auguſtines name, he uſeth none, Bellarm. de verb. Dei lib. 1. cap. 5.

Anſ. I thinke the Jeſuite doth greatly miſtake and miſconſter Auguſtine in the place alleaged: hee ſpeaketh there indeed of the fall of Salomon, not of his finall reprobation: Quid mirum (ſaith hee) ſi in populo Dei cecidit Salomon? in paradiſo non cecidit Adam? What marvell is it if Salomon fell among the people, or in the Church of God? did not Adam fall in Paradiſe? If Salomon were no more reprobate than Adam was, nor his fall more dangerous than his, Salomon was no caſt-away at all. Auguſtine addeth further: Iſte Salomon ædificaverat templum domini, in typo futuræ eccleſiæ, & corporis Chriſti: This Salomon built the temple of the Lord, to bee a type of the Church, and body of Chriſt to come: ibid. in Pſal. 126. Hence then a reaſon may be framed thus: you cannot ſhew mee in all the Scripture, that a reprobate was ever appointed of God to be a figure of Chriſt or his Church: But Salomon was a figure of Chriſt, as it is evident throughout the whole 45. Pſal. and the Temple he built, as a figure of Chriſts body, Ioh. 2. Ergo.

Argum. 2. Againe, ſaith Bellarmine, the Scripture maketh no mention of the repentance of Salomon, and therefore it is like he repented not.

Anſ. 1. Though in matters of faith, and points of doctrine an argument may bee taken negatively from the Scripture, yet not ſo in matters of fact: it is a good conſequent, this doctrine is not found in Scripture, and therefore ought not to be received: yet it followeth not, this or that thing is not mentioned to have beene done in the ſtory of Scripture, therefore it was not done: for Chriſt did many works and miracles which are not remembred in the Goſpell: doth it follow therefore, that hee did no more, becauſe no more are ſpoken of in the Goſpell? 2. I may then frame you the ſame anſwer, which your Maſter of Sentences maketh to that place of Ambroſe, who ſpeaking of S. Peters repentance, ſaith, Lachrymas ejus lego, ſatisfactionem non lego: I read of his teares, not of his ſatisfaction. Your Maſter thus anſwereth: Multa facta ſunt, quæ ſcripta non ſunt: Many things have beene done, that are not written. Though the Maſters anſwer be not ſufficient there, becauſe ſatisfaction is with them an eſſentiall point of penance, and pertaineth to doctrine, and is not conſidered as a meere matter of fact: yet may it very well ſerve our turne in a matter of fact onely, as touching Salomons repentance. 3. And yet we doe affirme, that this act of Salomons converſion and repentance, is not altogether without evidence of Scripture, as now followeth to be ſhewed.

Mag. lib. 4. d. 17. ſ.

Argum. 3. I will adjoyne ſome other reaſons, which are urged againſt Salomons finall recoverie: as Lyranus objecteth that place, 2 King. 23.13. where it is ſaid that Ioſias defiled the places, which Salomon had built for Aſhtoreth and Chemoſh: If hee had truly repented, hee would have deſtroyed idolatry: Lyran. in 2 Sam. c. 7. Thoring. the replier upon Burgenſis, doth inſiſt upon that place, 1 King. 11.31. where the Lord ſaith he would rent the kingdome out of Salomons hands, becauſe they have forſaken mee: but this puniſhment was not inflicted while Salomon lived, it fell upon his ſonne, which the Lord would not have executed after Salomons repentance.

2 King. 23.13.

1 King. 11.31.

Anſ. Contra. 1. Burgenſis anſwereth, that Salomon might repent prope mortem, ſo neere his death, as that he could not aboliſh idolatry utterly. And further: like as, though Manaſſes repented, yet hee pulled not downe his idolatrous Altars, which remained untill Ioſias time, 2 King. 23.12. ſo Salomon, though he repented, could not aboliſh at once all the monuments of idolatry: yea, they remained even in Hezekiahs time, who was a moſt zealous King.

2. As though David repented him, yet the temporall chaſtiſements threatned were not committed, as of the ſword, and the defiling of his wives; 2 Sam. 12. 10, 11. ſo notwithſtanding Salomons repentance, ſome outward judgements were executed for the demonſtration of Gods juſtice, and the good example of others.

The Proteſtants.

THat Salomon was not rejected or reprobate of God, but choſen rather and elected, thus by Scripture we make it plaine.

2 Sam.12.24. Argum. 1. I urge thoſe places of Scripture, 2 Sam. 12.24. it is ſaid, that God loved Salomon, and thereupon the Prophet called him Iedidijah, beloved of God: but whom God loveth, hee loveth to the end. 2 Sam.7.14. Againe, 2 Sam. 7. 14. there the Prophet thus ſpeaketh in the name of the Lord concerning Salomon: I will be his father, and hee ſhall bee my ſonne: if hee ſinne, I will chaſten him, &c. but my mercy ſhall not depart away from him, as I tooke it from Saul, whom I have put away before me: the reaſon is gathered thus: Salomon was not caſt away as Saul was, Saul was caſt away for ever. Ergo, ſo was not Salomon.

2 Chron.11,17. Argum. 2. Reade 2 Chron. 11. verſ. 17. Rehoboam (ſaith the text) for three yeeres walked in the way of David and Salomon, that is, in the true worſhip of God: Davids way and Salomons way, are here joyned together, and taken for all one: but David died the ſervant of God: Ergo, alſo Salomon. Neither can any man here ſay, that Salomons way is here judged by the beginning, not by the end: for God meaſureth the righteouſneſſe of men by the end, not by the beginning: he judgeth them as he findeth them, he regardeth not what they have beene, Ezech. 18.24. Ezech.18.24.

Argum. 3. Though theſe places of Scripture are evident enough to convince the matter in hand, yet we will unto theſe adjoyne this reaſon: Can any man ſhew mee, when, and where, God uſed a reprobate as his inſtrument, and pen-man to write Scripture, or as a type and figure of Chriſt? but Salomon was both a writer and regiſtrer of Scripture, and a moſt lively type of Chriſt: Ergo, hee was no reprobate. The propoſition of this argument is apparantly grounded upon Scripture, as Rom. 8. 14. Rom 8.14. As many as are led by the ſpirit of God, are the ſonnes of God: but the Prophets which were the writers and pen-men of Scripture, ſpake as they were moved by the holy Ghoſt, 2 Pet. 1. 21. 2 Pet.1.21. and ſo were led by the ſpirit: Ergo, they were the ſonnes of God, and ſo not reprobates. Now wherein Salomon was a type of Chriſt, is thus declared by Origen in his prologue upon the Canticles: In plurimis Salomonem Chriſti typum ferre, &c. That Salomon in many things did beare the type of Chriſt, is not to bee doubted: firſt, in that hee is called peaceable: ſecondly, in that the Queene of the South came unto him from the ends of the earth: and Chriſt is the true Eccleſiaſtes, or Preacher, who tooke upon him the forme of a ſervant, that hee might congregate and gather together his Church: A congregando enim eccleſiam eccleſiaſtes dicitur: For hee is named of the Church, of gathering the Church together. And thus it appeareth how Salomon was a type of Chriſt.

Ioh.12 26. Againe, our Saviour Chriſt ſaith, where I am, there alſo ſhall my Miniſters bee, Ioh. 12. 26. but the writers of Scripture were in this eſpeciall ſervice the principall miniſters of Chriſt: Ergo, they reſt with Chriſt, and are not caſt-awayes.

ὕστερον ἐγὼ μετενόησα. Pro.24.32. We have yet further evidence. 1. Cyrillus thus teſtifieth, Salomon alſo fell, but what ſaith hee (afterward I repented) he thinketh that Salomon repented after his fall: alleaging that Scripture, Proverb. 24.32. Then I beheld and conſidered it well, I looked upon it, and received inſtruction: but Cyril, following the Septuagint, as it ſeemeth, readeth ſomewhat otherwiſe.

2 Gregentius, Archbiſhop of Tephar, among the Homerites in Æthiopia, though he thinketh that Salomon ſhewed no repentance before he died; yet is of opinion that Chriſt deſcending to hell (which was the errour of that time) did give unto him the hand of ſalvation, together with the reſt, which were thence delivered: he thinketh that in the end he was ſaved. Diſput.cum Herban. Iud. f.30. Lutet. anno 1586. Χεῖρα αὐτῷ σωτηρίας ἔδωκεν. The Æthiopick Church at this day holdeth the ſame opinion, though the grounds thereof are ſomewhat fabulous: as Zagazaber, an Æthiopick Biſhop, telleth how the Queene of Saba, called Maqueda, comming to heare the Wiſdome of Salomon, conceived by him, and had a ſonne, called firſt Melech, and afterward David, whom after ſhe had brought up twenty yeares, ſhee ſent backe to Salomon, who inſtructed him in the law of God, and ſo returned him to his mother: Damianus a Goes de morib. Æthiopum. now Salomon had reigned twenty yeares, 1 King. 9.10. before the Queene of Saba came unto him: and they affirme, that twenty yeares after that the Queenes ſon was inſtructed by Salomon in the true worſhip of God, which muſt be in the end of his reigne. Theſe fabulous fictions I thinke not worth the rehearſall: I onely touch them, to ſee what honourable opinion to this day, that great and mighty Chriſtian nation doth hold of Salomon.

Annotat.ibid. 3 Iunius doth prove Salomons finall repentance and ſalvation, by the place before alleaged, 2 Chron. 11. 17. and by the compoſing of the booke of Eccleſiaſtes, as a teſtimony of his repentance.

Addit.in 2 Sam. c 7. 4 Paulus Burgenſis holdeth againſt Lyranus, following the common opinion of the Jewes, that Salomon repented before his death, and ſo doth the ordinary gloſſe. Gloſſ.in 43. Ezech.

Now then, whereas divers opinions have beene rehearſed touching Salomons ſtate. 1. Bellarmine agreeing with Lyranus, thinketh he was a reprobate. 2. Gregentius, that hee was delivered with the reſt of the fathers. 3. Burgenſis, that hee repented, yet ſo neare his death, that hee could ſhew no fruits thereof. 4. But the ordinary gloſſe, Iunius and others, hold him to have repented, and as a monument of his repentance, to have written the booke of Eccleſiaſtes. I hold this latter opinion to be moſt ſafe; which is grounded, as hath beene ſhewed, upon theſe places of Scripture.

2 Sam 7,15. Burgenſis urgeth that place, 2 Sam. 7. 15. My mercy ſhall not depart from him, as I tooke it from Saul: the ordinary gloſſe preſſeth that text, Prov. 24. 32. reading thus, as Cyrillus did before, at the laſt I re- pented, and received inſtruction. The Jewes doe inferre ſo much out of theſe words: I am more fooliſh than any man, and have not the underſtanding of a man in me: as Lyranus noteth upon that place. Proverb. 30. 2. Hierome collecteth as much out of theſe words, the reſt of Salomons workes firſt and laſt: by his laſt workes underſtanding 2 Chro. 9. 29. ſuch things as hee did after his fall, as his repentance: the moſt evident places of all are theſe, which Iunius inſiſteth upon before mentioned: but ſufficient of this by-matter, now I will proceed.

Of the Apocryphall Bookes of Scripture.

The Papiſts.

1 Error. THere are certaine bookes annexed to the old Teſtament, which the Papiſts themſelves doe not acknowledge for canonicall, as the Prayer of Manaſſes, the two bookes of Eſdras, commonly called the third and fourth of Eſdras: alſo other which are not uſually in our Engliſh Bibles, as an appendix to the booke of Iob, the 151. Pſalme, a Preface to the lamentations of Ieremy, the third and fourth booke of the Machabees, a booke called the Paſtor. None of all theſe bookes are found in the Hebrew: one of them onely is tranſlated out of the Syriack, namely, the appendix to Iob: ſome of them are extant in Latine only, as the Prayer of Manaſſes, the third and fourth of Eſdras, the reſt are in Greeke. Of all the other, the bookes of Eſdras are worthy of leaſt credit, being ſtuffed full of vaine fables, fitter to feed curious eares, than tending to edification: as cap. 4. 6. lib. 4. there is a tale put in of two great fiſhes, Henoch and Leviathan, which no waters could hold: chap. 4. 41. he ſaith, that the ſoules are kept in the wombe of the earth: in the 14. chapter, he reporteth how the bookes of Scripture being loſt in the captivitie, were reſtored by Eſdras, and how after he had drunke off a cup of water, but as fire in colour, given him by the Angell, hee ſpake forty dayes together and ceaſed not: in which ſpace five Scribes wrote from his mouth 204. bookes: theſe and ſuch like tales that booke is full of. All theſe aforeſaid bookes are as well by our adverſaries, as our ſelves rejected: ſo that they themſelves dare not allow all that is extant in their Latine vulgar tranſlation: yet our Doway men tell us, that the prayer of Manaſſes is neither received for canonicall of the Church, nor refuſed: annot. in 2 Chron. 33. 14. but if it bee not received, how is it not refuſed? either it is canonicall, and ſo received, or not canonicall, as it is in deed; and ſo of the true Church of God out of the canon received.

Other bookes alſo there were, ſome annexed to the old Teſtament, ſome to the new, which were deviſed by Heretikes, but now are not extant, whereof there is no queſtion betweene us: as another booke of Geneſis, called μικρογένεσις, Geneſis the leſſe, whereof Hierome maketh mention, tom. 4. de 42. manſionib. Likewiſe the booke of Henoch, which, as Auguſtine ſaith, ob nimiam antiquitatem rejicitur, is rejected becauſe it is too old: lib. 18. de civitat. Dei, cap. 38.

Gelaſius alſo in his Decretall, reciteth certaine Apocryphall bookes of the old Teſtament: as one of the daughters of Adam, another of Ogias, a Giant, that ſhould fight with the Dragon after the flood: a book alſo called the repentance of Iamnes and Mambres: Decret. p. 1. d. 15. c. 3.

Theſe books alſo were forged in the new Teſtament: as the Goſpell of the twelve Apoſtles, the Goſpell of Thomas, another Goſpell of Matthias: mentioned by S. Ambroſe proœm. in Luc. S. Hierome alſo, Catalog. ſcriptor. maketh mention of theſe bookes: the acts of Peter, the Goſpell of Peter, the preaching of Peter, the revelation of Peter: a Goſpell to the Hebrewes: an Epiſtle of Barnabas: the peregrinations of Paul and Tecla.

Gelaſius in his Decretall, reckoneth up a great number of ſuch like forgeries: as the journeyes of Peter, the acts of Andrew, the acts of Philip, the acts of Peter, the acts of Thomas: alſo the Goſpell of Thaddeus, the Goſpell of Thomas, the Goſpell of Barnabas, the Goſpell of S. Andrew: likewiſe certaine forged revelations, as of Paul, of Thomas, of Stephen: with many ſuch other, as may bee ſeene in that place, as it is alleaged by Gratian, Decret. p. 1. d. 15. cap. 3. But of theſe and ſuch like there is no controverſie betweene us.

The queſtion betweene us then is concerning theſe bookes: firſt, certaine peeces joyned to canonicall bookes, as ſeven chapters of Eſther; certaine ſtories annexed to Daniel, as of Bell and the Dragon, of Suſanna, the ſong of the three children: alſo the Epiſtle of Baruch joyned to Ieremy. Then follow certaine whole bookes, as Tobie, Iudith, the Wiſdome of Salomon, Eccleſiaſticus, two bookes of the Machabees: theſe ſix bookes, with the other three appendices or peeces of bookes, the Papiſts hold to bee canonicall, and of as firme authority as any part of the Scripture. Arguments they have none beſide certaine teſtimonies of ſome Fathers and Councels, which we purpoſe not to deale withall, leaving them to our learned countrey-men, who have taken in hand to diſcuſſe theſe controverſies to the full, Bellarm. de verb. Dei lib. 1. cap. 4.

The Proteſtants.

WE are agreed concerning the new Teſtament, that all the bookes thereof as they ſtand, are to bee received of all for Scripture: for as for thoſe forged Goſpels of Thomas, S. Andrew, of Nichodemus, and the like, though the Church were troubled with them in times paſt, yet their memorie being now worne out, there is no queſtion of them. Concerning the bookes on both ſides acknowledged, if ſome one man ſeeme to doubt of ſome one part, as Luther is thought to doe of the Epiſtle of Iames and Iude, it ought no more to prejudice us, than Cajetanus opinion doth hurt them, who called more bookes in queſtion than Luther did, as the Epiſtle of Iames, of Iude, the ſecond of Peter, the ſecond and third of Iohn, the laſt chapter of Marke.

2 Pet.3.15.

We differ not then in the new Teſtament, unleſſe it be concerning the author of the Epiſtle to the Hebrewes, which our adverſaries ſtoutly affirme to bee S. Pauls, which wee deny not, neither certainly can affirme it, ſeeing in ſome Greeke copies it is left out, and in the Syriack tranſlation: ſome would prove S. Paul to be the author of this Epiſtle, by that place, 2 Pet. 3.15. where the Apoſtle maketh mention of S. Pauls Epiſtles, which according to the wiſdome given unto him he wrote to you: that is, the Hebrewes, for unto them S. Peter writeth both the firſt, 1 *Epi.*1.1. and the ſecond Epiſtle, 2. *Epi.*3. ver.1. I find alſo that many excellent godly learned men of ancient time, as Hierome, Auguſtine, Ambroſe, and before them Origen, hom. 8. in Geneſ. with others, have taken S. Paul for the author of this Epiſtle. And among the late famous witneſſes of Gods truth, and holy Martyrs (to whoſe judgement I attribute as much, if not more, as to any mans beſide) that bleſſed man Maſter Philpot, doth cite S. Paul to the Hebrewes in a certaine Epiſtle of his written to the Chriſtian congregation, Fox p. 1832. and againe in another Epiſtle to certaine godly brethren, pag. 1385. col. 2. But it mattereth not who was the author, ſeeing we receive it as canonicall: for the title is no part of the booke, and ſo neither of Scripture: and we receive many books in the old Teſtament, the authors whereof are not perfectly knowne. And of this matter, thus further writeth S. Hierome, Catalog. ſcriptor. Epiſtola quæ fertur ad Hebræos, &c. The Epiſtle to the Hebrewes is not thought to be Pauls, becauſe of the difference of the phraſe and ſtile: but either the Epiſtle of Barnabas according to Tertullian, or of Luke or Clement: or ſurely, becauſe Paul writ to the Hebrewes, hee cut off the title of his name, becauſe it was envied amongſt them: hee writeth as an Hebrew to the Hebrewes, that is, in his owne tongue moſt eloquently. Thus Hierome reporteth many opinions, ſetting downe nothing certainly himſelfe.

But here by the way, if I might bee ſo bold, I would ſpurre a queſtion to our Romane Divines, that wheras it was decreed (as they would beare us in hand) by the Apoſtles, can. Apoſtol. 84. that the two Epiſtles of Clement, and his precepts or conſtitutions contained in eight bookes, ſhould bee counted amongſt the canonicall bookes of the new Teſtament: for theſe are the words of the canon, Sint omnibus vobis Clericis & laicis, ſacri & venerandi libri, &c. Let theſe bee accounted of all both Clerkes and lay men, as holy and reverend bookes: and then are reckoned up the bookes of the old Teſtament, and afterward of the new, amongſt the which, the foreſaid workes of Clement are numbred. If thoſe bee the right canons of the Apoſtles, as we are made to beleeve they are, how dare our adverſaries doe contrary to this decree? we will give them leave to pauſe a while of this matter, and in the meane time proceed.

Contra Fauſt. lib.11.2.

So then all the queſtion betweene us, is about the Apocrypha of the old Teſtament: they are called Apocrypha, becauſe they are hid and obſcure, not becauſe their authors are unknowne: for as I ſaid, wee know not by whom certaine Canonicall bookes were written. Neither are they ſo called becauſe of ſome untruths contained in them contrary to Scripture, as the moſt of them have, as wee heard before out of S. Hierome: Multa his admixta vitioſa: That there are many falſe things mixed in theſe bookes: for it followeth not, that every book which hath no untruth or lye, ſhould ſtraightwayes be taken for Scripture: but they are therefore judged and called Apocrypha, becauſe they were not in former time received into publike and authentick authority in the Church, neither to bee alleaged as grounds of our faith, though they may be read for example of life, and may have other profitable uſe, as S. Hierome well ſaith, Legat ad edificationem plebis, non ad authoritatem Eccleſiaſticorum dogmatum confirmandam: The Church readeth them for the edifying of the people, not the confirmation of doctrine: Præfat. in Proverb. And S. Auguſtine ſheweth why they are ſo called, Quia nulla teſtificationis luce declarati, de neſcio quo ſecreto, neſcio quorum preſumptione prolati ſunt: Becauſe they were publiſhed with no light of authority, but hatched in ſecret by ſome mens, I know not whoſe preſumption. But the Canonicall Scripture only hath this privilege to give rules of faith, and thereupon it hath the name, that wee may bee bold to beleeve and ground our faith upon the Canonicall and holy Scripture, which is the onely word of God. Wherefore out of this number of Canonicall Scripture we exclude all the books afore named, and therefore let not the Reader be deceived, that although they be joyned in one volume with the Scripture, to thinke that they are for that, of the ſame authority and credit with the reſt: firſt, wee will ſhew our reaſons in generall, and afterward come to the particular bookes in order.

2 Pet.1.19.

1 All Canonicall Scripture in the old Teſtament was written by Prophets: We have a ſure word of the Prophets, ſaith S. Peter, 2.1.19. and S. Paul, Rom. 16.26. calleth them the Scriptures of the Prophets: and S. Auguſtine ſaith, *Quas itaque ſcripturas dicimus, niſi canonicas, legis & Prophetarum? de unitat. eccleſ. cap.*16. We acknowledge no Canonicall Scriptures of the old and new Teſtament, but the Law and the Prophets: But none of thoſe bookes aforenamed, of Tobias, Iudith and the reſt, were written by the Prophets: for they were all written ſince Malachies time, who was the laſt Prophet, as the Church complaineth, Pſalm. 74.9. There is not one Prophet, nor any that can tell us how long: Ergo none of theſe bookes are Canonicall.

Rom.3.2.

2 All the Canonicall bookes of the old Teſtament were acknowledged of the Jewes and Hebrewes, for they were then onely the Church of God, and where ſhould Scripture bee found but in the Church? To them, ſaith S. Paul, were committed the oracles of God, Rom. 3.2. But the Jewes received none of theſe bookes into the Canon of the Scripture. For moſt of them were written in the Greeke, but none of them in the Hebrew tongue. And this ſome of the Papiſts cannot deny. Ergo they are not Canonicall. Here alſo S. Auguſtine thus writeth, Omnes litera, quibus Chriſtus prophetatus eſt, apud Iudaos ſunt: All the bookes which propheſied of Chriſt, are kept amongſt the Iewes, in Pſalm. 56. and S. Hierome upon thoſe words of the Parable, All mine are thine, Luk. 15. thus writeth to the ſame purpoſe, Omnia intelligamus, legem, prophetas, eloquia divina: By all we underſtand, the law, and Prophets, and the divine ſayings: the Jewes then had all the Scriptures, but they had none of theſe Apocrypha, therefore they are no part of Scripture.

Tom. 4. de filio prodigo.

Canus a Papiſt anſwereth, Non rejectos fuiſſe hos libros à Iudæis, ſed non receptos, that theſe bookes were not rejected of the Jewes, but onely not received, lib. 1. Annot. Anſ. 1. This is but a quaint diſtinction, for that thing, which a man knoweth, and yet receiveth not, nor alloweth; what doth he elſe, but reject it? As our Saviour Chriſt ſaith, He that is not with me, is againſt me: and he that gathereth not, ſcattereth abroad, Luk. 11. 23. The Jewes therefore in that they received not, nor acknowledged thoſe bookes, refuſed and rejected them. Secondly, how could they otherwiſe chuſe but reject thoſe bookes, and ſunder them from the reſt of the Scripture, which were written in a ſtrange tongue, and not in Hebrew, wherein the reſt of holy Scripture was written? And what opinion the Jewes have of theſe bookes, S. Hierome further witneſſeth thus: Arguunt nos Hebraorum ſtudia, & imputant nobis contra ſuum canonem Latinis auribus iſta transferre: The ſtudious Hebrewes find fault with us, and blame us for tranſlating into Latine, bookes contrary to their canon: præfat. in Tobiam. The Jewes then did not onely not receive theſe Apocryphall bookes, but rejected them alſo: and of this judgement is Arias Montanus, one of their owne Church, that no bookes of the old Teſtament not extant in the originall Hebrew, are Canonicall. Further, Bellarmine confeſſeth, Hi omnes libri ſimul rejiciuntur ab Hebrais, &c. All theſe bookes are together rejected of the Hebrewes: lib. 1. de verb. Dei c. 10. And Coſterus a Jeſuite ſaith, In canone Hebraorum non habentur, &c. They are not in the canon of the Hebrew, Enchirid. c. 1. Of the ſame judgement is Cajetane and Tolet, two of their owne, and of great account among them, which were Cardinals in their time. The firſt ſaith, that the Iewes teſtifie, nullos alios apud patres fuiſſe canonice ſacros, &c. That no other bookes were received of the fathers for canonicall: beſide, thoſe which are by them acknowledged. comment. in Rom. c. 11. The other affirmeth, oracula divina in ſacris ſcripturis contenta commiſſa, &c. That the divine oracles contained in the Scriptures, were committed unto the Jewes: therefore it is an unadviſed ſpeech of the Doway tranſlaters, to ſay, the Churches canon is of more authority than the Iewes: for were not the Iewes then the Church of God, when the Hebrew Scriptures were firſt received into the canon: and had not the Church of the old Teſtament the ſame intereſt in the Scriptures, which the Church of the new Teſtament hath: and was the authority of the Prophets leſſe, in declaring which were the Canonicall bookes in thoſe times, than of the Church afterward? S. Paul putteth this matter out of doubt, teſtifying, that unto the Jewes were committed the Oracles of God: how dare they then contradict the Apoſtle, in ſaying they were not committed?

Luk. 11. 23.

Doway bible p 489.

3 There is no Scripture of the old Teſtament, but it hath approbation of the new: for as the Prophets beare witneſſe to Chriſt, ſo he againe doth witneſſe for the Prophets, and therefore it is a true propoſition of Cajetane, though hee bee controuled and checked of Catharinus another Papiſt for it, that there is no Scripture, which was not either written or approved by the Apoſtles: but in the whole new Teſtament you ſhall not find one teſtimony cited either in the Goſpell or the Epiſtles out of any of the Apocrypha, as out of other bookes of Scripture: therefore having no approbation of the new Teſtament, we conclude, they are none of the old.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the Apoſtles have declared thoſe bookes to bee Canonicall, lib. 1. de verbo, cap. 10. Anſwer. 1. Catharinus herein is contrary to Bellarmine. For he ſaith, that the Church hath received certaine bookes for Canonicall, Quos nec ſcriptos ab Apoſtolis, nec approbatos fuiſſe conſtat: Which it is is certaine, were neither written, nor approved by the Apoſtles, lib. 1. Annot. Secondly, they are never able to ſhew, when and where the Apoſtles declared theſe bookes to be Canonicall, for as much as they are not cited, neither in the Goſpels, nor Epiſtles, written by the Apoſtles, which onely are their authenticall writings. And therefore we againe conclude, that becauſe the new Teſtament doth not give any witneſſe to any of theſe bookes, as it doth to the law and the Prophets, Quibus Chriſtus (as Auguſtine ſaith) perhibet teſtimonium, ut teſtibus ſuis: Unto the which Chriſt giveth teſtimony, as his witneſſes, lib. 2. contra Gaud. cap. 23. Therefore they are no part of the old Teſtament: as Hierome then ſaith of the interpretation of Scripture, Sit illa vera interpretatio quam Apoſtoli probaverunt: Let that bee the true interpretation which the Apoſtles have approved; ſo thoſe are the very authenticall Scriptures, which have the teſtimony and approbation of the Apoſtles.

Præfat. in Evangel.

4 It ſhall appeare in the ſeverall diſcourſe of the particular bookes, that there is ſomewhat even in the bookes themſelves to be found, that barreth them from being Canonicall.

Of the Booke of Baruch.

The Papiſts.

THis is their beſt reaſon for the authority of this booke, becauſe Baruch was Ieremies Scribe: and therefore Baruch cannot be refuſed, unleſſe alſo wee doubt of Ieremy. Bellarm. lib. 1. de verbo Dei, cap. 8.

The Proteſtants.

THis booke was neither written by Ieremy nor Baruch: firſt, becauſe it is in Greeke: if either Ieremy or Baruch had written it, it is moſt like they would have written in Hebrew. Secondly, the phraſe and manner of ſpeech ſheweth, that it was never written in Hebrew: for in the 6. Chapter in the Epiſtle of Ieremy, verſ. 2. it is ſaid, that the Iſraelites ſhould bee in captivity ſeven generations, that is, 70. yeares, but it cannot bee found in any Hebrew booke, that a generation is taken for the ſpace of 10. yeares.

I will adde unto this a matter of experience concerning this booke: One Ed. Allin a conſtant Martyr reading this place in the 6. of Baruch, Wherefore when you ſee the multitude of people worſhipping them (hee meaneth the Idols) behind and before, ſay in your hearts, it is thou, O Lord, that ought only to be worſhipped: By this place, the ſaid Martyr ſaith, he was ſeduced to heare Maſſe, and therefore his conſcience gave him, that it was no Scripture. Fox.pag.1980. col.1. Concerning this booke alſo, S. Hierome writeth thus: Præfat. in Ierem. Librum Baruch Notarii ejus, qui apud Hebræos nec habetur, nec legitur, prætermiſimus: I have pretermitted the booke of Baruch Ieremies Scribe, which the Hebrewes neither have nor read: But if it had beene one of the Canonicall bookes, Hierome would not have paſſed it over.

We want not alſo the teſtimonie of our adverſaries: for Iohannes Driedo, a writer of their owne, refuſeth this booke to be Canonicall. lib.1.de ſcriptur. & dogmatib. Eccleſiaſtic.cap.ultimo.

Of the ſeven Apocryphall Chapters of Eſther.

The Papiſts.

ONe of their chiefe Arguments, beſides teſtimonies and authorities, which would make too great a Volume, is this (which is common alſo to the reſt of the Apocrypha) they are read in the Church, and have beene of ancient time. Ergo they are Canonicall. I anſwer, that it is no good argument, Hierome ſaith plainly, Legit Eccleſia, ſed eos inter Scripturas Canonicas non recipit. Præfat.in lib.Salomon. The Church indeed (ſaith he) readeth them, yet for all that they are not Canonicall. And Auguſtine was wont to read unto the people the Epiſtles of the Donatiſts, and his anſwers unto them, *Epiſt.*103.

The Proteſtants.

THe moſt of our reaſons againſt the authority of the 7. Chapters added to Eſther, (for of the 10. firſt Chapters, which are found in the Hebrew, we make no doubt at all) are drawne from the matter of the booke it ſelfe.

1 In the ſecond of the Canonicall Eſther, ver. 16. it is ſaid that the conſpiracie of the two Eunuches againſt the King, was in the ſeventh yeare of Aſſuerus: but in the 11. Chap. ver. 2. of the Apocryphall Eſther, we reade that Mardocheus did dreame of this conſpiracy in the ſecond yeare. Bellarmine anſwereth, that both are true: for the dreame was in the ſecond yeare, and the conſpiracy in the ſeventh; ſo belike, there was five yeares betweene. But in the Apocryphall ſtory, chap. 12. 2. it is ſaid, that at the ſame time, the conſpiracy was enterpriſed by the two Eunuches, which muſt have relation unto the ſecond yeare before expreſſed, chap. 11. 3. Againe, at that time Mardoche was a great man, and an officer in the Kings houſe, when he had this dreame, chap. 11. 3. which could not be before the exaltation and advancement of Eſther, which was in the 7. yeare, Eſther 2.16.

2. The true hiſtory of Eſther ſaith, that Mardocheus had no reward at that time of the King, chap. 6. 3. but the forged ſtory ſaith, chap. 12. that at the ſame time the King gave him great gifts, which cannot be meant of that great honour, as Bellarmine conjectureth, which afterward was beſtowed upon Mardoche: for then Haman (being hanged the ſame day that Mardoche was advanced to honour, Eſther 6. 7.) could worke him no deſpite, whereas the forged ſtory ſaith, that after the King had rewarded him, then Haman began to ſtomach him, becauſe of thoſe two Eunuches.

3 Againe, the ſtory which is added, was written many yeares after Mardocheus and Eſthers death, under the reigne of Ptolomeus and Cleopatra, as it appeareth, chap. 11. 1. It is not like therefore to be a true ſtory. Bellarmines ridiculous conjecture is this, that there were two ſtories written in Hebrew of Eſther, the one compendious and ſhort, which we now have: the other more large, which might be tranſlated by Lyſimachus there ſpoken of, chap. 11. whoſe tranſlation wee now onely have, the originall being periſhed. And it might be, ſaith hee, that theſe 7. chapters were ſometimes written in Hebrew, ſed caſu aliquo excidiſſe, by ſome miſchance were loſt. Anſw. Firſt, the Text ſaith not that Lyſimachus tranſlated any ſuch Hebrew ſtory, but only the Epiſtle of Phurim. Secondly, this cannot be that ample and large ſtory imagined, being ſhorter, and not ſo full as the canonicall Eſther. Thirdly, it is not like that theſe chapters, or this other ſtory, which he imagineth, was ever written in Hebrew: for they were more like to bee kept in the Hebrew tongue, than in the Greeke: for ſo much as there was never any people more carefull in keeping any thing, than the Jewes were of their Hebrew Scriptures. Theſe therefore are but bare and light conjectures to make canonicall Scripture.

4 Beſides, the falſe ſtory ſaith, that Haman was a Macedonian, chap. 16. verſ. 10. the true ſtory ſaith, he was an Agagite or Amalekite, chap. 8. 3. how can theſe two agree? Nay, the forged booke ſaith, that Haman would have deſtroyed the King, and ſo conveyed the kingdome of the Perſians to the Macedonians, which could in no wiſe bee; for the kingdome of the Macedonians was not yet ſpoken of: and ſo it continued in ſmall or no reputation, till Philippus the father of Alexander, in the 20. yeare of whoſe reigne, and not before, the Perſians began to ſuſpect the Macedonians; Diodor. lib. 16. which was about the 23. yeare of the reigne of Ochus, one of the laſt Kings of Perſia, after whom Arſes reigned three yeares, and Darius ſix. Now if the Perſian Monatchy continned 220. yeares, as Bellarmine granteth, Mardoche, which was one of them that went into captivity with Iechoniah, Eſther 2.6. muſt bee almoſt 300. yeares old, allowing but 130. yeares to the Perſian Monarchy, which was moſt like to bee the true period of that government, as is ſhewed elſe-where; then was Mardoche wel-nie 200. yeares old, if he ſurvived to ſee the riſing of the Macedonian kingdome.

Hexapl. in Daniel c.9.qu.43.

Bellarmines beſt anſwer here is, that Mardoche, though not yet borne, might be ſaid to be carried into captivity, not in himſelfe, but in the loynes of his fathers, or other progenitours: as Zorobabel is ſaid to have returned of the captivity, which Nabuchadnezzer had carried away, Ezra 2.2. and yet hee was borne in the captivity, Matth. 1.12: ſo Ioſephs two ſonnes are ſaid to have gone downe into Egypt with Iacob, being numbred among the ſeventy ſoules, and yet they were borne in Egypt, Geneſ. 46. Bellar. cap.7.in fine.

Anſwer 1. Zorobabel is not ſaid to have beene one of them, that were carried into captivity, but of the captivity, which Nabuchadnezzer carried away: for ſo he might be, becauſe he was the of-ſpring of that captivity: one of thoſe captives he was not, but of the captivity he was, which continued 70. yeares. Neither is it ſaid, that the ſoules which came with Iacob into Egypt were ſeventy, but ſixty ſix, Geneſ. 46.26. Then it followeth, Ver.27. Every ſoule of the family of Iacob, which came into Ægypt, are ſeventy, in the which number the two ſonnes of Ioſeph are comprehended, which belonged to the family of Iacob, which came into Egypt, where the relative (which) may as well be referred to Labeth, the houſe or family of Iacob, as to Nepheſh the ſoule: therefore neither of thoſe inſtances can ſerve his turne. 2. And bee it admitted, that Mardoche was borne in the captivity; In Bellarmines account, hee could not be under 200. yeares old, if hee lived to the end of the Perſian Monarchy, when the Macedonians began to bee feared of the Perſians. 3. And ſeeing Bellarmine is of opinion, that Mardoche lived in the time of Artaxerxes Longimanus, when hee ſuppoſeth Mardoche to have beene 165. yeares old, and from thence to the end of Ochus reigne, hee counteth above 100. yeares, when, and not before the Macedonians grew to bee famous, and feared of the Perſians; how could this be in Mardoche or Hamans time. This exception to this Apocryphall booke, can no way be healed up.

Gen 46.26,27.

5 Other contradictions there are betweene thoſe two ſtories of Eſther: the falſe ſtory ſaith, that when Eſther came in to the King, that he looked fiercely upon her, in ſo much, that ſhee fell downe as dead, chap. 15.10. but the true ſtory witneſſeth, that at the firſt, the King held up his Scepter to the Queene in token of favour, and well accepted of her comming. The falſe ſtory, that Haman went about to hurt Mardoche, becauſe of the two Eunuchs, whoſe conſpiracy he had revealed, chap. 12.6. But the true ſtory ſaith, that hee began to ſtomacke Mardoche, becauſe he would not bow the knee to him, nor doe him reverence, Eſther 3.2. Vide plura apud Whitak. queſt. 1. cap. 18. de Scriptur. Saint Hierome with the reſt of the Apocrypha, which are not extant in the Hebrew, excludeth theſe chapters of Eſther out of the canonicall Scripture, tom.4. Paulino: and in his preface to the bookes of the Kings. Neither doe we here want the teſtimony of our adverſaries, for both Nicholaus Lyranus, and Dionyſius Carthuſianus in their commentaries upon this booke, and Sixtus Senenſis, lib. 1. & 8. bibliothec. doe refuſe this appendix of Eſther, as not being canonicall.

Of certaine Chapters annexed to Daniel.

THere are three parcels joyned to Daniel, the Song of the three children, the ſtory of Suſanna, of Bel and the Dragon, in the vulgar Latine, which are not any part of canonicall Scripture.

1 They are neither extant in Hebrew at this day, nor are like to have beene tranſlated out of Hebrew into Greeke: but compiled firſt in Greeke, and therefore not written by Daniel: for verſ. 54. 58. of the ſtory of Suſanna, where one of the Elders ſaith, hee ſaw her under a Lentiſke tree, the other under a Prune tree: he uſeth a certaine paronomaſie or alluſion unto the Greeke words: which cannot ſtand in the Hebrew, as of the tree σχινὸς, he ſaith the Angell of the Lord σχίσει, ſhall cut you in two: and ſo of the tree πρινὸς, πρίσει, ſhall divide thee in two. As if a man ſhould thus allude in Engliſh: thou waſt under the Prune-tree: the Lord ſhall prune thee. This alluſion is not in the Hebrew, as the learned have very well obſerved, but onely in the Greeke. This exception was taken long agoe againſt this booke by Iulius Africanus, who lived under M. Aurelius Antoninus, and hereof did write an Epiſtle to Origen, from whom Bellarmine borroweth his anſwer which here followeth: Hierom. catalog. ſcriptor. Who alſo reporteth of a certaine learned Jew, that becauſe of this alluſion, doubted not to ſay, that this booke was compiled by ſome Greeke: for the alluſion (ſaith hee) is in Greeke, as if a man ſhould ſay in Latine, De ilice arbore, ilico pereas, & a lentiſco, non lente pereas: and as if in Engliſh a man ſhould thus ſay, thou waſt under a firre tree, the Lord ſhall fire thee, or under a Pare tree, he ſhall pare thee.

Præfat in Daniel.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that Daniel neither named the Lentiſke tree, nor the prune tree, but ſome other, that might have an alluſion to cutting, as the names in Greeke have: and that the Greeke tranſlater kept not the word, but the ſenſe. Bellarm. cap. 9. Anſw. Firſt, the Jeſuite, that is ſo full of his conjectures, ſhould likewiſe have gheſſed what trees they were, and how they are called in Hebrew, that Daniel named: ſo ſhould his conjecture have ſeemed more probable. Secondly, if his imagined Hebrew ſhould name one tree, the interpreter ſhould ſet downe another, to keepe the alluſion ſtill, one of them muſt needs tell an untruth, and ſo both of them could not bee Scripture, which faileth not in the leaſt truth.

The particular time is not knowne, when this ſtory ſhould bee done: yet it is certaine, it was in the captivity; for Suſanna dwelt in Babylon: but Daniel could not then bee ſo young a childe as the ſtory maketh, for he was carried away in the firſt captivity with Iehoiakim, as it is, *Dan.*1. And Ezekiel, that lived about that time, doth ſpeake of the great prudence and ſage wiſdome of Daniel, Ezech. 28.3. and joyneth him with Noah and Iob, chap. 14. All this proveth that Daniel could not be ſo very a babe in the beginning of the captivity, as the ſtory maketh him.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that Ezekiel maketh mention of Daniel, viventis adhuc in ætate puerili, being but a childe: being even then famous amongſt the people for the delivering of Suſanna, and for his interpretations of dreames. Anſwer. But the contrary is eaſily proved, that Daniel was no childe, when Ezekiel gave this teſtimony of him. 1. Hee is joyned with Noah and Iob, and the text ſaith, They ſhall ſave neither ſonnes nor daughters: which could not bee true of Daniel, being himſelfe but a childe. And though, as the Jeſuite ſaith, it be but a ſuppoſition, that if theſe three were among them, &c. yet would not the Prophet ſuppoſe a thing impoſſible, as if a childe might have both ſonnes and daughters. 2. Againe, the word which the Prophet uſeth, ſaying (if theſe three men, &c.) אנוש is never given to any childe in Scripture, but is alwayes ſpoken of the elder ſort: as 1 *Sam.*17.12. Iſhai ſenex veniens inter homines: Iſhai was counted old among men. Likewiſe, Eſay 32.9. Riſe ye women or mothers, and heare ye daughters: the word is נשים naſhim, which is the plurall number of אנוש the firſt letter radicall taken away. Wherefore it appeareth by the uſe and acceptation of this word, that Daniel, who is by the Prophet counted among the elder men, could at that time be no childe.

3. Further, this Hiſtory of Suſanna ſuppoſeth, that the Jewes being in captivity, had their tribunall ſeats of judgement among themſelves, and that it was in their power to inflict capitall puniſhment, which is not like, ſeeing that in their owne countrey afterward, being in ſubjection to the Romans, they could put none to death, Iohn 18.31. And beſide, this narration yeeldeth another reaſon and occaſion, verſ. 64. how Daniel came to bee famous, and the people began to take notice of him, namely for delivering of Suſanna, than is alleaged by Daniel himſelfe, *Dan.*1.

4. In the ſtory of Daniel, it is ſaid, that hee was ſix dayes in the Lions denne: but the true ſtory ſaith, he was there but one night, chap. 6. The Jeſuite anſwereth, he was twice in the Lions denne, or rather, he thinketh there were two Daniels, the one of the Tribe of Iuda, which was that great Prophet: the other of Levi, which was the principall in thoſe two ſtories of Suſanna, and of Bel and the Dragon. But this is a poore ſhift, to invent another Daniel, whom the Scripture never knew: and if it were ſo, why are all their acts joyned together, as if one Daniel had done and writ them all?

Other exceptions were taken in times paſt, as S. Hierome reporteth, by a certaine learned Jew ſpoken of before, againſt theſe forged peeces of Daniel: as againſt the Song of the three children: Tantum otii fuit trib. illis pueris, &c. Had the three children ſuch leaſure, in the middeſt of the furnace to make verſes, and to ſtirre up all creatures to the praiſe of God? And as for the ſtory of Bel, what great miracle was it to find out the deceit of the Prieſts, or to kill the Dragon, with gobbets of pitch, which were done rather by a cunning wit, than a propheticall ſpirit? And concerning the taking up of Habbacuck, ſaith hee, where can the like example be ſhewed in all the old Teſtament, that any of the Saints was carried in his body, and did flye in the aire: whereas Ezekiel (ſaith hee) was tranſported in ſpirit: and Paul dare not affirme, that he was rapt up in his body? Thus then that Jew oppoſed, as Hierome hath the ſtorie, præfat. in Danielem.

Upon theſe and ſuch like reaſons, S. Hierome doubteth not to call the ſtory of Bel and the Dragon fables; præfat. in Daniel. and ſo doth S. Auguſt. de mirabilib. lib. 2. cap. 32. Bellarmines anſwer is, that by fables, Hierome underſtandeth, hiſtories, cap. 9. which is a very ſimple anſwer, and untrue: for Hierome in the ſame place further thus writeth: Quas fabulas, &c. nos veru antepoſito, eaſq; jugulante ſubjecimus: Which fables, becauſe they are ſo well knowne, we have added, that is, tranſlated, but marked them with a daſh ſtroke or croſſe line to cut the throat of them: for Hierome uſed this marke in his tranſlation, thereby ſignifying what hee would have put out. If Hierome calling them fables, ſhould meane ſtories, why did he thus write? And Auguſtine in the place alleaged giveth a reaſon, why hee will not collect any wonders, or miracles out of theſe bookes, becauſe he counteth them fables: if he had underſtood ſtories, he would not have pretermitted them.

But what opinion S. Hierome had of theſe fabulous ſtories, it is cleare by Ruffinus invective, who blameth him, for that he cut off from the Scriptures the ſtory of Suſanna, an example of great chaſtity, and the Song of the three children. And Ruffinus in the ſame place, rather being ſtirred in choler, than ſpeaking of judgement, thus argueth the caſe with Hierome: Firſt, ſaith he, it is not to be doubted, but that Peter ſitting 24. yeeres at Rome, did deliver unto the Church all the bookes of Scripture, and theſe among the reſt: but it is not like he would commend unto them falſe bookes. Secondly, the Apoſtle biddeth us to take heed of Jewiſh fables, and muſt wee now bee ſent to the Jewes to learne, which are the Scriptures? Thirdly, thus the holy Martyrs are held to have beene in error, which did uſe to ſing in the Church, the Song of the three children.

Theſe and ſuch like arguments Ruffinus uſeth in his invectives againſt Hierome: to the which Hieromes anſwer may be thus gathered, though I find not in any one place theſe arguments by him confuted.

To the firſt: it is denied, that Peter, of whoſe ſitting at Rome ſo many yeeres it may bee doubted, did not commend any of the Apocryphall bookes to the Church, as parcell of the Scripture: for Hierome thus writeth, Apoſtolici viri ſcripturis utuntur Hebraicis, &c. The Apoſtolike men uſe none but the Hebrew Scriptures. It is manifeſt, that thus did the Apoſtles and Evangeliſts: but the Apocrypha are not in the Hebrew.

Apolog. 2. in Ruffinum.

To the ſecond: the ſame Apoſtle, which biddeth us take heede of Jewiſh fables, yet referreth us unto them, for the divine oracles: Rom. 3. 2. yea, and Origene, as Hierome ſaith, whom Ruffinus did ſo extoll, did conferre with the Jewes for the underſtanding of the Hebrew Scriptures, as he confeſſeth, that he learned of one Huillus a Jew what is underſtood by Ariel, in the 29. of Eſay, verſ. 1. apolog. 3. cont. Ruffin.

To the third: it followeth not, though they be read in the Church, that therfore they are Scripture: the Church readeth them for the edifying of the people, as Hierome ſaith, not for the confirmation of doctrine. And as thouching the martyrs; they might have their errors, as their ſinnes: neither ought we to embrace the errors of martyrs: Defendamus ergo peccata (ſaith Hierome) quia, qui poſtea martyres, prius peccatores fuerunt: Wee might as well maintaine their ſinnes, becauſe they, which afterward became martyrs, firſt were ſinners. Thus we ſee how Ruffinus chalenged S. Hierome for leaving out of the Apocrypha, and how S. Hierome defendeth himſelfe: and yet it may ſeeme ſtrange, that Ruffinus ſhould blame Hierome for this, whereas, hee himſelfe in the Creede which goeth under his name, which is to be found both amongſt Cyprian, and Hieromes workes, doth exclude, the bookes of Tobie, Judith, Macchabees, Eccleſiaſticus, the Wiſedome of Salomon, out of the number of the ſacred Scriptures. But thus much of this controverſie betweene theſe two ancient Writers.

Pammachio & Oceano.

Laſtly, we have here the teſtimonie of our adverſaries, for Ioannes Driedo, a Popiſh writer, refuſeth theſe pieces annexed to Daniel, as being no part of the Scripture: lib. 1. de ſcriptur. & dogmatib. eccleſiaſtic. cap. ultimo.

OF THE BOOKE OF TOBIE.

1 THis booke is not found in the Hebrew, in the which tongue all the oracles of God were kept. Ergo, it is worthily doubted of. Iunius maketh mention of two Hebrew editions of this booke, but tranſlated into the Hebrew by ſome for exerciſe ſake: and if the originall had beene Hebrew, one edition had beene ſufficient, there needed not two divers copies. In Hieromes time it was alſo extant in the Chalde tongue, which is now wanting: præfat. in Apocryph.

2 Our adverſaries themſelves confeſſe, that in Hieromes time it was not received for canonicall. The Jeſuite anſwereth: that it might be doubted of before it was determined in a generall Councell: to whom (ſaith he) it appertaineth to define of canonicall Scripture: As though this were not a greater doubt, whether a Councell hath any ſuch authoritie to determine, which bookes ought to bee received for canonicall, for Canus a Papiſt maketh a queſtion of it, lib. 2. cap 8. And the Jeſuite himſelfe ſaith that the Church cannot, Facere canonicum de non canonico, Make a booke not canonicall to bee canonicall, but onely to declare thoſe to be canonicall, which are ſo indeede. Wherefore the Papiſts take too much upon them, to make this booke within the Canon, being of it ſelfe not canonicall, and ſo adjudged by antiquitie.

3 There is ſome contradiction in the ſtorie, as it is tranſlated in the vulgar Latine, for chap. 3 ver. 7. the Text ſaith, that Sara dwelt in Rages, a Citie in Media: but chap. 7. 1. ſhee is ſaid to dwell in Ecbatane: and from thence Tobie ſendeth the Angell to Rages, to receive the money of Gabael.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that there might be two Cities of the ſame name (Rages) one where Sara dwelt with Raguel, another where Gabael dwelt: or ſhe might be ſaid to dwell in Rages, becauſe ſhe dwelt neere unto it, Bellarm. cap. 11.

Anſwer. Firſt, who ſeeth not what beggerly ſhifts theſe are: as before the Jeſuite found out two Daniels, ſo here he hath found us out two cities: but none of theſe ſhifts can ſerve his turne: for whether he ſay, that Sara dwelt in his new found citie, or neere unto Rages, both are falſe, if that be true in the 7. chapter, that ſhe dwelt in Ecbatane. Secondly, all this buſineſſe the Jeſuite is put to, becauſe hee will not confeſſe an errour in the Latin tranſlation, which in ſtead of Ecbatane, readeth Rages, chap. 3. 7. as by examining of the Greeke text may eaſily appeare: And thus Michael Medina diſſolveth this doubt, whoſe judgement though Bellarmine miſlike, yet in the end he muſt bee faine to agree to him: or elſe thoſe places will never bee reconciled. Our countrimen of Doway doe finde another ſalve for this ſoare: they ſay that Sara is ſaid to dwell in Rages, becauſe ſhe dwelt in that Province, whereof Rages was the head city: for when they came where Raguel dwelt, Tobias ſtayed there, and the Angell went to the city of Rages, where Gabelus dwelt, &c. as we may ſay ſuch an one dwelleth in Yorke or Lincolne, that dwelleth in one of thoſe ſhires: Annot. in Tobi. 13. 7. p. 994.

Contra. 1. If one ſay, ſuch an one dwelleth in Lincolne a city of England, will not any take it, that he dwelleth in the city, not in the countrey or ſhiere of Lincolne? And ſo Sara is ſaide, chap. 3. 7. to dwell in Rages a city of the Medes; not in the Province but the city. 2. As Sara dwelleth in Rages a city of the Medes, ſo is it ſaid, chap. 8. 3. Go to Gabelus into Rages a City of the Medes: Why ſhould the city of Rages bee heere underſtood, as our Doway Gloſſemen note, and the Province of Rages before, in both places the City of Rages being expreſly mentioned. Thirdly, if Raguel then the Father of Sara dwelt in Rages, and Gabelus dwelt there alſo, then needed not the Angell have taken ſuch a long journey to goe from Raguels houſe to Gabelus, as it is deſcribed, chap. 9. How Azarias (as the Angell called himſelfe,) was willed to take with him two Cammels and a ſervant to accompany him. Fourthly, the error then is in the vulgar Latine, which chap. 3. 7. as is before noted, for Ecbatane putting in Rages: and to mend the matter, the vulgar Latine, chap. 5. 8, maketh this City of Rages to bee ſituate in mount Ecbatane, and ſo Ecbatane and Rages ſhould bee one City: whereas in the originall copie they are two diſtinct cities: for Gabael, or Gabelus, as the Latine readeth, dwelt in Rages, chap. 9. 3. and Raguel in Ecbatane, chap. 7. 1. This objection, though it maketh nothing againſt the credit of this ſtory, which wee impugne by other arguments, yet it much ſhaketh the authority of their vulgar Latine.

4 Hee that readeth the booke it ſelfe ſhall finde that both the ſtile and the matter is not ſuch as beſeemeth canonicall Scripture: as chapter 3. 8. the evill ſpirit named Aſmodeus, a word not found in the canonicall Scripture, ſee Iunius upon that place; Chap. 5. 12. the Angell is made to ſay hee was of Azarias ſtocke; 6. 1. in the vulgar Latine, but not in the Greeke, Tobie his dogge followed him, a matter not beſeeming the gravity of Scripture. Chap. 12. 15. Raphael one of the ſeven Angels: ſee Iunius upon that place, Chap. 8. 3. the devill driven away with the ſmell of a broyled liver.

Prȩfat. in Proverb.

S. Hierome of the booke of Tobie, thus writeth, Legit quidem eccleſia, ſed inter Canonicas ſcripturas non recipit: The Church readeth them, but receiveth them not into the number of Canonicall Scriptures..

Our Gloſſemen of Doway doe their good will to remove ſome of theſe doubts: Firſt concerning Tobies dogge, they tell us, that it diſgraceth not the ſacred hiſtorie, that a ſmall matter being true, is alſo recorded with the reſt, as not one jot of the Law muſt bee omitted: and it is by Beda and ſome others expounded myſtically, Annot. in Tobie. 11. verſ. 9. Secondly likewiſe the driving away of the Devill with the liver of a fiſh: they ſay that Devils that would have made themſelves equall with God, are juſtly made ſubject to creatures: God concurred heere with naturall cauſes, whoſe pleaſure is ſome time to uſe meanes naturally unapt, as Chriſt gave ſight to the blind by putting clay to his eyes: ſo the Angell by Gods appointment uſed this meanes to expell the Devill. Annot. in chap. 6. verſ. 6. And further, it myſtically ſignified Chriſts paſſion, whereby the Devill was expelled out of mens hearts. Annot. cap. 5. v. 2.

Contra. firſt, 1. If this were any of the ſacred hiſtories, the mention of the ſmalleſt matter were not ſuperfluous: but that remaineth yet to be proved, thus they begge ſtill the thing in queſtion. Secondly, and ſo it is true that not one jot of the Law muſt bee omitted: but I hope they will not make the wagging of Tobies dogs taile any part of the Law. Thirdly, neither can any myſticall matter be ſoundly picked, I would thinke out of the wagging of a dogs taile. Fourthly, let them ſhew us, where in any part of the canonicall Scripture any ſuch ridiculous or toyous thing is expreſſed: admit ſuch a thing were true, yet the report of every true thing beſeemeth not the gravity of Scripture.

Secondly, firſt God hath indeed ſubdued Devils to faithfull men, Luke 10. 20. but that this is laid as a puniſhment upon them for their pride to bee ſubject to a fiſhes liver, wee doe not finde. Secondly, if you can prove that this was a meanes appointed of God, then no doubt hee concurred with his owne ordinance, but ſtill they thus take for granted the maine point in queſtion. Thirdly, that inſtance of laying clay to the blind mans eye is nothing like: for a corporall meanes though unlike, was applied to a corporall infirmity, but here a ſpirituall evill is cured, which cannot bee helped but by ſpirituall meanes, as the Apoſtle ſaith, the weapons of our warfare are not carnall &c. Fourthly, neither are they myſteries, that are collected out of thoſe Apocryphall bookes, but mens fancies.

2 Cor. 10. 4.

Of the Booke of Iudith.

AN eſpeciall argument againſt this booke is, that the hiſtorie cannot bee aſſigned to any time.

1 It is pretie ſport to ſee how the Papiſts doe moyle themſelves about this point: and cannot agree amongſt themſelves. Some hold that this ſtorie fell out after the captivitie in Cambyſes time, as Lyranus, and Driedo: ſome in Darius Hiſtaſpis reigne, as Gerardus Mercator: ſome would have it before the captivitie in Sedechias time, as Genebrard: ſome in Ioſias time, as Iohan. Benedictus: but the Ieſuite confuteth them all, and bringeth the ſtorie to Manaſſes reigne: but hereunto exception alſo may be taken.

2 It appeareth that this ſtorie could not bee after the captivitie, for wee reade not of any Nabuchadnezar afterwards, for the kingdome was tranſlated from the Aſſyrians to the Perſians and Medes. Againe, it could not bee before, either in Ioſias time, Sedechias, or Manaſſes: firſt, becauſe in the 5. chapter, verſ. 18. it is ſaid, that the Temple had been deſtroyed and caſt downe, which could not be in any of thoſe Kings reignes. It is but a ſhift of Bellarmines, to ſay thoſe words were foyſted into the text: it is rather to bee thought, that the Jeſuite is put to his trumps, not having elſe what to anſwer. Secondly, Iudith being at this time in the flower of her age, and living afterward many yeeres till ſhee was one hundred and five yeere old, all which time, and many yeeres after her death, the booke ſaith in the laſt chapter, the land had reſt: this cannot agree with Manaſſes time: for within fortie yeeres, or not much above, the land fell into great trouble, ſtraight after Ioſias death. Where then is this long time of reſt? And the Jeſuite that ſtill groundeth upon impoſſibilities and unlikelihoods, that Iudith was at this time fortie yeere old, which was (ſaith he) in the beginning of Manaſſes reigne; and ſo to die about ſeven yeeres before Ioſias: yet for all his ſcanning is driven to this ſhift, that the many yeeres peace after her death muſt bee underſtood of poore ſeven yeeres. Thirdly, if all this happened in Manaſſes time, whom the King of Aſſur tooke and carried away priſoner, and had much troubled and afflicted the countrie of Judea: what need had Holofernes to enquire ſo curiouſly of Achior the Ammonite, of the countrie, their citie, people, Kings, and ſuch like: ſeeing they had knowne the countrie too well before in ſpoyling and waſting of it, as the Jewes by wofull experience had felt? And this is Bellarmines own reaſon againſt their opinion that hold Judith to have lived after the captivitie: argum. 8. becauſe Holofernes needed not then to have enquired of the people, and of the countrie, ſeeing the Perſians could be ignornnt of none of theſe things, ſaith hee, when as they had diſmiſſed the Jewes thither a little before. But this reaſon holdeth ſtronger againſt Bellarmine: for what need any ſuch inquiſition after this people, ſeeing the King of Aſſur had ſent his hoſt and Captaines thither before to fetch Manaſſes to Babylon?

Iudith cap. 5.

S. Hierome ſaith, that this booke of Judith, as the other of Tobie, were not received of the Church into the Canon of the Scriptures: præfat. in Proverb. And Auguſtine againe thus affirmeth out of S. Hierome: Librum J*udith* J*udæi in canonem ſcripturarum non recepiſſe dicuntur, & minus authoritatis habet ad ea roboranda, quæ in contentionem veniunt*: The Jewes are ſaid, not to have received the booke of Judith into the canon of the Scriptures, and it is of ſmall authoritie to ſtrengthen any doctrine that commeth in queſtion: De civitat. Dei, 18. 26. Yet although exception bee taken to this booke as not canonicall, the truth of the hiſtorie in generall, as likewiſe of the other of Tobie, is not by us denied: ſome ſuch things might be done, and as Hierome ſaith of this booke, though it be not ſufficient to confirme any doctrine which is controverted, inter hiſtorias computatur, it is notwithſtanding reckoned among the hiſtories: the ſubſtance of the ſtorie may be true, though the writer faile in the circumſtances, as of time, place and manner: and therefore it deſerveth not the credit and authoritie of canonicall Scripture, which is no way defective.

Our Doway commentors doe thus labour for the credit of this booke: 1. In the 8. chapter verſ. 25. Judith ſpeaking of ſuch things as had formerly happened unto her people, ſaith, they were deſtroyed of the deſtroyer: which words are cited by S. Paul, 1 Cor. 10. 10. and are not to be found neither Numb. 11. nor 14. nor in any place of the old Teſtament but only here, which argueth this booke to bee canonicall.

1 Cor. 10. 10.

2 Concerning the time, it ſeemeth probable, that theſe thinges happened when Manaſſes was in priſon in Babylon, or newly reſtored, &c. from which time they had no warres till the reigne of Ioachas about 80. yeeres, conformable to the long peace mentioned, chap. 16. verſ. 30. in the argument of the booke, &c.

3 Whereas Holofernes demandeth of Achior, what manner of people the Jewes were, chap. 5. 3. he could not be altogether ignorant of ſo famous a people as the Jewes; but in his rage marvelling at their attempt, demandeth more particularly of their abilitie to reſiſt him: as for the like reaſon, verſ. 28. they knowing Achior well enough, yet in their rage demand who hee was, that dare ſay ſuch things: annot. in cap. 5. 3. 28.

4 Whereas Judith thus prayeth, chap. 9. 13. let him be caught with the ſin of his eyes in me, &c. they ſay, that Holofernes might be moved with her beautie and ſweet ſpeech, and yet not ſinne: annotat. ibid.

5 Whereas chap. 10. 12. as they tranſlate out of the vulgar Latine, ſhe thus ſaith, I know it ſhould come to paſſe, that they ſhould be given you for a ſpoile: theſe things (ſay they) ſhe ſpeaketh conditionally, as it was like to come to paſſe, if God ſent not other meanes: annot. ibid.

6 Againe, whereas Judith ſaith to Holofernes, chap. 11. 4. If thou wilt follow the words of thine handmaid, God will doe with thee a perfect thing: this was true in her meaning, though not in Holofernes underſtanding, &c. and was no leſſe lawfull, than that Ioſua did in deceiving the citizens of Hay: annot. ibid.

Contra. 1. This word deſtroyer, though it bee not extant in theſe places given in inſtance, yet is it found Exod. 12. 23. I will not ſuffer the deſtroyer ὀλοθρεύοντα, to come: from thence the Apoſtle might take the word: for it was ſome Angell good or bad, whoſe miniſterie God uſed in the execution of his judgements. 2. Neither is this word or phraſe found in this place of the booke of Iudith, 8. 25. in the originall: but both it & three verſes together are foiſted in, and many additions, diminutions, and alterations are found in this place beſide, and throughout the booke, which the Septuagint have not.

2 This ſtorie could not fall out in Manaſſes time when he was in priſon, or reſtored, for the reaſons before alleaged: becauſe the Temple had been caſt downe to the ground, chap. 5. 18. (as it is in the originall text, though it bee left out in the Latine) which was not done in Manaſſes reigne: neither were there 80. yeeres from Manaſſes impriſonment, or deliverance to Ioachaz, or Ioachas reigne the ſonne of Joſias, for Amon the ſonne of Manaſſes and Ioſias reigned betweene them but 33. yeeres, Amon two yeeres, and Ioſias 31. yeeres: and Amon being the eldeſt ſonne of Manaſſes, borne before his fathers impriſonment (becauſe mention is made of his ſonnes before) was but 22. yeeres when hee began to reigne; which being put to the former ſumme of 33. maketh but 55. yeeres: neither can it bee true, in this account, that all the dayes of Iudiths life (which was 105. yeeres in all, and 69. after this exploit) there was none that troubled Iſrael, nor many yeeres after her death: for after thoſe 55. yeeres expired, there fell out moſt troubleſome times after the death of Joſias. And whereas Bellarmine would helpe out the matter, by referring this ſtorie to the 16. yeere of Manaſſes reigne, ſo that 39. yeeres ſhould remaine, this cannot be, for the reaſon aforeſaid taken from the age of Amon, moſt like to be Manaſſes eldeſt ſonne.

3 Among other queſtions, Holofernes asketh Achior, what king the Iewes had, chap. 5. 3. which had been a very idle queſtion, if Manaſſes were either then in priſon, or delivered and reſtored to his kingdome: how could he be ignorant then, who was their King? That other queſtion touching Achior in the end of the chapter, is not found in the originall, though the Latine have it.

Iudith 12. 19.

4 This is new Doway doctrine, that Holofernes might be caught with the beautie of Iudith, and luſt after her yet without ſinne: whereas the Law ſaith, Thou ſhalt not luſt: for hee deſired her but as his concubine, to intreat her as one of the daughters of the children of Aſſur, which remaine in the Court of Nabuchadnezer. And if it be ſaid, ſhe meant, that he might deſire her as his wife, ſhe either intended to be his wife, which was contrary to the law, for a daughter of Iſrael to marrie to the uncircumciſed; or ſhe intended it not, and ſo diſſembled in her prayer, and ſo ſhould have offended either way.

5 For Iudith ſpeaketh not conditionally, but ſimply giveth this as a reaſon, why ſhe fled; becauſe her people ſhould be given into his hand: I know (ſaith ſhe) it would come to paſſe, that they ſhould bee given, &c. but ſhee knew no ſuch thing, but hoped and firmly beleeved the contrary: ſhee ſpeaketh then againſt her knowledge, and cannot be excuſed from diſſembling.

6 If Iudith meane according to her ſpeech, it was not true in any underſtanding, for ſhe ſaith, verſ. 6. My Lord ſhall not faile of his purpoſe: if ſhe meane otherwiſe than ſhe ſpeaketh, then ſhe told a lie, and yet proteſted before againſt it, verſ. 5. I will declare no lie to my Lord this night: yea ſhee doth not equivocate only with Holofernes, but ſhe alſo taketh Gods name in vaine, verſ. 17. I will pray unto God to reveale unto me when they ſhall commit their ſinnes: and yet no ſuch matter. And that inſtance of Joſua is much unlike: if they can make no difference betweene lying ſpeech, and politike ſtratagems of warre, between diſſimulation in behaviour, and untruth in words, they have very dimme eyes to diſcerne.

Of the Booke of Wiſdome.

The Papiſts.

OVr adverſaries reaſon thus: They ſay that S. Paul, Rom. 11. 34. uſing this ſpeech; Who hath knowne the Lords minde, or been his counſellour? doth alleage it out of the fourth chapter of this booke, verſ. 13. Ergo, it is canonicall. Wee anſwer: Firſt, the Apoſtle ſeemeth not in that place to cite any teſtimonie, though the words which he uſeth may elſewhere be found. Secondly, though the like words are read in the booke of Wiſedome, yet it is not neceſſarie the Apoſtle ſhould borrow them from thence, but rather they are alleaged out of the 40. of Eſay 13. where the Prophet ſaith, Who hath inſtructed the ſpirit of God, or was his counſellor? And this alſo is the opinion of the Rhemiſts, that S. Paul in that place uſeth the Prophets words.

The Proteſtants.

OVr reaſons againſt the authoritie of this booke are theſe and ſuch like.

1 Becauſe this booke is not found in the Hebrew, but written only in Greeke: wherefore it is not canonicall, ſeeing the Jewes had all the oracles of God.

2 Philo a Jew is thought by the Papiſts themſelues to be the author of this booke, who lived after Chriſt in the time of Caligula; neither himſelfe was a Chriſtian or beleeved in Chriſt: therefore an unlike man to bee a writer of canonicall Scripture. Bellarmine ſaith is was another Philo, who was more ancient. Indeed Joſephus maketh mention of a Philo before this time, but hee was an Heathen & no Jew: But this booke was held to be, Philonis Judai, Philo the Jewes, as S. Hierome witneſſeth, pref. in Prov. and S. Auguſt. lib. 17. de civit. cap. 20.

Wiſd. 8. 20.

3 In the 8. chap verſ. 20. Salomon is brought in thus ſpeaking: yea rather being good, I came to an undefiled bodie: doth not this ſavour both of that Platonicall conceit of the being of ſoules before they come into the bodie? and beſide, how can the ſoule come into an undefiled body, which is in the firſt conception defiled with ſinne? as David ſaith, Pſal. 51. 5.

4 If this booke were written by Salomon, why is it not extant in Hebrew? For Salomon wrote in Hebrew & not in Greeke. Many of the Papiſts alſo do prove, that it was not written by Salomon: for though Salomon in the ſecond chapter bee brought in praying unto God; that is no good argument to prove Salomon the author, for the author might ſpeake in the perſon of Salomon. S. Hierome doubteth not to call this booke, Pſeudepigraphum, falſely intituled: and againſt Vigilantius: De Salomone ſumus teſtimonium quod Salomonis non fuit; You bring a ſaying out of Salomon, which was none of Salomons. And S. Auguſtine: Propter nonnullam eloquii ſimilitudinem, ut Salomonis dicatur, obtinuit conſuetudo: Cuſtome hath ſo prevailed, that it is called Salomons, for the likenes of ſtile and ſpeech : de civitat.lib.17.cap.20. If this booke then were none of Salomons and yet beareth his name,it cannot be canonicall Scripture wherein there is no untruth.

Of the Booke called Eccleſiaſticus.

The Papiſts.

THey have none but common and generall arguments for the authoritie of this booke,as that it was of old read in the Church,and divers of the Fathers alleaged teſtimonies out of it. All this prooveth not,as we have ſhewed before,that it was canonicall , but that it was well eſteemed and thought of,becauſe of many wholeſome and good precepts which are contained in it. And for further anſwer, we ſay, that it followeth not, becauſe the Fathers doe quote Eccleſiaſticus in their writings, that therefore it is canonicall. Firſt , the Fathers alleage alſo the teſtimonies of the Heathen Philoſophers and Poets , and yet they are nothing leſſe than canonicall. Secondly , Hierome ſaith, Legit Eccleſia, &c. The Church readeth them,but yet doth not take them for canonicall : as then the Church doth reade them, & yet maketh them no Scripture,ſo the Fathers in their writings may uſe them. Thirdly , if it ſhall be ſayd, that the Fathers doe cite this booke as canonicall : to this I anſwer,that therein they may bee deceived,as Auguſtine was,who ſometime alleageth Eccleſiaſticus under the name of a Prophet, lib. cont. Pagan. 6. and calleth the booke Propheticall, lib. 2. de Geneſ. cap.5. But this his opinion he retracteth : lib.1.Retract.10. Or elſe the Fathers doe alleage theſe bookes not as canonicall , but as Hagiographa,that is,holy writings,ſuch as were inferiour to the Scriptures; but yet to be preferred before other mens writings : as Hierome ſaith the Hebrewes did count the bookes of Tobit and Iudith among the Hagiographa , and yet did cut them off from the Scriptures.

Pręfat. in Proverb.

Præfat. in Tobiam.

The Proteſtants.

WE doe thus improve the authoritie of this booke.

1 The author in the Preface ſaith,that he tranſlateth in this booke ſuch things,as before were collected by his grandfather in Hebrew,and excuſeth himſelfe,becauſe that things tranſlated out of the Hebrew doe loſe their grace , and have not the ſame force : ſo then it appeareth that this booke cannot be canonicall being imperfect : Neither was his grandfathers worke (which is now loſt) to be thought any part of the Scripture,ſeeing he was no Prophet himſelfe,but a compiler and a collector of certaine things out of the Prophets.

2 He exhorteth his country-men to take it in good worth , and ſo craveth pardon : but the ſpirit of God uſeth not to make any ſuch excuſe,whoſe works are moſt perfect,and feare not the judgement of men.

3 This booke ſaith, *chap.*46. ver. 20. that Samuel prophecied after his death:and from the earth lift up his voyce. Wheras the canonicall Scripture ſaith not that it was Samuel,but that Saul knew (that is,ſo imagined or thought) that it was Samuel, 1.Sam.28. 14. And Auguſtine thinketh it was phantaſma Samuelis but a ſhew onely and repreſentation of Samuel,and an illuſion of the divell,lib. ad Dulcitium quæſt.6. For it is not to be thought,that the divell can diſeaſe the ſoules of any men, much leſſe of Saints departed,See more of this, controverſ. 9. quæſt. 1.part.2. S.Auguſtine ſaith,that Eccleſiaſticus is thought to be Salomons, as before he ſaid of the other booke called the Wiſedome of Salomon: Propter nonnullam eloquij ſimilitudinem: For ſome likenes of the phraſe,lib.17.de civit,Dei. cap.20. S.Hierome : Hæc duo volumina legat ad ædificationem plebis : Theſe two bookes the Church may reade for edifying of the people,not any confirmation of doctrine : præfat.in proverb. In the 84. Canon of the Apoſtles , there are only three bookes aſcribed to Salomon,the Proverbs, Eccleſiaſtes, and the Canticles: but as for this booke the Canon giveth this caveat, Extrinſecus addiſcant juvenes ſapientiam eruditi Sirach : Let the young men learne the wiſedome of learned Sirach , beſide and without the Canon. Gelaſius Biſhop of Rome in his decree of the canonicall Scripture, doth bring in onely two bookes under Salomons name, the Proverbs and Eccleſiaſtes with the Canticles , both which hee maketh one booke. And thus have wee the teſtimonie of our adverſaries owne authors againſt them.

Eccleſi. 46.20.

See this place obiected againſt , and anſwered , Retection p. 4.

4 Now then whereas Bellarmine would have Salomon the author of this booke,as to that purpoſe he alleageth Gregory with other Fathers,chap.14. and yet denieth not but that Ieſus Sirach was alſo the writer thereof, gathering Salomons ſentences together : the one affording the matter , and the other the forme : hereunto wee anſwer : firſt , that ſome of the Fathers may count it Salomons booke, for ſome likenes or ſimilitude of phraſe or matter, as we heard before out of Auguſtine and not otherwiſe. Secondly, thoſe ſentences were not collected out of Salomons workes, but partly as the Author confeſſeth,they were his Grandfathers obſervations,out of the Law and Prophets,as he ſaith in the preface , partly it was his owne worke , wherein he hath powred out the wiſedome of his owne heart,chap.50.27. it was not then the wiſedome of Salomon.

Of the two Bookes of the Macchabees.

OVr Arguments againſt the authority of this booke are theſe enſuing, for our adverſaries bring nothing on their part, but ſuch arguments drawne from teſtimonies, authorities, as do generally ſerve for all the Apocrypha, which are anſwered afore.

2 Macch. 12.43. 1 Iudas is commended, 2. booke chap. 12. for offering ſacrifice for the dead: which was not commanded by the law. And againe, they were manifeſt idolaters: for there were found jewells under their coats conſecrate to the Idols of the Iamnites. And our adverſaries grant themſelves, that prayer is not to be made for open malefactors dying impenitently. Bellarmine ſaith, that Iudas did godly thinke, that they might repent them at the very point of death c. 15. *ad object.*1. Anſw. By this reaſon a man may pray for the wickedeſt man, that dyeth, if he have a conceit that hee might repent in the very inſtant of death: but this is contrary to their own Canons: *Decret.par.*2.*cauſ.*24. *qu.*2. *c.*4. Gelaſ. Nobis fas non eſt aliud decernere prater id in quo dies ſupremus quemque invenit. Wee ought not to judge otherwiſe of a man, than as his laſt day findeth him.

2 *Lib.*2.*cap.*2. many things are reported of the Arke, the Holy fire, the Altar, the tabernacle which ſhould be hidde by Ieremy in a cave, and that the Lord would ſhew the people theſe things at their returne. Here are many things unlikely and untrue. Firſt, it is found, ſaith the text, in the writings of Ieremy: but no ſuch ſtory is there found. Secondly, Ieremy was in priſon till the very taking of the Citie; and the Citie being taken the Temple was ſpoyled, the holy things defaced and carried away; how could they then be conveyed by Ieremy? Thirdly in their returne they found neither arke nor fire, nor any ſuch thing. But, ſaith the Jeſuite, the Jewes in their converſion to God in the end of the world may have them againe: as though when they ſhall beleeve in Chriſt, they will any more looke backe to the ceremonies or rites of the law: for what uſe then I pray you ſhall they have of altar, or ſacrifice, or any ſuch like?

1 Macch. 6.16. 3 There is a great diſagreeing in the ſtory betweene the two bookes concerning the death of Antiochus, lib. 1. cap. 6. v. 6.16. It is ſaid that Antiochus died for greefe in Babylon, hearing of the 2 Macch. 1.16. good ſucceſſe of the Jewes. *lib.*2. 1. ver. 16. Antiochus was with the reſt of his ſouldiers ſlaine in the Temple of Nanea, and his head cut off and throwen forth. Chap. 9. the ſame Antiochus falling ſicke by the way dyed with a moſt filthy ſtinking ſmell, conſumed of wormes: thus, this murtherer and blaſphemer, ſaith the text, 2. lib. 9. 28. died a miſerable death in a ſtrange country among the mountaines.
How could this man dye thrice, in Babylon, in Nanea, and by the way in a ſtrange countrey?
It is confeſſed by the Jeſuite, that it was the ſame Antiochus, who ſaith he loſt his armie in the temple, and ſickned by the way, and dyed at Babylon. But the ſtorie ſaith, that their heads were cut off: I thinke then he could not live, and that he died in a ſtrange Countrey, therefore not at Babylon in his bed. Theſe things hang not together.

4 Further, the Author of theſe bookes ſaith, that he abridgeth the ſtorie of one Iaſon a Syrenean,
2 Macch. 2.23. lib. 2. cap. 2. *ver.*23. who was an Heathen: but the ſpirit of God uſeth not, neither needeth to borrow of prophane Writers. He ſaith that this worke was not eaſie but painefull to him, but required ſweating and watching, verſ. 26. But to the holy writers of Scripture, though their owne labour and dilligence was not wanting, yet was not the worke hard or moleſtious unto them. Laſtly, the Author 2 Macch. 15.39. (ſaith hee) writeth for pleaſure and recreation of the Reader, and craveth pardon if hee have not done well, lib. 2. 15. 39. But to reade for pleaſure is no end of Scripture: neither doth the ſpirit of God uſe any excuſe either for matter or manner.

Our adverſaries ſay, that S. Paul likewiſe confeſſeth, that he was rude in ſpeaking, 1 Cor. 11.6. We anſwer, hee ſo ſaith, becauſe the falſe Apoſtles ſo gave out of him, not that hee was ſo indeed: and yet in that place S. Paul doth not excuſe himſelfe, for his not ſufficient handling of his matter, as this Author doth. Neither is that ſpeech of Saint Luke any thing like: for there the Evangeliſt doubteth not to ſay, that hee had attained to an exact knowlege of all things. Upon theſe premiſſes wee conclude, that theſe bookes of the Macchabees are not Canonicall: nor to bee taken for any part of holy Scripture, though wee denie not, but that there may be ſome profitable uſe of them for the ſtorie.

5. 1. *Macchab.cap.*4.52. Iudas is ſaid to have purged the Temple the 25. day of the moneth Chaſleu,

2 Macch. 10.2. 1 Macc. 9.3 18. led in the 152. yeare. 1. Macchab. 9.3.18. and yet he is brought in, writing an Epiſtle in the yeare 188.
2 Macch. 1.10. 2. Macchab. 1. 10. which was 36. yeare after his death, how can theſe things agree?

Bellarmine anſwereth, firſt: that the purging of the Temple was made before the death of Antiochus, though the narration thereof bee ſet downe after: and thoſe two yeares muſt bee reckoned not from Antiochus death, but from the prophanation of the Temple. Secondly, he ſaith that the number of 188. yeares muſt be joyned with the former Epiſtle written in the time of Demetrius, not unto the latter: and ſo Epiſtles uſe to beare date in the end, and not in the beginning. Bellar.cap. 15.

Contra. 1. The two yeares can not begine from the time of the prophanation of the Temple: which was more than three yeares from the 145. yeare the 15. of Chaſleu. 1 Macchab. 1. 57. to the 148. yeare the 25. of Chaſleu. chap. 4. 52. And whereas the moſt Greeke Copies read two yeares and ſixe moneths, this number can have no reference to the time of the prophanation: for the Temple was purged the ſame day of the moneth, even the 25. of Chaſleu, 2. Macchab. 10. 6. Upon the which day of the moneth it had been before polluted. 1 Macchab. 1. 62. then can there not be ſixe moneths above the even yeares.

2. Neither the vulgar Latine, nor the Greeke originall do ſo diſtinguiſh and divide the date from the Epiſtle: and it is unlike that the former Epiſtle making mention of the deliverance of the people under Demetrius in the yeare 169. ſhould beare date 19. yeares after the yeare 188. and deferre ſo long the keeping of their feaſt, in remembrance of their deliverance: beſide what a prepoſterous courſe were this, firſt to ſet downe an Epiſtle dated anno. 188. and afterward to bring in an Epiſtle written by Iudas. 36. yeares before: neither is the date of Epiſtles alwaies added in the end, ſometime it is prefixed in the beginning as 1 Macchab. 14. 27. Wherefore it is evident that he which wrote this ſecond booke differeth much from the hiſtory of the firſt, which is written more judiciouſly for the truth and more adviſedly and prudently for the circumſtance of time, in both which this variable and uncertaine writer fayleth.

6. Laſtly, 2 Macchab. c. 14. v. 42. Razis is commended for killing of himſelfe, contrary to the Scripture. Bellarmine anſwereth, that he is commended not for his godly, but manfull act: hee is ſaid to have died manfully.

Anſw. 1. The word is ἀνδρείως nobly, valiantly, which very word is uſed, Act. 17. 11. where the Diſciples of Beroea are ſaid to bee more noble, than they of Theſſalonica, that is more religious and godly: for as the Apoſtle ſaith, godlineſſe is great riches, ſo is it true nobility: neither ſhall any man finde any nobilitie in Scripture to bee commended without godlines. Wherefore this author, if hee ſpeake according to the phraſe of Scripture, commending nobility, meaneth alſo godlineſſe; otherwiſe, as Auguſtine ſaith, Sic fortes laudare ſolet hiſtoria gentium: The hiſtories of the Gentiles doe uſe ſo to commend the valour of their men, 2. Auguſtine, when the Donatiſts alleaged the example of Razis in defence of their madneſſe, which killed themſelves, thus doubteth not to anſwer, denying the authoritie of the booke: Non habent Iudæi hunc librum, ſicut Moſis & Prophetarum: The Jewes doe not account of this booke, as of Moſes and the Prophets, Lib. 2. cont. Gaudent. ad cap. 24.

And that the authority of theſe bookes hath alwaies beene uncertaine it may appeare: for that the number of them is not agreed upon, ſome making but one, ſome two, ſome three Canonicall: Gelaſius in his Canon, holdeth but one of the Macchabees Canonicall: the 84. Canon of the Apoſtles reciteth three Canonicall bookes, the Papiſts generally hold but two: and thus our adverſaries owne authorities doe not make for them.

Thus have we ſeene in particular, what credit is to be given to theſe Apocryphall books, that they are not to be received into the Canon of the Scripture: and now of them all in generall, that they are not to bee held to be any part of the Scripture, beſide the arguments before ſet downe, we have foure moſt evident teſtimonies of antiquity.

The firſt of S. Hierome; who bringeth all the Canonicall books to the number of the Hebrew Alphabet, making them but two & twenty in all: for as, ſaith he, there are but two and twenty Hebrew letters, whereby a man learneth to ſpeake, and expreſſe his minde; ſo are there ſo many bookes of Scripture, whereby we are trained up to holy knowlege. And theſe are the bookes: five of Moſes, Geneſis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, Deuteronomy: eight of the Prophets, Ioſua, the Iudges with Ruth, Samuel, the Kings, Eſaias, Ieremias, Ezechiel, the ſmall Prophets: then nine, which he calleth, Hagiographa, holy writings: as Iob, the Pſalmes, the Proverbs, Eccleſiaſtes, the Canticles, Daniel, the Chronicles, Eſra, with Nehemiah, Eſter: which make in all two and twenty. Some, ſaith he, make Ruth, and the Lamentations two ſeverall bookes, and ſo number them foure and twenty, to anſwer the foure and twenty Elders in the Revelation: Sciamus, quicquid extra hos eſt, inter Apocrypha eſſe ponendum: Let us knowe, that whatſoever booke is not among theſe, is to be placed amongſt the Apocrypha: Hieron. præfat. in lib. Regum.

The ſecond authority is of S. Cyprian: who after hee had rehearſed the Canonicall bookes, then addeth further: Sciendum eſt, quod & alii libri ſunt, qui non Canonici, ſed Eccleſiaſtici à majoribus appellati ſunt: Wee muſt know, that there are other bookes beſide, not Canonicall, but Eccleſiaſticall ſo called: as the wiſdome of Salomon, Eccleſiaſticus; the books of Tobie, Iudith, Macchabees: Cyprian, in ſymbolum.

The third authority is from the 84. Canon of the Apoſtles, where none of the Apocrypha are named amongſt the books of the old Teſtament, but three bookes of the Macchabees only, which are not all held to be Canonicall of the Papiſts.

The fourth and moſt pregnant witneſſe is the Councell of Laodicea, in the 59. Canon: Quæ oportet legi & in authoritatem recipi, hæc ſunt: The bookes that ought to be read and received into authority, are theſe: and then the two and twenty books Canonicall are rehearſed, no mention at all being made of any of the Apocrypha. This Councell though it were provinciall, yet is ratified by their owne Canons, decr. p. 1. diſt. 16. c. 11. and was confirmed in the ſixth generall Councell, Can. 2. as Gratian alſo witneſſeth decr. p. 1. d. 16. c. 7. And the Pope is ſworne to obſerve the eight generall Councels, whereof the Trullane being the ſixth, is one decr. p. 1. diſt. 16. c. 8. And ſo it was decreed in the Councell of Conſtance; ſeſſ. 39. and in the Councell of Baſile, ſeſſ. 38. that the new elected Pope ſhould take his oath not to violate the faith of the eight generall Councels: Wherefore how is not the Pope for ſworne in receiving the Apocrypha into the number of the Canonicall Scripture, contrary to the 59. Canon of the Councell of Laodicea, which was confirmed in the ſixth Trullan, Can. 2. which Councell, and every Canon thereof, the Pope is ſworne to obſerve: and thus the edge of their own weapons is turned upon their owne head.

Now in the laſt place concerning the number of the Canonicall Scriptures, let us ſee the judgement and conſent of other Churches, as of the Eaſt and Greeke Church, the South Æthiopike or Abyſine Church, the reformed Churches in the Weſt, and of the teſtimonie of ſome of the Romane and Latine Church, which evidence of witneſſes I will produce throughout this worke.

The Greeke Church to this day herein followeth the judgement of ancient Greeke Fathers, as Athanaſius in Synopſ. Greg. Nazianzene lib. de genuin. ſcriptur. Epiphan. Cyrill quoteth foure: and Damaſcene, who, as Hierome before, counteth but 22. books of the old Teſtament canonicall: the other, as of Eccleſiaſticus, the Wiſdome of Salomon, he acknowledgeth to be worthie books, but they were not numbred among the propheticall writings, οὐδὲ ἔκειντο ἐν τῇ κιβωτῷ, Neither were they placed in the Arke, as other Canonicall bookes were.

Damianus a Goes de Ind. legat. artic. 11. Villamont. lib. 2. c. 23. Annot. in 18. lib. 4. Damaſ.

The Æthiopians and Abyſſines doe only hold the Hebrew Scriptures of the old Teſtament to bee authenticall, as they teſtifie, which have written of their religion.

The reformed Churches hold the ſame number of canonicall bookes with Hierome and Damaſcene: as the confeſſion of Belgia, Artic. 3. the French Church, Artic 4. the confeſſion of Wittenberg. Art. 30. the Engliſh Church, Art. 6. And of the Latine Church: Clictoneus ſubſcribeth to Damaſcene: ſee the judgement of Cajetane, Arias Montanus, Tolet before, of the Apocryphall books in generall.

The ſecond Queſtion concerning the authenticall and moſt approoved Edition of the Scriptures.

The Papiſts.

3. Error.

WHereas it is confeſſed that the Hebrew Edition of the old Teſtament is the moſt ancient, in the which tongue the Scriptures were committed to writing by the Prophets; and that the new Teſtament was written in Greeke by the Apoſtles and Evangeliſts: yet our adverſaries doe generally hold, as it was decreed in the Tridentine Chapter, Seſſ. 4. decret. 2. That in all ſermons, readings, diſputations, controverſies, the vulgar Latine tranſlation ſhould be taken for authentike before the Hebrew or Greeke, and that no man ſhould preſume upon any occaſion, to reject it or appeale from it.

The Proteſtant.

WE doe truely affirme, that although there are divers Editions of the old Teſtament beſides the Hebrew, and ſome of them very auncient, as the tranſlation of the Septuagint, compiled by ſeventy two ancients of the Jewes, at the inſtigation of Ptolomaus Philadelphus King of Ægypt, 300. yeeres before Chriſt; and after Chriſt there were other tranſlations in Greeke made by Aquila, Symmachus, Theodoſion, and others; alſo a Chaldee Paraphraſe compiled by the Jewes, and laſt of all divers Latine tranſlations, the which as Auguſtine ſaith, in his time were ſo many, that they could not be numbred; and S. Hierome ſaith; Apud Latinos tot ſunt exemplaria, quot codices: The Latines have ſo many tranſlations as bookes, præfat. in Ioſu: Yet of all the reſt the Hebrew being the moſt ancient, and the mother of the reſt, and freeſt from corruptions, ought to bee received as moſt authentike. And for the new Teſtament, though there bee a Syriacke tranſlation very ancient, yet the Greeke ought to be preferred (being the ſame tongue wherein the Apoſtles and the Evangeliſts wrote) to be the only authentike copie.

The queſtion then betweene our adverſaries and us, is not about any other tranſlation of the old and new Teſtament, but the vulgar Latine, as it is read in their Churches and uſed amongſt them. As for the Chaldee Paraphraſe they themſelves confeſſe, that it is ſtuffed with Jewiſh fables: Bellarm. lib. 2. cap. 3. And the Syriake is by him confeſſed not to be ſo ancient, as the times of Athanaſius, Epiphanius, Hierome: and therefore not bee compared either with the Greeke or Latine tranſlation. And as for the Greeke tranſlations of the old Teſtament, of them all the tranſlation of the Septuagint, was of greateſt account; who are ſaid to have beene put apart in 72. celles, and to have all agreed in their tranſlation: But S. Hierome holdeth this to be a fable, of the 72. celles, the ruines whereof a long time after were ſhewed at Alexandria, ſeeing that neither Ariſteas, who was a chiefe man about King Ptolomie, that ſet 70. interpreters on worke, nor Ioſephus maketh any mention thereof. And as touching the interpreters themſelves, hee ſaith, Aliud eſt vatem agere, aliud interpretem: It is one thing to be a Prophet, another to bee an interpreter. And as for the tranſlation, he ſaith, Germana illa & antiqua tranſlatio corrupta & violata eſt: That ancient and true tranſlation of the Septuagint, is corrupted and violated, which as Hierome ſaith, was agreeable to the Hebrew: but ſo is not the Greeke copie now extant, which is full of corruptions, and ſeemeth to be a mixt and confuſed tranſlation of many: wherefore our adverſaries doe labour to juſtifie the Latine tranſlation: ſome of their arguments let us ſee.

The Papiſts.

Arg. 1. THe Latine Church hath uſed the vulgar Latine tranſlation for the ſpace of eight hundred, or nine hundred yeares, and it is not like that the Church all this while was without the true Edition of the Scriptures. Ergo, it is only authenticall. We anſwer, firſt, by this argument it followeth that this vulgar Latine being generally uſed, was preferred before other Latine tranſlations, which were at the firſt in great number, not that therefore it is more authentike than the Hebrew in the old, and the Greeke in the new Teſtaments. Secondly, there were other Churches beſides the Latine all this while, as amongſt the Greekes famous congregations and Churches: that be it in the Latine Church, the vulgar tranſlation was reteined being erroneous; yet the whole Church continued not in that error, which were not ſo tyed and bound to the Latine tranſlation. Thirdly, if men all this while (knowledge decreaſing, and a way being in preparing for Antichriſt) were negligent in correcting and amending the common tranſlation, this is no good argument to make it authenticall.

Argum. 2. As the Hebrewes had an authenticke tranſlation in their owne tongue, and the Grecians in theirs, why ſhould not the Latine Church have it alſo authenticall in Latine? Wee anſwer, firſt, it is no good reaſon, becauſe the Lord did conſecrate the Hebrew and Greeke tongue, and therein would have his Word written, that therefore he would or ſhould alſo have made the Latine as well authenticall, as they. Secondly, if the Latine Church muſt have an authentike tranſlation, why ſhould not other Countries likewiſe have their authenticalls? The Armenians had the Scriptures of old tranſlated by Chryſoſtome, the Sclavonians by Hierome, the Gothes by Vlphilas; why ſhould not theſe alſo as well be authenticall? And ſo looke into how many tongues the Scripture ſhould be tranſlated, ſo manie authenticall tranſlations ſhould there be.

Argum. 3. They ſay that all other tranſlations which are come forth ſince, are erroneous, and much differ amongſt themſelves. Anſw. Firſt, this is no reaſon to preferre it before the Hebrew and Greeke, though it were better than all other tranſlations. Secondly, they charge us falſly, that our tranſlations are diſſonant and erroneous: for their diſagreement is not in ſuch ſubſtantiall points, & where any of them doe ſwarve from the originall, we allow them not: and yet there is not the meaneſt of them, but may juſtly compare with theirs, yea and be preferred before it. Thirdly, if their tranſlation were ſo pure, as they ſay Beza himſelfe maketh it, he would not have ſet forth a new Edition: and he preferreth it in ſome places before other tranſlations, but is farre off from making it authenticall, and ſo are we.

Argum. 4. The Hebrew text of the old Teſtament in many places is impure and corrupt, and the Apoſtles divers times in citing the old Scriptures, doe follow the Septuagint, and not the Hebrew. Ergo, it is not authenticall. Bellarmine to prove the Hebrew to be corrupt, giveth an inſtance of five places: the three principall I will ſet downe: firſt, Iſay 9. the Latine hath, his name ſhall be called wonderfull: In the Hebrew, vocabit nomen ejus, he ſhall call his name, which Calvin himſelfe confeſſeth, not to be ſo good a reading. Anſwer. Firſt, there is no great difference in the ſenſe, to ſay his name ſhall be called, or he or they ſhall call his name: for it is obſerved by the learned in this tongue, that verbs of the third perſon are often taken imperſonally among the Hebrewes, ſic Vatablus. Secondly, the ſame letters in the Hebrew doe ſerve for both theſe words, the alteration is in the pricks or points: which as Bellarmine himſelfe ſaith, Extrinſecus addita ſunt, nec mutant textum, were added outwardly, that is, by other writers and interpreters of Scripture, and doe not change the text, which conſiſteth of the letters, not of the points. Secondly, he objecteth that place, Pſal. 21.16. the Latine hath, foderunt manus, they pierced my hands: but the Hebrew is, not Caru, they pierced, but Caari, tanquam leo, as a Lyon: but the former reading of all Chriſtians is approved.

Anſwer. Firſt, this is the onely place of moment, which can be objected: Bellarmine alſo here doth furniſh us with an anſwer: that theſe two words being ſo like in ſound, and in the characters might eaſily be miſtaken either by the negligence of the writers and pen-men, or by the Rabbins, whom ſome thinke firſt to have added the prickes. 2. Divers learned men of both ſides doe teſtifie, that there be many Hebrew copies to be found, which have Caru, not Caari: ſic Andradius, Galatinus, Iohannes Iſaacbus lib. 2. cont. Lindan.

The third place is that, Pſal. 19. where the Latine hath, as S. Paul doth cite the place, Their ſound is gone forth: but the Hebrew ſaith, their line is gone forth. Anſw. Indeed the Hebrew word ſo ſignifieth, but the Septuagint, whom the Apoſtles follow, do interpret according to the ſenſe: for the glorious workmanſhip of the heavens, as with a noiſe or ſound doth ring in every mans eare, & ſet forth the power of God, as Iob ſaith, How little a portion doe we heare of him, and who can underſtand the thunder of his power? Iob 26.14. The works of God do as it were thunder out the power of God. And this reading, for line to put ſound, agreeth unto the next words following, And their words unto the end of the world: Which being prophetically ſpoken of the preaching of the Apoſtles, S. Paul ſo alleageth that place, having reſpect to the accompliſhment of the prophecie. But this is no good argument to juſtifie the Latine tranſlation before the Hebrew, becauſe the Latin followeth the Septuagint, which the Apoſtle approveth: for firſt, by this reaſon alſo the Septuagint ſhould be authenticall, which they themſelves will not grant. Secondly, S. Hierome ſheweth the cauſe, why the Apoſtles ſometimes followed the Septuagint: Vbicunq́ loquuntur ad populos, his teſtimoniis utuntur, quæ jam fuerant in gentibus divulgata: So often as they ſpeake to the people, they uſe ſuch teſtimonies as were commonly knowne amongſt the Heathen: as the tranſlation of the 70. was. Another reaſon thereof was, that when the Apoſtles alleage any teſtimony out of the old Teſtament, non verba ſecutos eſſe, ſed ſenſum: that they follow not ſo much the words, as the ſenſe: and therefore where the Septuagint keepe the ſenſe, though not the words, the Apoſtles doe not refuſe them, becauſe the tranſlation was ſo well knowne, as in this place now in queſtion: Sed ubi 70. ab Hebræis diſcrepant; But where the 70. doe differ from the Hebrew, the Apoſtles expreſſe the Hebrew ſenſe, &c.

Euſeb.lib.8. cap.2.de præp. Evangel.

We anſwer further: firſt, that the Ieſuite hath not proved, nor yet is ever able to prove the Hebrew fountaines to be corrupt: For by whom is it like the Scriptures ſhould have beene corrupted? not by the Jewes, as Gregorie thus ſheweth: for either the Jewes before Chriſt ſhould have corrupted them, then Chriſt would not have ſuffered them to goe unreproved; and bidding the people to ſearch the Scriptures, hee would have given ſome caveat to take heed of their corruptions: or elſe the Jewes ſince Chriſt ſhould have played this falſe play: but that is not ſo, becauſe the moſt evident prophecies alleaged by Chriſt and his Apoſtles, touching the Meſſiah, are found in their bookes. To this purpoſe Hierome alleageth out of Origene. Adde hereunto that teſtimony of Philo, as he is cited by Euſebius: Iudæum centies potius moriturum, &c. That a Jew would rather die an hundred times, than ſuffer the law to be changed in any one point. Neither could the Hebrew Scriptures be corrupted by any other, becauſe our bookes doe agree with the authenticall copies which the Jewes have. Secondly, where they are faultie, it is to be imputed to the negligence, or unskilfulneſſe of thoſe through whoſe hands they have paſſed, and no otherwiſe. Thirdly, that the Apoſtles alleaged the Septuagint, it maketh not for the Latine, and they alleaged it not as better than the Hebrew, but becauſe the Greeke tongue was then more univerſally knowne. Fourthly, neither did the Apoſtles in citing Scripture alwayes tye themſelves to the vulgar Septuagint: as for example ſake may appeare in thoſe places, Mica.5.2. cited Mat.2.6. Iere.31.13. cited Mat.9.18. Eſay 9.2. alleaged Mat.4.15.16. Eſay 42.1. rehearſed Mat.12.18. but the Apoſtles as they being directed with the ſpirit, were able to write Scripture, ſo alſo to recite and alleage Scripture. Fifthly, for thoſe five places which the Ieſuit ſaith are faultie in the Hebrew, we are able to ſhew almoſt fifty times five places in the Latine, and therefore by this reaſon they have gained nothing. Theſe are the Jeſuits arguments, de verb. Dei lib. 2.cap.10. and ſome of our Rhemiſts in their preface to the new Teſtament.

Lib.2.de verbo cap.7.

Bellarmine alſo taketh the like exception againſt the Greeke of the new Teſtament, ſhewing in ſome places, that the Latine text is leſſe corrupt. Firſt, ſaith he, 1 Cor.15.47. the Greeke hath, the ſecond man is, the Lord from heaven: the Latine more truly, is from heaven heavenly.

Anſ. 1. How can the truth of the Latine bee tryed, but by the Greeke, out of the which it was tranſlated? which being more ancient, muſt firſt be beleeved. Secondly, the firſt reading is moſt agreeable to the text, and ſo readeth Damaſcen.lib.3.de fide cap.12. proving by this place Chriſt to be God and man; which could not be ſo well gathered, if we ſhould not reade, The Lord from heaven. Thirdly, The Syriake tranſlation alloweth the firſt reading according to the Greeke.

Secondly, 1 Cor.7.33. the Greeke hath, there is a difference betweene a wife and a virgin, or they are divided: the Latine much better, joyneth it to the verſe before, the man that is married, is divided, that is, diſtracted about many things.

Anſ. 1. The former reading is approved by the Syriake tranſlation, by Theophylact, and Baſil, as Beza ſheweth upon this place: and Saint Hierome alloweth it writing againſt Helvidius, though elſewhere he diſſent from himſelfe. 2. It is more agreeable to the text, for the Apoſtle ſheweth how they are divided: The unmarried careth for the Lord, the married for the things of the world.

Thirdly, Rom.11.12. the Greeke hath, ſerving the time, καιρῷ, the Latine much better, κυρίῳ, ſerving the Lord.

Anſ. The beſt Greeke copies have alſo κυρίῳ, ſerving the Lord, as appeareth in the Syriake tranſlation: and who ſeeth not, that it might rather be a ſcape of the writer, taking one word for another, than a fault in the text. Thus we ſee that Bellarmine by theſe exceptions hath gained nothing for the Latin, nor yet impaired the credit of the Greeke. And be it granted, that ſome overſights might be committed through the ignorance of the Scribes and Notaries, yet the authoritie of the Originall is ſound ſtill: and for one ſcape in the Greeke, it is an eaſie matter to ſhew twenty in the Latine.

The Proteſtants.

Argum. 1. IF the Latine tranſlation bee authenticall, as it was decreed in the Councell of Trent, then it muſt have beene ſo from the beginning, ſo ſoone as there was any Latine tranſlation: for the Councell had not authority to make that authenticall, which was not, but only to declare it ſo to be. But the Latine tranſlation, for the ſpace of 600. yeeres after Chriſt, was not received, as authenticall: for we find that the Latine writers, as Lactantius, Hilarius, Ambroſius, Hieronymus, Auguſtinus, and others, did not uſe the ſame Latine tranſlation: Ergo, this vulgar Latine having not beene alwaies, ſince it was extant, authenticall, neither ought it to be now.

Argumen. 2. That edition which was made, and framed, and firſt written by the Prophets, Apoſtles, Evangeliſts, is to be preferred before that which was not ſo written by any Prophet or Apoſtle.

But ſuch are the Hebrew in the old Teſtament, and the Greeke edition in the new, by the confeſſion of our adverſaries, Bellarmin. cap. 7. lib. 2. Suth is not the Latine, for it is uncertaine by whom it was written: for the Ieſuite confeſſeth that it is not all of Hieronis edition: as the booke of the Pſalmes, Wiſdome, Eccleſiaſticus, the Macchabees, which they thinke were not tranſlated by Hierome. But let us grant that the whole was of Hieromes doing, yet was hee no Prophet nor Apoſtle: ſaith hee, Aliud eſt vatem eſſe, aliud interpretem: It is one thing to bee a Prophet, another to be an interpreter. Wherefore it is no reaſon, that Hieromes, or whoſe tranſlation elſe ſoever ſhould be received before the writings of the Prophets and Apoſtles.

But ſay our adverſaries, if wee had a perfect copie of the Hebrew and Greeke editions, wee confeſſe they were to bee preferred: but now they are full of faults, and greatly corrupted. Wee anſwer: firſt, the Jeſuite himſelfe diſputing againſt Canus and Lindanus, two Archpapiſts, that though there may bee ſome ſcapes in the tranſlations by the fault of ſome Libraries and imperfect copies, yet concerning the doctrine of faith and manners, ſaith, there is no corruption in them, lib. 2. cap. 2. Secondly, though there may be, and are, ſome words falſly written, and by error thruſt into the text, yet they ſhall never prove that they are more corrupt, the Hebrew and Greeke, than the Latine: for it followeth no more, that becauſe of ſome ſcapes the Latine is to be preferred before them, than that a cloake altogether patched and ragged, is better than a cloake of velvet that hath but one peece.

Argum. 3. The Jeſuite himſelfe, and other Papiſts confeſſe, that in ſome caſes it is very neceſſarie to have recourſe to the originall: as when ſome word ſeemeth to bee miſtaken by the writer, as where cecinit is read for cecidit: dorix, for vorax: cor, for coram: or when the Latine copies doe varie, as Ioſ. 5. ſome Latine bookes have, Quibus juravit, ut oſtenderet eis terram, unto whom hee ſware that he would ſhew them the land: that hee would not ſay ſome other, and this (ſaith Bellarmine) is the truer reading, being agreeable to the Hebrew. Thirdly, when the ſentence is ambiguous, as Luke 2. Pax hominibus bona voluntatis, Peace unto men of good will: the originall ſheweth, that (good will) is to bee referred to peace: peace or good will unto men, not unto men of good will. Fourthly, and laſtly, the force and propertie of the words is better underſtood in the originall, Bellarm. lib. 2. cap. 11. Ergo, by the Jeſuites confeſſion, the originall or fountaines are more certaine and ſure without doubtfulneſſe and ambiguitie, therefore more authenticall than the Latine.

Argum. 4. S. Hierome himſelfe findeth fault in divers places with the vulgar Latine, as it now ſtandeth: and therefore it is not authenticall, nor yet any of Hieromes tranſlation.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that all the old Teſtament, beſide the Pſalmes, the Wiſedome of Salomon, Eccleſiaſticus, the Macchabees, are of Hieromes tranſlating, and that theſe reaſons may be given, why notwithſtanding there are ſome places remaining in the tranſlation, which Hierome found fault with. Firſt, through the negligence of the Notaries. Secondly, becauſe of the divers acceptions of the Hebrew words, Hierome ſometime taking one ſignification, ſometime another. Thirdly, becauſe Hierome might afterwards correct and amend the place himſelfe, otherwiſe, than he firſt found fault.

Anſ. I will now produce ſome few places out of Hieromes tranſlation, wherein none of theſe former ſhifts ſhall ſerve their turne.

Matth. 5. 22. S. Hierome readeth: he that is angry with his brother without a cauſe, licet (ſaith he) in pleriſque Latinis codicibus, ſine cauſa, additum non ſit, though in many Latine bookes, this (without a cauſe) is not added: and ſo is it left out in the vulgar Latine.

Matth. 6. 34. Hierome readeth, ſufficient for the day is, afflictio, the affliction or griefe thereof; rather than malitia, the malice thereof, as in the vulgar Latine. Hieron. Amando.

1 Cor. 15. 1. This (ſaith hee) which is read in the Latine, We ſhall all riſe, but not all be changed, is not found in the Greeke: yet ſo readeth the Latine. Hieron. Minerio.

2 Chron. 35. Ioſias was buried in Mauſolao patrum, in the Mauſoleum or tombe of his fathers; ſo readeth the vulgar Latine: but Hierome ſaith, Iſta vox profana, & gentilis: This is a prophane, and heatheniſh terme. Dial. 1. adverſ. Pelagian.

1 Tim. 3. 2. Hierome readeth, qui poſſit docere, that is able to teach: the vulgar, a Doctor, or teacher, or docilis, teachable: which Hierome in the ſame place calleth, Latinam ſimplicitatem, the ſimplicitie or ignorance of the Latine tranſlater. Ibid.

In theſe places alleaged, the tranſlation whereof Hierome reproveth, it may eaſily appeare, that the fault was neither in the Notarie or pen-man, nor yet is the divers ſignification of the word the cauſe; neither did Hierome correct his judgement afterward, reſtoring that to the firſt reading which hee had corrected: as may appeare moſt ſufficiently by this one place, Rom. 12. 3. where he ſaith, Male in Latinis codicibus legitur, ſapere ad ſobrietatem: It is an evill reading in the Latine, to underſtand according to ſobrietie: for ſobrietie hee readeth chaſtitie. So likewiſe, to ſhew that hee was no changeling, 1 Tim. 2. 15. he ſaith, Non ut malo habetur in Latinis codicibus ſobrietas eſt legenda: We muſt not read ſobrietie, as it is evill tranſlated in the Latine, but chaſtitie: S. Hierome would never have called the authenticall tranſlation, ſimple, unlearned, evill, prophane, as hee doth this vulgar Latine, as wee have ſeene in theſe places. Lib. 1. adverſ. Jovinian. Ibid.

Argum. 5. There are many and great errors in the vulgar tranſlation, and contrary to the originall: Ergo it is not authentike. Some of the places wee will quote, as Geneſ. 3. ipſa conteret, for ipſum, ſhee ſhall breake the Serpents head, where wee doe reade that not the woman, but her ſeed ſhall breake his head. Geneſ. 6. verſ. 6. for figmentum cordis malum, the thoughts of mans heart are evill; they reade, intenta ad malum cogitatio, inclined to evill: and ſo extenuate originall ſinne. Geneſ 8.4. for the ſeventeenth day, the vulgar Latine readeth the ſeven and twentieth day: Eccleſ. 16. 14. for ſecundum opera, a man ſhall receive according to his workes; they reade after the merit of his workes. Eſdras 9. verſe 1. the vulgar Latine hath pax illum, for paxillus. Prov. 18. verſ. 11. lapides ſeculi, ſtones of the world: for lapides ſacculi, ſtones of the bagge. And though Bellarmine here acknowledge a fault in the copies by miſtaking ſome letter, yet are thoſe words retained in the vulgar Latine ſtill without correction. In their Latine tranſlations of the Pſalmes there are many corruptions: Pſal. 2. verſ. 12. Apprehendite diſciplinam: apprehend diſcipline, or inſtruction, for Oſculamini filium, Kiſſe the ſonne. And thus an evident place againſt the Jewes for the ſecond perſon in Trinity, is obſcured and overthrowne, by the corrupt Latine text. Pſal. 67. verſ. 12. Si dormiatis inter medios cleros, though ye ſleepe between two lots, without any ſenſe: the Hebrew thus, inter ollas, though you have lien amongſt the pots, as being blacke with affliction. It is pretie ſport how Bellarmine and the reſt, that would in all things juſtifie the vulgar Latine tranſlation, how he runneth himſelfe out of breath, to finde out ſome likely expoſition of this place: and in the end hee thus playeth the interpreter, if ye ſleepe betweene two lots, that is, if ye preachers abide in the midſt betweene two lots, the heavenly, and the earthly, neither given wholly to action, nor wholly to contemplation; then ſhall the Church bee like a Dove, &c. A goodly expoſition ſure, they muſt ſleepe betweene two lots, action and contemplation, that is, they muſt come at neither, but ſleepe betweene both: the words will rather enforce this ſenſe, if wee take his expoſition. And indeed of this ſort were moſt of their fat bellied Monks and Friers, neither ſeene in contemplation of knowledge, nor action of good life. Verſ. 23. of the ſame Pſalme they reade, convertam in profundum maris, I will turne them into the bottome of the ſea; for reducam profundo maris, I will bring them from the depth of the ſea, cleane contrarie. Pſal. 132. 15. viduam ejus benedicam, I will bleſſe his widow; for victum, I will bleſſe his victuals. Many ſuch overſights are cõmitted in the vulgar Latine tranſlation of the old Teſtament; which are for the greateſt part of three ſorts, either in adding to the originall, or ſubtracting from it, or in changing and altring it. I will give inſtance of all theſe only in the booke of the Judges, and thereby we may ſee what is done in the reſt.

For theſe places have additions: Chap. 1. 11. which is the citie of letters: verſ. 35. mount Horeb, which is interpreted witneſſing: chap. 4. 5. under a palme, which was called by her name: chap. 9. 25. dum illius praeſtolentur adventum, while they ſtaied his comming: chap. 9. 40. Abimelech purſued him, & in urbem compulit, and drave him into the citie: chap. 14. 11. when the citizens of that place ſaw him: chap. 15. 9. and they were ſpread abroad, in the place which was afterward called Lochi.

Theſe places are defective: Chap 1. 24. they ſaw a man: here wanteth, ſpies: verſ. 35. and (the Amorite wanting) dwelt in the mount: chap. 2. 18. and the Lord was with the Iudge, and delivered them out of the hands of their enemies all the daies of the Iudge: all theſe words are wanting: Chap. 4. 10. he went up (on his feet wanting): chap. 6. 2. for feare of the Madianites wanting, chap. 8. 10. Zeba and Salmona were (in Karkar, wanting) chap. 11. 12. was buried (in Amlon, wanting) in the countrey of Zebulon.

Theſe places with other are changed: Chap. 1. 5. when ſhe had ſighed ſitting upon her aſſe, for, when ſhe had lighted downe from her aſſe: verſ. 16. the kinſman of Moſes, for, the father in law of Moſes: chap. 5. 8. God hath choſen new battels, for, they choſe new gods: chap. 6. 31. hee that is his adverſarie (for, hee that will contend for him) let him die ere the morning: chap. 7. 19. three hundred men with him, for, an hundred men: chap. 9. 34. they lay in wait againſt Sichem, in foure places, for, in foure bands: chap. 10. 12. Amalek and Canaan, for, the Amalekites and Maonites: chap. 11. 26. the cities by Iordane, for, the cities by the coaſts of Armon. Many ſuch corruptions are to bee ſeene every where in the Latine tranſlation of the old Teſtament.

So in the new Teſtament there are alſo many falſe readings. Matth. 24. 6. Opiniones praeliorum, for, rumores. Chap. 20. 9. acceperunt ſingulos denarios, for, ſinguli denarios: they tooke every peny, for, every man a peny. Chap. 21. 30. Eo domine, for, ego domine. I goe Lord, for, I Lord. Luke 1. 28. plena gratia, for, gratis dilecta, haile Mary full of grace for, freely beloved. Luke 15. 8. evertit domum, for, everrit: ſhe overthrew the houſe, for, ſhe ſwept the houſe. 1 Cor. 15. verſ. 51. non omnes immutabimur, we ſhall not all be changed, for, omnes immutabimur, we ſhall all be changed. Epheſ. 2. 10. creati in bonis operibus, created in good workes, for, ad opera bona, created unto good workes. Rom. chap. 16. 23. Gaius hoſpes meus & univerſa Eccleſia, for, univerſa Eccleſiae: Gaius mine hoſt, and the whole Church, for, of the whole Church. 1 Cor. 9. 22. ut omnes ſalvos facerem, pro, ut omnino aliquos ſalvos facerem: that I might ſave all, for, that I might ſave ſome. Heb. 12. 8. Ergo adulteri, non filii eſtis, pro, ſpurii & adulterini: wherefore ye are adulterers, and not children, for, ye are baſtards, and not children. An hundred more errors and over, you may finde noted in the readings of our learned countriman D. Whitak. 2. quaeſt. de ſcript. 10. 11. 12. cap. Theſe I have ſet downe for a taſte.

And as the vulgar Latine is imperfect and full of corruptions, and maketh the Scriptures darke and obſcure: ſo on the contrary ſide, the originals of the Hebrew and Greeke are exceeding profitable, and doth bring great light and perſpicuitie to the Scripture: for never were the Scriptures better tranſlated, or more plainly underſtood, than ſince they were tranſlated out of the originals. Heare the judgement of a reverend and learned man ſometime a Biſhop in this land: who in a certaine conference and diſputation of the Biſhops, when ſome of them ſtood mightily for unwritten tradition, ſtanding up made an oration, uſing among other theſe words : The Germans have made the text of the Bible ſo plaine and eaſie by the Hebrew and Greeke tongues, that now many things may be better underſtood without any gloſſes at all, than by all the Commentaries of the Doctors. B. Fox. Fox pag. 1183. col. 1.

Laſtly, we will rehearſe Auguſtines judgement : Vtcunque eſt, ei lingua magis credatur, unde eſt in aliam per interpretes facta tranſlatio : Howſoever the caſe ſtandeth (ſaith hee) wee ought to give more credit to that tongue, out of the which other are tranſlated, lib. 15. de civit. cap. 13. Ergo, the Hebrew in the old Teſtament, and the Greeke in the new, out of the which the Latine and all other tranſlations have iſſued, ought to have the onely preheminence. To this agreeth S. Ambroſe, lib de incarnat. cap. 8. Ita in Græcis codicibus invenimus, quorum prior eſt authoritas : So we finde in the Greeke copies, whoſe authoritie is to be preferred. Et lib. 2. de ſpiritu, cap. 6. Si quis de Latinorum codicum varietate contendat, Græcos inſpiciat codices : If any man doe take exception againſt the diverſitie of the Latine bookes, let him looke into the Greeke. And S. Hierome ad Lucinium : Vt veterum librorum fides de Hebræis voluminibus examinanda eſt, ita novorum Græci ſermonis formam deſiderat : As the credit of the old Teſtament muſt be examined by the Hebrew volumes, ſo in the new by the Greeke. And this authority of Saint Hierome is ratified and allowed by their owne decrees : Gratian. decr. p. 1. d. 9. cap. 6. And to this purpoſe Franciſcus Mirandula made an oration to Leo 10 and the Councell of Laterane, that the Scriptures might be conferred with the originall copies. So alſo Iſidor. in præfat. ad Concil. Quod ſi veritas quærenda eſt, Græcorum ſequamur ſtylum, eorumq; imitemur editiones & exemplaria. Et poſtea : Vnitas & veritas ab ipſis quærenda eſt, quorum lingua edita eſſe noſcuntur : If we ſeeke for the truth, let us follow and imitate the Greeke copies and examples. And afterward : The truth is to be ſought for at their hands, in whoſe tongue or language it is ſet forth. This he ſpeaketh of the true originall copies of the Councels to be had from the Greeke. And the ſame reaſon alſo ſerveth for the authentike originals of the holy Scriptures. Thus have we their owne teſtimonies againſt them.

Concerning the judgement of other Churches : firſt, the Eaſt Church doth not acknowledge as authenticall the Latine tranſlation. The Chriſtians of the Eaſt ſay, that the Popes of Rome have wholly corrupted and changed the Goſpell and other bookes of our religion. The King of Muſcovia ſaid, The chapters, which thou citeſt out of the Apoſtolicall Epiſtles and Goſpels, agree not with ours. Secondly, the South and Ethiopike Church, are as farre from authorizing the Latine Bible, which it ſeemeth they had never ſeene, as may appeare by the queſtions, which Alvares reporteth to have beene propounded unto him by Preſter Iohn, touching the number of S. Pauls writings. Thirdly, the vulgar Latine is rejected generally by the reformed Churches of the Proteſtants in the Weſt : as the Church of Helvetia thus confeſſeth : We acknowledge that interpretation of Scripture for authenticall, which is taken from the Scriptures themſelves, that is, from the phraſe of that tongue, wherein they were written.

Latter confeſſ. of Helvetia. cap. 2.

Laſtly, we have plentifull teſtimony from ſome of our adverſaries themſelves of the Latine Church. Sixtus Senenſis ſaith, that Sanctus Pagninus, when he had perceived the corruptions of the old vulgar tranſlation, did by the counſell of Leo the tenth conſult with the beſt Hebrew copies, and turned them into Latine. Galatinus doth witneſſe, that the Hebrew ſcripture is much more perfect, than the Latine : and Azor the Jeſuite confeſſeth, that many of their writers ſince the Councell of Trent, as Vega, Canus, Payna, Lindanus, have noted many errors in the vulgar Latine edition, not only by the fault of the writer, but by the ignorance of the Interpreter.

The third Queſtion : concerning the vulgar tranſlation of Scripture.

The Papiſts.

THey doe not abſolutely condemne the tranſlation of the Scriptures into the vulgar tongue, whatſoever they have thought in times paſt : neither would they generally have every man permitted to read the Scripture, but ſuch only as have eſpeciall licence from their Ordinarie, having the teſtimony of their Curates that they bee humble and devout perſons, Rhenenſ. præfat. ſect. 6. So then they hold it dangerous for all men to read Scripture, and they would not willingly licence any, but their Pope-holy devout Catholikes : they are like to make a mad peece of worke, that goe about to pick their faith out of Scripture, ſay the Rhemiſts, annot. 1 Cor. 1.5. This then is their opinion, that it is neither neceſſary nor convenient for all men to have acceſſe to the Scriptures : wee will ſee ſome of their reaſons. So Bellarm. lib. 2. de verb. Dei, cap. 13.

Argum. 1. From the time of Eſdras till Chriſt, and in our Saviours time, the Scriptures were not in the vulgar tongue, but only in the Hebrew, which the Jewes underſtood not after the captivitie : Ergo, it is not now neceſſary to have them in the vulgar tongue. That the people underſtood not Hebrew, the Jeſuite proveth out of the 8. of Nehemiah : where it is ſaid, that Eſdras did expound the law to the people, becauſe they underſtood it not. We anſwer, that the text ſaith cleane contrarie, that he read the law before the people that underſtood it, verſ. 3. and they might give the ſenſe, though the people underſtood the language. Concerning the places objected out of the Goſpell, to prove the Jewes ſpake another language than Hebrew, as it appeareth by thoſe ſpeeches Marc. 5. Talitha cumi. Matth. 27. Golgotha, which ſavour not of the Hebrew tongue. We anſwer, that although they ſpake not pure Hebrew, but many ſtrange words were uſed, yet they underſtood the Hebrew ; for why elſe doth Chriſt bid the people to ſearch the Scriptures ? And they were not the Jewes, but the Romane ſouldiers that underſtood not the voice of Chriſt upon the croſſe, ſaying, he called for Elias. And whereas Bellarmine further would gather by that place, Iohn 7.49. This people, that know not the law, that the Jewes underſtood not the Scriptures in the Hebrew tongue ; it is a meere cavill : firſt they note the ignorance of the people not in the letter of the law, but the ſenſe thereof, which the Phariſies had obſcured by their traditions, and therefore Mat.23. they are ſaid to have ſhut up the kingdome of Heaven. Secondly, it is evident, Luk.4. 18. that the people underſtood the reading of the law : for when Chriſt had read the text, without further conſtruing, or tranſlating of it, he ſhut the booke and ſaid to the people, This day is this Scripture fulfilled in your eares. Againe, Act.15.21. Iames ſaith, that Moſes is preached, becauſe he is read : in what ſenſe can reading be called preaching, if it be not underſtood ? And yet it is more evident, that the people underſtood the Hebrew tongue, Act.22.2. for when they heard that Paul ſpake Hebrew, they kept ſilence. What dare not now theſe fellowes affirme, thus contrary to Scripture not being aſhamed to ſay, that the Jewes underſtood not Hebrew?

But whereas Bellarmine telleth us, that the Jewes to this day doe reade in their Synagogues the Scriptures in the Hebrew tongue, which the vulgar ſort underſtand not, chap.15. Argum. 1. we anſwer, that wee are not to regard the blinde inſtances and traditions of that obſtinate and perverſe people; (though it is certaine, that the Jewes generally doe better underſtand the Hebrew, than in the Romiſh Church the people Latine) for the Romaniſts themſelves doe reject the uſages of the Jewes, and condemne their Thalmudicall fables: Gregorie 9. did adjudge all their Thalmudicall volumes to the fire, anno 1230. the like did divers Popes : Paulus the 4. at the laſt revived the ſame decree, anno. 1559. at what time by order from the Romane Inquiſition, out of the Jewes Library at Cremona, there were burned at one time twelve thouſand Thalmudicall bookes: as Senenſis one of their owne writers reporteth.

Senenſ. Bibliothec. lib.2.§.tradit. p.125.

Bellarmine argum.2.

Argum. 2. The Apoſtles (ſaith the Jeſuite) wrote their Epiſtles only in Hebrew or Greeke, and not in the vulgar tongues of the nations to whom they preached : Ergo, it is not neceſſary that the Scriptures ſhould be in the vulgar tongue. We anſwer, firſt, it had beene an infinite labour for the Apoſtles, to have left their writings in every language ; neither was it neceſſary, ſeeing out of the originalls they might be tranſlated into every language. Secondly, they preached the ſame things unto the Gentiles in their owne tongues, which they afterward left in writing. Thirdly, the Greeke tongue, wherein they wrote, was univerſally knowne, and few countries were ignorant of it, eſpecially in the Eaſt parts. But it is moſt certaine, that the Apoſtles did write to no Churches in the Greeke tongue, which underſtood it not. And whereas the Jeſuite giveth an inſtance, of the Epiſtle written to the Romanes, whoſe vulgar tongue was Latine and not Greeke, and the Epiſtles of Iames and Peter written to the diſperſed Jewes : it can be no queſtion, whether the Romanes underſtood Greeke, the language being ſo common, and moſt of them being Grecians, as may appeare by their names, yet reſiant at Rome, to whom hee writeth : and how could the Jewes, being diſperſed among the Gentiles, be ignorant of the Greeke tongue, ſeeing now alſo they ſpeake the languages of thoſe countryes, where they are diſperſed ?

Bellarm.lib.2. cap.15.argum.5.

Argum. 3. There is no cauſe (ſay they) why the Scriptures ſhould be tranſlated : if it be for the underſtanding of the people, they underſtand them not being tranſlated neither. Wee anſwer : many things they may eaſily underſtand : and for the harder places, they are neerer the underſtanding of them being tranſlated than before : for then they have two great lets, the tongue unknowne, and the obſcure and hid ſenſe ; now they need not to labour for the tongue, but only for the ſenſe.

Rhemiſt.præfat.ſect.13.

Argum. 4. The Scriptures are occaſion of offence and hereſie, being not right underſtood. Ergo. And here Bellarmine telleth us a tale of a certaine woman in England that ſtood up in the Church when ſhe heard the 25. Chapter of Eccleſiaſticus read, and ſaid, Is this the word of God ? nay it is the word of the Devill ; We anſwer : firſt, becauſe many ſurfet of meats and drinks, it is no reaſon that ſober men ſhould be forbidden the uſe of them : no more for heretikes and wicked mens ſakes ought the people of God to be barred from Scripture. Secondly, more have periſhed by ignorance in ſcripture, than by miſ-underſtanding it : and the Scripture was ordained of God to meet with offences, and to confute hereſies, 2 Tim. 3.15. Wherefore theſe men make themſelves wiſer than God, that thinke the Scripture is an occaſion of thoſe diſeaſes, for the which it is appointed a remedie. The like blinde reaſon ſometime a popiſh Frier uſed againſt Maſter Latimer, in his frierly ſermon ; If the rude people, ſaith he, ſhould heare the Scriptures read in Engliſh, the ploughman when he heareth, that he which holdeth the plough, and looketh backe, &c. would thereupon ceaſe to plough any more : and the baker when he heareth it read, a little leaven corrupteth the whole lumpe, might be moved not to uſe leaven at all : and when the Scripture ſaith, if thine eye offend thee, pluck it out, the ignorant might bee perſwaded to pull out their eies : and therefore it was not good to have the Scriptures in Engliſh. To this frierly reaſon, Maſter Latimer vouchſafed no other anſwer but this : he would wiſh the Scriptures no longer to be in Engliſh, till either the ploughman were thereby perſwaded not to plough, or the baker not to bake : Fox p.1734. col.2.

Now concerning Bellarmines tale, though we need not beleeve it unleſſe we will, ſeeing he hath it but by heareſay : yet if any fooliſh woman ſhould be ſo ſimple, as to be offended with the reading of the Scriptures, which ſhe underſtandeth not, (and yet this was no part of the canonicall Scripture, but out of the Apocryphall bookes whereat offence was taken) this can be no prejudice to ſo holy an exerciſe no more, than the exclamation of the Pythoniſſe, *Act.*16. was unto S. Pauls preaching. But the Jeſuite pleaſeth himſelfe in this tale, becauſe he miſliketh that women ſhould bee acquainted with the Scriptures: and yet can he not be ignorant how Aquila and Priſcilla his wife expounded to Apollos the way of God more perfectly, *Act.*18. And Ruffinus that tranſlated ſome of Origens homilies giveth this as a reaſon: Hoc beneficii procreabit hac lectio, ut prophetia pervenire non ſolum ad viros, verum etiam ad religioſas fœminas poſſit: This benefit, ſaith he, ſhall come by this reading or tranſlation, that the knowledge of this propheċie not onely men, but women alſo may attaine unto: Præfat. in hom. Origen. in Pſal. 36. In thoſe dayes women underſtood the Latine tongue, and were acquainted with the Scriptures tranſlated into that language.

The Proteſtants.

WE doe beleeve and hold that it is requiſite, expedient and neceſſarie for the Scriptures to be uttered and ſet forth in the vulgar and common ſpeech, and that none upon any occaſion ought to be prohibited the reading thereof for knowledge and inſtructions ſake: and that Chriſtian Magiſtrates ought to provide, that the people may have the Scriptures in their mother and knowne tongue. Wherefore great wrong was offered to the people of England, that divers hundred yeeres, till King Henrie the eight, could not be ſuffered to have the Scriptures in Engliſh. And how, I pray you, did the Papiſts ſtorme, when as Tindals tranſlation came forth? ſome affirming that it was impoſſible to have the Scriptures tranſlated into Engliſh: ſome that it would make the people heretikes: others that it would cauſe them to rebell, *Fox.pag.*117.*col.*1. What foule and ſhamefull ſlanders were theſe? And whereas the late Tridentine chapter would not ſeeme abſolutely to condemne the vulgar tranſlation of Scripture, but permitted the ſame by licence of the ordinarie to the lay ſort, and of the ſuperiour to the regulars: yet ſince this libertie hath beene reſtrained: for Clemens the 8. would give no more faculties to Biſhops and Inquiſitors, to grant faculties of reading the Bible: and in Spaine no Bibles or any part of them in the vulgar tongue are permitted at all: as Azarius the Jeſuite teſtifieth. But for the vulgar tranſlations of Scripture we reaſon thus.

Azar.inſtit. mor.par.1. lib.8.c.26.

*Argum.*1. It is Gods commandement, that the Scriptures ſhould be read before the people, that they may learne to feare God, *Deut.*31.verſ. 11, 12. The people are commanded to write the law upon their gates, and in their houſes to conferre and talke with their children, and teach them the law, Deut. 6.6.7.8. And our Saviour biddeth the people ſearch the Scripture, *Ioh.*5.*verſ.*39. Ergo what God hath commanded, no man ought to prohibit or forbid: the people therefore muſt not bee kept from reading of the Scripture.

Deut. 31.11.

*Argum.*2. Without Scripture there is no faith; faith is neceſſarie for all people: Ergo the knowledge of the Scripture: that faith commeth by the Scriptures, read Iohn 20.31. theſe things are written, that ye might beleeve Jeſus Chriſt to bee the ſonne of God. Againe, the weapons of Chriſtian men are not denied to any, whereby they ſhould fight againſt their ſpirituall enemies: but the word of God is a ſpeciall part of our harneſſe, and a principall weapon, even the ſword of the ſpirit, Ergo.

*Epheſ.*6.17.

*Argum.*3. The Goſpell may be preached in the vulgar tongue, as our bleſſed Saviour and the holy Apoſtles taught the people: Ergo the word of God may be read and written in the vulgar tongue. The propoſition our adverſaries grant, that Sermons may be made in the vulgar tongue: but it followeth not, ſay they, that therefore Scripture ſhould be in the mother tongue, Rhem. 1 Cor. 14.18. But I pray you how can the Preacher alleage Scripture in his Sermon, unleſſe it bee recited in the vulgar tongue? or how ſhould the people know they preach the word, unleſſe they may compare their doctrine with Scripture, as the Berrœans did, *Act.*17.

*Argum.*4. I will adjoine the teſtimonie of three godly learned Martyrs, unto whoſe judgement I thinke as much ought to bee given, as unto any mans beſide, who ſealed the truth they profeſſed with their blood: theſe three Martyrs are Tindal, Lambert, Bradford. Tindal was the firſt, that in theſe laſt times tranſlated the new Teſtament into Engliſh. This holy Martyr ſaith, that the very cauſe why the Papiſts would not have the Scriptures tranſlated, was this, that the people might bee kept in ignorance ſtill, and ſo they might tyrannize over their conſcience by their ſuperſtitious doctrines, *Fox.pag.*1077.

Lambert ſaith, that there can bee no reaſonable cauſe to withhold the Scriptures from the people, being the food of their ſoules, eſpecially when they deſire it, no more than bodily food ought to bee kept from thoſe that hunger after it, *pag.*1116.*col.*1.

Bleſſed Bradford ſaith, that it was plaine robberie to take from the people the Engliſh ſervice: to whom one Willerton replyed, that the people ought to learne at the Prieſts hands: to whom he anſwered, then will you bring the people to crucifie Chriſt againe, and let Barrabas goe, if all muſt be learned at the Prieſts hands, for ſo the Prieſts then perſwaded the people, *pag.*1612.

*Argum.*5. We have the practice of the Church of God in times paſt for our warrant: for in Chryſoſtomes time the people had vulgar tranſlations: whereupon he exhorteth them to get them Bibles, or at the leaſt the new Teſtament, the Acts of the Apoſtles, the Goſpels, *Homil.*9.Epiſt.ad Coloſſ. And he is held to have tranſlated the Scriptures into the Armenian tongue, Hierome into the Dalmatike, Vlphilas into the Gothike, Methodius into the Sclavonian language. And here ſo many hundred yeeres agoe in England King Alured tranſlated the Pſalter: a copie whereof was found in Crowland Abbey, called S. Guthlakes Pſalter, as Maſter Lambert witneſſeth: and Bede our learned country-man tranſlated

S. Iohns Goſpell, Fox pag. 1115. col. 2. The Rhemiſts alſo confeſſe that more than 300. yeeres agoe the Italians had the Bible tranſlated, and the Frenchmen above 200. yeeres agoe, Præfat. in Teſtam 4. ſect. Why ſhould not the people of God have the ſame liberty now freely to reade the Scriptures, as they have had in times paſt?

Bellarmine anſwereth, that he denieth not, but that the Scriptures were in times paſt extant in the vulgar tongue, yet not univerſally to all, but to ſuch as might profit by reading of them. Our Rhemiſts alſo ſay, that Chryſoſtome, when he exhorted the people to reading of Scripture, ſpake as a Pulpit man, not as giving a rule in ſchooles, præfat. in Teſtam. ſect. 14. And Bellarm. addeth, that it was not his meaning that they ſhould all reade Scripture, but ſuch as might doe it ſafely, lib. 2. c. 16. reſponſ. ad argum. 7.

Anſwer. Firſt, ſeeing in times paſt, great and populous nations had the Scriptures tranſlated, as the Armenians, Sclavonians, into their vulgar tongue, how is it like that any man was forbidden the reading of them? As we doe prove unto them, that theſe nations had the Scriptures in their owne tongue, ſo if they can ſhew us any prohibition to have beene made in thoſe countries, to bar any from reading of Scripture (which they are never able to doe) they ſhould ſay ſomewhat. 2. That Chryſoſtomes meaning was, that all men ſhould be exerciſed in reading of Scripture, it doth eaſily appeare: for he ſo exhorteth in his Sermons, unto the which all the people, of all conditions reſorted, therefore he ſpake to all: yea, he would have boyes and children to reade Scripture. And though Chryſoſtome were now in the Pulpit, what of that? He would not (I thinke) ſay one thing in the Pulpit, and another thing in ſchooles: he would not ſpeake otherwiſe than he thought; or make the Pulpit a place to utter lies in. 3. Whereas Chriſt giveth libertie to all to ſearch Scripture, yea commandeth them ſo to doe, with what authoritie can they reſtraine this libertie? And if every man muſt be readie to render a reaſon of his faith and hope, 1 Pet. 3. 15. then every man ought to ſtudie the Scriptures, thereby to learne to give account of his faith. What profiteth it a man to have meat, and not to eat it; apparell, and not to weare it? ſo what good doth it to have Scriptures, and not to reade them?

1 Pet. 3. 15.

4 But Azarius the Jeſuit hath another anſwer: he confeſſeth that the Greeke and Latin tongue were then generally knowne, when the Scriptures were firſt tranſlated into them, and then the people might ſafely bee admitted to the reading of Scripture, which they cannot doe now not underſtanding theſe tongues: to this purpoſe this Judaſited Rabbin. But he hath ſaid nothing to the purpoſe: true it is, that the people reading the Scripture in a tongue which they know not, cannot profit by it: why then ſhould not the Scripture bee now converted into the vulgar tongue which the people may underſtand, as was uſed in former times: as the Armenians, Sclavonians, Gothes had the Scriptures tranſlated: yea, Theodoret ſaith, that libri Hebraici converſi erant in omnes linguas; The Hebrew books were turned into all languages, which are uſed to this day.

Azar. inſtitut. Moral. par. 1. lib. 8. c. 26.

Theodoret ſerm. 5. de Græcor. affect.

Let us heare Auguſtines opinion; Lectiones divinas (ſaith he) & in Eccleſia, ſicut conſueſtis, audite, & in domib. veſtris relegite: I would have you both to attend unto the publike readings in the Church, and in your houſe to reade over againe the holy leſſons: but how could the people reade them at home, if they were not in their vulgar tongue?

But Auguſtine was but one man, heare then the conſent of whole councels. Turon. ſub Carolo, can. 17. Homilias Epiſcopus transferre ſtudiat in rusticam Romanam linguam, aut Theotiſcam, quo facilius cuncti poſſint intelligere quæ dicuntur: The Biſhop muſt have a care to tranſlate the Homilies into the Countrey Latine or vulgar tongue, that all men may the better underſtand what is ſaid. If it bee anſwered, that Sermons and Homilies may be read and preached in the vulgar, but not the Scriptures; we oppoſe another decree. In eccleſiis parochialib. per ſingulos dies dominicos presbyteri clara voce ac intelligibili ac verbis maternis annuncient 10. præcepta decalogi, & articulos fidei; In the Pariſh Churches every Lords day, let the Presbyters declare with a loud and intelligible voice, and in the mother tongue, the ten commandements, and articles of the faith: ſynod. Senovenſ. decret. morum 11. And it was alſo decreed, ſynod. Auguſten. cap. 25. That the Angels ſalutation, and the Lords prayer ſhould be ſaid in the vulgar tongue. Thus wee ſee that thoſe Popiſh Prelates that lived 40. or 50. yeeres agoe, were not altogether ſo Popiſh and unreaſonable, as our Romaniſts in theſe dayes are. I will alſo oppoſe againſt them their owne Maſter of Sentences, who preſcribing the office and dutie of a lector, thus ſaith, Vim accentuum ſciat, diſtincte legat, ne intellectum auditoribus auferat, &c. Let him know the accents, and read diſtinctly, that he hinder not the underſtanding of the hearers: let him marke what muſt be read indicatively, what with an interrogation, and keepe his diſtinctions; which if hee doe not, he troubleth the peoples underſtanding, and moveth other to laughter: Mag. lib. 4. diſ. 24. d. But what need theſe precepts of obſerving the accents, and keeping diſtinctions, where no man underſtandeth what is read: or what need they feare the hindring of the peoples underſtanding, where nothing is underſtood? Wherefore it appeareth by this, that it ſtandeth with their Maſters minde, to have the Scriptures read in the vulgar tongue. But here the Reader is further to bee advertiſed of two other points wherein the Romiſh tranſlaters faile, in their vulgar editions of the Scripture, both in obſcure and corrupt tranſlating.

Anno 1548.

Firſt, they doe retaine many obſcure termes and words in their tranſlations: as the Rhemiſts uſe theſe and ſuch like: as Archiſynagogue, Azymes, charactro, Didrachme, Euro-aquilo, exinanited, Neophyte, paraclete, paraſceve, repropitiate, reſuſcitate; For, chiefe of the ſynagogue, unleavened bread, a marke, tribute money, a North-Eaſt winde, abaſed, a young ſcholler, the comforter, the preparation, make reconciliation, raiſe up, &c. The Doway wiſe men doe affect the like obſcuritie in their late tranſlation of the Bible: as they read, Rhamnus, prepuce, hoſtes, victimes, holocauſt, excelſes, bread of propoſition, and ſuch like, for the bramble, fore-skin, ſacrifices, burnt-offerings, high places: This their affected obſcuritie, they would juſtifie by theſe reaſons.

1 Becauſe many Hebrew words, as Amen, Alleluia, are retained both in the Greeke and Latine untranſlated.

2 The words tranſlated may miſſe of the ſenſe of the holy Ghoſt.

3 The words of Scripture are more ſacred.

4 Proteſtants themſelves leave many words untranſlated, as Penticoſt, Ephod, Proſelyte, Sabbath.

5 Theſe words may in ſhort time grow familiar, which at the firſt ſeeme ſtrange. To this purpoſe, they of Rhemes in their preface to the new Teſtament, and they of Doway ſeconding them, in their preface to the Bible.

Contra. 1. Thoſe Hebrew words which the Apoſtles retained in the new Teſtament, by the direction of the ſpirit, wee alſo retaine in our Engliſh tranſlations, having therein the practice of the Apoſtles for our warrant: for they may as well bee kept untranſlated in one tongue as in another: but for the uſing of other words untranſlated, there is not the like warrant, and therefore not the like reaſon.

2 They pretend ſinceritie, in not tranſlating ſome words, but in deed they affect obſcuritie: as the ſenſe of the holy Ghoſt is kept but in the tranſlation of other words, ſo why not in theſe? and if the Latine expreſſe the Hebrew in fit words, why may not other tongues alſo finde out fit words to ſignifie the ſame?

3 The words of the originall, are not more ſacred in themſelves, but to them that underſtand them, and in reſpect of God, the ſanctifier of that tongue, and conſecrator thereof for his divine oracles: the Latine words are no more Scripture words, than the words of the Engliſh, or any other tranſlation.

4 Thoſe words which cannot well be tranſlated, the Proteſtants keepe ſtill: the ſame reaſon is not, of thoſe words, which may fitly be tranſlated and interpreted, as their obſcure termes may.

5 So may all the words of Scripture, though not tranſlated, in time grow familiar to them that will learne the tongue: but who ſeeth not, that it would be a great eaſe to the people, to have as many words tranſlated to their underſtanding, as may bee? for otherwiſe it would be a double labour, firſt to ſearch for the meaning of the word, and then for the ſenſe of the place.

Secondly, they tranſlate as obſcurely and darkly, ſo corruptly and untruly; wherein they challenge our tranſlations, but unjuſtly: their accuſation herein ſhall bee returned upon their owne heads: but firſt let us take a view of the places which they object in our tranſlations.

1 1. Iohn 3.8. Wee (ſay the Rhemiſts) tranſlate The ſpirit breatheth, leaving it indifferent to ſignifie holy Ghoſt, or wind, the Proteſtants tranſlate wind. 1.Iohn.3.8.

2 Luke 8. They were filled. The Proteſtants adde of their owne, with water. Luk.8.23.

3 *Luk.*22. This chalice, the new Teſtament: not is the new Teſtament, as the Proteſtants. Luk 22,20.

4 Marke 13.19. Thoſe dayes ſhall be ſuch tribulation: not in thoſe dayes. Mark.13.19.

5 Iames 4.6. And giveth greater grace, &c. not the Scripture giveth greater grace, wee leave it indifferent, the Scripture or the holy Ghoſt, both going before. Iam.4.6.

6 We reade, a woman a ſiſter, 1.*Cor.*9.5. not a wife a ſiſter. 1.Cor.9.5.

7 *Hell of fire, Matth.*5.19. not hell fire, as the Proteſtants.

8 *Luk.*2.15 Let us ſee this word that is done, not this thing, &c. Thus the Rhemiſts object in their preface to the new Teſtament. Luk.2.15.

9 The Doway men doe object theſe places in their preface likewiſe, Gen. 4.15. the laſt thereof ſhall bee under thee; Whereas the Proteſtants applying it to Abels ſubjection to Cain, read thus, Unto thee his deſire, &c. Gen.4.15.

10 *Geneſ.*14.18. For he was a Prieſt, &c. Proteſtants read, and he was, &c. Whereas in other places, they tranſlate the Hebrew particle Vau, for. Gen.14.18.

11 *Geneſ.*31.19. For Idols, Proteſtants tranſlate images. Gen.31.19.

Contra 1. The word ſignifieth ſpirit, but thereby the wind is underſtood, becauſe mention is made of the ſound thereof, and it is ſo tranſlated, to take away all ambiguitie: becauſe it followeth, ſo is every one that is borne of the ſpirit, that is, of the holy Ghoſt,

2 *Matth.*8.24. It is ſaid, The ſhip was covered with waves: That word is inſerted then, by warrant of that place, for the better explanation.

3 The word is, is inſerted by S. Pauls warrant, who ſo readeth, 1.*Cor.*11.25.

4 The meaning is, that in thoſe dayes ſhall be great tribulation: as *Matth.*24.21. Then ſhall there bee, &c. We expreſſe the Hebraiſme after our Engliſh phraſe: but if they will bee ſo ſtrict to keepe the very words, why doe they put in tales, ſuch tribulations which is not in the text.

5 The word Scripture is inſerted in another character: the ſpirit cannot be underſtood, which was before mentioned: The ſpirit luſteth after envie. That ſpirit cannot be ſaid to give greater grace.

6 It were ſuperfluous and idle, to read a ſiſter a woman, for the word ſiſter implieth a woman: therefore they invert the order of the words, reading a woman a ſiſter: the Syriake Interpreter readeth as we doe, a ſiſter a wife.

7 Wee, in tranſlating hell fire, for hell of fire, doe therein expreſſe the common ſenſe of the phraſe,

Deut.33.2. as it may be beſt underſtood: the hebraiſme doth not ſo well fit our Engliſh phraſe: the like libertie they tooke themſelves in reading, Deut.33. 2. a fierie law, as if the words in the originall were a law of fire: whereas they are, eſh dath, a fire of a law, as if wee ſhould ſay, a law-making fire.

Geneſ.18.14. 8 The Hebrew word דבר dabbar, ſignifieth indifferently a word, or a thing done: as it is uſed, Gen. 18. 14. is there any word hard to God: yet they there read, is there any thing, which is the meaning: and ſo is it taken heere, as the participle γεγονος done, joyned unto it ſheweth.

Geneſ.3.16. 9 The vulgar reading in the Latine, is very faulty. 1. The Hebrew prepoſition el, doth not ſignifie under, but towards: as the Septuagint reade πρὸς σὲ, to or toward thee: how can the deſire of ſinne be ſaid to bee toward one. 2. The affix is of the maſculine, his deſire, whereas the word Chatath ſinne is of the feminine: it hath not then relation to ſinne. 3. In this ſenſe, it ſhould bee in a wicked mans power, ſuch as Cain was, to have dominion over ſinne. 4. In the ſame phraſe, chap. 3. 16. the ſubjection of the woman toward her husband is expreſſed: thy deſire ſhall bee turned, &c. And ſo here it is moſt fitly referred to Abels ſubjection to Cain, as the elder brother, not to the ſubjection of ſinne, which is improperly ſaid to have a deſire.

10 Though ſometime the Hebrew particle vau, bee tranſlated for, it followeth not it ſhould bee ſo every where: the Septuagint doe not tranſlate it, for hee was, but expreſſe it by the particle δὲ erat autem, but he was, not erat enim, for he was: and Vatablus their owne interpreter readeth, & erat, and he was, ſo alſo Pagnin and Montanus.

1.Sam.19.13. 11 Why may not teraphim in that place bee as well tranſlated images, as they themſelves thinke it may bee ſo Engliſhed, 1 Sam.19.13. where it is ſaid, Michal tooke a ſtatua or image, and put it on upon the bed, &c.

Now on the other ſide, let us take a view of their goodly tranſlations: it would fill a whole volume by it ſelfe, to ſet downe all their groſſe ſcapes, and corruptions herein: but theſe for example ſake ſhall ſuffice.

Geneſ.3.15. 1 Geneſ. 3. 15. They read according to the vulgar Latine, ſhee ſhall bruſe thy head, whereas in the Hebrew, it is put in the neuter, ipſum, it ſhall breake, &c. And ſo read Montanus, Pagnin, Vatablus: the Septuagint reade in the maſculine, he ſhall breake, &c. that is, Chriſt.

Geneſ.4.13. 2 *Geneſ.*4.13. My ſinne is greater than I may deſerve pardon: whereas there is not a ſyllable in the Hebrew, that ſignifieth to merit or deſerve: neither doe the ſeptuagint, or any other interpreter ſo tranſlate.

Geneſ.6.4. 3 Geneſ. 6. 4. All the cogitations of their heart was bent to evill: for, all the imagination of the thoughts of their heart, are onely evill: which is more than inclined or bent to evill: which tranſlation extennuateth originall ſinne.

2.Sam.21.19. 4 2 *Sam.*21.19. Adeodatus the ſonne of the forreſt, a broderer: for, Eſhanan the ſonne of Iaare-oregim: as Montanus, Pagnin, Vatablus, their owne tranſlaters reade according to the Hebrew: Iunius alſo and our Engliſh.

1.Chron.2.55. 5 1.*Chron.*2.55. Theſe are the Cinites which came of the heat of the father of the houſe of Rechab: without any ſenſe, for, which came of Hamath the father, &c. as the Septuagint, Montanus, Pagnin, Vatablus reade: Iun. Eng.

1.Chron.4.22. 6 1.*Chron.*4.22. And hee that made the ſunne to ſtand, and the man of lying, ſecure and burning, which were Princes in Moab; for, and Iokim, and the men of Chozeba, and Ioaſh and Saraph, which had the dominion in Moab: as the Septuagint, Montanus, Pagnin. Vatab. Iun. Eng.

1.Chron.7.18. 7 1.*Chron.*7.18. And his ſiſter Queene bare Goodliman: it is not like that Gilead had a Queene to his ſiſter: for, and his ſiſter Molocheth bare Iſhod. Sept. Montan. Pagnin. Vatab. Iun. Eng.

Iob 1.5. 8 Iob 1.5. Leſt my ſonnes have ſinned, and bleſſed God in their hearts: as though it were a ſinne to bleſſe God: though the Hebrew word ſignifie both to bleſſe and curſe: yet neither the Latine nor Engliſh word will beare it. The Septuagint doe read, leſt they have thought evill in their hearts: ſo alſo Vatablus, leſt they have curſed. Montanus.

If their vulgar tranſlation be ſo full of corruptions in this one booke of Iob, we may eaſily gueſſe how corrupt the whole is.

Let us ſee the judgement and practice of other Churches, concerning vulgar tranſlations of Scripture.

1. The Eaſt Church have the Scriptures read in the vulgar tongue, or ſuch a language, as is underſtood of all: the [a] Prieſts in Armenia read the Goſpell in the Armenian tongue, which every one underſtandeth: ſo likewiſe teſtifieth [b] Villamont, that the Armenians, though they can ſpeake divers languages, yet they uſe the Armenian tongue in divine ſervice, which is underſtood both of men and women : [c] Thevet writeth of the Muſcovites, that the Prieſts every Sunday read the Goſpell and the Epiſtles of the Apoſtles in a language that they underſtand.

[a] Belon.lib.3. cap.12.
[b] Lib.2. cap.23.
[c] Coſmogr.lib. 9.cap.12.

2 So alſo the South Church have the Scriptures read in the [d] Tigique, that is the Abiſſine language, the firſt country that received the doctrine of the Goſpell : The [e] Abiſſine language commeth neare the Arabicke : and is generally underſtood.

[d] Thevet. Coſmogr.lib. 2.cap.14.
[e] Alvar.lib. 2.cap.ultim.

3 The ſame is the generall practice of the reformed Churches of the Weſt, the confeſſion of Bohemia, cap.2. The Scripture is rehearſed to the hearers in the common and mother tongue which all underſtand : confeſſion of Auſpurge. This is not only commanded by S. Paul to uſe a tongue that the people underſtand, but mans law alſo hath appointed it. And herein it is well knowne, that all other reformed Churches concurre with the reſt.

4 Wee want not alſo here the teſtimony of ſome of the Latine Church, Eſpenceus, a learned Popiſh Biſhop : Iudæi filios ſuos quinquennes ad ſacra biblia adaptabant, &c. The Jewes did fit and apply their children at five yeeres of age to the ſacred Bible, and they did attribute the chiefe place in the inſtructing of children to the Scriptures, where they began, &c. Pudeat igitur Chriſtianos, &c. Let it bee a ſhame for Chriſtians to ſhake off this care, &c. So Agrippa, Ioſua legit omnia verba legis, &c. Ioſua read all the words of the Law, before a multitude of men, women and children : and Chryſoſtome would have the wives with their husbands to diſpute and conferre thereof. Adde hereunto the teſtimony of Lorinus the Jeſuite : The more noble of Theſſalonica were women, and men not a few. Act. 17. 11. Who in examining the volume of the Scriptures, did that which Chriſt had moved the Iewes to doe, to ſearch the Scriptures, which is as Chryſoſtome, and Euthymius doe obſerve, not ſimply to read, but throughly to ſift and diſcuſſe them.

An Appendix or part of the queſtion, concerning publike prayers and divine ſervice in the vulgar tongue.

The Papiſts.

4.Error. IT was decreed in the Tridentine Councell, that the ſervice of the Church which they call the Maſſe, ſhould not be celebrated in the vulgar tongue, *ſeſſ.22. cap.*8. And it is the common practice every where of the Romiſh Church to uſe the Latine tongue onely. We muſt be content (ſay they) with thoſe three tongues which God honoured upon the croſſe: namely, the Hebrew, Greek, and Latine. This libertie onely they grant, that their prieſt may expound ſome things, as hee readeth, and ſhew the meaning to the people,

Argum.*1. Thus they argue: The majeſtie and gravitie of the ſacred buſineſſe, doe require alſo to be uttered in a ſage, ſanctified and grave language: Ergo not in the vulgar. *Bellar.lib.2.cap.*15.*argum.*7. Wee anſwer, the gravitie, reverence and holineſſe conſiſteth not in words, phraſes, and ſounds, though never ſo eloquent, but in the things themſelves. Neither is any tongue that is underſtood, before the Lord counted barbarous: for S. Paul ſaith, that hee is a barbarian, and ſpeaketh barbarouſly in the Church, that cannot bee underſtood, 1 Cor. 14.11. And Acts 2.11. the very ſtrangers and barbarians heard the Apoſtles utter in their languages the wonderfull things of God: they thought the tongue no diſgrace to thoſe holy myſteries they uttered.

Pope Nicholas 1. Epiſt.ad Michaelem Imperator. Conſtantinop. writeth thus of this matter, the Emperour in a certaine Epiſtle to the Pope had termed the Latine tongue barbarous: whom hee anſwereth thus: Omnis operis derogatio, redundat od opificis injuriam: ô furorem, qui nec lingua novit parcere quam Deus fecit: in eo ipſo, quo verum Deum colit lingua Latina, quantum barbaram, vel Scythicam linguam antecedit, agnoſcitur: The diſgracing of the worke, tendeth to the injurie of the worker: What madneſſe is this, not to ſpare that tongue which God hath made? and herein, how farre the Latine tongue exceedeth the Barbarians and Scythians language, it is ſeene, becauſe it worſhippeth the true God. By theſe two reaſons, wherby hee proveth the Latine tongue not to be barbarous, wee likewiſe affirme neither the Engliſh tongue, nor any other vulgar language of Chriſtians to bee barbarous: both becauſe they are the gifts and workes of God, and becauſe the true God is by thoſe vulgar tongues acknowledged and worſhipped.

Bellarm. lib.2. de verb.c.16. reſ.ad arg.2. Argum.*2. Levit. 16. *verſ.*17. The people is commanded to ſtand without, till the Prieſt went in and made attonement for them: they underſtood not the prieſt, for they heard him not: Ergo it is not neceſſarie the people ſhould underſtand the Miniſter. Wee anſwer: Firſt, that was a type of our Saviour Chriſt, who even ſo aſcended into heaven, as the high Prieſt did into the holy place: but types and figures prove nothing, ſaving wherin they are types, and whereunto they are deſtined, and appointed. Secondly, they underſtood not the Prieſt, becauſe they heard him not: but they cannot prove that the Prieſt uttered any thing in their hearing at any time, which they underſtood not.

Rhemiſt.annot.1.Cor.c.14. ſect.14. Argum.*3. Wee muſt onely uſe thoſe tongues in holy affaires, which were ſanctified in the croſſe: that is, Hebrew, Greek, and Latine. Wee anſwer: Thoſe tongues were not then uſed for any ſuch purpoſe, but that the death of Chriſt might by thoſe common and univerſall tongues bee the further ſpread abroad. And ſurely if they would prove that theſe tongues were hereby ſanctified, mee thinkes Pilate was no fit inſtrument of that ſanctification, by whoſe appointment the title was written: why then are not all tongues as well ſanctified, wherein the holy Ghoſt ſpake, as theſe which were written by Pilate? Thirdly, doth not the Apoſtle ſay, that every tongue ſhall confeſſe that Jeſus Chriſt is the Lord, &c. 2. *Philip.*11. Seeing God hath ſanctified every tongue and language for the confeſſion of the faith, how dare you goe againſt Gods ordinance? Laſtly, if thoſe three tongues onely were conſecrated upon the croſſe, why did Pope Nicholas the 1. when he had decreed that ſervice ſhould bee ſaid in the Latine tongue, yet diſpenſed with the Sclavonians and Polonians, to have it in their owne vulgar tongue?

The Proteſtants.

WE doe affirme, that as it hath beene the commendable uſe of all ancient Churches, to have the ſervice in the vulgar tongue, that the people might underſtand, and bee better ſtirred up to devotion: ſo the ſame godly uſe ought for ever to remaine and be retained in the Church of God.

1.Cor.14.16. Argum.*1. This is moſt agreeable to S.Pauls doctrine, 1.*Cor.*14. *verſ.*26. who would have all things done to edifying: but by an unknowne tongue no man is edified: and hee ſaith, hee had rather ſpeake five words to bee underſtood, than ten thouſand otherwiſe. Some of the Papiſts ſay, that Saint Paul ſpeaketh of preaching eſpecially, and but obiter of praying: ſo B. Brookes, Fox pag. 1879. But in the 14. verſ. hee ſpeaketh namely of prayer, and in the 16. of the peoples ſaying Amen, which was not given at ſermons, but in the end of prayers: this is but a weake anſwer. The Rhemiſts and the Jeſuite ſay, hee meaneth certaine extraordinarie Hymnes and giving of thankes, whereof S.Paul ſpeaketh *Epheſ.*5.19. Anſw. S.Paul ſpeaketh generally of all publike exerciſe in the Church, whether of prayer, preaching, ſinging, that it ſhould all bee done in a knowne tongue: for hee uſeth the generall termes of ſpeaking, τοῦ λαλεῖν, and of the voyce, as *verſ.*11. If I underſtand not the power of the voyce (hee ſaith not of the ſong or preaching) I ſhall be to him that ſpeaketh, a barbarian : ſo he miſliketh not onely preaching, or ſinging, but any kinde of ſpeaking in the Church in a ſtrange tongue. And againe, S. Pauls reaſon is generall againſt all exerciſes in the Church ordinarie or extraordinarie in an unknowne tongue, becauſe he would have all things referred to the edification of the Church. Bellarmine againe thus anwereth, that the reaſon is not alike, for theſe extraordinarie ſongs and prayers, which were uſed in thoſe times, and for the ordinarie ſervice : for the end of thoſe ſongs, was the inſtruction and conſolaion of the people : but that is not the end of our ordinarie prayers, but the ſervice and worſhip of God: Bellarm.cap. 16.ad object.1. Anſw. How is not the Jeſuite aſhamed thus to contradict the Apoſtle, who ſaith directly that the Scriptures are written for our comfort and conſolation, Rom. 15.4. yet he ſaith the end of reading the Scriptures in the divine office is not for conſolation. Secondly, as though the worſhip or ſervice of God, can be ſevered from the inſtruction and conſolation of the people: or can God be rightly worſhipped by that, which giveth no inſtruction to the worſhipper? Thus would the Jeſuite bring in again, a Samaritane ſervice or worſhip : for they (as our Saviour ſaith) worſhip they know not what, and ſo doe the Papiſts : but we, ſaith hee, all true worſhippers, worſhip that we know, John 4.22. and conſequently we know that wee worſhip. This place of Saint Paul is too evident and plaine, than that it may bee ſo eaſily wreſted and depraved by their hereticall and deceitfull gloſſes.

Out of this place of the Apoſtle, which maketh ſo directly againſt prayer in a ſtrange tongue, theſe arguments may be gathered. Firſt, no language not underſtood ought to be uſed in the Church, becauſe it edifieth not, and they ſhould ſpeake in the aire, that is, vainly, to no purpoſe, verſ.9. Ergo, ſervice in the Latine tongue is unprofitable where it is not underſtood. So ſaith S. Ambroſe : Si ad adificandam eccleſiam convenitis, ea debent dici qua intelligunt audientes : If you come together to edifie the Church, thoſe things muſt bee ſpoken which may be underſtood. Secondly, he that ſpeaketh with a ſtrange tongue, muſt keepe ſilence if there be no interpreter, verſ.28. Ergo, Latine ſervice muſt bee abandoned, unleſſe they will interpret it, which were a loſt labour, ſeeing they may have it as well in Engliſh. Againe, S. Ambroſe : Tacere debet in eccleſia, qui lingua loquitur, quam ſolus ſcit : He muſt hold his peace in the Church, which ſpeaketh with a tongue, which he onely underſtandeth. Thirdly, he that ſpeaketh in a ſtrange tongue is as a Barbarian, or an alien to the hearer that underſtandeth not, *verſ.*11. but it were abſurd, that the Miniſter of the word or Sacraments ſhould be an alien to the people. Ergo: ſo S. Ambroſe : Non competit fidelibus audire linguas, quas non intelligunt, ſed infidelibus, qui non ſunt digni intelligere : It is not meet for beleevers to heare thoſe tongues, which they underſtand not, but for unbeleevers, who are not worthie to underſtand. Fourthly, no prayer or giving of thankes ought to be uſed in the Church, unto the which the people cannot ſay Amen, verſ.16. but they cannot ſay Amen to Latine prayers, becauſe they know them not. Ergo. Fifthly, if it were not lawfull to uſe the miraculous gift of tongues, ſuch as this was in the Apoſtles time, without interpretation : much leſſe is the Latine to be uſed, which may be pronounced and read without a miracle, *Argum. Proteſtant. diſput, Weſtmonaſt.pag.*21.20.apud Fox.

In 14. 1.ad Cor.

*Argum.*2. Who ſeeth not that prayers made with the underſtanding are more comfortable and fruitfull : the other nothing to profit at all, nor yet to be availeable before God? Howſoever our adverſaries ſay, that the heart and affection may pray, though the underſtanding pray not, yet Saint Paul ſaith, they ſpeake in the aire : their prayer is but winde, 1.*Cor.*14.9. and mine underſtanding (ſaith the Apoſtle) is without fruit, verſ. 14. Therefore not amiſſe did that godly Martyr M. Wiſchart compare the ridiculous geſtures of the Prieſt at Maſſe, being not underſtood of the people, to the playing of an Ape: Fox pag.1156.col.1. And one John Riburne was unjuſtly troubled of Longland Biſhop of Lincolne anno 1530. for ſaying, if wee had our Pater noſter in Engliſh, one ſhould ſay it nine times, againſt once now : Fox pag. 898.col.1. And was not that ghoſtly and Biſhoplike counſell thinke you of the Biſhop of Cavaillon to the Merindolians in France? that it was ſufficient to know their Pater noſter, and Creed in Latine : it was not neceſſarie to ſalvation to underſtand or expound the articles of faith : for there were many Biſhops, Curats, yea Doctors of Divinitie, whom it would trouble to expound the Creed or Pater noſter. Fox Martyrolog. pag.866.col.1.

Fox pag 1156. col.1. of the laſt edition, anno 16.0.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that a prayer in an unknowne tongue may be profitable, if there bee the intention of the heart, for the prayer is made unto God, and it is ſufficient if he underſtand it : wee ſee alſo, that they which are abſent, who neither heare, nor underſtand our prayers, yet may be profited by them : neither is the inſtruction or edification of the people any end of prayer, but it is a part of ſervice that belongeth unto God : Bellarm.cap.16.reſ. ad 2.& 4.object. Againe, ſaith he, the Apoſtle doth not ſay that his prayer is without fruit, but onely his minde or underſtanding, but his ſpirit and affection is profited : for he ſaith, thou verily giveſt thanks well : and the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of ſuch a tongue as none doe underſtand in the Church ; but the Latine, though the common people underſtand it not, yet many that know the language doe.

Anſw. The heart cannot bee neere unto God without faith, whatſoever intention it hath ; but faith is joyned with knowledge : he then that praieth, he knoweth not what, can have no faith or hope of thoſe things which hee knoweth not. And if it were ſufficient, that God underſtood our praier, then need not the praier to be uttered by the voice, becauſe God knoweth the thoughts of the heart. Secondly, they which are abſent underſtand not the praiers made for them, becauſe they know them not: and they are prayed for, they pray not: but the people is preſent, within hearing of the voyce, and they all offer up one prayer, therefore they ought to underſtand it. Thirdly, it is an abſurd anſwer, that publike reading is not for the peoples inſtruction: it hath no nſe nor end, in reſpect of God, who need not to receive any information, or to have his memorie renued by reading of ſtories: wherfore it is either in vaine, or elſe the end thereof is the peoples inſtruction. And if prayer bee a part of Gods worſhip, which muſt proceed from the love of God, and God is to be loved with all our heart, our ſoule and minde, *Matth.*22.37. then our prayers muſt not bee made with a bare intention onely, but with knowledge and underſtanding: for God requireth both the heart, the minde and the ſoule. Further, where the Apoſtle ſaith, My ſpirit prayeth, but my minde is without fruit, hee doth not ſo ſpeake, as though the ſpirit (that is, the affection) could pray without the underſtanding: but by the ſpirit is nnderſtood the ſpirituall gift of ſpeaking with tongues, as Hierome, Sedulius, Primaſius expound this place, as they are cited by Eſpenſaus: de Chriſt. Mediator. pag. 234.g. So that the meaning is this, he for his owne part, that hath the gift of tongues, prayeth or giveth thanks well, knowing and underſtanding what he prayeth; but the underſtanding of other, that heare, is not edified. Fifthly, therefore the Apoſtle miſliking that any ſhould ſo pray, not being underſtood of others, I will pray with the ſpirit, and I will pray with the underſtanding alſo, *verſ.*15. And that the affection cannot be good in prayer without the underſtanding, and that ſuch prayer is without fruit, Saint Ambroſe expounding this place, ſaith: Quem fructum habere poteſt, qui ignorat qua loquatur? What fruit can he have, who knoweth not what hee ſpeaketh? Sixthly, neither were theſe ſtrange tongues underſtood of none in the Church, for there was alſo the gift of interpretation, as well as the gift of tongues, *verſ.*27. and yet many times your Latine ſervice is underſtood of none in the Church, no not of the Prieſt that ſaith it: as may appeare by that Prieſt that ſpake falſe Latine, when he baptized, ſaying: In nomine patria, filia, & ſpirita ſancta: Which baptiſme was called into queſtion: and for better reſolution, they were faine to poſt up to Rome to Pope Zacharie, who after much conſultation determined that notwithſtanding the falſe Latine, the baptiſme was good: *Decret. par.*3.diſtinct. 4.*cap.*86. And that many Popiſh Prieſts are no better Clerkes now adaies, than they were in thoſe times; let us heare what Eraſmus ſaith: Quanquam ſacerdotum vulgus hodie magni faciat ſua verba, qua nec ipſi qui ſonant intelligunt: Though now adayes the moſt ſort of Prieſts doe ſo magnifie their Latine words, which they underſtand not, that ſpeake them: *Prafat. in Hieron. epiſt. Paulino. tom.*4.

Argum. 3. In the time of the Law, all things pertaining to their publike prayer, benedictions, thankſgivings, ſacrifices, were celebrated in their vulgar tongue, 2 *Chron. chap.*29. Ezechias commanded the Levites to praiſe God with the Pſalmes of David and Aſaph, which no doubt were in the Hebrew tongue: If they did ſo in the ſhadowes of the Law, much more ought we now, who, as our Saviour ſaith, ought to pray, ſpiritu & veritate, in ſpirit and truth. Argum. Proteſtant. diſput. Weſtmonaſt.

We will conclude with Auguſtine: Quare dicta ſunt, niſi ut ſciantur? quare ſonuerunt, niſi ut audiantur? quare audita ſunt, niſi ut intelligantur? Tract. in Iohan. 21. Why are things ſpoken in the Church (ſaith he) but to be knowne? why are they pronounced, but to be heard? why are they heard, but to be underſtood? Ergo, Leſſons, and Scriptures, and pnblike prayers muſt bee uſed in a knowne tongue, and eaſie to be underſtood.

It was thus alſo decreed not long ſince in a Generall Councell: *Concil. Lateranenſ. ſub Innocent.*3. *cap.*9. Quoniam in pleriſq́; partibus intra eandem civitatem permixti ſunt populi diverſarum linguarum, diſtricte pracipimus, ut pontifices hujuſmodi civitatum, provideant viros idoneos, qui ſecundum diverſitates rituum & linguarum divina officia illis celebrent, & eccleſiaſtica ſacramenta miniſtrent: Becauſe in many places, in one and the ſame Citie there be mixed together people of divers languages, we doe ſtraightly charge the Biſhops of thoſe Cities to provide able men, to celebrate divine ſervice, and miniſter the Sacraments of the Church unto them, according to the diverſitie of their rites and languages, &c. What could be ſaid plainer, for the celebrating of divine ſervice in the vulg a rtongue? Bellarmine thus would anſwer this authoritie, that Innocentius decree is to bee underſtood onely of the Greeke and Latine tongues, and of no other; and that he would have the ſervice of the Church celebrated in theſe two tongues and no other. Anſw. 1. This appeareth to bee a weake anſwer, for the decree maketh mention of people, diverſarum linguarum, of divers languages; and therefore he would have the divine office celebrated according to the diverſitie of their tongues. But divers tongues imply not a dualtie onely of two, but a pluralitie of many. 2. This Canon provideth, that ſervice ſhall bee ſaid in divers languages, becauſe of the diverſitie of the people: but what need this proviſion, if that the underſtanding of the people ſhould not be reſpected? for otherwiſe one language might ſerve divers people. 3. A little before, if the Jeſuite be remembred, hee ſaid, that many hundred yeeres agoe, long before Innocentius time, neither the Greeke in Grecia, nor the Latine in Italy were the vulgar tongues, nor commonly underſtood, *chap.*15. and yet now he granteth, that Innocentius would have Greeke and Latine Service, becauſe of the diverſitie of the people; that is, to their nnderſtanding: ſo Bellarmine neither agreeth with himſelfe, nor with their owne Canons.

Laſtly, in defence of this truth, that prayers ought to be uſed in the vulgar tongue, Iohn Ardelie, and Iohn Simſon gave their lives. Fox pag. 1438. *col.*1. and Iohn Hallingdale, pag. 1837. *col.*2. Wee will adjoyne here the teſtimonie of other Churches. 1. The Eaſt Churches doe celebrate divine ſervice in a tongue which is underſtood of all. The Armenians in their divine Service, Maſſes, Prayers and Ceremonies uſe the Armenian tongue, which is underſtood both of men and women throughout all their Countrey. The Grecians doe celebrate the Liturgie in their owne language, to the end the common people may be able to underſtand them : what the uſe of the Muſcovites is herein, is ſhewed in the next queſtion before.

4 Yea, and ſome of the Romane Church have commended Service in the vulgar tongue as more profitable. Lyranus ſaith, if the people doe underſtand the prayer or benediction, Melius reducitur ad Deum & devotius reſpondet Amen : They are better brought unto God, and doe more devoutly anſwer Amen : ſo Cajetane, by this doctrine of the Apoſtle, is gathered, Quod melius eſt ad ædificationem eccleſiæ, &c. That it is better for the edifying of the Church, that publike prayers in hearing of the people, ſhould be ſaid in the common tongue : ſo likewiſe Faber, Maxima pars hominum, &c. The greater part of men that pray now a-dayes, I cannot tell whether in the ſpirit, they pray not certaine in the minde, for they pray in a tongue, which they underſtand not ; but Paul doth ſpecially allow, that the faithfull ſhould pray with their ſpirit and minde, that is, underſtanding, &c.

The fourth Queſtion : of the authority of the Scriptures.

The Papiſts.

THe Papiſts of former times doubted not to ſay, that the Scripture is not authenticall without the authority of the Church ; ſo Echius ſaith, ſo Pigghius, that the authority of the Scripture dependeth of the authority of the Church neceſſarily. Hermannus a Papiſt moſt impudently affirmeth, that the Scripture ſhould be of no more credit than Æſops fables, without the approbation of the Church : a foule blaſphemie. But our Papiſts of latter time, being aſhamed of their fore-fathers ignorance, they ſay that the Scriptures in themſelves are perfect, ſufficient, authenticall, but that to us it appeareth not ſo ; neither are we bound to take them for Scripture without the authority of the Church : ſo Canus, Bellarmine, Stapleton. So that (ſay they) in reſpect of us the Church hath abſolute authoritie to determine, which is Scripture, which not. Ex Whittacher. quæſt. 3. de Script.cap. 1.

Argum. 1. There is no more certaine authoritie, than of the Church : Ergo the Church muſt determine of Scripture, ſic Stapleton. We anſwer : Firſt, the majeſtie of the Scriptures themſelves is more certaine, and the inward teſtimony of the ſpirit, without the which wee cannot be perſwaded of the truth and authority of the Scripture. Secondly, if they meane by the Church, the Synagogue of Rome, it hath nothing to doe to judge of Scripture, being the ſeat of Antichriſt : neither is the authority of that Church to be credited, but rather ſuſpected and miſtruſted.

Argum. 2. There are certaine writings of the Prophets and Apoſtles, not Canonicall ; and other writings of ſome that were no Prophets, made Canonicall : Ergo the Church hath authoritie to judge of Scripture, ſic Stapleton. For the firſt, where he objecteth that there are many writings of the Prophets, as of Salomon, Nathan, Ahija, Iedo, 2 Chron. 9.29. that are loſt, and if they were extant, ſhould not be received : We anſwer : Firſt, it is not to be doubted of, but ſome part of the Canonicall Scripture is loſt. Secondly, how proveth hee that if they were extant, they were not to bee acknowledged for Scripture ?

2.Chron.9.29.

Stapleton further objecteth, that Saint Pauls Epiſtle written to the Laodiceans, whereof mention is made, *Coloſ.*4.16. was never received into the Canon. We anſwer, there is no ſuch Epiſtle mentioned in that place ſent to the Laodiceans, but from Laodicea, as it is in the Originall, which was not like to have beene of the Apoſtles writing to them, who at that time had not ſeene the Laodiceans, Coloſ. 2.1. but an Epiſtle rather written by them to the Apoſtle ; which S. Paul would have the Coloſſians read, becauſe it might containe ſomewhat, which did concerne them : that Epiſtle therefore, that carrieth S. Pauls name to the Laodiceans, is but a forged, and baſtard writing, and therefore worthily rejected out of the canon. This was the judgement alſo of a generall Councell. Nicen.2. action.6. tom.5. Inter epiſtolas divini Apoſtoli, quadam fertur ad Laodicenſes, quam patres noſtri tanquam alienam reprobarunt : Amongſt the Epiſtles of the divine Apoſtle there is one counted, bearing the name to the Laodiceans, which our fathers have rejected as a baſtard and forraine writing. Their ſentence is that this Epiſtle was fained, and never written by S. Paul.

To the ſecond, that bookes not made by Prophets are judged canonicall, as of Toby, Iudith : Wee anſwer, that theſe bookes ought not to be canonicall, neither that ever they were ſo taken, till of late it was decreed by Councels of no great antiquitie : for in the Laodicene Councell and other ancient Councels, they were deemed not to be canonicall, as hath been ſhewed before, Error 1.

Argum. 3. Certaine bookes of the new Teſtament before doubted of, as the Epiſtle to the Hebrewes, the Apocalypſe, the ſecond Epiſtle of Peter, the ſecond of Iohn, are received into authority by the Church : and other bookes, as the Goſpell of Thomas, Matthias, Andrew, Peter, were rejected by the authority of the Church. We anſwer : Firſt, we deny not but that the Church is to diſcerne betweene the true Scriptures and forged bookes : but this ſhe doth not of her owne authoritie, but following the direction of Gods ſpirit ſpeaking in thoſe writings : for the Church looking into the ſacred and divine matter of the Apoſtles writings, was moved to acknowledge them for the word of God, though of ſome they were doubted of : and finding the other to be fabulous bookes, did by the direction of the ſame ſpirit reject them. Secondly, Auguſtine and Hierome thinke that the canon of Scripture might be confirmed in the Apoſtles time, Iohn being the ſurviver of them all, who both acknowledged the true writings of the Apoſtles, and condemned the contrary. If it be ſo (the ſpirit of God in the Apoſtles having determined this queſtion already concerning the canonicall Scripture) the Church hath no authority to alter or change that decree. Concerning this matter S. Auguſtine writeth thus unto S. Hierome, epiſt. 19. Veritas divinarum ſcripturarum, &c. non à quibuſlibet, ſed ab ipſis Apoſtolis ; ac per hoc in canonicum authoritatis culmen recepta, ex omni parte verax & indubitata perſiſtit : The truth of the divine Scriptures was received into the canon of authoritie by none other but the Apoſtles themſelves, and therefore is undoubtedly true. The Apoſtles then by the ſpirit of God have ſet downe the canon of the Scriptures, which the Church is bound to receive, and beleeve : it hath no authority to make the canon of the Scriptures.

Ob. Argum. 4. The Church is more ancient than Scripture, and was before it. Ergo, it is of more authoritie than Scripture : Argum. Eckij Enchirid. & Hoſ. lib. 3. de authoritate ſcripturæ.

Sol. Anſw. 1. We grant, that the Scriptures, that is the word written, have not beene from the beginning : yet though there were a Church before the Scriptures, that is the word written, the word of God notwithſtanding was before the Church, which is the ſame now written, that was before unwritten. 2. Neither is the argument good, for alwaies that, which is more ancient, is not of greateſt authoritie : for Iohn Baptiſt, in reſpect of his office came before Chriſt, yet was not his authoritie greater.

The Proteſtants.

WE doe not deſpiſe the ſentence of the Church, as our adverſaries doe falſly charge us : nay wee doe reverence the judgement of the Church of God, and heare it with all obedience, to whom we confeſſe it belongeth. 1. As a faithfull keeper or treaſurer, carefully to preſerve and keepe the holie Scriptures from being violated or corrupted by heretikes or other enemies of Scripture. 2. According to her ſpirituall cunning, to diſcerne the Scripture from other forged and baſtard writings, as the Goldſmith doth the gold from other adulterate metall. 3. To propound and preach, and hold out the light of Gods truth to the people. 4. To interpret and expound Scripture according to the analogie of faith : Whitac. quaſt.3. cap.2. de ſcriptur. We confeſſe alſo as much, as hath beene in former times decreed by the Papiſts themſelves : Penes eccleſiam eſt diſcernendi authoritas ſcripturas veras ab adulterinis: ſic etiam poteſtatem habet interpretandi, atque adeo ex eiſdem ſcripturis eliciendi & explanandi dogmata : The Church hath power to diſcerne true Scripture from falſe, alſo to interpret the Scripture, and out of the ſame to derive and explane precepts of religion, that is to preach, &c. But the Church ought not to ſet the Lords ſtamp upon falſe coyne, as the Papiſts doe in making Apocryphall bookes canonicall. Neither doe we only beleeve the Scripture, becauſe of the Churches teſtimonie, nor chiefly, but becauſe the ſpirit of God doth ſo teach us, and the Scriptures themſelves doe teſtifie for themſelves : ſo that every man is bound to acknowledge the Scripture, though there were no publike approbation of the Church : Fulk. 2.Galat. 6. Whitacher. quaſt.3. cap. 1. de Scripturis. We doe reaſon thus.

Inter relig. Cæſarea cap: 11. anno 1548.

Argum. 1. The Jeſuite doth reaſon ſtrongly for us : he bringeth five arguments to prove the Scripture to be the word of God : veritas vaticiniorum, the conſtant and perpetuall truth of the Prophecies : incredibilis ſcriptorum conſpiratio, the wonderfull harmonie and conſent of holie writers of the Scripture : teſtis eſt Deus ipſe, the ſpirit of God is a principall witneſſe unto us : teſtis eſt ipſa Scriptura, the Scripture it ſelfe beareth witneſſe, as 2. *Tim.*3. all Scripture is given by inſpiration : teſtis eſt divinorum numerus infinitus miraculorum : laſtly, the many and great miracles wrought by the Prophets and Apoſtles doe teſtifie for the truth thereof. See this place excepted againſt and anſwered, Rect. p.58. He maketh no mention here of the teſtimony of the Church, but ſaith the ſame that we hold, that the ſpirit of God inwardly working in our hearts by the Scriptures themſelves, which wee finde to be moſt perfect, conſonant, true, of ſingular majeſty, doth teach us which is the Word of God: Bellarm. de Verbo Dei, lib. 1. c. 2.

Thoſe arguments or inducements, which do ariſe of the conſideration of the Scriptures themſelves (as Bellarmine here ſetteth downe ſome, and other may be added unto them) are more forcible to perſwade us, that it is the Word of God, than the bare teſtimony of the Church. Firſt, doctrina majeſtas, the ſingular majeſty of the Scriptures, in the bookes of the Prophets and Apoſtles, and of the heavenly doctrine therein contained: wherein none of the writings of the Philoſophers or orators, are to be compared unto them. Secondly, beſide the majeſty of the matter, the pureneſſe of ſtile, gravity and divineneſſe of ſpeech, doth commend the excellency of Scripture. Thirdly, the antiquity of theſe holy writings, ſheweth them to be divine: for the bookes of Moſes are found to be more ancient, than all the writings in the world. Fourthly, the propheticall predictions and prophecies, which afterward were accompliſhed, yea the very names of certaine men were ſet down many yeeres before they were borne, as Joſias, 1 King. 13. 2. Cyrus, Eſay 44. 28. Fifthly, the wonderfull and ſtrange miracles, which were wrought by the Prophets and Apoſtles. Sixthly, the teſtimonies alſo of Martyrs, which gave their lives in defence of the holy doctrine ſet foorth in Scripture, doe evidently declare, that they are divine writings. Seventhly, the enemies of the Scriptures, which have attempted all meanes to extinguiſh them, and could not prevaile, do ſet foorth the majeſty, and authority thereof. Eightly the writers alſo of the Scriptures, the Prophets and Apoſtles, doe not a little move us: who were but ſimple and plaine men, as ſhepheards, heardmen, fiſhermen, before they were called and ſet a part of God for this work: whereby it is apparant, that God who inſpired them with ſo great grace, was the author of the Scriptures: Hæc Calvin. lib. inſtitut. 1. c. 8. Theſe aforeſaid motives do ſuffiſly convince, that the Scriptures are no humane, but divine writings: and they are more able to move us, than the bare teſtimony of the Church: yet perſwade us they cannot, which is the only worke of the ſpirit, but only prepare our hearts, and ſtirre us up: Ergo, much leſſe is the authority of the Church able to doe it.

Argum. 2. The Scripture giveth authority to the Church: Ergo, the Church giveth not authority to the Scripture: the firſt we proove by our adverſaries own confeſſion: for being asked, how they know that the Church erreth not, they alleage ſuch places of Scripture, as Matth. 28. 20. I am with you to the end of the world, and the like: how then doth the Church give authoritie to Scripture, ſeeing it taketh her warrant and authoritie from thence; The Jeſuite himſelfe ſaith, that nihil eſt certius vel notius ſcripturis, nothing is more certaine or notoriouſly knowne than Scripture. And againe, ſacra Scriptura eſt regula credendi certiſſima, the holy Scripture is the moſt certaine rule of faith: Bellarm. de verbo. 1. 2. If the authority of Scripture then be moſt certaine, what reaſon is it, that they ſhould depend upon the judgement of the Church, which is nothing ſo certaine? The leſſe certaine ought rather (and ſo doth indeed) depend of the more certaine; the Church upon the Scripture, not contrariwiſe; for the Scriptures are the foundation of the Church, Epheſ. 2. 20.

Epheſ, 2. 20.

Argum. 3. To beleeve the Scripture is a worke of faith: the Church cannot infuſe faith into us, but the Spirit of God: Ergo, the Spirit of God, not the Church teacheth us to beleeve Scripture. Argum. Whitach. 18.

Againe, if the Scripture depend upon the approbation of the Church, then the promiſes of ſalvation and eternall life contained in the Scriptures doe ſo likewiſe: but it is abſurd to thinke that the promiſes of God doe ſtand upon the allowance of men: Ergo, neither the Scriptures, Argum. Calvini, lib. 1. inſtitut. c. 7.

Argum. 4. The Scripture is the chiefe judge, and ought ſo to be in all controverſies: we may appeale from the Church to the Scripture, not from the Scripture to the Church: the Church is ſubject to the Scriptures, the rule of faith is in the Scriptures, not in the Church: for the company of the faithfull, which is the Church, are ruled by faith: they doe not overrule faith: neither are a rule thereof: the Church is a point of beleefe, as in the Creed, not a rule or meaſure thereof: Ergo, the Church is not the chiefe judge of Scripture, but it ſelfe to be judged by Scripture.

Argum. 5. We have evident places of Scripture, John 5. 34. ſaith Chriſt, I receive no witneſſe of men: but the Scripture is the voice of Chriſt, and of the ſame authority. Ergo, verſ. 34. I have a greater teſtimony than of John, the Scriptures doe teſtifie of me, verſ. 39. The teſtimony of the Scriptures is greater than the record of John: Ergo, than of the Church. 1 John 5. 6. The ſpirit beareth witneſſe, that the ſpirit, that is, the doctrine of the ſpirit, is the truth. And verſ. 9. If we receive the witneſſe of man, the witneſſe of God is greater: Ergo, not the judgement of the Church, but the witneſſe of the ſpirit doth certifie and aſſure us of the truth and authority of Scripture.

1 John 5, 6.

I will adde one ſaying out of Auguſtine: Mihi certum eſt, nuſquam a Chriſti authoritate diſcedere non enim reperio valentiorem. Contra Academ. lib. 3. c. 20. I am reſolved for no cauſe to leave the authority of Chriſt (ſpeaking in the Scriptures) for I find none more forcible: Ergo, the authority of Scripture is above the Church, which is denied by the Rhemiſts, annot. 2. Gal. ſect. 2. I will here urge them with their owne authority: Thomas Aquinas hath this diſtinction: that God worketh two waies; firſt by mediate cauſes, as the Prophet ſaith, Pſ. 138. Thou haſt made me, that is, by the work of nature: ſecondly, he worketh ſome things immediatly, as miracles: ſo he ſaith, Deum hominis intellectum per alias literas mediate instruere, per ſacras immediate: God inſtructeth man mediate by other writings, but immediatly by the Scriptures: as miracles then are Gods works immediatly, ſo are the Scriptures his words.

Excitation. Eſpenſæi in 2 Tim. p. 120. g.

Then as miracles of themſelves are knowne to be Gods works, as the Magicians in Ægypt could ſay, digitus Dei eſt, It is the finger of God; ſo are Scriptures knowne to be Gods writings: for, if we ſhould need the teſtimony of men to perſwade us of the word, then God thereby doth not immediatly inſtruct us, as Thomas Aquinas here ſaith. So then, as the Lawes of Emperours, though they were, ſine die & conſule, without the date of the day and the conſul, were notwithſtanding authentike, becauſe they were imperiall, Cod.lib.1.tit.4.leg.1.Iuſtinian. Much more the holy Scriptures ought of themſelves to beare credit, becauſe they are divine.

Laſtly, let us ſee the confeſſion of the holy Martyrs, whoſe judgement in matters of faith, though our adverſaries regard it not, yet is of us much to be regarded, ſeeing they doubted not to ſpend their lives in defence of their faith.

Maſter Philpot thus anſwereth to Morgans argument, who urged that the Church was before Scripture, and therefore above Scripture: that the Word of God conſiſted not only in letters and externall writing, but it was the word, wherewith the hearts of the Patriarches, Prophets and Apoſtles were inſpired, even before it was written, as the ſalutation of the Angel was the Scripture of Chriſt, and word of God, even before it was written: *ſic Philpot.p.*1288.col.2.diſput.convocat.

Maſter Bradford ſaith, that the Church is a meane more ſpeedily to bring us to know the Scriptures: as was the woman of Samaria a meane to bring the Samaritanes to know Chriſt: but as they, when they had heard Chriſt, beleeved not ſo much becauſe of her report, as for that they heard him themſelves ſpeake: ſo after that Scriptures are diſcerned, and ſhewed to us by the Church, we beleeve them to be the Word of God, not becauſe the Church ſaith ſo, but for that indeed we find them to be ſo, as true ſheep acknowledging the voyce of our ſhepheard Chriſt Jeſus ſpeaking therein, *hæc ille.pag.*1467.col.1.

Maſter Glover Martyr, to this argument propounded, the Church ſheweth which is the Word of God, Ergo, it is above the word, anſwereth thus: this is no good reaſon, for by the ſame argument Iohn Baptiſt ſhall be above Chriſt, becauſe hee ſhewed Chriſt: and he that telleth one which is the King, ſhould be above the King.*p.*1555.col.1.

Robert Drakes Martyr, being asked how he knew the Scriptures to be the Word of God, anſwered: by the holy doctrine which it containeth, teaching ſalvation by Chriſt, and giving precepts of holines, to withdraw us from a wicked life. William Tims anſwered, that the old Teſtament doth give witneſſe to the new, and one of them doth teſtifie for another: whereby it appeareth, they are the very Word of God. *Fox,p.*1722.col.1. All thoſe holy Martyrs died in this confeſſion of their faith: therefore bleſſed be God that hath not left his truth without ſuch excellent witneſſes, in thoſe crooked and evill daies.

4 Anſelme ſaith, that the Scripture arcem ſuper cæteras authoritatis obtinet: Hath the higheſt authority above other writings: Then the writings and decrees of the Church being inferiour in authority, cannot be the Judge of the Scriptures. Salmeron alloweth that ſaying of the Author of the imperfect worke: To them that will know, which is the Church, Non eſt alius modus, niſi tantummodo per Scripturas, there is no other way but onely by the Scriptures. Pilſavius thus reſolved at the Councell of Trent: Who doubted the ſacred Scripture, Solum eſſe judicem, &c. To be the only judge of all controverſies of religion: Then it will follow that this controverſie, which are the canonical Scriptures, muſt be decided by the Scriptures themſelves.

The fifth queſtion concerning the perſpicuity and plaineneſſe of the Scripture.

The Papiſts.

OUr adverſaries do hold, that the Scriptures are moſt hard, difficult, and obſcure. Bellarmine ſaith, 6.Error.
Neceſſario fatendum eſt, Scripturas eſſe obſcuriſſimas, It muſt needes be graunted that the Scriptures are moſt obſcure, de verbo Dei, lib. 3.*c.*1. They doe not only affirme that ſome things are obſcure in the Scriptures: but that they are all hard, and doubtfull, and uncertaine, and compare them therefore to a leaden rule, which may be turned every way, Petrus a Soto. And to a noſe of wax, Lindanus a Papiſt, *ex Tilmanno de verbo Dei, error.*5. Our Rhemiſts ſay, it is all one to affirme ſome things to bee hard in a writer, and the writer to be hard: ſo they conclude, that the Scriptures are both in reſpect of the matter and manner, very hard, and therefore dangerous for the ignorant to reade them. Rhemenſ. annot. in 2 *Pet.*3.verſ.16.

*Argum.*1. They object that place, 2 *Pet.*3.16. where the Apoſtle ſaith, ſpeaking of S. Pauls Epiſtles, 2 Pet.3.16. that many things are hard. Ergo, the Epiſtles of S. Paul are hard, and ſo the Scriptures: this is Bellarm. argument. We anſwer. Firſt, he ſaith not, that Pauls Epiſtles are hard, but many things, which hee entreateth of. Secondly, they are hard not to all, but the unſtable and unlerned do pervert them. Thirdly, we deny not, but that ſome places in the Scripture are obſcure, and have need of interpretation: but it followeth not, that therefore the whole Scripture is obſcure: and becauſe of ſome hard places, that the people ſhould be forbidden the reading of all.

*Argum.*2. The Scriptures are obſcure both in reſpect of the matter and manner: firſt, the matter is high and myſticall: as of the Trinity, of the incarnation of the word, of the nature of Angels, and ſuch like. We anſwer, theſe myſteries may be conſidered three divers waies. 1. In their own nature: ſo are they hard indeed, for by humane reaſon, we cannot attaine to the depth of them. 2. In reſpect of their handling in the Scripture: ſo are they not obſcure, for all theſe things are plainly declared in the word, as the nature of ſuch deepe myſteries will afford. 3. In reſpect of us: ſo muſt they needes be obſcure, if men be not contented with the knowledge in the word, but curiouſly ſearch further. Luther therfore doth aptly diſtinguiſh of theſe things, he ſaith that, res Dei, the things of God are obſcure, the very depth of his myſteries cannot be comprehended of us: but, res Scripturæ, theſe things, as they are opened in Scripture, are plaine, if we will content our ſelves with that knowledge.

Secondly, ſaith Bellarmine, the manner of handling is hard and obſcure: there are many tropes, metaphors, allegories, Hebraiſmes, which cannot eaſily be underſtood. We anſwer. Firſt, many of theſe are rather ornaments of the Scripture, as tropes, metaphors, than impediments to the reader. Secondly, though the phraſe of Scripture ſeeme hard at the firſt, yet by further travell in the Scriptures it may become eaſie and plaine: for all things are not underſtood at the firſt. Thirdly, we deny not but that ſome places are obſcure, and had need to be opened.

*Argum.*3. If the Scriptures be not hard, what need ſo many Commentaries and expoſitions? Rhemiſt. 2 *Pet.*3.16. & *Bellarm. lib.*3 *de verb. Dei. c.*1. We anſwer. Firſt, ſo many Commentaries are not requiſite, ſome may be ſpared. Secondly, expoſitions are needfull for the underſtanding of darke places; but many things are plaine enough without expoſitions, and may be underſtood of the ſimple. Thirdly, expoſitions alſo of the plaineſt places are needfull, not ſo much for the explication of the meaning, as application for manners.

*Argum.*4. Becauſe that place, *Gen.*4.23. How Lamech ſaith, I would ſlay a man in my wound, &c. is hard: Gen 4.23.
as likewiſe, that place, *Geneſ.*11.12. where Caiuan is put in by the Septuagint, whom Luke followeth, Gen.11.12. which name is not in the originall: and *Gen.*36.2. Eſaus wives are ſet forth by other names, then Gen. Gen.36.2.
28. hereupon, by reaſon of the difficulty of theſe places, they inferre the Scriptures to be hard: Downy tranſlators, in their ſeverall annotations upon theſe places.

*Contra.*1. It followeth not, becauſe ſome places in the Scriptures are hard to be underſtood, therfore, all the Scriptures are obſcure: we deny not, but that ſome places are profound, and of deep ſenſe, yet other, and they the moſt, which concerne faith and manners, are plaine and eaſie to be underſtood, and fit for the capacity of the meaneſt, that will apply his heart.

2. The places given in inſtance, are not of ſuch inextricable difficulty, as that the Reader ſhould be diſcouraged from the reading of ſuch places: in the firſt place Lamech vaunteth himſelfe upon hope of Caines impunity, that he will not take the leaſt wrong at any mans hand, but ſlay and kill in his wrath, and yet hope to goe unpuniſhed: for the ſecond, it is moſt like, that S. Luke in a matter of no greater weight, would not diſſent from the Septuagint, being a tranſlation ſo generally received; leſt he might have thereby offended, and brought a prejudice to the whole ſtory of the Goſpell; touching See further for the third, it is not unuſuall for the ſame perſons to be known by divers names, and ſo is it like Eſaus theſe places Hexapl. upon wives were called. See Iunius upon that place. Geneſis,

The Proteſtants.

WE doe not hold that the Scripture is every where ſo plaine and evident, that it need no interpretation, as our adverſaries doe ſlander us, and therefore here they doe fight with their own ſhadow. *Bellarm.lib.3.de verb.c.*1. We confeſſe, that the Lord in the Scriptures hath tempered hard things and eaſie together, that we might be exerciſed in the Scriptures, and might knock and labour by prayer and ſtudy, for the opening of the ſenſe: and that there might be order kept in the Church, ſome to be hearers, ſome teachers and expounders, by whoſe diligent ſearch and travell, the harder places may be opened to the people. But this we affirme againſt our adverſaries: firſt, that all points of faith neceſſary to ſalvation, are plainely ſet forth in the Scriptures. Secondly, that the Scriptures may with great profit be read of the ſimple and unlearned, notwithſtanding the hardneſſe of ſome places, which in time alſo (uſing the meanes) they come to the underſtanding of, *Ex Fulk, annot.2.Pet.*3.16.*Whitach. quaſt.*4.*c.*1.

Deut.30.11. Argum. 1. Firſt, that which we maintaine is evident out of the Scripture, *Deut.*30.11. The commandement, which I command thee, is not hid from thee, nor farre off. And as it followeth, Thou needeſt not aſcend to the Heavens, or goe beyond the ſea: the word is neere unto thee, even in thy mouth and heart, to doe it, argum.Bremii. Ergo, the Scriptures are plaine. The Jeſuite anſwereth, that it is meant only of the decalogue and the ten commandements, that they are eaſie, not of the whole Scripture. As though if the Commandements be eaſie, the reſt of the Scriptures be not likewiſe, as the Prophets and hiſtoricall bookes, being but commentaries and expoſitions of the decalogue. Saint Paul, Rom. 10.6. underſtandeth this place of the whole doctrine of faith, who better knew the meaning of Moſes than the Jeſuite. Againe, the Prophet David ſaith, Thy word is a lanterne to my feet, and a light to my pathes: which is not to be underſtood onely of the Commandements and Precepts in Scripture, but of the whole word of God, as Auguſtine expoundeth it: Quod ait lucerna pedibus verbum tuum, verbum eſt, quod Scripturis omnibus ſanctis continetur: where he ſaith, thy word is a lanterne to my feet, he underſtandeth the Word of God, which is contained in all the holy Scriptures, Auguſtin. concion. 23. *in Pſal.*118.

Pſal.119.105. 2 Pet.1.19. Argum. 2. The Prophet David ſaith. *Pſal.*119.105. Thy word is a lanterne unto my feet, and a light unto my path: and S.Peter compareth the word of the prophets to a light that ſhineth in a darke place, 2 *Pet.*1.19. The Scriptures then are eaſie, cleare and plaine: Bellarmine telleth us that the Scriptures are called a light, non quia facile intelligantur, &c. Not becauſe they are eaſily underſtood, but being once underſtood, then they do lighten and illuminate the mind, and ſhew the way unto Chriſt, *c.*2.*reſp. ad argum.*2.&4.*Contra.*1. Yes the Scripture is both waies a light, both for inſtruction and underſtanding, and then for ſpirituall direction: as David ſheweth, both it is a lanterne to the feet for inſtruction, and a light to the path for direction. 2. Like as a lanterne is both eaſie to be ſeene, and being ſeene directeth; ſo is the Scripture eaſie to be underſtood, and being underſtood it guideth: for it giveth wiſedome to the ſimple, Pſal.19.7. *Pſal.*19.7. But if it were ſo hard and obſcure, it ſhould be without the reach and compaſſe of the ſimple.

2 Cor.4.3. Argum. 3. 2 Cor. 4.3. If our Goſpell be hid, it is to them onely that are loſt: Ergo, the Scriptures are plaine to the faithfull. The Jeſuite anſwereth, S. Paul ſpeaketh of the knowledge of Chriſt, not of the Scriptures. Firſt, it is manifeſt out of the ſecond verſe, that S.Paul ſpeaketh of that Goſpell, which he preached to the Corinthians, which is the ſame he wrote unto them: wherefore if the Goſpell preached were eaſie and plaine, why is not the Goſpell written by him, I meane the doctrine of faith, being the ſame which he preached? Secondly, if they grant that the knowledge of Chriſt is eaſy, we aske no more: for this is that we ſay, that the doctrine of faith and ſalvation is plainly expreſſed in Scripture.

Eſay 29.11. Apoc.5.5. Argum. 4. This is the difference betweene the new Teſtament and the old: the old is compared to a claſped booke, Eſay 29.11. the new to a booke opened, *Apoc.*5.5. The knowledge of Chriſtians farre exceedeth the knowledge of the Jewes: it is lawfull for them to reade the Scriptures, much more for all Chriſtians. The Jeſuite anſwereth that our knowledge is greater than theirs, not in all Scripture, but in the myſteries of our redemption only. We anſwer, this is all we deſire: for if the miſtery of ſalvation and redemption be plainly opened in the Scripture, why ſhould not the people be admitted to the reading of the word, to be confirmed in the knowledge of their redemption? Who ſeeth not what ſilly anſwers theſe be? Auguſtine thus writeth of this matter, *In iis (inquit) qua apperte in ſcripturis poſita ſunt, inveniuntur ea omnia, qua fidem continent moreſq; vivendi: de doctrin.Chriſtian.lib.*2.*c.*9. The plaine and eaſie places of Scripture containe all things neceſſary unto faith and good life: Ergo, the doctrine of ſalvation in the Scriptures is not hard and difficult, but eaſie of good Chriſtians to bee underſtood.

*Toletan.*5.*c.*16. it was thus decreed: Qui Apocalypſin Iohannis à Paſcha uſque ad Pentecoſten Miſſarum tempore in eccleſia non pradicaverit, excommunicationis ſententiam habebit: He that refuſeth to preach to the people in the time of divine ſervice from Eaſter to Whitſuntid the Apocalypſe of S.Iohn, ſhall have the ſentence of excommunication. By this appeareth, that this Councell deemed not the reſt of the Scripture ſo very hard, ſeing they ſo ſtraightly enjoyne the reading and preaching of the hardeſt booke in Scripture to the people; which ſome reformed Churches even at this day doe forbeare the reading of.

Further, if that by the Emperiall law it was provided, Vt ad omnium notitiam, conſtitutiones valeant pervenire: That the conſtitutions ſhould come to every mans knowledge: Cod.lib. 1. tit. 1. lege 3, Iuſtinian: And againe, *Conſtitutionum noſtri codicis jubar omnibus clareat. leg.*3. That as the Sunne beames our conſtitutions ſhould ſhine upon all. How much more comfortable and perſpicuous to all is the Sunne-light of the Scripture [illegible]s?

I will alſo urge them with [illegible] their owne decrees: Decret. part. 1. diſt. 38. cap. 9. Ignorantia ſcripturarum, ignoratio Chriſti: The ignorance of the Scripture, is the ignorance of Chriſt. If then the people be kept from the knowledge of Scripture, they cannot attaine to the knowledge of Chriſt.

Heare alſo what a writer of your owne alleageth to this purpoſe out of Proſper; Parvuli, magni, fortes, infirmi, habeant in ſcripturis unde alantur & ſatientur: Great and ſmall, ſtrong and weake, may finde nouriſhment in the Scriptures. And in the ſame place he hath theſe verſes:

Qua nullis animis, nullis non congruit annis, Eſpenſ. in 2.
Lacte rigans parvos, pane cibans validos. Tim. p. 117. B.
Which may be tranſlated thus;
No age ſo young, no wit ſo ſmall, which Scripture doth not fit:
There's milke for babes, and yet withall, there's meat for ſtronger wit.

If then children and little ones, and men of ſimple wit may be admitted to the reading of Scripture, it ſeemeth not that it ſhould be ſo difficult and obſcure, as they would beare us in hand.

I will in the laſt place adde the judgement of a reverend and learned man, that faithfull martyr, and bleſſed ſervant of God, D. Taylor, who in an Epiſtle of his confuteth a certaine Sermon made by a Popiſh Prieſt in Hadley, whereof the ſaid D. Taylor was Paſtor: he ſaith, the Scripture is full of darke ſentences: but indeed it is called of David, a candle to our feet, and a light to our ſteps. Our Saviour Chriſt calleth his word the light, which evill doers doe flie from, &c. Fox pag. 1528. col. 2. pag. 1388. col. 2. edit. 1610.

Concerning forren teſtimonies. 1. Seeing the Eaſt Church doe cauſe the Scriptures to bee read in the vulgar tongue, as hath beene ſhewed before touching the uſage of the Armenians, and Muſcovites, err. 3. 2. And ſeeing the ſame is the uſage of the South and Abyſſine Church to have the Scripture read in the Tigique language, which is underſtood of all: no doubt their opinion is, that the Scriptures are alſo to be underſtood of the common people: eſpecially, ſeeing as Thevet reporteth, there are few Preachers among the Muſcovites, but they content themſelves with the Lectures of the Goſpell and Epiſtles every Sunday, in a language which their people underſtand. The ſixth queſtion; concerning the interpretation of Scripture.

THis queſtion doth divide it ſelfe into three parts: Firſt, concerning the divers ſenſes of the Scripture. Secondly, to whom the chiefe authoritie to expound Scripture is committed. Thirdly, what meanes muſt be uſed in the interpretation of Scripture.

The firſt part of the ſixth queſtion; of the divers ſenſes of Scripture.

The Papiſts.

THere are two ſtrange aſſertions of our adverſaries concerning this matter. Firſt, they affirme that the Scripture may have divers ſenſes and meanings in the ſame place. The ſenſe of the Scripture is either literall (ſay they) and hiſtoricall, which is the firſt and moſt proper ſenſe; or ſpirituall, that is, an higher ſenſe derived out of the other. The literall ſenſe, which there is gathered directly and immediately out of the words: the ſpirituall, which hath another reference, than to that which the words doe properly ſignifie. The literall is of two ſorts, either plaine and ſimple, or elſe figurative: as where Chriſt ſaith, I have other ſheepe which are not of this fold, &c. Joh. 10. Whereby hee underſtandeth other people beſide the Jewes. The ſpirituall is of three kindes; Allegoricall, Tropologicall, Anagogicall: 7. Error. John 10. 16.

gogicall : they ſhew by particular inſtance and induction, that the Scripture beſide the literall ſenſe may have theſe alſo.

Galat.4.24. The Allegoricall ſenſe is, when beſides the plaine hiſtoricall and literall meaning, ſomewhat is ſignified, which by an Allegorie is referred unto Chriſt, or the Church, as Galat.4. beſide the truth of the ſtory of the bond and free woman, S. Paul applieth it unto the two Teſtaments : Ergo, one place may have more ſenſes than one.

Deut.25.4. The Tropologicall ſenſe is, when as there is ſomewhat ſignified appertaining to manners, as Deut.25. Thou ſhalt not muſle the mouth of the Oxe that treadeth out the corne : this by S. Paul is applied to the Miniſters of the Goſpell, 1 Cor.9. Ergo, the Scripture hath divers ſenſes.

Pſal.95.11. The Anagogicall ſenſe is, when the place is applied to decipher and ſet forth the kingdome of heaven and eternall things, as Pſal.95. I ſware unto them, if they ſhould enter into my reſt : this is literally underſtood of the reſt in Canaan, and ſpiritually of life eternall : Ergo, many ſenſes. Thus reaſoneth Bellarm. lib.3. de ſcriptur.cap.3.

The Doway Tranſlaters doe here concurre with Bellarmine, that there are three ſpirituall ſenſes, beſide the literall : the Allegoricall, Morall, Anagogicall, &c. As Jeruſalem ſignifieth literally the head City of Jurie, Morally, the ſoule of man, Allegorically, the Church militant, as Hebr.12. and Anagogically the Church triumphant, Apoc.21. annot.in Gen.1.pag.4.

2 Sam.7.13, 14. They give inſtance of that place 2 Sam.7.13. I will eſtabliſh his kingdome : which words they would have underſtood of Chriſt : but verſ.14. If he ſhall doe any thing unjuſtly, &c. this cannot be ſaid of Chriſt, but of Saul : whereupon they inferre, ſo this place hath many literall ſenſes.

Contra 1. When divers things are inferred out of one place of Scripture, as an Allegoricall, or Anagogicall myſterie : if it be intended by the ſpirit, it is part of the literall and direct ſenſe : when one is contained within another ; and ſo the whole ſenſe is partly hiſtoricall and literall, partly allegoricall : but if it be an allegorie deviſed by man, it is no part of the ſenſe at all. 2. Wee deny not but that the ſame word or ſentence being found in divers places of Scripture, may have divers literall ſenſes : as Jeruſalem, given in inſtance, but not in one and the ſame place : and yet they are deceived in this allegation ; for Jeruſalem is taken for the triumphant Church, Heb.12.22. It is called celeſtiall Jeruſalem, where an innumerable company of Angels is : likewiſe in the ſame place of Scripture, one clauſe may be underſtood literally, as of Salomon, another typically, as of Chriſt, and yet one and the ſame ſentence or clauſe in that place, ſhall not have two divers ſenſes. 3. They are contrary to themſelves : for in one place they tell us there are three ſpirituall ſenſes beſide the literall : and in another, that there are two literall ſenſes, whereof the one is anagogicall concerning Chriſt : ſo that place, Deuter.25.4. Thou ſhalt not muſle the mouth of the oxe, &c. they ſay hath two literall ſenſes ; it is meant of ſpirituall labourers, and of oxen ; whereof one is the tropologicall and morall ſenſe.

The Proteſtants.

WE affirme that of one place of Scripture there can be but one ſenſe, which wee call the literall ſenſe, when as the words are either taken properly, or figuratively, to expreſſe the thing which is meant : as in this place, The ſeed of the woman ſhall breake the Serpents head : the literall ſenſe is of Chriſt, who ſhould triumph over Satan, though it bee ſpoken in a borrowed and figurative ſpeech. There can be therefore but one ſenſe, which is the literall : as for thoſe three kindes, they are not divers ſenſes, but divers applications onely and collections out of one and the ſame ſenſe : as Saint Ambroſe ſaith, in 17. cap. Luc. Non una tantum figura, ſed multiplex in Scripturis eſſe conſuevit, ut unus ſermo plures ſpecies comprehendat : The Scripture is accuſtomed to afford not one, but divers figures, that one ſaying may comprehend divers kinds under it : that is, divers ſpeciall ſenſes, or applications of one generall ſenſe.

Argum. 1. It ſhall appeare by a ſeverall induction of all theſe kindes : In the firſt example of the Allegoricall ſenſe, Galat.4. the Apoſtle ſaith not that there is a double ſenſe, but that it may bee allegorically applyed, which is hiſtorically ſet downe. There is then but one ſenſe of the place, part whereof conſiſteth in the ſtory, part in the allegorie : ſo that the whole ſenſe is contained in them both. Concerning the ſecond example of the Tropologicall : there is not a twofold ſenſe of that place, but one whole generall ſenſe, that as the mouth of the oxe was not to be muſled, ſo the Miniſter of the Goſpell muſt be provided for. Likewiſe of the Anagogicall kinde : it is not one ſenſe to underſtand the reſt of Canaan, another of the kingdome of God : but there is one whole ſenſe, that as they for their Idolatry were deprived of the land of promiſe ; ſo we ſhould take heed leſt by our diſobedience wee loſe the hope of the kingdome of heaven. So we conclude that thoſe are not divers ſenſes, but one ſenſe diverſly applied ; the one ſenſe having a ſubordination unto the other.

Argum. 2. The literall ſenſe is the onely ſenſe of the place, becauſe out of that ſenſe onely may an argument ſtrongly bee framed : wherefore ſeeing allegories and tropes doe not conclude, they are not the ſenſes of the place. An Allegorie or type may be part of the literall ſenſe, and then it concludeth : but when an Allegory is framed beſide the literall ſenſe, it concludeth not ; and therefore is no part of the ſenſe : as to reaſon thus, the Oxes mouth muſt not be muſled : Ergo, the Miniſter muſt be maintained, it followeth well, becauſe it is part of the ſenſe. But Allegories deviſed beſide the ſenſe prove not, though they may illuſtrate.

Argum. 3. That properly is the ſenſe of the place, which the text alwayes yeeldeth : for no text of Scripture is without his ſenſe: but the ſpirituall ſenſe is not in every place to be found, but the literall ſenſe alwayes. And this the Jeſuite confeſſeth: Non invenitur ſpiritualis ſenſus in omni ſententia ſcripturæ: The ſpirituall ſenſe is not found in every ſentence of Scripture: Ergo, it is not the ſenſe properly.

Here alſo I will urge the Jeſuite with his owne teſtimonie: Spirituales ſenſus licet ædificent, & tamen non ſemper conſtat, an ſint à ſpiritu ſancto intenti: The ſpirituall ſenſes, though they may edifie, yet it is not alwayes certaine, whether they be intended by the ſpirit: but the literall ſenſe is certaine alwayes to bee the ſenſe of the ſpirit, *Bellarm.cap.*3. The literall ſenſe therefore is the onely ſenſe, becauſe it is the ſenſe of the ſpirit.

I will alſo oppoſe againſt them their owne decrees: *Sext. decretal. lib.*5. tit. 12. *c.*3. Nicholaus 4. Gloſſæ non fiant, niſi forſan per quas verbi ſenſus, vel conſtructio, quaſi grammaticaliter ad literam, vel intelligibilius exponatur: Let there be no gloſſes made, but ſuch, whereby the ſenſe or conſtruction of the word may be grammatically expounded according to the letter. This decree alloweth none but the grammaticall and literall ſenſe.

The Papiſts.

THeir other aſſertion is this, that it is lawfull to allegorize Scripture both in the old and new Teſtament, *Bellarm.lib.*3.*cap.*3. They reaſon thus, *Rhemenſ. annot. Hebr.*4. *verſ.*5. The Apoſtle applieth the reſt of the Sabbath to the eternall reſt: Ergo, the like applications of the Fathers are lawfull. See *Annot.Hebr.*7.2. The Apoſtle (ſay they) findeth great myſteries, even in the very names: Ergo, It is lawfull to make allegories. 8. Error. Heb.4.5.

The Proteſtants.

WEE ſay it is dangerous to make allegories of Scripture, without the warrant and direction of Gods ſpirit. This was the occaſion that divers of the ancient Fathers greatly erred: as the Jeſuite himſelfe giveth an inſtance of Origen, who doth allegorize the ſtory of Geneſis concerning the terreſtriall Paradiſe. And it is much to be wondred at that our adverſaries doe ſo much ſtand for the allegorizing of Scripture, beyond the literall ſenſe, ſeeing that, contrary to their owne judgement, who ſo much eſteeme of tropes and allegories, in theſe words of Chriſt, hoc eſt corpus meum, they ſtand onely upon the literall and verball ſenſe, admitting no trope, figure, or allegorie at all. I will put them in minde here of a ſaying of an old popiſh Biſhop, above two hundred yeares agoe: The words in Scripture (ſaith he) muſt not be judged by the ſenſe which they make, but the ſenſe whereof they are made, the conſtructions in Scripture are not bound to Donates rules, where faith is farre placed from the capacitie of reaſon: *Sic Iohan. Treſnant. Epiſcop. Hereford. Fox pag.*465. How well the Papiſts now adayes doe follow this rule, it appeareth by the former example.

To their arguments our learned Countrey man D.Fulke anſwereth: Firſt, it followeth not, becauſe it was lawfull for the Apoſtles, governed by the ſpirit, to make allegories, that it is therefore lawfull for others. Secondly, when the Fathers, or any other writers can be aſſured of the ſame ſpirit which the holy writers had, and of the like dexterity in underſtanding and expounding Scripture, they may likewiſe be bold to make allegories.

Let us heare what Auguſtine ſaith of this matter: Sicut mihi multum errare videntur, qui nullas res geſtas aliquid aliud præter id, quod eo modo geſta ſunt, ſignificare arbitrantur: ita multum audere, qui prorſus ibi omnia ſignificationibus allegoricis involuta eſſe contendunt: As they are much deceived which thinke that the ſtories in the Scripture doe ſignifie no other thing but that which was done: ſo they are too raſh and bold, that would draw all things to allegories, which they read in Scripture. Ergo, it is not lawfull for any to invent allegories of Scripture, as it ſeemeth good to themſelves.

Concil. Bracarenſ. 1.*can.*30. it was thus decreed: Placuit, ut nihil veteris teſtamenti poeticè compoſitum in Eccleſia pſallatur: It ſeemeth good to us, that no part of the old Teſtament ſhould bee ſung in meeter in the Church, or compoſed after a poeticall manner. But what doe they elſe but follow poeticall fictions, that draw the Scripture as they liſt, to imagined allegories? Synod. Auguſt. cap. 13. Concionator ſe ad captum auditorum demittat, nunc Catechiſtam agat, nunc interpretem Scripturarum, nunc vitiorum reprehenſorem, nunc doctorem myſteriorum. The Preacher muſt apply himſelfe to his auditors capacity, ſometime playing the Catechiſt, ſometime interpreting Scriptures, otherwhile reprehending vice, and againe unfolding myſteries, &c. He muſt then unfold myſteries, not allegorize Scripture at his pleaſure, and make more myſteries.

Let them heare alſo their owne decrees: *Decr.par.*1. *d.*37.*c.*4. Pſeudoprophetas eos debemus accipere, qui aliter Scripturarum verba accipiunt, quam ſpiritus ſanctus ſonat: We underſtand them to bee falſe Prophets, which doe take the words of Scripture otherwiſe than the ſpirit ſoundeth. And againe, *ibid. cap.*14. Clemens 1. Multas quidem, ut audivimus, veſtrarum partium ingenioſi homines, ex iis quæ legunt veriſimilitudines capiunt: Certaine wittie conceited men in your parts, as I heare, doe gather ſimilitudes and reſemblances out of that which they read, &c, which uſe is forbidden in this decree: the former canon calleth them, imagines, umbras, phantaſmata: ſhadowes, and phantaſies. And I wiſh in my heart, that in handling of Scripture, this age of ours were not too much given to follow ſuch wittie rather than pithie conceits and phantaſies.

This peremptory boldneſſe of allegorizing Scripture, which the Romaniſts are addicted unto, is not much unlike the blinde practice of the Jewes, who, as Buxdorfius writeth, are bound to give as great beleefe to the myſticall and allegoricall expoſitions of the Rabbines, as to the Law of Moſes. Buxdorfius Synag. Iudaic. cap.1. pag. 62.

The ſecond part of the ſixth Queſtion: to whom the chiefe authority to expound Scripture is committed.

The Papiſts.

9. Error. IT was decreed in the Councell of Trent, that Scripture ſhould be expounded, as the Church expoundeth it, and according to the common and conſonant conſent of the Fathers, *Seſſ.*4. The Rhemiſts ſay, that the ſenſe of the Scriptures muſt be learned of the Fathers and Paſtors of the Church, *Præf.ſect.*18. If the Fathers agree not, the matter is referred to a generall Councell: if there it bee not determined, wee muſt have recourſe to the Pope and his Cardinals. The Jeſuite dare not referre the matter to the Pope alone to expound the Scripture, but joyneth the College of Cardinals with him, *Bellarm. lib.*3. *de ſcript. cap.*3.

Deut. 17.9. *Argum.*1. They object that place, *Deut.*17.9. where the people are commanded to reſort unto the Prieſt or Judge in doubtfull matters: Ergo, there ought to be a chiefe and ſupreme Judge in Eccleſiaſticall matters, Bellarmine. Wee anſwer: Firſt, here the civill Magiſtrate and the Judge are joyned together, as *verſ.*12. Wherefore if they will gather hereby, that the Pope muſt bee ſupreme Judge in all Eccleſiaſticall matters, then the Emperour ought to be as well in civill. Bellarmine anſwereth, that by the Judge is underſtood the chiefe Prieſt: or if it be taken for the civill Judge, hee is but to execute the ſentence given by the Prieſt. Contra 1. It appeareth in the 12. verſe, that the high Prieſt, and the chiefe Judge are not all one: that man that ſhall not hearken to the Prieſt, &c. or unto the Iudge, howſoever the vulgar Latine reade otherwiſe. 2. Wee grant that the Prieſts office was to declare to the Judge the Word of God, but not to give ſentence: for the Prieſt had not to doe with matters of bloud, which are named amongſt other cauſes, *verſ.*8. Secondly, the text ſaith, they ſhall come to the Prieſts, *verſ.*9. aſſigning many, not to one onely Prieſt. Thirdly, they muſt judge according to the law, *verſ.*11. not as they liſt themſelves. Bellarmine ſaith, that this is no condition, If they ſhall judge according to the law; for then the people ſhould judge the ſentence of the Prieſt: but it is a promiſe, &c. Contra 1. Wee ſay not that the people ſhould judge the ſentence of the Prieſt, but the Law of God it ſelfe: as the Diſciples by the Scriptures did examine the Apoſtles preachings, *Act.*17. who were not inferiour in office in the Goſpell, to the Prieſts in the Law. 2. Neither had the Judges any ſuch promiſe not to erre in judgement, but ſo farre forth as they followed the law: for there were among them unrighteous Judges, as *Abimelech, Iudg.*19. and the two Elders that condemned Suſanna, which booke is good Scripture with them. Yea, and divers of the high Prieſts were in great errour, as Aaron in making the golden Calfe, Urias in making an idolatrous Altar, 2 King. 16. 15. the Prieſts and Prophets ſentenced Ieremie to die: the judgement then of the high Prieſt was not to be obeyed otherwiſe, than if he judged according to the law, as their ordinary Gloſſe obſerveth upon that place: Note, that it is not ſaid unto thee thou ſhalt obey, Niſi docuerint ſecundum legem; Unleſſe they teach according to the law. Fourthly, here is no mention made of doubts in interpreting Scripture, but of controverſies that may fall out betweene man and man, either Eccleſiaſticall to bee decided by the Prieſts, or civill by the Magiſtrate. Fifthly, wee grant, that in every Countrey there ought to bee a ſupreme and high ſeat of judgement for the determining of controverſiall matters betweene men: but it followeth not that there ſhould bee a ſupreme Judge over the whole Church, eſpecially in ſuch matters as this concerning the ſenſe of the Scriptures, which is not committed to the judgement of men, neither is any ſuch controverſie named in that place, *verſ.*8.

Argum. 2. Eccleſiaſt. 12. 11. The Wiſe man compareth the words of the wiſe to nailes which are faſtened, given by one Paſtor. In this place Salomon teacheth, that men ought to reſt in the ſentence of the chiefe Paſtor, without any further inquiry or ſearch. And if the chiefe Paſtor in the old Teſtament had ſuch authority, much more the chiefe Prieſt in the new: Ergo, wee ought to reſt in the ſentence and judgement of the Pope with his aſſiſtants, *Bellarm. cap.*4. *argum.*3.

We anſwer, the wiſe men are here underſtood to be the Paſtors and Miniſters of Gods Word, but this one Paſtor ſignifieth neither the high Prieſt in the old Law, nor the Pope in the new, but Jeſus Chriſt the high ſhepherd for our ſoules. What great boldneſſe is this, to attribute that to the Pope, which is onely proper to Chriſt.

Argum. 3. They alſo picke out ſome places in the new Teſtament, as Matth. 16.19. To thee will I give the keyes of the Kingdome of heaven. Chriſt ſaith ſo to Peter: Ergo, the Pope hath authoritie to expound Scripture. Wee anſwer: Firſt, by the keyes here is meant commiſſion to preach the Goſpell, not onely to expound doubts. Secondly, they were given to all the Apoſtles, not to Peter onely, Matth. 18. *verſ.*18, 19. Concil. Aquiſgranenſ. cap. 9. ex Iſidor. Cæteri Apoſtoli cum Petro par conſortium honoris & poteſtatis acceperunt: The reſt of the Apoſtles were received together with Peter, into the ſame fellowſhip of dignity, and authority, or power. Thirdly, the Pope is not ſucceſſor of Peter, no more than any other godly Biſhop, nor ſo much, unleſſe he follow Peters ſteps: As S. Hierome ſaith to Damaſus, as it is alleaged in your owne decrees: Decr. p. 2. cauſ. 24. qu. 1. cap. 14. Petri & fidem & ſedem tenes: You hold both Peters ſeat and faith. So they abuſe that place, *Matth.*18.17. He that will not heare the Church, &c. Ergo, the Biſhops and chiefe Paſtors muſt expound the doubts in Scripture. Anſw. Firſt, our Saviour ſpeaketh here of the diſcipline of the Church, of corrections and admonitions, not of interpreting Scripture, which dependeth not upon the will and phantaſie of Pope, Cardinals, or Popiſh Councels, but muſt be tried by the Scriptures themſelves. Secondly, we muſt give eare to the Church, but with a double condition: firſt, we muſt be ſure it is the Church of God, as our Saviour himſelfe expoundeth, v. 20. Where two or three are gathered together in my name, &c. ſo that every congregation is not the Church, but that which is aſſembled in the name and authority of Chriſt. Secondly, we muſt not heare them, contrary to the Scriptures, but ſo long as they do teach the doctrine of Chriſt: for otherwiſe an Angell from Heaven is not to be heard, 1 Galath. 1. 8.

Argum. 4. Our Saviour ſaith, Matth. 23. 2. The Scribes and Phariſies ſit in Moſes chaire, all things that they bid you obſerve, that obſerve and do: We muſt ſtand then to the judgement and interpretation of the Prelats of the Church, Bellarm. c. 5. teſtimon. 3.

Matth. 23. 2.

Contra. To ſit in the chaire of Moſes, is not to ſucceed in the place of Moſes, but to teach according to the law of Moſes: the Phariſies then teaching doctrines not agreeable to that law, did not therein ſit in Moſes chaire: this place then proveth not an infallibility of judgement in the Prelates of the Church to interpret Scripture, nor a neceſſity of obedience: here we will appoſe unto Bellarmine, the judgement of their owne writers: Stella thus interpreteth that place, they ſit in Moſes chaire, Cum bona docebant, &c. When they taught good things, ſuch as Moſes preſcribed. Ianſenius, Non eſt illis obediendum, &c. They muſt not be obeyed, when they teach any thing contrary to that chaire. So alſo Maldonat the Jeſuite, de doctrina legis & Moſes loquitur, He ſpeaketh of the doctrine of the law, and of Moſes.

Concord in Matth. 23. 2. c. 110.
Maldonat. commentar. in hunc locum.

Argum. 5. S. Paul went to Jeruſalem to conferre with S. Peter, Iames and Iohn, otherwiſe he ſaith, he ſhould have runne in vaine: Ergo, the judgement of faith belongeth to Peter, and Peters ſucceſſor, Bellarmine c. 5.

Anſw. Firſt, S. Paul went not up to Jeruſalem of neceſſity; as though he needed to have his doctrine confirmed by the former Apoſtles: for he himſelfe ſaith contrary, Gala. 2. 6. They that ſeemed to be the chiefe communicated nothing with me. And again, Peter was rather confirmed by him, whom he openly rebuketh for a certaine ſlip of infirmity, v. 12. but he ſpeaketh in reſpect of others, that ſaid he taught contrary to the Apoſtles, leſt he ſhould have run in vaine. Secondly, S. Ambroſe ſaith to this purpoſe, that Paul went up to Jeruſalem to ſee Peter, not of neceſſity, Neque ut aliquid ab eo diſceret, qui jam ab authore didicerat, ſed propter affectionem Apoſtolatus, & propter concordiam: Neither to learne any thing of him, who had learned of Chriſt the author himſelfe, but for love unto his fellow Apoſtle, and for concord ſake. Ambroſ. in hunc locum.

The Proteſtants.

WE have a more compendious way to come to the underſtanding of the Scripture: It were too long when we doubt of any place to ſtay till we have the generall conſent of the Paſtors of the Church, or to expect a generall Councell, or go up to Rome. And it were too much to trouble the Popes gravity with every queſtion: the Lord hath ſhewed us a more eaſy and ready way, ſo that we need not aſcend to heaven, or compaſſe the earth, or paſſe the alpes: but the word of God is amongſt us, the Scriptures themſelves and the ſpirit of God opening our hearts, do teach us how to underſtand them. And yet we ſay not, as they doe falſly charge us, that we allow every private mans interpretation of Scripture; and refuſing the judgement of the Paſtors of the Church, place the gift of interpretation in every mans particular breaſt, Bellar. de verb. dei, lib. 3. c. 4. But we deny, that the interpretation of Scripture is aſſigned to any ſucceſſion of Paſtors, or tied to any place or Perſons: and yet grant that it is the office of the Paſtors and Miniſters, to whom the diſpenſation of the word is committed, not of private men to expound Scripture according to the ſenſe and meaning of the ſpirit; and to diſcerne betweene the orthodoxall and hereticall interpretations: yet they are but the inſtruments; the ſpirit of God ſpeaking in the Scriptures is the interpreter of himſelfe: and in this underſtanding we conſent to a decree of one of your own Synods: Synonenſ. ſynod. decret. 4. de fide: Eccleſia catholicum ſenſum ab haeretico germanum ab adulterino diſcernit: The Church doth diſcerne the Catholike ſenſe from the hereticall, the true from the falſe. It hath no power to make or coyne interpretations beſide Scripture, but to diſcerne and diſtinguiſh. Our arguments now follow.

Argum. 1. That only hath power to give the ſenſe of Scripture, which doth beget us faith: the ſpirit only by the Scriptures begetteth faith, Rom. 10. 17. faith commeth by hearing the word: Ergo, the ſpirit of God is the only interpreter of Scripture. The propoſition alſo is cleere: for ſeeing the Scripture is the true ſenſe and meaning thereof, if any ſhould give the ſenſe of the Scripture, but that which worketh faith, then upon him ſhould our faith be grounded. If the Pope therefore give the ſenſe of Scripture, and our faith ariſeth of the Scripture underſtood, then our faith is builded upon the Popes ſenſe, argum. Whitach. 2. & 9.

Rom. 10. 17.

Argum. 2. The Scriptures cannot be interpreted but by the ſame ſpirit, wherewith they were written: but that ſpirit is found no where but in the Scriptures. Ergo, The firſt part the Papiſts themſelves graunt: the ſecond is thus proved. The ſpirit of the Apoſtles is not given by ſecret inſpiration, that ſavoureth of Anabaptiſme: where is it then to be found: whether is it like that Saint Peters ſpirit ſhould be found in the Popes chaire, or in his Epiſtles? or if they have S. Peters ſpirit, where is S. Pauls found but in his writings? Yet it is all one ſpirit, and appeareth not elſewhere but in the Scriptures: where every man may find it as well as the Pope: The ſpirituall man judgeth all things. 1 Cor.2.15. You have an oyntment from him that is holy, and you have knowne all things. 1 Ioh.2.ver.27. You need not that any man teach you. By theſe places it is evident, that every faithfull man by the ſpirit of God according to the meaſure of his gift, and quality of his calling, may underſtand the Scriptures. To this beareth witneſſe that decree, Synod. Colonienſ. part.2.c.4. Presbyteri in lege Domini meditentur die & nocte, & judicia divina exquirant & ſcrutentur non propria præſumptione, aut humano ſenſu, ſed ſpiritu ſancto dictante, &c. Let the Preachers and Presbyters meditate in the law of God day and night, and ſearch and try out the divine judgements, not by their own preſumption, or humane ſenſe, but according to the direction of the ſpirit. This Canon referreth Preachers for the underſtanding of Scripture, not to the Pope or Cardinals, but to the ſpirit of God as the author, and the diligent ſearching of Scripture as the meane.

Act.17.11.

Argum. 3. The doctrine of the Church muſt be examined by the Scriptures: Ergo, the Scriptures are not to ſtand to the judgement of the Church. The former part is prooved by the example of the Berrœans, Acts 17. 11. If they did well in examining Pauls doctrine, much more may the decrees of the Pope, Church, Councels, be examined by the Scriptures. But they knew not whether Paul was an Apoſtle or not, therefore they might examine his doctrine, ſaith the Jeſuite. Anſwer. Firſt, they could not bee ignorant of his Apoſtleſhip, who was famous throughout the Churches. Secondly, they doubted onely whether Paul was an Apoſtle; but we are ſure the Pope is none, neither ſucceſſour of any Apoſtle, but very Antichriſt: Ergo, we have more juſt cauſe to examine his decrees. Thirdly, if S. Pauls Apoſtleſhip might be doubted of, much more may the Popes authority be called into queſtion.

Epheſ.2.20.

Argum. 4. S. Paul ſaith, We are builded upon the foundation of the Prophets and Apoſtles, Epheſ.2.20. The Pope nor his Church are not the foundatiō of the Saints: Ergo, we are not to build upon them nor their interpretation. Bellarm. denieth the aſſumption or ſecond part, and ſaith, that the teſtimony of the Church is a ſecond foundation: for we know not which is the word but by the Church. reſp. ad arg.13. Anſw. 1. The Jeſuite ſpeaketh abſurdly, in ſaying the Church is the foundation, the Church is the building: and the building and foundation cannot bee all one. Secondly, there cannot bee divers foundations: as the Apoſtle ſaith 1 Cor.3.11. Other foundation can no man lay, than that which is laid, Jeſus Chriſt. If it ſhall be objected, how then are Apoſtles ſaid to be foundations? I anſwer, the perſon of the Apoſtles is not the foundation, but their doctrine, which is the faith in Jeſus. Thirdly, it is another untruth, that the Scriptures are not knowne but by the teſtimony of the Church: as partly hath beene ſhewed before, and ſhall more afterwards, as Chriſt ſaith, Iohn 5.34. He did not receive the teſtimony of men, his own works did witneſſe of him; ſo the efficacy of the ſpirit ſpeaking in the Scriptures doth teſtifie of it, that it is the word.

John 5.34.

Arg.5. If the Pope have authority to judge of Scripture, and that the ſenſe of the Scripture without his approbation is not authenticall, then it would follow, that the Pope is above Scripture, which were not only a great abſurdity, but a grievous blaſphemy.

Bellarm. To be ſaid to judge of the Scripture, may be taken two waies, either to judge whether the Scripture be true or no: and who ſo thus judgeth, ſhould be above Scripture; but ſo doth not the Pope: or elſe to judge of the ſenſe of Scripture, which is not to bee above Scripture, but above the private judgements and interpretations of men, ſic Bellarm. lib.3.c.10.reſp. ad argum.14.

Anſw. Firſt, to expound and give the ſenſe of Scripture, by the Scripture it ſelfe, is not to be a judge of Scripture, or ſuperiour to it, but to be ſubjected rather unto it and ordered by it: but the Pope in taking upon him abſolute authority to expound Scripture, doth make himſelfe ſuperiour to it, in as much as the Scripture is not the letter, but the ſenſe thereof: he therefore that overruleth the ſenſe, overruleth Scripture. Secondly, again, hee that may give the ſenſe to Scripture, as it pleaſeth him, may at his pleaſure make the Scripture true or falſe; for the Scripture is the ſenſe: the Pope for the moſt part giveth a falſe ſenſe of Scripture, and ſo maketh the Scripture falſe: and thus is he become a Judge of Scripture after the firſt way, which the Jeſuite denieth.

Now let Auguſtine ſpeake: Novit charitas veſtra omnes nos unum magiſtrum habere, & ſub illo condiſcipulos eſſe, nec ideo magiſtri ſumus, quia de ſuperiore loco loquimur vobis, ſed magiſter eſt omnium, qui habitat in nobis omnibus, &c. You know brethren (ſaith he) that we are all fellow ſchollers under one maſter, and though we ſpeake to you out of an higher place, yet are we not your maſter, he is the teacher and maſter of us all that dwelleth in us all, &c. Ergo, the ſpirit of God ſpeaking in the Scriptures, is the chiefe and beſt interpreter thereof.

I will enforce againſt them firſt their Imperial lawes, then their own Pontificiall conſtitutions, which order I purpoſe God willing to obſerve throughout.

Firſt, Iuſtinian hath this law, Cod. lib.1.tit.17.leg.11. Quis legum ænigmata ſolvere idoneus eſſe videbitur, niſi is, cui ſoli legiſlatorem eſſe conceſſum eſt? Who is thought more fit to open the darke ſentences of the law, but he that hath authority to make them? And therfore he concludeth, Tam conditor, quam interpres legum ſolus Imperator juſte cenſebitur: The Emperour only is of right taken to bee both the maker, and interpreter of the law. As then the Imperiall lawes muſt be interpreted by the Emperour that made them; ſo the divine lawes by the ſpirit of God that gave them: ſo alſo ſaith your owne law.

decret. Gregor. lib. 5. tit. 39. c. 31. Innocent. 3. Vnde jus prodiit, interpretatio quoque procedat: Let the interpretation proceede from whence the law commeth.

Secondly, ſearch further your own decrees, part. 1. diſt. 20. præfat. Divinarum tractatores ſcripturarum in ſacrarum ſcripturarum expoſitionibus eis preponuntur: The interpreters of Scripture for the expoſition thereof, muſt be preferred before the Popes: Ergo, all reſteth not in the Popes breaſt.

Let us laſtly heare the judgement of an holy Martyr, that maintained this truth with the loſſe of his life; who being demanded of Boner, denied that the Pope had any authority to expound Scripture: adding further, what a goodly expoſition did the Pope make of Scripture, when he ſet his foot upon the Emperours neck, and ſaid, Thou ſhalt walke upon the Lyon and the Aſpe, the young Lyon and the Dragon. ſic Roger. Holland. Fox p. 2040. col. 2. His reaſon is this, the Pope miſconſtrueth Scripture, and expoundeth it as he liſt. Ergo, this authority is not given him of God.

Pag. 1851, laſt edit.

That the Pope with his adherents hath no ſuch authority to interpret Scripture, it is the opinion alſo of other forrain Churches. 1. Nilus Archbiſhop of Theſſalonica, thus delivereth the judgement of the Greeke Church; That Peter in the aſſembly at Ieruſalem tooke not upon him the primacy, but both he and the reſt condeſcended unto the opinion of S. Iames. The Muſcovites deny that Peter was the true Biſhop of Rome, or that he was the only head of the militant Church: The ſame they beleeve of the Biſhop of Rome, &c. The Pope then hath no ſuch ſoveraigne power from Peter to expound Scripture.

2 The Ethiopike Church conſenteth: Preſter Iohn ſaid to Alvares, who had confeſſed that they were obliged to all, which the Pope commanded: If the Pope would uſurpe ſo great prerogative, as to uſe toward them an unlawfull commandement, they would not make any reckoning of it. And if by ſuch meanes their Abuna (who is their Church Biſhop) would preſume ſo farre, they would burne the copy of ſuch commandement.

3 The reformed Churches make the Scripture interpreter of it ſelfe: the former confeſſion of Helvetia artic. 1. The interpretation of the Scripture is to be taken only from her ſelfe, that her ſelfe may be the interpreter of herſelfe, the rule of faith and charity being the guide: confeſſion of Bohemia, c. 1. The ſpirit himſelfe, openeth and diſcloſeth the meaning, how it ought to be underſtood. confeſſion of Wittemberg. c. 30. Whereas they ſay that the right of expounding Scripture lieth in the power of the chiefe Biſhops, it is evident that the gift of expounding Scripture is not of mans wiſedome, but of the holy Ghoſt, &c. confeſſion of Auſpurg. artic. 7. The Church hath the gift of interpretation, that is, of underſtanding the heavenly doctrine, but that it is not tied to the name or degree of Biſhops, &c. But thoſe that are learned in the word of God, and borne againe by his ſpirit in what place ſoever they be, they aſſent unto the Word of God, and underſtand the ſame, ſome more, ſome leſſe, &c.

4 Concerning the teſtimony of the Popiſh writers, it is alleaged before; as of Stella, Ianſenius, and Maldonat, in the anſwer to the 4. argument.

The third part of the ſixth queſtion: concerning the meanes or method to be uſed in interpreting of Scripture.

The Papiſts.

OVr adverſaries preſcribe this method and courſe to bee taken in expounding of Scripture, which conſiſteth in foure rules: the generall practice of the Church, the conſonant interpretation of the Fathers, the decrees of generall Councels; laſtly, the rule of faith, conſiſting partly of the Scriptures, partly of traditions unwritten, Stapleton. Concerning the three firſt, we have already touched them in part: they appeare to be inſufficient. Firſt, the Councels and Fathers he made chiefe interpreters of Scripture before, and now they are but meanes: what other chiefe judge then is there to uſe theſe meanes? ſurely none but the Scriptures. Secondly, theſe meanes are moſt uncertaine, the practice of the Church is often changed, Fathers agree not in their expoſitions, and Councels cannot alwaies be had.

10. Error.

Concerning the rule of faith conſiſting of unwritten verities: he groundeth it falſly upon that place, Rom. 12. 6. Let us prophecy according to the rule of Faith, and Galat. 6. 16. As many as walke according to this rule. This rule was a certaine platforme of Religion, given by the Apoſtles before the Scriptures were written, according to the which (ſay they) the Scriptures were afterward compiled by the Apoſtles. Rhemenſ. in Rom. 12. 6. Anſwer: Saint Paul meaneth no other rule, but that which is ſet downe in his writings: no other forme of doctrine but that contained in his Epiſtles, as in the 6. to the Galathians, ſpeaking of this rule, he alludeth to the former verſe, where he ſaith, he rejoyced in nothing but in the Croſſe of Chriſt: his rule therefore is to receive Chriſt onely without the ceremonies or works of the Law: againſt the which hereſie he diſputeth in the whole Epiſtle. But of all other it is a great blaſphemy to ſay that the Apoſtles ſet downe the Scriptures by a rule, as though the ſpirit of God, by whom they ſpake, had need of any ſuch direction. So then no unwritten rule can give a direction to the written word, but the written word rather giveth a rule to all other things, as one of your owne Popes confeſſeth: Cum ex ſcripturis integram quis & firmam regulam ſuſceperit veritatis, &c. When a man hath gathered a firme and certaine rule of truth out of the Scriptures, then may he compare with it other liberall arts, &c. Concerning alſo theſe foure waies of theirs,

Rom. 12. 6. Galat. 6. 16.

Clemen. 1. dec. p. 1. d. 37. c. 14.

I will appoſe them againe with their owne authority: decr.p.1.d.20.c.3. Innocentius 1. the decree ſtandeth thus, which I will only ſet downe tranſlated, becauſe it is long: If there be any cauſe which cannot be diſſolved by the books of the old Teſtament, the foure Evangeliſts and writings of the Apoſtles, then have recourſe to the divine writings in Greeke: if nothing be found there, then to the Canons of the Apoſtolike See: if not there, then to the Catholike ſtories of the Church: if neither there, conſider the practiſe of the Saints: if yet the queſtion cannot be diſſolved, gather the elders of the Province, and aske them, &c. Out of this decree I gather three things: firſt that the meanes here preſcribed, are not to be uſed, but where the Scripture is ſilent: and therefore where any thing may be decided by Scripture, theſe helpes are ſuperfluous. Secondly, in the laſt place we are not referred to the Pope and his Cardinals, but to the elders, that is, the Biſhops, Paſtors and Miniſters of every Province. Thirdly, hee ſendeth us to the Greeke originall of the Scriptures, which is one of the meanes that we doe preſcribe.

The Proteſtants.

WHen we ſay that the Scriptures muſt expound themſelves, our meaning is, that by certaine compendious and ready meanes, we ſhould labour to underſtand the Scriptures by themſelves: 1 Tim.2.15. the meanes are eſpecially theſe foure: Firſt, to have recourſe to the originall tongue, as in the old Teſtament to the Hebrue; in the new, to the Greeke: as 1 Tim.2.15, Through bearing of children they ſhall be ſaved, if they continue in faith and love: in the Engliſh it is doubtfull whether this clauſe, if they continue in faith, be referred to children, or to thoſe that beare them; but reade the Greeke and the doubt is removed: for bearing of children is all one word in the originall τεκνογονία, ſo that it muſt needs be underſtood of the women, for the word τεκνογονία, bearing of children is in the ſingular number, that which followeth of the plurall, and it is but an action, not a perſon; ſo that it ſhould be improperly ſaid, if they continue, that is, the bearing of children.

Stapleton objecteth againſt this meane: that it is not now needfull, ſeeing there is a perfect and abſolute tranſlation authoriſed by the Councell of Trent, he meaneth the vulgar Latine. We anſwer: firſt, it is no perfect, but an erroneous tranſlation, and very corrupt. Secondly, if it were never ſo perfect, yet for more certainty, it is profitable to ſearch the originall: every man will truſt his own skill, rather than another mans. Thirdly the Councell did fondly in authoriſing an old blind tranſlation, before the authenticall copies of the Hebrue and Greeke. For the Greeke originall, we have the decree of Innocentius the firſt, before repeated: and for recourſe to be had to the Hebrue, we have the practice of their own Maſter of Sentences: who in deciding of a certaine queſtion, in the ſecond of Geneſis, whether we ſhould reade conſummavit Deus, or complevit, God did conſummate, or accompliſh his works upon the ſeventh day, reſolveth upon the latter reading: Quod habet Hebraica veritas, which is, ſaith he, according to the Hebrue verity. lib 2.d.15.g.

2. Secondly, the ſcope of the place, the circumſtance of it, with that which goeth before and commeth after, muſt be weighed, which will bring great light to the place we have in hand: an example we have 1 Pet.4.8. 1 Pet.4.8. Love covereth the multitude of ſinnes: the Papiſts gather out of theſe words, that love doth juſtifie us before God, and taketh away our ſins: but by the circumſtance of the place, the Apoſtle ſaying immediately before: Have fervent love among you, it is evident he underſtandeth brotherly love amongſt our ſelves, whereby faults are buried, forgiven, and forgotten.

Stapleton objecteth, that this is but an uncertaine way, and many times faileth: for the Scripture paſſeth many times from one matter and argument to another: how then can it helpe to conſider the circumſtance of the place being of a diverſe matter? We anſwer, we ſay not that any of theſe meanes ſerveth for every place, but when one faileth, to uſe another: when the circumſtance helpeth not, to run to the originall; if there we find no ſuccour, to compare places together; and when wee may, to uſe them all or the moſt. This rule of examining the circumſtances, as the precedence, and conſequence of a text, may be alſo warranted by their own practice: So Nicholas the fourth, in expounding of the rule of S. Francis giveth this precept: Sext. decret. lib.5. tit.12. c.3. Vtriuſq; juris argumenta nos docent, ea, qua in principio ad medium & finem; illa vero, qua in medio, ad principium & finem; & qua in fine ad utrumq; vel eorum alterum ſepe referri: The reaſon of both lawes doth teach us, that the beginning muſt be referred to the middeſt and the end; the middeſt to the beginning and the end; the end unto both the other, or the one of them at the leaſt, &c. If they themſelves then are ſo curious in the ſifting out of the meaning of their ſuperſtitious Father, with what face can they blame our diligence in ſearching the ſenſe of the Scripture?

Iam.2.21. Rom.4.2. 3. Thirdly, the conference of places is very profitable, as James 2.21. Abraham was juſtified by works, compare it with that place, Rom.4.2. there Saint Paul ſaith flatly, that Abraham was not juſtified, by works. Wherefore ſeeing one Apoſtle is not contrary to the other: wee muſt needs gather, that this word juſtified is diverſly taken: Paul ſaith that Abraham was not juſtified, that is, made righteous before God by his works; James ſaith he was juſtified, that is, declared to be juſt before men, and ſo Thomas Aquinas expoundeth it.

Stapleton objecteth, that this meanes in comparing of places is of it ſelfe many times of ſmall force. Anſw. As though we affirme that theſe meanes muſt bee uſed aſunder, and not rather jointly together, and where one faileth, another to helpe. Secondly, ſome things are found but once in the Scriptures. Anſwer, they are then either very plaine, or not greatly neceſſary. Thirdly, heretikes have erred in comparing of Scripture. Anſw. They compared them not diligently, nor with a ſincere minde, but corruptly and negligently.

Bellarmine objecteth, that the Scripture cannot interpret, or bee Judge of it ſelfe: for when one place receiveth divers ſenſes, non poteſt dicere, &c: The Scripture cannot ſay which is the true ſenſe: and in the Common-wealth, the Law and the Judge are two diſtinct things, &c.cap.9.

Contra 1. It is untrue that the Scripture cannot ſay or ſhew, which is the true ſenſe: the Apoſtle often uſeth this phraſe, *The Scripture ſaith, Rom.*9.17. 11.2. Therefore the Scripture both ſaith and ſpeaketh to the faithfull, that have eares to heare the voice of the Scripture. 2. Wee denie not but as in the Common-wealth there is the Judge and the Law; ſo in the Church, there is the Scripture and interpreter of Scripture: who although hee hath not like authoritie over the divine law, as the Judge over an humane; yet as the Judge muſt fetch the interpretation of the Law out of the Law it ſelfe; ſo he that interpreteth muſt expound Scripture by Scripture.

Let us heare what that reverend and learned man, and conſtant Martyr, B. Cranmer thinketh of this meane in comparing and conferring of Scripture: I wonder, ſaith he, *that you doe attribute ſo little to the reading of Scripture, and conferring of places, ſeeing the Scriptures doe ſo much commend the ſame, as Ioh.*5. Scrutamini Scripturas, ſearch the Scriptures, *Fox.*Pag.1460. in diſput. Oxonienſ. This reverend fathers judgement, I dare ſet againſt either Stapletons opinion, or any others of that ſide: nay, put the ſentence of their whole Church in one ballance, it ſhall not bee able, in this, or any other point of the Chriſtian faith, to weigh againſt the faith of theſe holy Martyrs in the day of judgement, but ſhall bee found lighter than vanitie.

Leo the firſt alſo ſometime Biſhop of Rome, whoſe judgement our adverſaries, I thinke, dare not refuſe, thus writeth of this meane in having recourſe to the Scripture; *Epiſtol.decretal.*10.*cap.*1. In hanc inſipientiam cadunt hæretici, qui cum ad cognoſcendam veritatem aliquo impediuntur obſcuro, non ad propheticas voces, Apoſtolicas literas, nec ad Evangelicas authoritates, ſed ad ſeipſos recurrunt, &c. Such is the fooliſhneſſe of Hereticks, that when as by ſome darke place they are hindred from knowing the truth, they will not reſort to the Prophets and Apoſtles writings, but truſt onely to themſelves, &c. His counſell is, if wee meet with any darke place in Scripture, to reſort to none other but to the Prophets and Apoſtles for the underſtanding thereof. And Clemens the firſt ſaith, as hee is cited by *Gratian.decr,p.*1.*tit.*37.c. 14. Ex ipſis Scripturis debemus ſenſum capere veritatis: We muſt take the ſenſe of the Scripture, from the Scriptures themſelves.

4 The fourth rule is the analogie and proportion of faith, which is nothing elſe but the ſumme and grounds of religion gathered out of Scripture, ſuch as are contained in the Creed, the Lords Prayer, the ten Commandements, and in our whole Catechiſme. We muſt take heed that in the interpretation of Scripture we ſwarve not from this rule of faith, nor impugne any principle of Religion. Wherefore the Papiſts interpretaion of thoſe words of Chriſt we doe reject, Hoc eſt corpus meum, This is my body: who would have the very fleſh of Chriſt preſent in the ſacrament: for this is againſt the article of the Creed, that Chriſt is aſcended into heaven, and there ſitteth till his comming againe in judgement.

Concerning theſe meanes, thus writeth *Auguſtine; Rariſſimè invenitur ambiguitas in verbis propriis, quam non aut circumſtantia ipſa ſermonis qua cognoſcitur Scripturarum intentio, aut interpretum collatio, aut præcedentis linguæ ſalvat inſpectio, de doctrin. Chriſt.lib.*3.4. There is almoſt no ambiguitie in any word properly uſed (that is not metaphoricall or borrowed) which may not either by the circumſtance of the place, the conference and comparing of interpreters, or by looking into the Originals, eaſily be taken away. Auguſtine wee ſee approveth this method, though our adverſaries like it not. So alſo in your owne decrees: *decr.p.*2.cauſ. 24. qu. 3.c. 22. Quicunque aliter Scripturam intelligit, quam ſenſus ſpiritus ſancti flagitat, quo ſcripta eſt, hæreticus appellari poteſt: He that otherwiſe underſtandeth Scripture, than after the meaning of the ſpirit wherewith it is written, is an heretike, &c. Wherefore the Scripture out of Scripture muſt bee expounded: for where elſe is the ſpirit of the Scripture to bee found, but in the Scripture?

Beſides theſe meanes, which I have ſhewed, prayer muſt bee uſed before wee enterpriſe any thing, that the Lord would direct us. And they which cannot ſo eaſily take this courſe, which is preſcribed, ſhall doe well to ſeeke helpe of learned and godly expoſitors, or to conſult with their Paſtors and Miniſters.

Concerning forraine teſtimonies, that the interpretation of Scripture muſt bee agreeable to the Scripture it ſelfe, and taken out of it. 1. Ieremie Oecumenine Patriarch, in the name of the Greeke Church, thus teſtifieth: Let theſe things ſuffice you, which as you ſee doe beſt accord and agree with the Scriptures, unto us divinely given, according to the interpretation and expoſition of the moſt wiſe and holy fathers inſpired of God, &c. And a little after: Some of you will demand, by what meanes one may attaine unto this; that ſhall he doe by the aid and aſſiſtance of God, if he attempt nothing, and follow but that which hath beene ordained by the Apoſtles and holy Councels, &c. 2. The Abyſſines beleeve, that there is not any power, Councell, or whatſoever, to make lawes, &c. much leſſe any doctrine, which is not grounded upon the Scripture. The ſame author relateth, that the Abyſſines have certaine writings beſide the Scripture, of great authoritie among them, called Manda and Abetilis, which they ſuppoſe to have beene compoſed by the Apoſtles at Jeruſalem; and Preſter Iohn asked Alvares, whether hee had ſeene that booke: yet they make the Scripture ſufficient without theſe bookes : wherby it appeareth, that they preferre the Scripture it ſelfe before all by-interpretations.

Harm. ſect.1. pag.5.

3 The reformed Churches : Helvetia, latter confeſſion, chap.2. thus approveth of theſe meanes of interpreting Scripture : We acknowledge that interpretation of Scripture for authenticall, which is taken from the Scriptures themſelves, that is, the phraſe of that tongue, in the which they were written, they being alſo weighed according to the circumſtances, and expounded according to the proportion of places like or unlike, or of more and plainer, according with the rule of faith and charitie,&c. Here all thoſe foure rules are approved before ſet downe. Confeſſion of Wittemberg, chap.30. The true meaning of Scripture is to be ſought in the Scripture it ſelfe, and among thoſe, that being raiſed up by the ſpirit of God, expound Scripture by Scripture,&c.

Comment. in Matth.23.

4 Some teſtimonies of the Romane Church are produced before, as of Leo 1. *Clemens.*1. Gratian: whereunto I will adde that obſervation of Arias Montanus of the Phariſies, who interpreting that place *Matth.*23. how they ſhut up the kingdome of heaven, thus writeth: They did ſo obtrude the obſervation of their owne ceremonies, &c. that they would not permit that any, vel de ſacris ſcripturis cogitarent, ſhould ſo much as thinke of the ſacred Scriptures, but according to the preſcript of their interpretations. Theſe Phariſies, as the Papiſts now, would not have men to have recourſe to the Scriptures, but to relie upon their interpretations onely. Eſpenſaus alloweth that ſentence of Gregorie : Qui verè loqui deſiderant, à ſacris literis ſumant, &c. They who will ſpeake truth, let them take out of the ſacred Scriptures, what they will ſpeake, that whatſoever they ſpeake, they may reduce to the foundation of the divine authoritie.

Greg. moral. in Iob, lib.18. cap.14.

The ſeventh Queſtion : Concerning the perfection and ſufficiencie of Scripture.

11. Error.

THis queſtion is divided into three parts. Firſt, whether the Scriptures bee abſolutely neceſſarie. Secondly, whether they bee ſufficient without unwritten traditions. Thirdly, whether there be any traditions of faith and manners beſide the Scriptures.

The firſt part of the neceſſity of the Scriptures.

The Papiſts.

THe Jeſuite laboureth to prove that the Scriptures are not ſimply neceſſarie : which we denie not, for meat is not ſimply neceſſarie, for God may preſerve man without : ſo in reſpect of God, nothing is ſimply neceſſarie : God is not neceſſarily tied to uſe this or that meanes. But his arguments doe tend to this end, to ſhew that the Scriptures are not neceſſarie at all, and may bee ſpared in the Church (ſo ſaith Petrus à Soto) the Scripture was not alway extant, and it is not neceſſarie unto faith : and the Scripture is not now ſo neceſſarie ſince Chriſt, as it was afore : Tilman. de verb. Dei error. 17.

*Argum.*1. There was no Scripture from Adam to Moſes, for the ſpace of two thouſand yeeres, and yet true religion was kept and continued, and why might not true religion bee as well preſerved 1500 yeeres after Chriſt without Scripture, as afore? *Bellarmine de verb. Dei, lib.4.cap.4.argum.*1.

We anſwer : It followeth not, becauſe in times paſt God taught his Church immediately by a lively voyce, and other extraordinary meanes, as viſions, revelations, prophecies, that the written word is not neceſſarie now, when all other meanes ceaſe : for the Lord ſaw it good, that his word ſhould bee left in writing, that we might have a certaine rule of our faith in this corrupt and ſinfull age. And what elſe is this, but to controll the wiſdome of God, ſaying, it is not neceſſary or needfull for the Church, which the Lord ſaw to be needfull : for if the Lord had thought it as good for us to be taught without Scripture, as in that ſimple and innocent age of the world (I meane innocent in reſpect of us) he would not have moved and ſtirred up his Apoſtles to write.

Argum. 2. After the time of Moſes, when the law was written, yet there were many that feared God amongſt the Gentiles, which had not the Scriptures, as Iob, and the other his friends : Ergo, the Scripture not neceſſarie. The Jewes alſo themſelves uſed traditions more than Scriptures, as Pſalme 44. *verſ.*1, 2. The fathers did report the workes of God to their children : by the negligence alſo of the Prieſts the law was loſt, as 2 *King.*22. we read that the volume of the law was found, which had beene miſſing a long time : Bellarm. ibid.

We anſwer : firſt, even the faithfull amongſt the Gentiles did read the Scripture, as the Eunuch Act. 8. had the booke of the Prophet Eſay. Secondly, the Jewes declared the workes of God unto their children, but the ſame were alſo written, as how the heathen were caſt out before them, and of their deliverance out of Egypt : thoſe were the things they heard of their fathers, as wee read *Pſal.*44. and 78. yet all theſe things are recorded in the Bookes of Moſes. Thirdly, what though the Prieſts were negligent in preſerving the Scriptures, it is no good argument to prove that therefore they are not neceſſarie, neither was the whole booke of the law loſt, but either Moſes owne manuſcript, or the booke of Deuteronomie. Yet he hath proved nothing.

*Argum.*3. The Church after Chriſt wanted the Scriptures many yeeres : Ergo, they are not neceſſarie, Bellarm. ibid.

We anſwer, it is a great untruth : for the old Teſtament the Church could not be without, and the new Teſtament was written not long after in the age of the Apoſtles : whoſe lively voyce and preachings were unto them, as their writings are now to us. See now what ſtrong arguments they bring: the Scriptures were not neceſſarie in the time of the Patriarkes, when God taught them by his owne voyce ; they were not neceſſarie in the time of the Prophets and Apoſtles, when they had men inſpired of God to teach them. : Ergo, they are not now neceſſarie, when neither God teacheth from heaven, neither have we any Prophets or Apoſtles to inſtruct us by heavenly revelations : nay rather becauſe they were not neceſſarie then, when they had other effectuall meanes, notwithſtanding they are neceſſarie now, ſeeing there is no other way of inſtruction left unto us.

*Argum.*4. If the writing of the Scriptures were neceſſarie, then Chriſt would not have omitted to have given his Apoſtles charge and commandement ſo to doe : but this hee doth not ; neither doe the Apoſtles make mention of any ſuch charge that was given them, but onely to preach : *Bellarmine cap.*4. *argum.*2.

*Anſw.*1. It was not needfull that our Saviour Chriſt ſhould give his Apoſtles charge concerning all neceſſarie things to bee done in the Church, ſeeing hee was to ſend them the holy Ghoſt who ſhould leade them into all truth : and therefore our Saviour telleth them, that he had many things to ſay, but they could not beare them, but the ſpirit afterward ſhould teach them, Iohn 16.12,13. The inſtitution of Deacons, *Act.*6. the forbidding of things ſuffocated, *Act.*15. for a time were neceſſarie; yet herein they received no inſtruction from Chriſt, who referred them to the direction of the ſpirit. Secondly, Chriſt notwithſtanding did alſo give them a charge to write, both by way of implication, where he biddeth them teach all nations, *Matth.*28. which was impoſſible to be done by their lively voyce, and therefore muſt be ſupplied by their writing : as alſo directly Iohn is charged to write to the Churches, *Apocal.*1.11. And this being the laſt booke which is commanded to be written, it is not to be doubted of, but that the reſt were written by the ſame authoritie. Thirdly, the Jeſuite himſelfe ſaith: Apoſtoli non niſi neceſſitate quadam coacti : The Apoſtles did not write, but thereunto moved of neceſſitie. But if the Scriptures were not neceſſarie, there ſhould be no neceſſitie of writing.

John 16.12, 13.

Revel. 1.11.

The Proteſtants.

THat the Scriptures are neceſſarie for the people of God, the reading, preaching, and underſtanding whereof is the onely ordinarie meanes to beget faith in us, wee thus prove out of the Scriptures themſelves.

*Argum.*1. Theſe Scriptures containe neceſſarie knowledge to ſalvation, which cannot be learned but out of the Scripture : Ergo, they are neceſſarie. The knowledge of the law is neceſſarie ; but that only is derived from the Scripture : as the Apoſtle witneſſeth, *Rom.*7.7. he had not knowne luſt to be ſinne, unleſſe the law had ſaid, Thou ſhalt not luſt. And if the right knowledge of the law is not learned, but out of Scripture ; much more the knowledge of the Goſpell which is more high and myſticall, and more ſtrange unto our nature.

Rom. 7.7.

*Argum.*2. That whereby we are kept from error and doubtfulneſſe in matters of faith is neceſſarie: but this is performed by the Scripture. Ergo. Firſt, the Scripture keepeth us from error : *Matth.*22.29. Ye erre, not knowing the Scriptures (ſaith our Saviour.) The ignorance of Scripture was cauſe of their error. Secondly, if our knowledge were only builded upon tradition without Scripture, we ſhould be doubtfull and uncertaine of the truth : ſo S. Luke ſaith in his Preface to Theophilus, I have written (ſaith he) that thou mighteſt be certaine of thoſe things, whereof thou haſt been inſtructed. Hence we conclude, that although we might know the truth without Scripture, as Theophilus did, yet wee cannot know it certainly without it.

Matth. 22.29.

*Argum.*3. If the Scriptures be not neceſſarie, then we may be without them ; but this cannot be : Ergo, the Scriptures cannot be ſpared : for then God had done a needleſſe and ſuperfluous worke in ſtirring up the Prophets and Apoſtles to write. S. Paul ſaith, that whatſoever is written, is written for our learning, that through patience and conſolation of the Scriptures we might have hope, *Rom.*15.4. The Lord ſaw in wiſdome that his people could not bee without the Scriptures, which are neceſſarie for their learning, for their comfort, and to ſtrengthen their hope : how then dare our adverſaries ſay, that the Scriptures are not neceſſarie, ſeeing theſe things wrought in us only by the Scriptures, knowledge, conſolation, hope, are moſt neceſſarie.

Rom. 15 4.

*Argum.*4. The knowledge of eternall life is neceſſarie ; but that commeth only by the Scriptures: Iohn 5.39. Search the Scriptures, for in them you thinke to have eternall life : Ergo, they are neceſſarie. Againe, to be made wiſe unto ſalvation, and perfect to every good work, are neceſſary : but theſe things the Scripture worketh, 2 *Timoth.*3.15.17. Further, a man cannot walke in darkneſſe without light, ſo that light in darkneſſe is neceſſarie : but the Scriptures are light in a darke place, 2 *Pet.*1.19. Laſtly, our Saviour himſelfe ſaith to Martha, *Luk.*10.42. unum neceſſarium, one thing is neceſſarie, namely that which Mary had choſen, to heare the word and voyce of Chriſt, who elſewhere ſpeaketh not but in Scripture, Iohn 5.39. they teſtifie of me, and verſe 46. Moſes wrote of me : Ergo, the knowledge of the Scriptures is neceſſarie.

Ioh. 5.39 46.

Let Auguſtine now put in his verdict: Illud credo, quod etiam hinc divinorum eloquiorum clariſſima au- thoritas eſſet, ſi homo illud ſine diſpendio ſalutis ignorare non poſſit. de peccator. merit. & remiſſ. lib. 2. 36. I thinke (ſaith he) that even concerning this matter (ſpeaking of the Originall or beginning of the ſoule) the Scriptures would not have been ſilent, if wee might not ſafely be ignorant of this matter, without danger of ſalvation, &c. Ergo whatſoever is neceſſarie to ſalvation, is onely to be found in Scripture (for other matters there not expreſſed, there is no danger in not knowing them) therefore the Scriptures by this Fathers Judgement are moſt neceſſarie. Let us heare a teſtimonie of their owne.

Concil. Lateranenſ. ſub Innocentio 3. cap. 10. We finde this decree: Inter cætera, quæ ad ſalutem ſpectant populi Chriſtiani pabulum verbi Dei permaxime noſcitur ſibi neceſſarium, quia ſicut corpus materiali, ita anima ſpirituali nutritur cibo. Among other things which concerne the ſalvation of Chriſtian people, the food of the word of God is knowne to bee moſt neceſſarie; for as the body is fed with materiall food, ſo the ſoule with ſpirituall, &c. the food therefore of Gods word is moſt neceſſarie. And leſt it might be imagined, that the word unwritten is as well here underſtood, as the word written: let it be conſidered what Gelaſius Biſhop of Rome writeth in his decretals, Epiſtol. ad Euphemiam. Fides ex auditu, auditus per verbum Dei: illudi. verbum, quod confeſſioni B. Petri Apoſtoli portas inferni nunquam prævalituras eſſe promiſit: Faith commeth by hearing, hearing by the word of God: that is, that word which promiſed that the gates of hell ſhould not prevaile againſt the confeſſion of Peter, &c. And this is the word written; the neceſſity then of the word of God, is the neceſſity of the word written.

Reſponſ Rohit.

Here we have the teſtimonie of forraine Churches for the neceſſitie of Scripture, 1. For the Greeke Church: the King of Muſcovia ſaid. If the Goſpell had not been written, how could the word of God have been underſtood.

2 The Abyſſines have certaine writings beſide the Scriptures, which they call Manda, and Abetiles, whereof they make great account; but they doe beleeve that the holy Scripture is ſufficient to ſalvation without thoſe; they hold then the Scriptures onely to be neceſſarie.

Harmon p.10.

3 The reformed Churches in the Weſt: confeſſion of Helvetia, the latter, chapt. 1. Wee judge that from theſe Scriptures is to be taken true wiſedome and godlineſſe, the reformation and government of Churches, alſo the inſtuction in all duties of pietie, &c. But thoſe inſtructions and directions are moſt neceſſarie: confeſſion of Belgia, artic. 2. Afterward God himſelfe for that exceeding tender carefulneſſe which he hath of his and their ſalvation, gave in commiſſion to his ſervants the Prophets and Apoſtles, that they ſhould put thoſe his oracles in writing, and he himſelfe alſo wrote the two Tables of the Law with his owne finger, &c. But if the Lord had not ſeene, that the Scriptures were neceſſarie, his tender carefulnes ſhould not have ſo much appeared, in cauſing them to be written: 2. of Bohemia, cap. 1. Without the revelation of Scripture, there is no wholeſome knowledge, no faith nor acceſſe to God.

4 The teſtimonie of the Romaniſts is not here wanting. Roffenſis: The Scripture is a certaine conclave of all truthes; Quæ Chriſtianis omnibus neceſſaria ſunt: which are neceſſarie for all Chriſtians: Ederus: whatſoever things are neceſſarie to ſalvation, præſcripta ſunt omnia, They are all written in the Scriptures.

The ſecond part of the ſeventh Queſtion, of the ſufficiencie of Scripture.

The Papiſts.

12. Error.

THey doe ſtrangely affirme, that the Scriptures containe not all things neceſſarie to bee knowne concerning faith and manners, and that they are not ſufficient without traditions, Bellarmine cap. 3.4. Lindanus a Papiſt ſaith, that the Scriptures containe not all things neceſſarie to ſalvation. Andradius, that their approved traditions are of equall authoritie with the Sciptures, Ex Tilmam. de verbo error. 2.

Argum. 1. The Jeſuite thus reaſoneth againſt the ſufficiencie of Scripture: There are divers books of Canonicall Scripture loſt and Periſhed: Ergo that part of Canonicall Scripture which remaineth, is not ſufficient. That much is loſt, he thus proveth, 1. Chron. cap. vlt. mention is made of the books of Nathan and Gad. 2. Chron. 9. of the books of Abijah and Ieedo: and in the new Teſtament, Col. 4. of the Epiſtle of S. Paul. to the Laodiceans: all thoſe books are loſt.

Anſw. 1. S. Auguſtine thus anſwereth, thoſe books of the Prophets, which are named in the Kings, are not found in the Canon, for what cauſe, ſaith he, I know not, Niſi quod exiſtimo prophetas illos, alia ſicut homines, hiſtorica diligentia; alia ſicut prophetas inſpiratione divina ſcribere potuiſſe: But that I think, that thoſe Prophets might write ſome ſtories as men, and ſome things as Prophets, by the inſpiration of the ſpirit, lib. 36. de civitat. Dei. c. 38. Thus Auguſtine thinketh that thoſe books now wanting, were no part of the Canonicall Scripture. But we denie not, but that ſome bookes are now wanting, which were part of Canonicall Scripture, and yet that which remaineth is ſufficient: as ſome of Salomons bookes are Periſhed, which he wrote of hearbs and plants, and many of his Proverbs: the Lord ſaw that they were not ſo greatly neceſſarie for us to ſalvation, as containing matter of ſtorie rather than of doctrine. Secondly, there is not ſo much wanting, as the Jeſuite would beare us in hand: for the bookes of the Prophets which he nameth, are the ſame with the bookes of the Chronicles and of the Kings, which no doubt were written by thoſe Prophets. And as for the Epiſtle of S. Paul to the Laodiceans, there was never any ſuch : The text is, Written from the Laodiceans ; it was the Epiſtle rather of the Laodiceans to Saint Paul, unto the which he partly maketh anſwer in the Epiſtle to the Coloſſians, and therefore he would have it read alſo in their Church. And this is Saint Hieromes judgement concerning this Epiſtle : Legunt quidam & epiſtolam ad Laodicenſes, ſed ab omnibus exploditur : Some doe read the Epiſtle to the Laodiceans, but it is refuſed of all men : catalog. ſcriptor.

Argum.*2. There are two things in Scripture, the letter and the ſenſe : the firſt is knowne to all that can read, but the ſecond is not had without tradition : Ergo, the Scriptures are not ſufficient, Bellarm.

Anſw. First, the ſenſe of the Scriptures is contained in the Scriptures themſelves, and if it bee not there to be found, it is not the ſenſe of the Scriptures. And of this matter your owne Clemens giveth a good rule, as he is alleaged by Gratian: Decret. par. 1. diſt 37. cap. 14. Non ſenſum, quem extrinſecus adulteretis, alienum & extraneum debetis quarere, &c. ſed ex ipſis ſcripturis ſenſum capere veritatis : You muſt not ſeeke for a ſtrange ſenſe without, which you may adulterate at your pleaſure, but out of the Scriptures themſelves the ſenſe of truth muſt be had. Secondly, the Jeſuite is intangled in his owne ſpeech : for he ſaith, Duo eſſe in ſcriptura, voces ſcriptas, & ſenſum : There are two things in Scripture, the written words, and the ſenſe : Ergo, the ſenſe of Scripture (by his owne confeſſion) is in the Scripture.

Argum.*3. There are many points which we ought in no wiſe to be ignorant of, which the Scripture ſpeakes either obſcurely of, or not at all.

First, theſe things are obſcurely and doubtfully ſet downe in Scripture, the equality of the perſons in Trinitie, the proceeding of the holy Ghoſt, from the Father and the Sonne ; the doctrine of originall ſinne.

Wee anſwer : firſt, if theſe things be found at all in the Scriptures, it is ſufficient concerning the queſtion we have in hand. Secondly, the Scripture doth manifeſtly declare the truth in all theſe points, the quality of the perſons is directly proved, 1 Ioh. 5.7. There are three which beare record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the holy Ghoſt, and theſe three are one : the proceſſion of the ſpirit, Iohn 15.26. The ſpirit is there ſaid to be ſent from the Father and the Sonne ; and Iohn 14. 26. Whom the Father will ſend in my name : Originall ſinne is deſcribed plainly by the Apoſtle, Rom. 5. 12. though the name be not found in Scripture : By one man ſin entred into the world, and death by ſin, for as much as all men have ſinned.

John 15.26.
John 14.26.
Rom. 5.12.

Secondly, there are divers things neceſſarie to be knowne, not at all declared in Scripture : theſe examples he ſetteth downe. It is neceſſary to beleeve that the Canonicall Scriptures are contained in the old and new Teſtament. And not onely ſo, but to know which bookes are Canonicall, as that the Goſpell of Marke and Luke are Canonicall, and ſo of the reſt : yea it is neceſſary to know that theſe are the very Goſpels which were written by S. Marke and Luke, and ſo of the reſt of the Scripture : but theſe things cannot be knowne out of the Scriptures themſelves, but by tradition. Ergo, the Scriptures containe not all neceſſary knowledge.

Anſwer : First, the Scriptures doe give teſtimony of themſelves, the old Teſtament giveth witneſſe to the new, and the new againe to the old. All Scripture is given, ſaith S. Paul, by inſpiration : and the harmonie and conſent of Scripture, the propheticall predictions, the holy precepts, the chaſte and pure ſtile, doe evidently ſhew, that they are the writings of the holy Ghoſt : and the judgement and ſentence of the Church concerning Canonicall Scripture, if it be right, muſt and doth ariſe, and is grounded upon theſe conſiderations drawne out of the Scriptures themſelves.

Secondly, likewiſe to know every particular booke of Scripture to be Canonicall, it is not ſimply neceſſary to ſalvation, ſeeing many godly learned men have doubted of ſome bookes, who (God forbid) but might notwithſtanding be ſaved. Againe we anſwer, that thoſe very particular bookes, as the Goſpels of Marke and Luke are received, the Goſpels of Bartholmew and Thomas refuſed, not ſo much becauſe the Church hath ſo determined, but becauſe their determination agreeth with the truth it ſelfe : ſeeing thoſe forged Goſpels are found to be full of fables, and therefore worthy of ſmall credit : the other are pure, chaſte, and divine writings. So S. Auguſtine ſaith ; In Apocryphis licet invenitur aliqua veritas, tamen propter falſa multa, nulla eſt canonica authoritas : In the Apocryphall bookes, though ſome things be true, yet becauſe there are many falſe, they are not of any canonicall authoritie: Lib.* 15. *de civitat. Dei, cap.*23.

Thirdly, we anſwer, that it is not neceſſary to know the author of every booke, for as much as there are divers bookes of Scripture whoſe authors are not knowne : it is enough to beleeve them to bee Scripture.

Further ſaith the Jeſuite, it is neceſſary to know that Mary continued a perpetuall virgin. We anſwer, the Scripture ſaith every where ſhe was a virgin, neither maketh mention of any children ſhee had : and therefore out of the Scripture we gather, that ſhe ſo continued. And thus doth S. Hierome anſwer Helvidius ; Vt hac, qua ſcripta ſunt, non negamus, ita ea, qua non ſunt ſcripta renuimus : As we denie not what is written, ſo we refuſe what is not written. That God was borne of a virgin we beleeve, quia legimus, becauſe we read ſo in Scripture : but that Mary was married afterward, wee beleeve not, quia non legimus, becauſe we doe not read it. Secondly, Baſil ſaith that it is ſufficient to know ſhe was a virgin before the birth of Chriſt. Laſtly, to know that the Paſch or Eaſter muſt be kept upon the Lords day is neceſſary. Anſ. There is no ſuch neceſſitie in it to ſalvation, neither needed the Church ſo much to have contended about it in times paſt : theſe are the mighty weapons, which our adverſaries uſe. That this dav is meeteſt to be kept (as it is) upon the Lords day, S. Auguſtine doth ſhew it out of Scripture : Epiſt. 118. Quo die dominus crucifixus, & ſepultus, & reſurrexit, ex Evangelio manifeſtum, &c. It is manifeſt in the Goſpell, what day our Saviour was crucified, buried, and roſe againe : Et univerſo orbi perſuaſum eſt Paſcha ſic celebrari oportere : And the whole world was perſwaded, that the Paſch ought to be celebrated after that manner.

Unto thoſe objections, which the Jeſuite maketh, I will adde alſo one other, which ſometime was objected to that excellent learned man, and famous martyr Maſter Philpot, by Maſter Chriſtoferſon : How doe you know that Chriſt is homouſios, that is, of one ſubſtance with his father, but by the determination of the Church ? Anſ. I doe know it by Scripture, Heb. 1.3. Chriſt is ſaid to be the expreſſe image of Gods ſubſtance. Objećt. Nay he ſaith, but expreſſa imago ſubſtantiæ, and an image is an accident. Anſw. Yes, the text is ſubſtantia illius, of his, that is, Gods ſubſtance : and yee know that in God are no accidents. Neither is this the onely place for this purpoſe, but we have other : as our Saviour himſelfe ſaith, Ego & pater unum ſumus, I and my father are one : ſic Philpot, Fox pag. 1820. *col.*2.

Heb. 1.3.

The Proteſtants.

WE doe not affirme, as our adverſaries charge us, that all things neceſſarie to ſalvation are expreſly contained in Scripture, that is, in ſo many words : but this we hold, that all things, which are neceſſary to be knowne of us, are either expreſly declared in Scripture, or neceſſarily concluded out of Scripture, and ſo contained in them. We alſo grant, that it was not Goſpell only which was written, but all that Chriſt and his Apoſtles taught by lively voice : the whole ſumme whereof and ſubſtance is contained in the written word · and ſo we conclude, that nothing neceſſary to ſalvation either concerning faith or manners, is elſewhere to be found but in the holy Scriptures.

Argum. 1. S. Paul ſaith : If we, or an Angell preach unto you otherwiſe than that which we have preached, let him be accurſed : Ergo, the Scripture containeth all things neceſſarie.

Firſt the Jeſuite anſwereth, that S. Paul ſpeaketh not only of his writings, but alſo of his preachings which were not written.

Wee anſwer, that the ſumme of all S. Pauls preachings is contained in his Epiſtles, and other holy writings : for S Paul confirmed his doctrine out of the Scriptures, as Act. 17. 10. the Berrœans examined his doctrine by the Scriptures, and found it to be conſonant, and to agree in all things.

Act. 17. 10.

Secondly, he condemneth thoſe which preach any thing, not beſides or otherwiſe, but contrarie : and therefore not any other doctrine beſides Scripture is forbidden, but that which is contrarie. Wee anſwer, whatſoever is impoſed as neceſſarie to ſalvation beſide the Scripture, præter Scripturas, is alſo contra Scripturas, contrarie to Scripture ; as are all Popiſh traditions, which they lay a neceſſity upon, both beſide and contrary to Scripture. 2. Neither did thoſe falſe Apoſtles, againſt whom S. Paul writeth, ſo much bring in another or contrarie Goſpell, as the Apoſtle ſaith *verſ.*7. as they did labour to corrupt and pervert that Goſpell which S. Paul taught. Therefore all traditions whethet præter, or contra, beſide or contrarie to Scripture, are notably by this place overthrowne. And as S. Auguſtine ſaith, Qui præter greditur fidei regulam, non incedit in via, ſed recedit à via : Hee that paſſeth beſide the rule of faith, doth not goe in the way, but departeth from the way. So that, as he doth not onely goe out of the way, which goeth againſt it, but hee alſo that goeth beſide it : ſo not onely traditions and ceremonies apparantly contrarie to Scripture, but even them alſo, which have a ſuperſtitious ſhew of holineſſe, are againſt it.

Ioh. 20. 31. Argum. 2. *Ioh.*20.31. Theſe things are written, that ye might beleeve that Ieſus Chriſt is the ſonne of God, and that in beleeving ye might have life through his name : Ergo, the Scripture containes all things neceſſary to ſalvation : for they ſuffice to worke in us faith, and faith bringeth us to eternall life.

Firſt, Bellarmine anſwereth, that Iohn ſpeaketh onely of that which he had written. Anſw. If this one Apoſtles writings were able to worke faith, the whole body of Scripture much more : but he rather ſpeaketh of all other holy writings of the Apoſtles, for he was the ſurviver of them all, and acknowledged their writings and approved them. Secondly (ſaith he) the Apoſtle ſaith not that thoſe writings onely ſuffice, but they are profitable, and referred to this end, to worke faith. Anſ. The Scripture is not one of the meanes, but the ſole, whole, and onely meanes : for if they perfectly worke faith, what need any other helpes : but the firſt is true ; for they doe beget in us a perfect faith, which ſhall bring us to eternall life : Ergo, they are the onely meanes of faith.

Argum. 3. The whole Scripture (ſaith S. Paul) is profitable to teach, to improve, to correct, and inſtruct in righteouſneſſe, 2 *Tim.*3.16. Ergo it containeth all things neceſſary : for what elſe is requiſite beſides theſe foure, to teach the right faith, improve error, to inſtruct in righteouſneſſe and vertue, and to correct vice?

2 Tim. 3. 16.

Firſt they anſwer, the Apoſtle meaneth as well every booke of Scripture, as the whole : every part therefore hath this perfection as well as the whole. But you will not ſay, that every booke containeth all things neceſſarie to ſalvation : therefore this perfection is not ſo to be taken, Bellarmine.

We anſwer ; Firſt, S. Paul underſtandeth the body of Scripture, as verſ. 15. thou haſt knowne the Scriptures, he ſpeaketh of them all. Secondly, if every part had theſe utilities, you might as well conclude that every word and ſyllable hath them, for they are parts of Scripture. Thirdly, it appeareth by theſe foure great utilities here ſet downe, that the Apoſtle meaneth not any part or parts of Scripture, but the whole, for every part of Scripture is not profitable, for all theſe ends, but the whole.

Secondly, they ſay it followeth not: the Scripture is profitable, therefore ſufficient, they alſo grant it is profitable. Anſ. But we conclude out of S. Paul, that the Scripture is not onely profitable, but ſufficient, as it followeth verſ. 17. That the man of God may be abſolute, perfectly inſtructed to every good worke. If then the Scriptures are able perfectly to inſtruct us, then are they ſufficient, then need we no other helpes.

Neither are the Scriptures ſufficient only to inſtruct the ignorant and vulgar ſort, but even the learned, and ſuch as are the teachers of others: That the man of God (ſaith the Apoſtle) may be abſolute, &c. that is, the Preacher of the Goſpell. To this agreeth the 67. Canon, Concil. Cabil. ſub Carolo: Quid generaliter ab omnibus, & in omnibus ſequendum ſit, quid vitandum, qualiter intra ſanctam eccleſiam ſit vivendum, qui plenius noſſe deſiderat, ſanctarum ſcripturarum prata percurrere non deſiſtat: What is of all men in all caſes to be followed, what to be avoided, how a man ſhould live and behave himſelfe in the Church of God, hee that is deſirous more fully to know, let him not ceaſe to trace the pleaſant fields of the holy Scriptures, &c. The Scriptures then doe teach all men, in all caſes both concerning faith and manners, what is to be done, what to be left undone.

Further, Auguſtine thus writeth, in Pſal. 66. Ne putetis (ſaith he) ex aliis Scripturis petendum, quod forte hic deeſt: Thinke not (ſaith he) that it is to be found in any other writings if it bee not in Scripture. And in another place: In Evangelio quæramus, nam ſi ibi non invenimus, ubi inveniemus? Let us (ſaith he) ſeeke to be reſolved in the Goſpell, if we find not there, where ſhall we find it? Ergo, by the judgement of Auguſtine there is no truth neceſſary to be knowne, which is not to be found in the Scripture.

I forbeare to uſe other teſtimonies of the Fathers, as that of Origen: In Evangeliis omnis veritas, & omnis manifeſtatio veritatis: In the Goſpels is all truth, and manifeſtation of truth, Hom. 9. in Exod. And that of Ambroſe: Quod non legi uſurpare non debeo: I dare not uſe, or receive, that which I read not, lib de incarnat. cap. 9. I will ſpare to cite the Fathers on our ſide, becauſe I omit the teſtimonies which our adverſaries uſe; profeſſing in this treatiſe chiefly to deale with the Scriptures: I will at this time onely urge againſt them ſuch evidence, as I find both in the Emperiall, and pontificiall conſtitutions.

First Iuſtinian. Cod. lib. 1. tit. 2. leg. 1. thus decreeth concerning the authoritie of his conſtitutions, that they ſhould onely be uſed in deciding of all cauſes, Quia recitatio conſtitutionum codicis noſtri ſufficiat: Becauſe the allegation onely of the conſtitutions of our Codex is ſufficient, &c. If then the Emperours Codex be ſufficient for all civill cauſes, ſhall we thinke that the divine Codex is leſſe ſufficient for ſpirituall?

Againe, Cod. lib. 9. tit. 29. leg. 1. the Emperours, Theodoſ. Gratian. Valentinian. enacted this law: Qui divinæ legis ſanctitatem, aut neſciendo omittunt, aut negligendo violant, &c. They are guilty of ſacrilege, that either of ignorance omit, or of negligence violate the divine law, &c. Then muſt our adverſaries be guilty of ſacrilege, which doe omit and neglect the Scriptures, by following unwritten traditions.

Secondly, out of your owne Canons: Extravag. commun. lib. 1. tit. 3. cap. 1. Bonif. 8. thus writeth: That none ſhould be received as a Legate of the Apoſtolike ſea, niſi fide doceat oculata: unleſſe he demonſtrate it or make faith to the ſight, that is, by ſome writing: for it is the manner of that ſea to doe no ſuch thing, ſine ſignatis apicibus, without ſigned letters. If then in humane matters, there muſt be fides oculata, and ſignati apices, a faith in ſight, and ſigning of writings, how much more needfull is it in divine?

Yet more directly, Ioh. 22. Extrav. lib. 5. tit 8. c. vinc. Divina exempla debent eſſe actionum noſtrarum regula: The divine examples in Scripture (for ſo he meaneth, as it followeth in the Canon) muſt be an example of our acts.

Laſtly, the truth of the doctrine that the Scripture containeth all things neceſſary to ſalvation, hath beene ſealed with the bloud of Martyrs: this was one of the articles objected againſt Doctor Taylor, Fox pag. 1522. col. 2. And in teſtimonie whereof (ſaith Bradford) I give and render my life, Epiſtol. ad Londinenſ. pag. 1626. col. 1. p. 1383. col. 2. p. 1476. col. 2. edit. ult.

To this alſo giveth teſtimonie, that valiant ſouldier of Chriſt M. Haukes martyr: Is not the Scripture (ſaith he) ſufficient for my ſalvation? Yes, ſaith one of Boners Chaplaines, it is ſufficient for our ſalvation, but not for our inſtruction. He anſwered, God ſend mee the ſalvation, and you the inſtruction, Fox pag. 1586. col. 2. p. 1441. col. 1.

For this article alſo that the word of God doth containe ſufficient doctrine to ſalvation, the townſhips of Minſon and Mendleſam in Suffolke were perſecuted, pag. 1913. c. 1. What need wee doubt then of this doctrine which is proved by Scripture, grounded upon reaſon, and confirmed by the blood of the Saints? p. 1736. col. 1. edit. 1610.

Touching the ſufficiencie of Scripture: firſt, the Greeke Church herein followeth the judgement of Damaſcene, one of their writers: We receive whatſoever is delivered by the Law and the Prophets, the Apoſtles and Evangeliſts, οὐδὲν περαιτέρω τούτων ἐπιζητοῦντες, ſeeking for nothing out of or beyond them. So Lombard Lib. 1. de fid. orthod. c. 1.

The third part of the ſeventh Queſtion: whether there be any traditions, beſide Scripture concerning faith and manners.

The Papiſts.

13. Error. THey underſtand by this word tradition, doctrine, precepts, and ceremonies, with other uſages of the Church, which are not written in the Scriptures. They doe not ſay that all their traditions are neceſſarie, but they make divers kindes of them: ſome are univerſall, obſerved in the whole Church, ſome particular: ſome are free, ſome neceſſary: ſome are Apoſtolicall, invented by the Apoſtles, ſome Eccleſiaſticall by the Church. So thus they conclude; all traditions decreed in Councels, and judged Apoſtolicall, and whatſoever the Church of Rome receiveth as Apoſtolicall, are not to be doubted, but to bee Apoſtolicall indeed. Secondly, all Apoſtolicall traditions are of equall authority with the writings of the Apoſtles, Bellarm. lib. 4. cap. 2. & 9. The Tridentine Synode thus alſo profeſſeth: Pari pietatis affectu ſuſcipit & veneratur, &c. With like pious affection it receiveth and worſhippeth the books of the old and new Teſtament, and the traditions, &c. Seſſ. 4. decr. 2. And they are that part of the word of God which is unwritten, as well as the Scriptures are that part which is written. Let us ſee what arguments they bring for theſe traditions.

Argum. 1. They give an inſtance of certaine traditions, as the baptiſme of infants, and the not rebaptiſing of thoſe which were before baptiſed by hereticks. Wee anſwer, theſe two cuſtomes of the Church are grounded upon Scripture: for as children were in the time of the law circumciſed, ſo are they now under the Goſpell baptiſed: and that promiſe, Geneſ. 17. I will be thy God, and the God of thy ſeed, as it belonged to them and their children, ſo doth it appertaine to us and our children.

Concerning the other point, that they whom hereticks have once baptiſed, ought not to bee baptiſed againe: Epheſ. 4. 5. S. Auguſtine doth prove it out of the Scripture, Epheſ. 4. 5. There is one faith, one baptiſme. Ergo, not to be repeated.

But now they come in with other traditions, as the Lenten faſt, which they uſe moſt fondly and ſuperſtitiouſly: the eight Eccleſiaſticall orders, Biſhops, Prieſts, Deacons, Subdeacons, Acolythiſts, Readers, Exorciſts, Doore-keepers, the worſhipping of Images, with many other: theſe they would face us out to be Apoſtolicall traditions, and to have beene univerſally obſerved, which are but their vaine brags, and Thraſonicall crakes: they ſhall never prove them univerſall, much leſſe Apoſtolicall. And becauſe they find no Scripture to eſtabliſh theſe their ſuperſtitious phantaſies by, they flie unto tradition, which is their only haven, where they hope to finde ſuccour, but all in vaine: Bellarm. lib. 4. cap. 9. Conſul. Whitacher. quaeſt. 6. cap. 4.

Argum. 2. They proceed and alleage Scripture for their traditions, as that place John 16. 12. Iohn 16. 12. I have many things to ſay, but you cannot beare them now: Ergo, ſay they, there are many traditions not written.

Wee anſwer: Firſt, it followeth not, becauſe Chriſt declared not all things at that time, that therefore he kept them from his Apoſtles altogether. Nay, whatſoever afterwards the Apoſtles learned of the ſpirit of God, they had heard before of Chriſt: for it was the office of the ſpirit, partly to put them Iohn 14. 26. in remembrance of Chriſts ſayings, Ioh. 14. 26. which they had heard before, but underſtood them not, and ſo forgat them, partly they were taught of the ſpirit, whatſoever was neceſſarie, who ſhould leade them into all truth, and teach them things to come, which are the ſame things which the Apoſtles did both preach and write. Wherefore theſe things, which Chriſt forbeareth to ſpeake, are the ſame things, which were afterward taught by the ſpirit, and are contained in the Apoſtles writings. Secondly, if there were other matters, which Chriſt uttered not, how followeth it, nay what great preſumption is it to ſay, that thoſe trifles and apiſh toyes, which the Papiſts uſe in their Idolatrous ſacrifice, and their other beggerly ceremonies (which boyes may well laugh at) are thoſe profound matters, which the Apoſtles were not then able to conceive.

*Argum.*3. That of all other, they take to bee an invincible place, 2. Theſſ.2.15. Keepe the inſtructions or traditions, which ye have been taught either by word, or by Epiſtle : Ergo, there are traditions beſide Scripture. 2 Theſſ.2.15.

We anſwer, when S.Paul wrote this Epiſtle, all the Scriptures were not written : wherefore beſides theſe two ſhort Epiſtles, which doe not containe the ſumme of the Goſpell, nor all neceſſarie precepts, he by his preaching ſupplied what was wanting, and ſo declared unto them the whole myſterie of the Goſpell, as he ſaith, 1.Theſſ.2.2. theſe he calleth his traditions, becauſe yet hee had not written his other Epiſtles, wherein thoſe inſtructions and traditions are contained. This then is but a weake argument : the Theſſalonians had other inſtructions and traditions, beſide the two Epiſtles written unto them : Ergo, they had other traditions, beſide all the writings of S.Paul and the other Apoſtles. This is their maine and weightie argument. And further, it is not onely the Apoſtles phraſe, but the uſe of the Fathers, to call the Scriptures a tradition : as S.Cyprian epiſt. ad Pompeium : Si aut in Evangelio præcipitur, aut in Apoſtolorum epiſtolis, aut actibus continetur, obſervetur etiam & hæc ſancta traditio : If it be either commanded in the Goſpell, or contained in the epiſtles or acts of the Apoſtles, let this tradition alſo be obſerved. Likewiſe S.Ambroſe : Corpus Chriſti traditiones ſunt ſcripturarum : The bodie of Chriſt are the traditions of the Scriptures : lib.5.in Luc. And Ambroſe ſo underſtandeth that place of S.Paul objected, 2.Theſſ.2.15. Stand faſt, and keepe the traditions, In traditione Evangely ſtandum & permanendum monet : He admoniſheth them to ſtand in the tradition of the Goſpell, &c.

2 Theſſ.2.15. Ambroſ in hunc locum.

The Doway tranſlators doe thus deliver their opinion, concerning traditions : The hiſtorie of the creation of the world, and ſo for 2400 yeeres, untill Moſes time, he knew partly by revelation, partly by tradition from the Fathers, which were of great authoritie, before there were Scriptures, and ſince Scriptures were written, they are alſo neceſſarie for three ſpeciall cauſes : firſt, wee are only aſſured by traditions, which are the bookes of Scripture, &c. Secondly, for the true underſtanding of Scripture wee are referred to the Church. Thirdly, for things not expreſſed particularly in holy Scripture, the Scripture and Fathers do commit us to traditions, and to the Judgement of the Church, as our Saviour ſaith, he that heareth you, heareth me. To this purpoſe, the Doway Colledge, *annot. in Geneſ.c.*1.

*Contra.*1. It followeth not, becauſe traditions were neceſſarie, before any Scriptures were written : and when as the Church had Prophets, that received revelations, which approved the traditions, that therefore traditions now alſo have a neceſſarie uſe, the Scriptures being written, and prophecie with revelations ceaſed.

2 Traditions are not neceſſarie for any of theſe three cauſes : firſt, the Scripture is evidently proved by the Scripture to be the word of God : the teſtimonie of the Church only prepareth a way, but the ſure and certaine knowledge is wrought in the heart by the holy Ghoſt out of the Scripture it ſelfe : as is ſhewed before, Error 5. ſo likewiſe the Scripture is able to interprete it ſelfe : ſee before Error 9. neither are there any things neceſſarie to be knowne unto ſalvation, which are not warranted by the word of God, as ſhall afterward be proved : And ſo the paſtors, not ſwarving from the rule of Chriſt, are to be heard, as Chriſt himſelfe : but whoſoever preacheth otherwiſe, though he be an Angel, is accurſed. Galath.1.8.

3 They are contrary to themſelves : for elſewhere they give this note, upon that fact of Nadab, and Abihu, in offering of ſtrange fire : We are injoined by this to be contented with the doctrine of the holy Ghoſt, and to abhorre hereſies, the fautors whereof adde falſhood to Gods word, and preferre their owne wicked inventions before the true ſenſe of holy Scripture, &c. And againe, Unwritten traditions are contained, implied, included in the Scriptures. Here they ſeeme to allow of nothing, which is not implied, and included in Scripture, and whatſoever is added to the true ſenſe of holie Scripture. If they will ſtand then to their owne words, unwritten traditions have no place.

Annot. in Levit.10.2. Annot. in Deut.c.4.v.2.

The Proteſtants.

First, we grant that all things are not written which our Saviour Chriſt and the Apoſtles taught, and that it was the Goſpell, which they preached, as well as this which is written : yet in ſubſtance they preached the ſame Goſpell, which now is expreſſed in the Scripture : neither was there any neceſſarie precept delivered in their ſermons, which is not now to be found in the Scripture. Secondly, we denie not but there were certaine rites and orders ordained by the Apoſtles in divers Churches, which were not committed to writing, becauſe they were not to continue and endure for ever in the Church : as that precept, Acts 15. that the Gentiles ſhould abſtaine from ſtrangled, and from blood. Thirdly, we alſo grant that the Church may uſe externall rites and orders either left by tradition, or ordained by the Church for decencie and comelineſſe, and tending to edification. But wee conſtantly affirme, that there are no traditions in the Church of God neceſſarie to ſalvation beſide Scripture : wherin all things are contained neceſſarie to ſalvation, both concerning faith and manners.

Deut. 12.32.

Argum.*1. It is not lawfull, as to take ought from the word of God, ſo to adde any thing unto it, Deut.12.32. Apocal.22.18. But they which bring in traditions neceſſarie beſide the Scriptures, doe adde unto them. Ergo.

To the propoſition the Jeſuite anſwereth, that all addition to the word of God is not forbidden, for the Prophets did write after Moſes, and the Apoſtles after the Evangeliſts. Wee anſwer: firſt, that thoſe holy men had authoritie from God to compoſe Scripture: if the Papiſts have the like Apoſtolike authoritie for their traditions, let them ſhew it, and we will beleeve them. Secondly, the Prophets did but explaine Moſes, and expound the law, and the Apoſtles did as it were ſet forth their Commentaries upon the Goſpell: this therefore was no addition, becauſe they did not derogate from the perfection of the Scriptures any way.

To the aſſumption they anſwer: that their traditions are but expoſitions of the Scripture. We anſwer, their traditions are cleane contrarie to Scripture, as the worſhipping of Images, and the ſacrifice of their Maſſe: and they adde to Scripture, making it unperfect, ſaying, It doth not containe all things neceſſarie to ſalvation. Wherefore they cannot eſcape that curſe, which they runne into, that adde to the word of God.

Math. 15.3.

Argum.*2. All traditions among the Jewes beſides the law were condemned, Matth.15.3. Ergo, all unwritten traditions now muſt be aboliſhed. The Jeſuite anſwereth: Firſt, Chriſt condemned not the ancient traditions of Moſes, but thoſe which were newly and lately invented. Anſw. Firſt, the Scripture maketh no mention of any ſuch traditions of Moſes: Chriſt biddeth them ſearch the Scriptures, not runne unto traditions. Secondly, theſe ſeemed to be ancient traditions, bearing the name of Elders traditions, and they were in great authoritie amongſt the Jewes: moſt like, becauſe of ſome long continuance.

Secondly (ſaith he) Chriſt findeth fault with wicked and impious traditions. Anſw. Firſt, their traditions were not openly and plainly evill and pernitious, but had ſome ſhew of holineſſe, as the waſhing of pots, and tables, and beds. I would the Papiſts did not here take themſelves by the noſe, whoſe traditions come neerer to open impietie, and blaſphemie, than theirs did. Secondly, Chriſt in oppoſing the Scripture againſt traditions, therein condemneth all traditions not written urged as neceſſarie, beſides the Scripture.

Acts 20.27.
Acts 26.22.
Matth. 13.17.
Luke 16.29.

Argum.*3. If Paul preaching the whole Goſpell, Acts 20.27. did ſay none other things than Moſes and the Prophets; then all things neceſſarie to ſalvation are contained in the Scriptures. For it cannot be ſaid to be a whole and perfect Goſpell, if any thing neceſſary to ſalvation bee wanting. But Paul preached nothing, but out of Moſes and the Prophets, Acts 26.22. Ergo, much more now is the Scripture a perfect rule of faith; we having beſide Moſes and the Prophets, the holy writings of the Evangeliſts and Apoſtles. So that wee further reaſon thus: If Moſes and the Prophets were ſufficient without any other helpes for the times of the law, much more ſufficient is the new Teſtament together with the old now. But the firſt is true, therefore the ſecond. The conſequence of the firſt propoſition cannot be denied: for wee ſee now more than the Prophets did, Matth.13.17. and if the old Teſtament then was ſufficient, much more the new together with the old. The ſecond part is thus proved, Luke 16.29. The rich mans brethren are ſent to Moſes and the Prophets, which were more ſufficient to inſtuct them, than if one ſhould come from the dead: ſo that the written word is to be preferred before unwritten revelations. And Abraham, in ſaying, heare them, teſtifieth, that they contained ſufficient inſtruction unto life: Ergo, much more the Goſpell now.

Argum.*4. The Scriptures were written, to be a rule and meaſure of our faith: And they being the worke of God, whoſe works are all perfect, muſt needs alſo be a perfect rule of our faith: and ſo containe all things neceſſarie to faith: for the rule and meaſure muſt not come ſhort of that which is meaſured.

Bellarm.*1. The Scripture was not ordained eſpecially to be a rule of our faith: but onely to bee commentarium quoddam, as a remembrancer to nouriſh and preſerve ſound doctrine by preaching: for if it were to that end, it ſhould containe only ſuch things as belong unto the faith; but now it containeth many things beſide.

Galat. 6.15,16.

Anſw.*1. That the Scriptures were not written, to be a rule of our faith, it is a bold and untrue aſſertion contrarie to Scripture: the Scriptures doe teach and ſhew us eternall life, Iohn 5.39. but it is eternall life to beleeve in Jeſus Chriſt, Ioh.3.16. Ergo, the Scriptures doe teach and give rules of our faith and beleefe: yea S. Paul doth in direct termes call the doctrine of Chriſt crucified, which is ſet forth in Scriptures, a rule, Gal.6.15, 16.

Bellarm.*2. Againe wee ſay, that the Scripture is a rule of faith (though this be not the chiefe end thereof) yet not a totall and abſolute rule, but in part only: the word of God is one part or peece of the rule, unwritten traditions another.

Prov. 1. 1.
1 Tim. 3. 16.

Anſwer* 1. That it is the chiefe end of Scripture to be a rule of faith and good manners, the wiſe man ſpeaketh plainly, Prov.1.1. The Proverbs of Salomon to know wiſedome and underſtand the words of knowledge, to receive inſtruction to doe wiſely. This is the end of Scripture to know true wiſedome, and to doe wiſely: And leſt they ſhould ſay, that this is the end only of that booke, S. Paul ſheweth the ſame generally to be the end and uſe of all Scripture, 1 Tim.3.16. 2. If the Scripture be a rule, then is it a perfect rule: for God leaveth not any of his works unperfect: I know (ſaith the Preacher) that whatſo- ever God doth, it ſhall be for ever: to it can no man adde, and from it can no man diminiſh: Eccleſ. 3.14. But the Scripture is one of Gods works: Ergo, it is perfect: Yea S. Paul ſaith plainly, that the Scriptures are able to make the man of God perfect to every good worke: Ergo, themſelves are much perfect. 3. It is no good argument which the Jeſuite uſeth, the Scriptures containe more than belongeth to faith, or than is neceſſarie to bee beleeved: Ergo, they are not properly a rule of faith. Wee anſwer. 1. Though the Scriptures bee profitable to other ends, than to inſtruct in faith and good manners, yet this is the chiefe and principall, as wee have ſhewed: and though many things in Scripture declared hiſtorically, are not properly of the ſubſtance of faith; yet there is nothing therein contained, which may not bee referred to faith and good manners, as profitable and helping to one of thoſe ends. 2. This argument may bee returned upon the Jeſuits owne head: for if the Scripture ſpeake of many things which are not of the neceſſitie of faith, much leſſe is it ſilent in all neceſſary points of faith: if it abound in things not neceſſarie, Non deficit in neceſſariis, much leſſe doth it faile in neceſſary.

Eccleſ.3.14.

Laſt of all, although wee might multiplie many arguments, but theſe I truſt, ſtrongly concluding out of Scripture, may ſerve as a ſufficient bulwarke againſt all Popiſh paper bullets: let us heare in the knitting up the judgement of *Auguſtine: In his rebus, inquit, in quibus nihil certi ſtatuit Scriptura, mos populi Dei, vel inſtituta majorum, pro lege tenenda, Epiſt.*86. In all thoſe things (ſaith he) ſpeaking of externall rites and ceremonies, of the which we have no certaine rule out of Scripture, the cuſtome of the people of God, and the godly conſtitutions of our fore-fathers muſt ſtand for a law, &c. But concerning matters of faith and good manners, the Scriptures doe give certaine rules: as in another place: In iis quæ apertè in Scriptura poſita ſunt, inveniuntur illa omnia, quæ continent fidem, moreſque vivendi, De doctrina Chriſt. 2.9. All things appertaining to faith, and the rule of life, are plainly expreſſed in the Scripture: Ergo, by the ſentence of Auguſtine, traditions beſides Scripture have nothing to doe with the doctrine of faith and manners, but doe conſiſt onely in externall rites and cuſtomes of the Church.

This doctrine alſo, that no traditions concerning either faith or manners are to bee received beſides Scripture, wanteth not the glorious conſent of Martyrs. Sir Iohn Borthwicke knight was condemned by the Cardinall of Scotland, for affirming, amongſt other things, that the Pope ought not to obtrude upon the Church any lawes of faith beſide or contrarie to the Scripture; for as the Prophets (ſaith hee) alwaies in the beginning of their prophecies, ſaid, The word of the Lord, ſhewing thereby, that they preached not their owne phantaſies, but the word of God; and as our Saviour bade his Apoſtles preach, *Matth.*28. not what they would themſelves, but what he commanded them: ſo now nothing ought to bee taught in the Church beſide the word of God contained in Scripture. Fox. pag. 1264. col. 1. Let us alſo ſee the conſent of antiquitie: Concil. Florentin. general. Seſſ. 7. Andreas Coleſſen. being choſen a champion for the Latine Church, thus ſpeaketh unto the Greeke diſputers, which ſaid ſpeech was approved of the whole Councell: Velim à vobis (ampliſſimi Patres) doceri an ſacratiſſim. evangelium perfectiſſim. religionis noſtræ doctrinam præ ſe ferat: Equidem vos nihil aliud puto pro veſtra ſumma pietate reſponſuros, quàm conſummatiſſimam fidei noſtræ ſcientiam in ipſo concluſam eſſe: I would gladly learne of you (honourable Fathers) whether the moſt holy Goſpell doth not ſet forth the moſt perfect doctrine of our religion: I thinke you will make no other anſwer (ſuch is your pietie) than that therein the moſt abſolute knowledge of our faith is contained.

Further for the Imperiall conſtitutions: Cod. lib. 1. tit. 18. lex. unic. Gratian. Valentinian. Omnes ſciant nemini quicquam quàm quod ſcriptis probaverit, eſſe credendum: Let all men know, that no man is to bee credited in any thing, unleſſe he prove it by writing: Likewiſe, lib. 3. tit. 1. leg. 8. Conſtantin. Placuit in omnibus rebus præcipuam eſſe juſtitiæ ſcriptæ rationem: It ſeemeth good to us, that in all matters greateſt regard be had unto the written law. As then in civill matters, the written law onely tooke place, ſo alſo in divine the ſacred writings ſhould onely be heard: and the rather, becauſe there is greater danger, and more uncertainty in unwritten Scriptures, than unwritten lawes.

Heare alſo your owne decrees: decr. p. 2. cauſ. 24. qu. 3. c. 30. Leo. 1. Qui non ad propheticas voces, non ad apoſtolicas literas, nec ad evangelicas authoritates, ſed ad ſeipſos recurrunt, ideo Magiſtri erroris ſunt: They which doe not runne to the propheticall ſayings, Apoſtolicall writings, and Evangelicall authorities, but have recourſe to themſelves, become the maſters of errors, &c. Therefore Papiſts bee maſters of errors, becauſe they doe not in all things referre themſelves to the Scriptures. I would therefore they were reſolved to follow the voyce of the Scriptures, and leave their blind traditions, as once one of their owne Popes bethought himſelfe, Iohn 22. extrav. tit. 7. c. 1. Dignum eſt, ut adulterinas plantationes, quas non pater cæleſtis, ſed humana temeritatis audacia plantavit, Apoſtolici culminis cenſura divellat: It is meet, that ſuch plantations, as not the heavenly father, but humane raſhneſſe hath planted, ſhould be rooted out by the Apoſtolicall cenſure. If the Pope would thus doe, as he ſaith, he ſhould be an Apoſtolike man indeed.

4 Of the Romane Church Iodocus Clicthoveus approveth the former ſentence of Damaſcene: Nos de Deo quicquam aſtruere non debere, &c. That wee ought not to affirme any thing concerning God, beſide that which the holy oracles of both the Teſtaments have opened unto us. The Romaniſts themſelves have abrogated divers traditions, which were held Apoſtolicall: as Canus confeſſeth, that the thrice dipping in Baptiſme, qua traditio ab Apoſtolorum canone fluxiſſe videtur, which tradition ſeemeth to have iſſued from the Canon of the Apoſtles, is aboliſhed by a contrary cuſtome. The 1. Canon of the Apoſtles preſcribeth that a Biſhop ſhould bee ordained by three or two Biſhops at the leaſt, yet they allow in ſome caſes one Biſhop onely to ordaine with two Abbots in ſtead of Biſhops. Bellarm. lib. 4. de eccleſ. cap. 8. Other traditions there are, which they count Apoſtolicall, delivered in the Canons of the Apoſtles: As Can. 6. that a Biſhop or Presbyter ſhould not put away his wife, ſub obtectu religionis, Under the pretence of religion. Can. 7. nequaquam ſeculares curas admittant: that no Clergie man ſhould aſſume, or take upon him any ſecular cures. Can. 9. That no Clergie man ſacra oblatione non communicet: Should not communicate in the oblation. Can. 67. The ſaturdaies feaſt is forbidden. Can. 66. Hee that hath defloured a virgin, is charged to marrie her and none other. Can. 67. The Baptiſme by Hereticks is condemned. Theſe and many other of the Canons are not now in force among the Romaniſts: yea one of them confeſſeth, that ex quatuor & octaginta Apoſtolicis canonibus: That of 84. Canons Apoſtolicall, gathered together by Clemens and the Diſciples of the Apoſtles: vix ſex aut octo Latina Eccleſia obſervat; The Latine Church ſcarce obſerveth ſix or eight. Michael Medina.

Lib. 6. de ſacror. hom. continent. cap. 106.

Thus wee ſee, that they themſelves, which urge the neceſſitie of Apoſtolicall traditions, and make them equall to the word of God, inſomuch that they call them the word unwritten, doe refuſe them at their pleaſure, and make ſmall account of them; and ſo herein in their practice are contrarie to their opinion.

THE SECOND GENERALL CONTROVERSIE, CONCERNING THE CHVRCH.

HAving now finiſhed the queſtions between our adverſaries and us, concerning the Scriptures, and word of God, which all doe belong to the Propheticall office of Chriſt: in the next place ſuch controverſies are to be handled, as doe concerne the Kingly office of Chriſt. And ſeeing the Church of Chriſt is his kingdome, where he ruleth and reigneth, we muſt intreat of the Church: and firſt in generall of the whole, then in ſpeciall of the parts and members. This preſent controverſie concerning the Church in generall ſtandeth upon five principall queſtions.

1 Of the definition of the Catholike Church: two parts of the queſtion. Firſt, whether wicked men and infidels bee true members of the Church. Secondly, whether the Catholike Church be inviſible.

2 Whether the Catholike Church may erre, and whether the viſible Church may faile upon earth.

3 Concerning the true notes and markes of the Church.

4 Of the authoritie of the Church: two parts. Firſt, whether the Church have authoritie, in matters of Faith beſide the Scriptures, and whether we ought to beleeve in the Church. Secondly, concerning the ceremonies of the Church.

5 Whether the Church of Rome bee the true Church: two parts. Firſt, whether it bee the Catholike Church. Secondly, whether the Church of Rome be a true viſible Church: of theſe now in their place and order.

The firſt queſtion: of the definition of the Catholike Church.

The Papiſts.

THe Catholike Church (ſay they) is a viſible companie of men, profeſſing the ſame Faith and Religion, and acknowledging the Biſhop of Rome to be their chiefe Paſtor, and the Vicar of Chriſt upon earth. Bellarmin. de Eccleſ. lib. 3. cap. 2. Caniſius capit. de praecept. Eccleſ. articul. 9. Lindanus lib. 4. cap. 84.

The Proteſtants.

THe Catholike and univerſall Church is the inviſible companie of the faithfull elected and choſen to eternall life, Iohn 10. 16. A particular Church is a member of the univerſall and Catholike Church, and it is a viſible companie and congregation of men, amongſt whom the pure word of God is preached, and the Sacraments rightly adminiſtred: in the which viſible congregation, there may bee and are many hypocrites, evill and unfaithfull men found, and ſhall be to the end of the world. So then betweene the univerſall and particular Church, there is a treble difference. Firſt, the one is diſperſed over all the world; the other in ſome one Countrey, Citie, or any certaine place. Secondly, the univerſall conſiſteth onely of the elect; the particular both of good and bad. Thirdly, the Catholike is inviſible; the other is viſible and to bee ſeene.

The queſtion betweene us and our adverſaries, is about the univerſall Catholike Church, which they doe falſly define in three points. Firſt, they hold that wicked men are true members of the Catholike Church. Secondly, they allow not this diſtinction of the Church viſible and inviſible, but doe affirme that the Catholike Church is viſible. Thirdly, they make the Catholike Church to bee in ſubjection to the Biſhop of Rome. Concerning this laſt point, it belongeth to the controverſie of the Biſhop of Rome, and therefore we will not touch it in this place. The other two are now to be handled in this queſtion as two parts thereof.

The firſt part of this firſt queſtion, whether wicked men and Infidels may bee true members of the Church.

The Papiſts.

14. Error. THey affirme that not onely the predeſtinate, but even reprobates alſo may belong unto the Church, and be true members thereof. Bellarmin. lib.* 3. de Eccleſ. cap. 7. Nay they denie that the elect which are unborne, and not yet called, doe appertaine to the Church of Chriſt. Rhemiſts annot, in* 1. Tim. 3. Sect. 10. This then is generally their opinion, that there is no internall grace or vertue required in the members of the Church, but onely the externall and publike outward profeſſion. Bellamin. cap.* 2. And therefore they doubt not to ſay, that even wicked men and reprobates remaining in the publike profeſſion of the Church, are true members of the body of Chriſt. Rhemiſts annot. in Iohan.* 15. Sect. 1.

Bellarmine further thus delivereth his opinion, that profeſſed Infidels, and ſuch as are not baptized. Heretikes, Schiſmatikes, excommunicate perſons, are not of the Church, neither doe belong unto it, and that, pertinere ad eccleſiam, that thoſe doe belong to the Church, they which are not predeſtinate, they which are not perfect, manifeſt ſinners, and cloſe Infidels or Atheiſts, lib.* 3. de eccleſ. c. 2. *in fine. And of thoſe eight ſeverall degrees, he hath large tractates in the eight following chapters: concerning the which, our opinion briefly is this.

1 They which are yet Infidels, and not admitted to baptiſme, are no parts of the viſible Church, becauſe they doe not joyne unto it.

2 Nor yet heretikes, becauſe they are gone out of it.

3 Schiſmatikes are cut off from that particular Church, from the which they divide themſelves: yet may make by themſelves a particular viſible Church, if they retaine the purity of doctrine, and right uſe of the Sacraments.

4 Excommunicate perſons (if they bee rightly cenſured) are not actually parts of the viſible Church but potentia, they have a poſſibilitie upon their repentance of returning unto it againe; yet all theſe may belong to election, and ſo be members of the inviſible Church.

Concerning the reſt. 1. They which are not predeſtinate, may belong to a particular viſible Church, as Iudas, while he followed Chriſt, but of the true inviſible Church, they are no members.

2 They which are not perfect, may belong both to the viſible and inviſible Church.

3 Manifeſt ſinners, though de facto, in fact they are parts of the viſible Church, yet de jure, of right they are not.

4 Cloſe Infidels, may be counted of a viſible Church, becauſe they are not diſcerned: but unto the true Church they belong not, as long as they remaine in their infidelitie.

All theſe may bee ſorted out, and reduced to theſe heads. 1. Some are both of the viſible and inviſible Church, as they which are actually called to the faith 2. Some are neither of the one, nor the other, as infidels and heretikes not elected. 3. Some are of the inviſible onely, as all yet unborne and uncalled, yet elected. 4. Some are onely of the viſible Church, and not of the inviſible: as hypocrites, that live in the outward ſociety of the Church.

And to be of the viſible Church, is diverſly taken. 1. Some may bee of one particular viſible Church, though divided by ſome difference from another, as Schiſmatikes. 2. Some may bee of the viſible Church, potentia, in poſſibilitie, though not in act, as excommunicates. 3. Some may bee of the viſible Church, de facto, in fact, not de jure, of right, as notorious wicked perſons, which deſerve to bee cut off. Wee will now ſee ſome of their arguments, that the wicked and reprobates may be true members of the Church and body of Chriſt.

Math. 3. 12. Math. 13. 47. 2 Tim. 2. 20. Argum.* 1. They firſt aleadge certaine places of Scripture, as Matth.* 3. 12. The Church is compared to a barne floore, where there is both chaffe and corne. Matth.* 13. to a net caſt into the ſea, where all manner of fiſh are gathered together. 2. Tim. 2. to a houſe, wherin there bee veſſels of honour and diſhonour: Ergo, both good and bad are members of the Church, Bellarm. cap.* 7. lib. 3.

Wee anſwer. All theſe places muſt be underſtood of the viſible Church: which is knowne by the publike preaching of the word, and right adminiſtration of the Sacraments, and therefore Matth.* 3. compared to a fanne, and Matth.* 13. to a draw net; the Apoſtles, Paſtors, and Teachers are the fiſhermen. Wherefore wee denie not but that wicked men may bee in the Church, but not of it: yea, they may bee members of the viſible Church for a time, but cannot bee truely ingraffed into the bodie of Chriſt. Fulk. annot. Iohan.* 15. Sect. 1.

1 Cor. 12. 12. Argum.* 2. The Church (ſay they) is compared to a body, 1 Cor. 12. as in the body there are ſome parts, which have neither ſenſe nor life: ſo in the Church there are ſome members, which have neither faith nor charitie, which is the life of the Church: Ergo, wicked men may bee right members of the Church: Bellarm. cap.* 10. argum. 4. There may be alſo ſome fruitleſſe branches in the vine, and ſo evill men may be members of Chriſt. Rhemiſt. annot.* 15. Iohan. 1. Every branch not bearing fruit in mee ſhall be caſt forth: Ergo, there may be fruitleſſe branches in Chriſt.

Wee anſwer to the firſt, who would have ſaid, as the Jeſuite doth, that there are parts in the bodie, that receive neither life nor ſenſe of the body ? doth he meane the nailes and haires, as he ſeemeth to give inſtance in the end of the 2. Chapter ? but they are no parts of the body but excrements (he is ſo deepe in his ſophiſtrie, that hee hath forgotten Philoſophie) and yet they receive ſome gift from the bodie, for they grow and increaſe ; but the wicked receive no grace at all from the Church. The Rhemiſts yet are more reaſonable, that ſay the wicked in the Church, are as ill humors and ſuperfluous excrements in the body, rather than lively parts thereof, 1. Iohan. 2. Sect. 10.

To the ſecond : is a dead bough or a branch, I pray you, any part of the tree ? I thinke not : the tree cannot conveniently ſpare any one of the parts thereof : but the dead parts are hurtfull and cumberſome, and it doth the tree good to cut them off. But that they have prevented us, we would have uſed no better argument againſt them, than this drawne from the reſemblance of a mans body : for as what is in the body receiving no life nor power from the body, is not properly a part of the body, howſoever it ſeeme to be joyned to the body : ſo the wicked, although they be in the outward face of the Church, yet becauſe they are not partakers of the ſpirituall life thereof by Chriſt, are not truly to bee judged members of it.

Argum. 3. If wicked men ſhould not be right members of the Church, but the faithfull and predeſtinate, we ſhould be uncertaine which is the true Church : which is not to be admitted, becauſe the whole doctrine, and all the principles of Religion doe depend of the teſtimonie of the Church. Bellarm. lib. 2. cap. 10.

Wee anſwer. Firſt, although it is neceſſary that the true Church ſhould be certainly knowne, yet not for that cauſe, which the Jeſuite pretendeth : for the religion of Chriſtians is grounded upon the Scriptures, and although the true Church doth give a notable teſtimony thereunto, yet doth not our faith depend upon their witneſſe, teſtimony, or allowance. Secondly, the true viſible Church is certainly knowne by the preaching of the word, and the right uſe of the Sacraments : ſo that we doubt not but there is the true Church, where we find theſe markes : neither is it needfull to know the eſtate of every particular member thereof ; for ſo long, as all actions in the Church are directed and ordered by the rule of Gods word, we need not to doubt to commit our ſelves to that Church, howſoever otherwiſe men doe ſtand before God : and yet, ſo much as is neceſſary : the faithfull may be judged and knowne by their fruits.

Thirdly, though we admit that wicked men are members : yet the uncertaintie remaineth ſtill : for they themſelves hold that neither men not baptized, or perſons excommunicate, or heretikes can bee of the Church : but many may live in the Church, whom we know not to be baptiſed, which may bee ipſo facto, by the deed doing excommunicate without publike ſentence, and heretikes alſo : Wherefore even amongſt themſelves they are uncertaine, who are members of the Church.

Argum. 4. There is but one Church ; the wicked which outwardly profeſſe Chriſt, are of ſome Church : Ergo, of this one Catholike Church : argum. D. Day epiſcop. Ciceſt. Anſwer, there is but one true Church, but alwayes unto the ſame was joyned in the world, a falſe and malignant Church : theſe two Churches were repreſented in the beginning in Cain and Abel, and ſo have continued. Object. I grant you, in the law, before Chriſts comming there were two Churches, but not ſince Chriſts comming. Anſwer. Yes that there was, for was there not a Iudas in the new law, and a Simon Magus ? Object. But you cannot find me two Churches after Chriſt was aſcended. Anſwer. Yes, S. Paul ſaith, that Antichriſt with his falſe generation ſhall ſit in the temple, 2 Theſ. 2. which is not the true, but the falſe Church, reſponſ. Philpotti, Fox. pag. 1818.

The Proteſtants.

WE hold that the Catholike Church conſiſteth onely of the predeſtinate, and comprehendeth the univerſall number of all thoſe which ſhall be ſaved ; not onely thoſe now living on earth, but all that have beene ſince the beginning of the world : of this Church S. Paul was, even being a perſecutor, for he was never a member of the Devill nor reprobate, as Iohn Huſſe ſaith, articul. 2. Of this Church Iudas the traitor never was, though he were reputed for a diſciple of Chriſt for a while, Huſſ. articul. 7. Therefore the wicked and reprobate though they live in the outward aſſembly of Chriſtians, are no more the true members of Chriſt, than the tares in the field may be counted wheat or good corne.

Fulk. annot. 1 Iohan. 2. ſect. 10.
Fox. pag. 609.

Argum. 1. The true members of Chriſt are alſo his ſheepe : the wicked are not the ſheepe of Chriſt : Ergo, neither his members.

The ſheepe of Chriſt heare his voice : the wicked doe not heare his voice : Ergo, If they ſhall anſwer, that hypocrites and wicked men doe heare Chriſts voice, ſo long as they continue in the outward profeſſion of Chriſtians, wee thus improve it : Chriſts ſheepe doe follow him in life and example, Iohn 15. 4. but ſo doe not they. If it ſhall be yet anſwered, that they may alſo a while walke in Chriſts ſteps : this is not enough, for all Chriſts ſhall be ſaved, verſ. 9. Wherefore the Goſpell underſtandeth ſuch followers, as continue to the end. Bellarmine would ſeeme here to anſwer with a diſtinction, that ſometimes in the Scripture ſheepe are taken both for the good and bad, as where Chriſt ſaith to Peter, Feed my ſheepe : ſometime for the predeſtinate onely, as Iohn 10. My ſheepe heare my voice, cap. 7. reſ. ad argum. 5. Contra. It is enough that he confeſſeth in this place of Iohn, the predeſtinate onely to be underſtood by ſheepe : for it followeth in the ſame chapter, verſ. 16. There ſhall bee one ſheepfold, and one ſhepheard : therefore if the ſheepe only be in the ſheepfold, and the predeſtinate onely be the ſheepe; then they onely belong to the ſheepfold.

Argum.* 2. Chriſt is the head of his Church, and all the parts thereof; but he is not the head of the wicked and reprobate : Ergo. The Jeſuite granteth that he is the head, even of thoſe parts that ſhall periſh, Bellarm.cap.*7. We thus anſwer, Chriſt is the head only of thoſe, for whom he gave himſelfe, Epheſ 5.23. Epheſ. 5.23.25. but he gave not himſelfe for the wicked : Ergo. If this be denied, we thus proceed, Chriſt died only for thoſe whom he ſanctifieth and cleanſeth, to make them a glorious Church without ſpot and wrinckle, Epheſ 5.26.27. Epheſ 5.26,27. But this cannot agree in any wiſe to the wicked. Ergo.

Argum. 3. The Church of God is the whole family of the children of God in heaven and earth, Epheſ.3 15. *Epheſ.*3.15. they both make but one Church, the wicked are not of this familie : for who would ſay that the Saints in heaven, and wicked and reprobate men upon the earth, are fellow-ſervants, and of one houſhold? Ergo, they are not of the Catholike Church. Likewiſe Ioh.11.52. Ioh. 11.52. The end of Chriſts death was to gather together in one the children of God, &c. But the wicked are not the children of God : Ergo, they belong not to the congregation which Chriſt hath gathered together.

Bellarmine anſwereth here by a diſtinction : that ſome are ſaid to be the ſonnes of God and members of Chriſt, according to their preſent juſtice; ſome according to Gods predeſtination : the wicked may be the firſt way the ſonnes of God, and the members of Chriſt, Bellarm.cap.7.reſp.ad argum.6.

*Contra.*1. This diſtinction is contrary to the Apoſtle, Rom. 8. 17. Rom. 8. 17. The children of God are alſo heires : but the wicked are not heires; therefore they are not children. 2. The Jeſuite doth not anſwer to the point in queſtion : for our aſſertion is, that the wicked cannot be the true members of Chriſt : he anſwereth, they may be ſo called after a ſort, according to their preſent ſtate, which is in ſhew onely, and outward appearance, not in deed and in truth : for they that doe beleeve in Chriſt, and Ioh. 10.28. are indeed his ſheepe, ſhall never periſh, Iohn 10.28. and againe verſ.26. Ye beleeve not, becauſe ye are not my ſheepe. Wherefore faith and beleefe maketh men Chriſts ſheepe, contrary to that which the Jeſuite affirmed before, that there is no internall grace, or vertue required to make a member of Chriſts Church.

Argum. 4. Of all other that is a moſt evident place, 1 Ioh.2.19. 1 Iohn 2. 19. They went out of us, but were not of us : Ergo, heretikes and reprobates are not of the Church. Bellarmine anſwereth : though they were not of us, that is, of the Church, animis & voluntate, in ſoule and minde, and purpoſe of heart : yet they were of us, externa profeſſione, in externall profeſſion. And he hath this diſtinction beſide. That one may be ſaid to be the true child of God, and a member of the body of Chriſt two wayes : Veritate eſſentia vel forma, in the truth of the eſſence or forme : and veritate finis, in the true end, which is the partaking of everlaſting life : ſome may in reſpect of their preſent grace and charitie bee the firſt way members of the Church, and not the ſecond. cap.*8.*reſponſ. ad argum.*16.

Contra 1. If they are not joyned to the Church in ſoule and affection, but onely in externall profeſſion, they are not true and lively members of the Church : for as the Apoſtle ſaith, If they had beene of us, they would have continued with us : for the true branches doe abide and remaine in the vine, Iohn 15.5.

Ioh. 15.5.

1 Iohn 3. 9. 2 The eſſence and forme of a Chriſtian cannot be loſt : for he that is borne of God ſinneth not, becauſe his ſeed remaineth in him : like as he which hath received the eſſence and being of a man, and is borne of his parents, cannot be unborne againe of humane ſeed : ſo he that is once borne of the heavenly ſeed, is the ſonne of God, and ſo continueth to the end.

Let Auguſtine ſpeake for us both : Illa columba, unica, pudica, caſta, ſponſa ſine macula & ruga non intelligitur, niſi in bonis, juſtis, ſanctis : That lovely dove (ſaith he) the chaſte, undefiled, and unſpotted ſpouſe (that is the Church of God) is onely underſtood of thoſe that are righteous, faithfull, holy : Ergo, the wicked are not of the Church, which is the ſpouſe of Chriſt.

Wee want not here the teſtimonie of our adverſaries : Ioannes de Turre cremata lib. 4. de Eccleſ. par. 2. cap. 20. holdeth, that they which have no faith nor no inward grace, doe not belong to the Church.

Laſtly, this doctrine, that the faithfull onely are the true members of the Catholike Church, which is the myſticall bodie of Chriſt, hath the witneſſe and approbation of holy martyrs. This was one of the articles for the which Iohn Hus was condemned in the Councell of Conſtance, for ſaying that the Catholike Church is the univerſall companie of the predeſtinate: grounding his opinion upon that place of S. Paul. Epheſ. 5. Chriſt ſo loved the Church, that he gave himſelfe for the ſame: but he gave himſelfe onely for the faithfull, Fox. pag. 610. artic. 8. Luther openly proteſted before the Emperour at Wormes, that he would not conſent to the Councell of Conſtance, becauſe it condemned this article propounded by Iohn Hus. That the Catholike Church is the communion of the predeſtinate, and ſo aboliſheth, ſaith he, this article of our faith, I beleeve the holy Church univerſall: and ſaith further, he was readie to ſpend his blood, rather than to revoke any truth agreeable to Gods word, pag. 852. See the confeſſion alſo of Richard Feurus a French martyr, That the congregation of Chriſt conſiſted in the number of the elect, Fox pag. 912. col. 1.

This alſo was the faith of the Merindolians, That the catholike Church was the fellowſhip of Gods elect: who for this and other points of their Chriſtian faith, were perſecuted, and their countrie deſtroyed, Fox pag. 954. col. 1.

Pag. 870. col. 1.

That the faithfull only are the members of Chriſt: it is affirmed by Doctor Ridley, and Maſter Latimer martyrs, according to the Scripture, If any man have not the ſpirit of Chriſt, the ſame is none of his, Rom. 8. 9. And the Church of Chriſt ſtandeth only of living ſtones, that is, true Chriſtians, not only outwardly in name and title, but inwardly in heart and truth, reſponſ. ad articul. Antonii 7.

The blood of theſe holy martyrs doth give a lively teſtimonie unto the truth, and doth notablie confirme us therein.

Let us ſee the teſtimonies of other Churches: 1. For the Eaſt Church, Nilus Archbiſhop of Theſſalonica ſaith, Chriſt builded his Church upon the faith and doctrine of Peter, and upon thoſe which ſhall bee keepers and obſervers of ſuch confeſſion: he requireth faith to the conſtitution of the Church, and the members thereof. The Ruthomans and Muſcovites doe ſay, that the Pope is an heretike, and doe excommunicate him and his Clergie, at ſuch times as they celebrate the Lords Supper, as Sarranus reporteth, they take it not ſufficient to be a true member of the Church, to be in the viſible ſhew therof, as the Pope and his Clergie are.

2 The ſame is the judgement of the Chriſtian Ethiopians: the univerſall hiſtories of the Indies make mention that the Pope ſent Oviedo a Spaniard, to draw the Abyſſines or Ethiopians to acknowledge the Romane Church; but the Emperour Claudius of Ethiope, then reigning, chaced him away, and Oviedo was compelled to hide himſelfe.

4 For the Romaniſts and Latine Church, beſide the ſentence of Ioannes de Turre cremata and Gratian in the decrees before alleaged, we ſhall need no other evidence, than of Bellarmine himſelfe: who thus affirmeth, that the Church is a living body conſiſting of a ſoule and body, the ſoule is the inward graces of the ſpirit, the body the externall and outward profeſſion: ſome are both of the ſoule and body of the Church, as they which are perfect: ſome of the ſoule, but not the body, as the excommunicate if they have faith: ſome of the body, and not of the ſoule, as hypocrites, which have no inward vertue, but to communicate only in the externall profeſſion: and they are as the haires and nailes, and evill humours in the body, Bellarm. lib. 3. de Eccleſ. cap. 2. in fine. By his owne confeſſion the wicked cannot bee true members of the Church, as the ill humours are no part of the bodie.

The ſecond part of the Queſtion, whether the Catholike Church be inviſible.

The Papiſts.

THey doe affirme that the Catholike Church is, and hath been alwaies viſible: not ſo viſible, becauſe it might be ſeene, but that it hath been alwaies actually viſible, and not ſeene only unto the members of the Church, but notoriouſly knowne to the whole world, Rhemenſ. annot. in Matth. cap. 5. ſect. 3. Neither doe they meane any particular Church ſo to have been viſible, but the univerſall Catholike Church, which they define to be a viſible congregation of all faithfull men, Caniſius cap. de fide & Symbol. articul. 18. Bellarm. lib. 3. de Eccleſ. cap. 12. ration 7.

Argum. 1. The foundation of the Church is viſible: therefore the Church is viſible. The propoſition they prove thus: for whether wee affirme Chriſt, or Peter to be the foundation of the Church: both of them are now viſible in him, which is the Vicar of Chriſt, and Peters ſucceſſor.

Epheſ. 2. 20. Wee anſwer: Firſt, wee utterly denie either Peter to be the foundation of the Church, or elſe the Pope to bee his lawfull ſucceſſor: for Peter is no more the foundation of the Church, than all the Prophets and Apoſtles, Epheſ. 2. 20. whoſe doctrine is the foundation, not their perſons. And as for the Pope, wee care not ſo much for outward ſucceſſion in place, which notwithſtanding they cannot prove to have been perpetuall without interruption, as wee doe require a ſucceſſion of faith and doctrine. Secondly, wee affirme that Chriſt is the foundation, but not the viſible beholding of Chriſt with the carnall eyes, but beleeving in his name: for when Peter had uttered that notable confeſſion of Chriſt, he ſaid that fleſh and blood had not revealed it, but his father in heaven: but if the beholding of Chriſt had given Peter a ſight of the foundation, then fleſh had revealed it unto him, his carnall eyes had brought him to Chriſt. Thirdly, wee may much better returne this argument upon themſelves: that becauſe the foundation of the Church, which is faith in Chriſt, is inviſible, therefore the Church is inviſible.

Math. 18. 17. Acts. 15. 4. Philip. 3. 6. Argum. 2. They heape up many places of Scriptures, but to ſmall purpoſe, as Math. 18. Tell the Church. Acts 15. When they came to Jeruſalem, they were received of the Church. Philip. 3. 6. Paul perſecuted the Church. How could the Church be perſecuted? how could it receive the Apoſtles, if it were not viſible? Bellar. cap. 12.

We anſwer: what goodly reaſons here be? a particular Church, ſuch as was at Jeruſalem may bee ſeene: Ergo, the catholike and univerſall. Secondly, a particular Church may bee ſometime viſible: Ergo, alwaies. Thirdly, the Church is viſible unto the faithfull, as in time of perſecution, for to Paul it was not knowne, when he perſecuted it, but only to the brethren: Ergo, it is viſible to the world. For theſe three points they muſt proove, that the catholike Church not a particular is viſible, that the Church is not ſometime but alway viſible, yea and to the world, or elſe they ſay nothing. For ſhame maſters make better arguments.

Pſal. 19. 4. Math. 5. 14. Argum. 3. He hath ſet his tabernacle in the Sunne, Pſal. 19. The Church is as a citie upon an hill, Math. 5. Ergo, it is alwaies viſible, Bellarm. ibid. Rhemiſt. Mat. 5. ſect. 3.

We anſwer, to let it paſſe, that the text is not well alleaged out of the 19. Pſalme, the words are according to the originall, he hath ſet in them, that is in the heavens, a tabernacle for the Sunne, not as hee readeth according to the vulgar Latine. Firſt, the Apoſtles themſelves, even at this time, when Chriſt ſpake theſe words unto them, were not ſo in ſole, or in monte, in the Sun, or upon the hill, that they were ſeene of the world, nay they were not ſeene nor acknowledged of the Scribes and Phariſies in Jewrie: the Church is ſeene of the faithfull, it is viſible to them that ſearch for her out of the Scriptures: they that can ſee the mountaine, ſhall ſee the citie, the mountaine is Chriſt, the citie is the Church. No marveile if the Church be not alwaies viſible to the world, for they ſee not, neither doe they know Chriſt. Secondly, the Church is ſaid to be on a hill: becauſe the truth ſeeketh no corners, heretikes and falſe teachers flie into the deſert and into ſecret places, Math. 24. verſ. 26. but the truth is not aſhamed: the Apoſtles confeſſed Chriſt, even before Kings and Princes, Mark. 13. 19. So Auguſtine expoundeth it, Cont. Fauſtum, lib. 13. cap. 13.

Math. 24. 26. Mark. 13. 19.

Argum. 4. Chriſts Church is alway viſible. Dic eccleſiæ, ſaith he, Tell it to the Church. But how can a mane goe unto that Church, which he knoweth not? argum. Boner. pag. 1691. Marci Antonii object. 6.

Anſw. 1. In the times of the Apoſtles, when the Church was perſecuted, they were faine to congregate themſeves in houſes and privie places: who though they were not knowne by any externall pompe, yet were they knowne among themſelves, and redreſſed things that were amiſſe, even in their ſecret aſſemblies. Neither were they altogether unknowne of the world: for how could they then have perſecuted them, though they were not regarded? reſponſ. Rob. Smithi. Martyr.

2 The fault why the Church is not ſeene, is not becauſe it is not viſible, but becauſe mens eyes are dazeled, and cannot ſee, unleſſe they looke for it, by the light of Gods word, reſponſ. Brad. pag. 1616. col. 1. D. Ridley ad 6. object. Marc. Antonii, p. 1719.

Further for the viſibility of the Church, the Doway Divines doe thus reaſon.

1 The Church had a continuall ſucceſſion of rulers, as well ſpirituall as temporall: therefore alwaies viſible. Doway bibl. p. 35.

2 Theſe points of doctrine (as of one God, of the reſurrection, finall judgement, eternall joy, and the reſt) taught no doubt by Noe and his ſonnes, ſhew cleerely a viſible Church, conſiſting of good and bad, p. 48.

3 Multitude of progenie promiſed to Abraham, pertaineth to the Church of Chriſt, p. 250. in the margin ε to ſay therefore that the Church of Chriſt ſometime conſiſteth of few or inviſible perſons, were to ſay, that God kept not promiſe with Abraham, and to make the body and thing figured more obſcure, than the ſhadow and figure, p. 206.

4 Yea, in the fifth age of the world, which was from the foundation of the temple, to the captivi tie in Babylon, the Church and religion continued ſtill, and was no leſſe conſpicuous than before: which they would prove by divers principall articles of religion, as among the reſt, the Lenten faſt, reliques, adoration of images, merit of good works, p.914.935.936. in the margin.

*Contra.*1. They ſpeake of the ſtate of the Church untill the flood: which if it ſhould at that time be granted to be viſible, it followeth not that alwaies it was ſo. 2. Neither was the Church then viſible and notoriouſly knowne in the world, ſeeing that it was brought to ſuch a paucitie and ſmall number, as that it conſiſted only of eight perſons in Noahs family, and thoſe not all true and faithfull members of the Church: this argument maketh rather againſt their viſibility of the Church. 3. There was a ſucceſſion of the Fathers in the Church, to preſerve Chriſts line, but that continued ſtill in one family, and what is that, to make Noe the Church viſible and notorious to all the world? Theſe few faithfull men were knowne to themſelves, and ſo to them the Church was viſible, but not to the world.

2 The ſucceſſion and preſervation of true religion, proveth a continuance of the Church, and a diſcerning thereof to the true members, but not an outward viſibilitie to the world.

3 Abrahams ſpirituall ſeede, that is, a number of faithfull people hath been alwaies in the world, but not alwaies viſible to the world: the promiſe is fulfilled, and the inviſible Church over the world diſperſed; that the Lord promiſed to Abraham, but not a glorious viſible Church alwaies to continue.

4 It is a great untruth, to ſay, that the Church in that age was no leſſe conſpicuous than before: where was the conſpicuouſneſſe of it, when in the dayes of Ahaz and Manaſſes, both Iſrael and Iudah fell to Idolatrie? Again, ſuch articles of religion, as adoration of images, and of reliques, merits and ſuch like, are notes of a falſe and declining Church, not of a true Church: and though under the law one particular Church, as of the Iſraelites had beene viſible: yet from the viſibilitie of a particular nationall Church, to the univerſall Catholike Church, diſperſed over the world: the argument followeth not.

The Proteſtants.

CONcerning the Catholike Church, wee hold, that becauſe it is an article of our faith, it is alwaies unto the world inviſible, and not to be eſpied but by the eyes of faith: Fulk Matth.5.ſect.5.

Concerning particular Churches, if by viſible, they underſtand that which may bee ſeene, ſo wee grant they are alwaies viſible, Fulk.Act.11.verſ.24. If for that which is actually viſible: wee ſay it is not ſo alwaies viſible to the world, nay it may ſometimes be ſo hid and ſecret, that the members know not one another, Fulk in Matth.5.ſect.3.

*Argum.*1. To the Hebrewes it is thus written, chap.12.verſ.18.23.24. You are not come to the mountaine, which might be touched, but to the citie of the living God, the celeſtiall Ieruſalem,&c. Ergo, Heb.12.23.24 the Church is inviſible, and here oppoſed to the viſible hill of Sinay.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that this is underſtood of the triumphant Church in heaven, not of the militant upon earth, chap.15.

To this we make anſwer, the Apoſtle underſtandeth the whole univerſall Church in heaven and earth, which both make but one familie, Epheſ.3.15. for here hee nameth not onely the ſpirits of juſt men which are in heaven, but the faithfull upon earth, whoſe names are written in heaven: the congregation (ſaith he) of the firſt borne: the words are πανηγύρει and ἐκκλησία, a gathering together, collection or congregation, which muſt needes be underſtood of men upon earth. Againe (ſaith hee) ye are come, not ye ſhall come: they had now left the ſmoking mountaine Sinay, and were come to Sion, the Church under the Goſpell. Wherefore this is a moſt firme and invincible argument: the Catholike Church is the univerſall number of Gods choſen in heaven and in earth: Ergo, inviſible.

*Argum.*2. We will giue an inſtance: In the dayes of Elias the Church was not viſible, for hee complaineth and ſaith that hee was onely left alone, 1.King 19.10. Ergo, the Church is not alway 1 King.19.10. viſible.

The Rhemiſts anſwer: Firſt, at that time the Church was viſible in Judea, the ſouldiers were numbred above ten hundred thouſand, 2.*Chro.*17. We anſwer. First, belike they have taken a more exact Annot.in Rom.11.ver 4. account of them than the Lord himſelfe: for he (ſaith he) had reſerved 7000. 1.*King.*19.18. that had 1 King. 19.18. not bowed their knees to Baal: they ſay there were ten hundred thouſand. Againe, Elias, if hee had knowne ſuch a number, could not have beene left ſo comfortleſſe, as in griefe of heart to deſire to die. But be it granted that the Church was viſible in Judea at this time, though it were not ſo to Elias: yet where was that viſible Church in the dayes of Achaz and Manaſſeth, when Judea fell alſo to Idolatrie.

Bellarmine alſo anſwereth, as the Rhemiſts doe, that in Elias time the Church was viſible in Judea, and therefore God ſaith directly, that he had left 7000. in Iſrael: whereby thoſe tribes are underſtood which where under the King of Samaria, cap.16.reſp.ad argum.3.

Anſw. Firſt, they cannot ſhew us of any Prophet notwithſtanding at this inſtant in Judea. Secondly, I will aske the Jeſuite, theſe 7000. in Iſrael were they not of the Church? it cannot be denied: Ergo, the Church is not alwaies, and in all places viſible, as they would beare us in hand: for they were not knowne to Elias, who complaineth that he was left alone. Thirdly, S. Paul urgeth this example, to ſhew, that there is a remnant ſaved through the election of grace unknowne to the world, they may as well ſay, that this place is impertinently alleaged by the Apoſtle. And further, ſeeing Iſrael belonged to the covenant alſo, and yet was fallen away from the viſible profeſſion of the true worſhip. The like alſo might happen to Iudah, as it did in the reigne of Achaz and Manaſſeh.

Some other doe anſwer thus: They grant that the Church before Chriſt might be inviſible, but not the Church ſince Chriſt: for hee ſaith, ædificabo eccleſiam, I will build my Church, not that I doe build, or have built it: ſic Hethus epiſcop. Eboracenſ.

Bellarmine alſo ſaith, that the Church of the Jewes was but one particular Church, and though it had failed altogether, yet the univerſall Church through the world had not failed; for out of the Church of the Jewes, there were found many faithfull, as Melchiſedech, Iob, and afterward Cornelius, Bellar.c.16.reſp. ad argum.3. The Rhemiſts alſo ſay, That there is great difference betweene the Church of the Chriſtians, and of the Iewes: ours reſting upon better promiſes than theirs. Annot. in Rom. 11. verſ.4.

Anſw. By ſtanding thus ſtrictly upon the future tenſe, you may as well prove that Chriſts Church was not at all before his comming, as that it was not viſible before. But Chriſts meaning is this rather, that there is no building in the Church but by Chriſt onely: for Paul and Apollos be but waterers, ſic Bradford Martyr. Fox pag.1616.*col.*1.

Further, to Bellarmine we anſwer, that the viſible Church was tied then to the nation of the Jewes, as it is now onely among the Gentiles: and if it failed in that nation, it could not have elſewhere been found. True it is, ſome faithfull men were then found among the Gentiles, but there was no viſible Church then among them, as they count, a viſible, that is, flouriſhing, famous and knowne in the world: yet Melchiſedech was one of the ſame Church, being held to be Sem, Cornelius alſo was in thoſe times, when the Jewes being rejected, the viſible Church began to bee among the Gentiles. To the Rhemiſts alſo we ſay, that the Church of the Jewes had as ample promiſes for their continuance, untill the firſt comming of Chriſt, as the Chriſtians have for their Church to his ſecond comming: neither hath the Church of God ſince Chriſt, any ſuch promiſe, for their viſible flouriſhing and glorious ſtate in the world: but the contrarie rather, as it is propheſied, Apocal.12. that the woman, which ſignified the Church, ſhall flie into the wilderneſſe.

Argum.3. To beleeve that there is an holy Catholike Church is an article of our faith: Ergo, it is inviſible. Bellarmine anſwereth. Firſt, the holineſſe of the Church is inviſible. Wee reply, ſo the Church is partly viſible, partly inviſible by his confeſſion. Firſt, why then doe ye define the Catholike Church to be a viſible congregation, if it be not wholly and altogether viſible? they know that definitio muſt convenire definito, the definition muſt agree wholly to that which is defined: but now it is not: for they ſay, the Catholike holy Church is partly viſible as it is a Church, partly inviſible as it is holy. Secondly, doe wee not ſay in the Creed, Credo Catholicam, as well as Credo ſanctam, I beleeve a Catholike Church, as well as I beleeve the holy Church? then it is alſo inviſible, as it is catholike, becauſe this alſo is part of the article. See I pray you what ſhifting is here.

Secondly, he anſwereth, that ſome thing is ſeene in the Church, ſome thing beleeved: for wee ſee that viſible company of men, which make the Church: but whether that company be the true Church, wee doe not ſee it, but beleeve it.

We reply againe: firſt, the Jeſuite hath not yet proved that ſome thing is ſeene in the Church, ſome thing beleeved: but one thing is ſeene, namely the congregation as they are men, another thing is beleeved, that they are the Church: the ſight and beleefe now by his owne confeſſion are not both in the Church. Secondly, we denie that the univerſall companie of the Catholike Church, which is the number of the predeſtinate, can be ſeene; therefore all is beleeved, and nothing ſeene. Thirdly, hee ſaith, that by faith we know which is the true Church: Ergo, by faith wee know which are the members of the Church: Ergo, by faith the members doe know themſelves to be of the Church: therefore faith is requiſite in the true members of the Church: then unfaithfull men cannot be true members of the Church; which point the Jeſuite ſtrongly before maintained againſt us. Mendacem oportet eſſe memorem, a lier had need have a good memorie, leſt he tell contrarie tales, and ſo hath the Jeſuite here: for before he denied that faith was requiſite to make a true member of the Church: here he ſaith, that without faith a member cannot be knowne, much leſſe therefore made.

Tom 2. qu. 59 artic. 6. ſect. 6.

Gregor. Valent. Analyſ. lib. 3. cap. 4. §. 4.

The ſecond Queſtion : whether the Church may erre.

THis queſtion is divided into two parts. Firſt, whether the Catholike Church may erre at all, or not? Secondly, whether the viſible Church upon earth may fall away from God into Idolatrie and Apoſtaſie.

14. Error.

The firſt part, whether the Catholike Church may erre in doctrine.

The Papiſts.

THey doe teach that the Catholike Church cannot poſſibly erre, not onely in matters abſolutely neceſſarie to ſalvation, but not in any thing, which it impoſeth and commandeth, whether it bee contained in the word of God or not : yea that it cannot erre in thoſe things, which beſide the word of God in the holy Scriptures, are commanded. And by the Church here they doe meane not onely the Paſtors and Biſhops, but the whole companie of the faithfull : ſo that neither that which all the Paſtors of the Church doe teach, can be erroneous, nor what is received generally of the whole Church, *Bellarmin. de Eccleſ.lib.*3.*cap.*14.*Rhemiſt.annot.in Iohan.*14.*ver.*16.

1 Tim.3.15. Bellarm.lib.3. cap.14. Epheſ.5.27. Argum.*1. The Church (ſay they) is the pillar of truth, 1 *Tim.*3. Ergo, it cannot erre. We anſwer : firſt, it is no otherwiſe the pillar of truth, than a Virgin without ſpot and wrinckle, Epheſ. 5. 27. As that place doth not privilege the Church from all ſinne and imperfection of life ; ſo neither doth this place exempt her from all error in doctrine. Secondly, ſhe is called the pillar of truth in reſpect of us, becauſe the truth is preſerved in the true Church, and is not elſewhere to be found : not becauſe the truth dependeth upon the Church : for S. Paul ſendeth not Timothie in this place to learne of the Church, as though it could not poſſibly be deceived ; but (ſaith hee) theſe things have I written, that thou maieſt know how to behave thy ſelfe in the houſe of God, *verſ.*14.15. Ergo, the word of God is the rule of truth, and the Church hath no warrant to be kept from error, but as ſhe is led and governed by the word of God. Thirdly, the argument followeth not, for Peter was a pillar and yet erred, 1 Tim.3.14. Galat.2.9. *Gal.*2.9.11.

Matth.16.18. Epheſ.4.12. Iohn 17.17. Argum.*2. They heape many arguments together. The Church hath the ſpirit of God, to leade it into all truth, the gates of hell ſhall not prevaile againſt it, *Matth.*16. God hath given it Apoſtles, teachers, Evangeliſts, to keepe it in the truth, *Epheſ.*4. Chriſt hath prayed for the Church that it may be ſanctified in the veritie, Iohn 17. Chriſt prayed that Peters faith ſhould not faile : Ergo, the Church cannot erre, *Rhemenſ.annot.*1 *Tim.*3.15.

We anſwer : every one of the elect hath the ſpirit of God, neither ſhall the gates of hell prevaile againſt the faith of any one of the elect to overthrow it : Chriſt prayeth for every one that ſhould beleeve in him, that they may be ſanctified in the truth. Iohn 17.20. Ioh. 17.20. Wherefore it followeth as well by theſe arguments, that no one faithfull man can fall into error. The Paſtors and teachers ſo long as they follow the Apoſtles doctrine, may keepe the Church from error : but it is not gathered out of that place, *Epheſ.*4. that the paſtors, if they ſwarve from Gods word, cannot erre : But rather the contrarie ; and therefore the Apoſtle addeth further, Epheſ.4.14,15. *verſ.*14. that we ſhould not be carried about with every wind of doctrine, but follow the truth in love, *verſ.*15. The Church then, ſo long as it followeth the truth, and is not carried with wind of doctrine, cannot erre.

Concerning Peter, Chriſt prayed for him that his faith ſhould not faile in that grievous tentation, which he fell into. Secondly, he prayed not for him as governour of the Church, but as he prayeth for every faithfull man, *Ioh.*17.23. Thirdly, for all this prayer Peter erred, *Gal.*2.

Pag.617.2.60. Argum.*3. This argument was uſed in the Councell of Baſil : the Church is without ſpot and wrinckle, *Epheſ.*5.27. Ergo, without error, Fox. pag.672.*col.*1.ex Aenea Silvio.

We anſwer : firſt, S. Paul ſpeaketh there of a glorious Church, ſuch as ſhall be in the kingdome of heaven, not of the Church, as it is upon earth : ſo Revel.7.14. *Revel.*7.14. The elders which ſate round about the throne, which are the Saints in heaven, were ſeene in long white robes, which they had waſhed white, in the blood of the Lamb.

2 It followeth out of this place, that the Church is as well without ſinne, as free from error : which the divines in the Councell did alſo grant. But ſeeing by their owne confeſſion every member of the Church, being clothed in this mortall fleſh ſinneth, how can the Church be without ſinne ? If the Church conſiſt of men, and all men are ſinners, how is the Church free ? If all the parts and members bee ſinfull, how is not the whole alſo polluted with ſinne ? If all the parts of the bodie bee ſicke and diſeaſed, how can the whole be ſound ? The Church alſo is not aſhamed to confeſſe her ſelfe to bee blacke, Cant.1.5. *Cant.*1.5. ſhe ſhall be made beautifull and glorious, without all ſpot and blemiſh in the kingdome of God : and even now alſo is made righteous and juſt before God through Chriſt, not becauſe ſhe hath no ſinne, but becauſe it is remitted : and although ſome errors and imperfections remaine, yet ſhall they be no hindrance to her ſalvation.

The Proteſtants.

THis queſtion, whether the Church may erre, muſt be underſtood with a double exception : firſt, that the univerſall Catholike Church of Chriſt erreth not, Calvin. inſtitut. lib. 4. cap. 8. ſect. 11. 12. But there is no viſible Church in the earth, which may not erre, as well in faith as in manners : this poſition was maintained by M. Bucer, in open diſputation at Cambridge, *Fox. pag.*1388. Secondly, the true Church of God may erre in ſome points not neceſſary to ſalvation, but cannot fall cleane away from God into any damnable error, Calv. ibid. Fulk. annot. in Epheſ. 5. verſ. 29. And in this ſenſe is the Church called, Religionis & fidei perpetua mater : A perpetuall mother and preſerver of faith and religion, *Cod. lib.*1.*tit.*5.*l.*14.Leo & Anthem. That the Church may erre as we ſay, we doe ſhew it thus : and by the Church, we underſtand the whole company and congregation, the paſtors with the people.

1 When our Saviour Chriſt ſuffered, the Church erred in faith : Ergo, it may erre : the propoſition is thus proved. The Church was either in the Scribes and Phariſies, or elſe in the Apoſtles : but both of them erred : they in putting Chriſt to death, the other in their incredulity, not beleeving rightly in the reſurrection of Chriſt. Bellarmine anſwereth : firſt, that the Phariſes were privileged not to erre, onely till the comming of Chriſt. We replie againe : firſt, after Chriſt was come they ſate in Moſes chaire, and Chriſt biddeth they ſhould be heard, Matth. 23. 2. If they erred not afore, neither could they now ; for they were not diſplaced out of Moſes chaire : but the truth is, they never had any ſuch privilege not to erre. Secondly, the Maſter of Sentences ſeemeth herein to bee of another opinion, who thus ſaith, anſwering to a certaine objection, whether circumſition ceaſed to be in force ſtraight after the inſtitution of Baptiſme : In Chriſti morte terminata eſſe legalia omnia : That all the legall rites were determined in Chriſts death, and from that time Circumciſion ceaſed, lib. 3.diſt.3.K. If that all the Legals were in force till Chriſts death, then the Prieſt-hood alſo : wherefore what privilege they had before, they held it till then. Thirdly, if the Phariſies were now prone to error, then by our adverſaries owne confeſſion, they ceaſed to be the Church : Ergo, the Church was not now viſible, for in them it was not : and the Apoſtles fled from Chriſt, and ſhifted for themſelves : how could then the Church be viſible to the world?

Lib. 2. de eccleſ. cap. 17.

Secondly, the Jeſuite anſwereth concerning the Apoſtles. Firſt, the Apoſtles were not yet entred into their office and Biſhopricke, but onely appointed to it, and therefore they might erre. Wee replie againe : firſt, they were not only appointed Apoſtles, but partly already they had exerciſed their Apoſtleſhip : for they were ſent forth to preach the Goſpell, and had power and commiſſion to worke miracles, and heale diſeaſes, Matth. 10. How then is not the Jeſuite aſhamed to ſay, that they were not yet Paſtors nor Apoſtles? Secondly, if the Pearifies erred, and the Apoſtles erred, then all the world, was in error ; Ergo, by their ſaying at this inſtant there was no Church upon the earth, which is a great abſurditie, for the Church erreth not, ſay they.

Thirdly, (ſaith the Jeſuite) the Apoſtles erred not in faith : they were reproved for not beleeving the reſurrection : which beliefe becauſe they had not yet received, they could not loſe it. We replie. Firſt, though they had not erred in any materiall point ; yet if there were any error at all in them, it is ſufficient for our purpoſe : that they erred it is manifeſt, for they fled away from Chriſt. Secondly, hee excuſeth them for their infidelitie concerning the reſurrection, becauſe this faith they had not yet received. But had not Chriſt (I pray you) often inſtructed them of this matter? and if this were no ſuch error in them, then Chriſt was too ſharpe in reproving them for their infidelitie. Thirdly, it appeareth, that they were wholly deceived concerning the Meſſiah, Luk. 24. 21. the two Diſciples ſay, they truſted that it had beene he that ſhould have delivered Iſrael : ſee then what weake anſwers theſe are : did theſe fellowes thinke that their gloſes would not bee examined : or that their dreames ſhould bee taken for oracles?

Fourthly, ſome of the Papiſts affirme, that the true faith in the paſſion of Chriſt onely remained in the virgin Maries breaſt : Alexand. Halenſ. Iohan. de turre cremat. If this bee true, then is Bellarmines opinion falſe, that the Apoſtles at that time kept the faith. But it is moſt like that they are all deceived, and that both Mary and the Apoſtles at that time were in great feare and doubt, and their faith ſhaken. That the Apoſtles wavered, we have already ſhewed : and yet there was greater cauſe, that they ſhould be ſtable in faith, who were alſo to bee preachers of faith, than Mary who was a beleever onely, not an Apoſtle or preacher of the Goſpell.

Halenſ 3. p. qu. ult. art 2. Turre crem. lib. 1. de eccleſ. cap. 30.

Argum. 2. The Church of the Jewes erred before our Saviour Chriſts comming : Ergo, the true Church may erre.

The propoſition is proved : In the time of the reigne of our good Kings, they did offer ſacrifice upon hill altars, but onely to the Lord, which was an error, 2. King. 12. 3. 14. 4. The feaſt of the paſſover was not kept ſo preciſely according to Gods word at any time before, no not in the reigne of the beſt Kings, as it was in the eighteenth yeere of Ioſias reigne, 2. King. 23. 22. The feaſt of Tabernacles had not beene ſolemnly and truly kept from the dayes of Ioſua, as it was in Nehemiahs time, Nehem. 8. 18. Ergo, all this while the Church of the Jewes erred ſomewhat in the externall worſhip of God : Fulk. Epheſ. cap. 5. ſect. 4.

Nehem. 8. 18.

Argum. 3. Wee read of famous Churches that erred both in faith and manners after our Saviour Chriſts comming in the fleſh, even in the Apoſtles time : Ergo, the true Church may erre. The firſt part is thus proved : the Church of the Corinthians erred in manners : they went to law among heathen Judges chap. 6. which was a generall fault among them : Is it ſo, that there is not a wiſe man among you? verſ. 5. They erred alſo in judgement. It will be anſwered, that the error, or hereſie rather, concerning the reſurrection was not generall : for the Apoſtle ſaith, How ſay ſome among you that there is no reſurrection of the dead? chap. 15. verſ. 13. But that error and abuſe in the receiving of the Lords ſupper ſeemeth to have beene more univerſally ſpred : Every man (ſaith the Apoſtle) when they ſhould eat, taketh his owne ſupper afore, and one is hungry, and another is drunken, chap 11. 21. Every man, ſaith he, that is, very many, yea and the moſt among them. The Church alſo of the Galathians, was (in no ſmall part thereof:) infected with this error, that the ceremonies of the Law ought neceſſarily to bee kept together with the Goſpell : and therefore S. Paul upbraideth in this manner the whole Church : O yee fooliſh Galathians, who hath bewitched you? &c. chap. 3. 1. Ergo, theſe Churches, being notwithſtanding the Churches of Chriſt, erred.

1 Cor. 6. 5.

1 Cor. 15. 13.

1 Cor. 11. 21.

Galath. 3. 1.

Bellarmine anſwereth, confeſſing that theſe Churches had their errors (yea hee is more liberall in granting this, than we would have him) for hee ſlandereth the whole Church of Corinth, as though they denied generally the reſurrection of the dead, which they did not : S. Paul only chargeth ſome of them, that is, the falſe brethren, with this error, as it may appeare 1 Cor.chap.15.verſ.12.

Bellarmines laſt refuge therefore is this, that error may be in a particular Church, but not in the univerſall Catholike Church : de eccleſ.lib.4.cap.2.obſerv.3.

Anſwer : Firſt, thus Bellarmine himſelfe is conſtrained to uſe Calvines diſtinction which hee miſliked before : who confeſſeth that a particular Church may fall into dangerous error, but not the univerſall, de eccleſ. lib. 3. cap. 14. princip. cap. Secondly, the Jeſuite hath granted as much as wee would deſire : for if every particular Church bee ſubject to error, then the viſible Church is ; for the viſible Churches muſt needs be particular: for univerſall things are not ſubject to the ſenſe, but to the underſtanding : this then hee hath granted, that a particular Church may erre, but the Italian, Spaniſh, French, and ſo of the reſt, are but particular Churches : Ergo, they may erre. Thus we have the Jeſuites owne confeſſion, that particular viſible Churches may erre.

Cont. 2. Epiſt. Pelag lib. 4. cap. 7.

Auguſtine ſaith, Quomodo erit eccleſia in iſto tempore, perfecta ſine macula & ruga, cujus membra non mendaciter confitentur ſe habere peccata? How can the Church be perfect in this life, without ſpot or wrinkle, whoſe members doe truly confeſſe, that they are not without ſinne ? Ergo, the Church ſinneth and is imperfect, and why not ſubject to error ? But in the Councell of Baſil it was denied, as yee have heard, that the Church could ſinne.

We have their owne teſtimonies againſt them : as before for particular men, of their ſide, wee have heard the opinion of Alexander, Alenſ. 3. par. quaſ. ultim. artic. 2. and of Iohannes de Turre cremata, lib. 1. de eccleſ. c. 30. That at the paſſion of Chriſt the true faith only remained with Mary : Hereupon it will follow, that the Church that then was, erred and failed in faith ; unleſſe they will ſay, that Mary only was the Church.

But let us heare the judgement of their owne Church againſt them : Decret. Gregor. lib. 5. tit. 39. c. 28. Innocent. 3. Iudicium Dei veritati qua nec fallit, nec fallitur, ſemper innititur ; judicium autem eccleſia nonnunquam opinionem ſequitur, quam & fallere ſape contingit, & falli, propter quod contingit interdum ut qui ligatus eſt apud Deum, ſit apud eccleſiam ſolutus, &c. The judgement of God is grounded upon the truth, which neither deceiveth, nor is deceived ; but the judgement of the Church is many times ruled by opinion, which both may deceive, and be deceived : whereupon it ſometimes falleth out, that he which is bound before God, is looſed with the Church ; and he that is free before God, is bound by the Church, &c. Behold then a teſtimonie of one of your moſt learned Popes, that the Church may erre in judgement. But it will be here anſwered, that he ſpeaketh of the diſcipline of the Church, not of doctrine. Anſw. But Bellarmine, to prove that the Church erreth not, objecteth that place, Matth. 18. dic eccleſia, tell it to the Church : and he that heareth not the Church, let him be as an heathen and Publicane. But this were an hard matter, ſaith hee, to bind men to heare the Church if it might erre : Bellarm. c. 14. Now this place is underſtood altogether of diſcipline : wherefore his meaning is, that the Church cannot erre in the keyes : and indeed, ſo long as it followeth Gods word, it cannot, as our Saviour ſaith, Whatſoever you bind in earth, ſhall bee bound in heaven : but otherwiſe it may erre in the keyes ; ſo that ſometime, that which the Church bindeth in earth, may bee looſed in heaven : as Innocentius in this Canon confeſſeth.

Shall wee now in the laſt place to this doctrine put to the ſeale of the holy witneſſes of Gods truth : Maſter Bilney being demanded, what he thought of the Church, whether it might erre or not ; anſwered, that the Catholike Church can by no meanes erre in faith ; for it is the whole congregation of the elect : otherwiſe he granted not, Fox pag. 1000. artic. 4. The like confeſſion made Iames Bainham martyr, pag. 1028. But concerning the viſible Paſtors and teachers of the Church, we have the ancient confeſſion of Walter Brute, who lived about two hundred yeeres agoe, that they may all erre, and have erred : yea Peter erred (ſaith he) Gal. 2. and was therefore reproved of S. Paul, only the Scriptures are privileged from erring, Fox pag. 477. col. 2.

3 The reformed Churches hold, that the viſible Church may erre. Auſpurg. artic. 5. Surely men doe flatter and deceive themſelves too much, if they thinke there bee no faults conveied into the Church, by the deſires of covetous men, and by thoſe labyrinths and obſcurities of the doctrine and traditions of the ſchoolemen, &c.

The ſecond part, whether the viſible Church may faile upon the earth.

The Papiſts.

THey hold that it is impoſſible that the viſible Church ſhould utterly faile upon the earth, and fall 17. Error. from God; but that there ſhall alwaies be a viſible and knowne Church upon the earth, having a perpetuall ſucceſſion of Paſtors and Doctors, where the true worſhip of God ſhall bee preſerved and kept, *Bellarm.lib.3.de Eccleſ.cap.*13.

*Argum.*1. Theſe and ſuch places of Scripture they ſtand upon. The gates of hell ſhall not prevaile Matth.16.18. againſt it. I will be with you to the end of the world. His throne ſhall be as the Sunne, and endure as the Matth.28. Moone: Ergo, the viſible Church ſhall not faile upon earth, Bellarm.ibid. Pſal.88.36,37.

We anſwer, that theſe places muſt be underſtood of the Catholike and univerſall Church, whereof we denie not, but every true particular Church is a part. This Church is the ſpouſe of Chriſt, this Church ſhall not periſh, this is the kingdome of Chriſt, with this Church will he alway be preſent to the end of the world: we denie not but that the inviſible Church ſhall continue upon the earth ſo long as the world endureth. Secondly, thoſe places are unproperly underſtood of the viſible Church, for therein are both good and bad: how then can that be the ſpouſe of Chriſt, where there are many Infidels and wicked ones, which have not eſpouſed themſelves unto him? How can it bee called his Kingdome, whereas it is not of all acknowledged? But in the true Catholike Church all and every one are eſpouſed to Chriſt: all and every one have the kingdome of God within them, as it is Luke 17. Luk.17.21. *verſ.*21.

*Argum.*2. They doe abuſe that place of S. *Paul, Epheſ.*4.11. He gave ſome to bee Apoſtles, ſome Epheſ.4.11. Evangeliſts, ſome Paſtors and teachers, for the gathering together of the Saints: Ergo, the Church ſhall alwaies bee viſible till all the Saints are gathered together, *Bellarmin. cap.*13. *Rhemiſt.Epheſ.*4. *Sect.*5.

Wee anſwer: this place proveth that the Church hath never wanted Paſtors and teachers for the continuance of the truth, neither ſhall ever be without them, as the Lord ſaid by the Prophet, Eſay 59. Eſay 59.21. verſ 21. My ſpirit which is upon thee, and my words which I have put into thy mouth, ſhall not depart out of thy mouth, nor the mouth of thy ſeed for ever. Wee therefore denie not but that in all ages, yea in the moſt ignorant times of Poperie, God raiſed up faithfull teachers unto his Church: although they were not mitred and croziard Biſhops, neither could ſhew any outward pompe, or boaſt of any glorious ſucceſſion: Such were Gulielmus de S. Amore, Arnoldus de nova villa, anno 1240. Berengarius, Ioachim Abbas in the time of Innocentius the 3. Wicklif, Brute, Swinderby, Badby, and others about anno 1400. with many which were not knowne to the world: for the truth never in any age wanted witneſſes.

By the continuance of the truth and right faith wee gather, that there have beene alwaies faithfull teachers, though not notorious to the world, and ſhall be: but who they were, and where they lived, what pompe, what authoritie they were of, it is not materiall to know: wherefore an outward viſible ſucceſſion of Biſhops and Paſtors is not neceſſarie for the continuance of the truth: neither can it bee concluded out of this place.

*Argum.*3. Thus they reaſon, there have beene alwaies ſome faithfull men, which have outwardly profeſſed their faith: for if they diſſembled or cloaked their profeſſion, then were they not faithfull: Ergo, the Church hath beene alwaies viſible, as in the time of perſecution, Bellarmin.ibid.

We anſwer: firſt, the Jeſuite doth cleane pervert and change the ſtate of the Queſtion, for he defineth a viſible Church, to be multitudo congregata, in qua ſint prælati & ſubditi: a multitude or companie gathered together, where there are both Prelates and Biſhops, and people obedient unto them. And now he giveth an inſtance of perſecution: wherein ſome faithfull Chriſtians may give an outward profeſſion of their faith: where is now that multitude congregate together? where is that juriſdiction of Prelates? where is that viſible and glorious ſucceſſion? We denie not but that in time of perſecution the faithfull may be knowne to themſelves; and yet ſometime they are not: for in Iſrael there were ſeven thouſand faithfull beſide Elias, yet he knew none of them. But it followeth not, that therefore the Church is then viſible to the world, and notoriouſly knowne to men, as the Rhemiſts ſay, in Matth. 5.*Sect.*3.& *Act.*11.*Sect.*3. Thus they flie manifeſtly from the queſtion.

The Proteſtants.

WE denie not, but that the Catholike univerſall Church, as it hath hitherto continued ſince the beginning of the world, ſo ſhall it endure to the end: the Lord ſhall never want upon earth a companie of faithfull men, which ſhall truly ſerve him: though it be not neceſſarie, neither hath alwaies beene ſeene, that they ſhould be in any one place. A viſible Church we define to be a congregation of men, amongſt whom the word is truly preached, and the Sacraments adminiſtred. Such a Church hath nót alwaies beene, neither can we be aſſured that it ſhall alway be found upon the earth, wherein the worſhip of God publikely and viſibly is practiſed.

Argum. 1. In the reigne of Ahaz King of Juda there was no viſible Church, where the pure worſhip of God was practiſed; for both Iſrael under Pekah, and Juda under Ahaz, fell to Idolatrie, and 2.King.16.3. followed the cuſtome of the Gentiles: yea, Vriah the high Prieſt conſented with the King to ſet up
2.King.21.2. Idolatrie. Likewiſe in the dayes of Manaſſeh, who did evill after the abomination of the heathen, there was no place where God was publikely worſhipped; for Juda was corrupted, Iſrael was carried away captive: Ergo, there was a time when there was no viſible Church.

Bellarmine cannot here ſhift us off with that anſwer, which hee maketh to the objection of Elias time: that he complaining of the ſmall number of the faithfull, meant of Iſrael onely: for at the ſame time, the true worſhip of God was exerciſed in Judæa: to this wee have anſwered before, 1. quaſt. 2. part. of this Controverſie, in argum. proteſt. 2.

The Jeſuite then hath another ſtarting hole: there is not the like reaſon betweene the Church of the Iſraelites then, and of Chriſtians now, for theirs was but a particular Church, and therefore though it failed with them, yet were there many faithfull among the heathen to be found, as Melchiſedech and Iob: but the Church of Chriſtians is an univerſall Church, &c. Bellarm. cap. 16. reſp. ad argum. 3.

Anſw. Firſt, I demand of them, was not the Church of the Jewes then the Church of Chriſt, as the Church of Chriſtians is now? but the Church of Chriſt was alwaies Catholike; Ergo, ſo was that Church then: and though it were viſible onely then among the Iſraelites, yet all the faithfull in the world were members of the ſame Church that the Iſraelites belonged unto: Ergo, there is no ſuch difference betweene theſe Churches as the Jeſuite ſuppoſeth. Secondly, what telleth hee me of certaine beleevers among the Gentiles? that is not the queſtion: for we doubt not but that the inviſible Church of Chriſt hath beene in all times and places: hee ſhould have proved, that there was another viſible Church to be found among the Gentiles, beſide that of the Iſraelites: which could not be, ſeeing that at Jeruſalem onely the ſacrifices were to be offered, and the law was onely and the Prophets among them, which then were the eſſentiall notes and markes of the Church. Thirdly, yet will the Jeſuite finde it an hard matter to finde any faithfull men at this time among the heathen, when there was none in Iſrael. In Melchiſedechs time, there was Abraham, and when Iob lived, there were many excellent men in Iſrael, if as ſome thinke, he lived about the time of Moſes: but whom can he name now among the Gentiles, that were true worſhippers, when as Iſrael and Juda were given to Idolatrie? We conclude then, that ſeeing we can aſſigne a time, when as the Church was not viſible among the circumciſed Iſraelites, and among the uncircumciſed it could not be, that there was a time when as the viſible Church failed upon earth: Auguſtine ſaith, Eccleſia Catholica non ſolum poſt adventum Domini & ſalvatoris noſtri prædicata eſt, ſed etiam ab initio mundi multis figuris & ſacramentis deſignata: The Catholike Church began not ſo to bee called after the comming of our Lord and Saviour Chriſt, but was from the beginning of the world by many figures and ſacraments deſcribed, Serm. 217. Auguſtine here ſaith, that the Church before Chriſts comming was Catholica, Catholike or univerſall. Bellarmine ſaith, Eccleſia Iudæorum non erat univerſalis, The Church of the Jewes was not univerſall or Catholike. Out of Auguſtine I conclude thus, the Church of the Jewes before Chriſt was the Catholike and onely viſible Church of the world, but it ſometime failed: Ergo, the viſible Church may faile upon earth.

Argum. 2. In the paſſion of our Saviour there was no viſible Church, ſuch a Church we ſtill meane, as where there are Prælati & ſubditi, paſtores & oves, Prelates and people, Paſtors and ſheepe. Wee prove it thus.

1 The viſible Church was not amongſt the Phariſees and Prieſts, for they ſhamefully and wickedly erred, Bellarm. c. 17. It was not amongſt the Apoſtles, for they alſo erred; therefore after the Papiſts opinion, they were not the Church: for the Church (ſay they) erreth not. Secondly, hee ſaith, they were yet but materiall parts, not formall, that is, not Biſhops or Paſtors: how then could there be a viſible Church, which was without the formall and principall parts, that is, Paſtors and Biſhops? Ergo, there was then no viſible Church.

Argum. 3. When the abomination of deſolation ſhall ſtand in the temple, and there ſhall bee a generall defection and apoſtaſie from the faith, then ſhall the viſible Church faile upon earth. But the Matth.24.15. firſt is true, Matth. 24.15. 2 Theſſ. 2.3. Ergo.
2 Theſſ.2.3. To the firſt place the Jeſuite anſwereth, that it muſt be underſtood of the deſtruction of the temple,
Lib.3. c.16. reſ. lib. 3. c. 16. reſp. ad argum. 5. But the Rhemiſts more liberall than ſo, affirme that it ſhall bee eſpecially ad argum 5. accompliſhed in Antichriſts time, when as the ſacrifice of the Maſſe ſhall utterly be aboliſhed, Annot. in Mat. 24. ver. 15.

To the next place concerning that defection and apoſtaſie which S. Paul ſpeaketh of, firſt he ſaith, that it ſhall be a defection from the Romane Empire: but the Rhemiſts ſay, it ſhall be a defection from moſt points of Chriſtian religion. Secondly, the Jeſuite anſwereth, that though it be a defection from the Romane faith, yet it ſhall not be generall but particular. But the Rhemiſts better adviſed grant it ſhall bee a revolt of Kingdomes, peoples, provinces: and the publike entercourſe of the faithfull with the Church of Rome ſhall ceaſe; they ſhall onely communicate with it in heart, Annot. in 2 Theſſ.2. ſect.6.

Now out of their owne words wee conclude: there ſhall be a time when as the publike ſervice of God ſhall ceaſe, there ſhall be deſolation in the Churches and temples of Chriſtians: there ſhall bee then no publike entercourſe with the Church, but a private communicating in heart: Ergo, there ſhall be a time when there ſhall be no outward viſible Church notoriouſly and famouſly knowne: Ergo, our adverſaries are in an error, and are condemned by their owne mouth.

In the laſt place let us ſee how this doctrine hath been ſealed: Maſter Philpot that bleſſed martyr, by that place of S. Paul, 2 Theſſ. chap.2. verſ.3. Chriſt ſhall not come, except there be a departing firſt, ſheweth, that there ſhould be an univerſall departing from the faith, for ſo the word ἀποστασία properly ſignifieth, and we call him apoſtata that forſaketh the faith: in which ſenſe the word is uſed, 1 Timoth. chap.4. verſ.1. When this univerſall departing from the faith fell out in the world, which came to paſſe when Antichriſt was revealed, and the man of ſinne diſcloſed, as the Apoſtle there ſaith: what was then become of the viſible Church? I thinke it failed when the profeſſion of the faith failed.

Let us ſee antiquitie for this matter: The Emperour Conſtance, who favoured the Arrians, thus tauntingly ſaid to Liberius Biſhop of Rome: Quota pars es orbis terrarum, quod ſolus vindicas hominem nefandiſſimum? I pray thee how many parts of the world art thou, that thou dareſt alone ſuccour this naughtie man? meaning Athanaſius. Liberius anſwereth: Non eò quòd ſum ſolus fidei cauſa minuitur, nam & antiquitus tres ſoli reperti ſunt reſiſtentes præcepto regis: The cauſe of faith is not therefore impaired becauſe I am alone, for ſometimes there were onely three found which reſiſted the Kings wicked commandement, Dan.3. When the true worſhip of God was only found amongſt three perſons, it is apparent that the viſible Church of God failed upon earth. Thus have we an authoritie of one of the Biſhops of Rome againſt them.

Theodor. lib. 2. cap. 16.

That the viſible Church may faile, it is thus proved by forraine teſtimonies. 1. By our adverſaries owne confeſſion, if the Romane Church, which they hold to bee the Catholike and viſible Church, may faile, then it will follow, that the viſible Church may faile: but the firſt is true in the judgement of the Eaſt Churches. The Patriarch of Jeruſalem doth excommunicate out of the body of the Church the Pope of Rome. The Ruthenians and Muſcovites doe ſay the Pope is an heretike. The Neſtorians and other Jndians doe call the Pope a Biſhop unapproved.

2 The Ethiopians in their Leiturgie pray for the chiefe of the Church of Alexandria, and for the Biſhops, Prieſts and Deacons of the right faith, &c. whereby it is evident, that they take not the Church of Rome to be a viſible Church, which they exclude out of their prayers.

3 The judgement of the reformed Churches is this: Helvetia, latter confeſſion, 1. chap. It falleth out ſometime, that God in his juſt judgement, ſuffereth the truth of his word, the Catholike faith and his owne true worſhip to be ſo obſcured and defaced, that the Church ſeemeth almoſt quite raced out, and not ſo much as a face of a Church to remaine, as we ſee fell out in the dayes of Eliah and other times, and yet in the meane time, the Lord hath in this world, even in this darknes his true worſhippers, &c. Belgia, artic.11. This Church God doth defend againſt all the force and furie of the world, although for a ſmall time it may ſeeme to be verie little, and as it were utterly extinguiſhed in the ſight of man, &c.

4 We want not here the teſtimonie of the Romaniſts themſelves. Viega the Jeſuite confeſſeth, that under Antichriſt, Romam deſerturam a fide, &c. That Rome ſhall fall from the faith, and become an habitation of devils. Suarez, omnem cultum divinum ceſſaturum, that then all publike worſhip ſhall ceaſe. The ſame Suarez confeſſeth, that in the time of Antichriſt, the Church ſhall remaine in the elect onely, who ſhall not be overcome. Ibid. but the viſible Church conſiſteth not onely of the elect. If then the Romane Church be the viſible Church (in their opinion) and the Romane ſhall faile: it followeth that the viſible Church may faile.

The third Queſtion: of the Notes and Markes, whereby the true Church may be diſcerned and knowne.

Firſt of the falſe and erroneous notes of the Church.

OUr adverſaries doe deviſe many notes, whereby their Church is deſcribed, as Bellarmine reckoneth up fifteene in order, too many (certaine) to be found in a good Church: but there are ſix principall which they doe moſt ſtand upon; Antiquitie, univerſalitie, ſucceſſion, unitie, the power of miracles, the gift of prophecie. We will firſt touch theſe in order, and then come to ſpeake of the true and infallible notes of the Church.

Of Antiquitie. Note 1.

THe Papiſts make great bragges of the long continuance of their Church: yea, that they can ſhew the deſcent of their Church from Adam, Rhemiſt. annot. in Act. 28. ſect.5. But (alacke) ſilly men, they muſt come ſhort of our Saviour Chriſt and the Apoſtles time, by five or ſix hundred yeeres, for the moſt of the opinions which they now hold. Let us examine their reaſons.

18. Error.

In any great change of religion (ſay they) the authors of the ſect, the time when it began, the perſons that oppugned it may be knowne: but no ſuch thing can be ſhewed of our Church (ſay they) as we can ſhew of yours: we can tell them the yeere, the places, and ring-leaders of their revolt, ſay our Engliſh Rhemiſts, Annot. in 1. Iohan. 2. ſect. 9. Bellar. lib. 4. de Eccleſ. cap. 5.

We anſwer: firſt, no marvaile if Papiſtrie herein doe much differ from other hereſies: they, as the hereſies of the Arrians, Pelagians, Donatiſts, becauſe they were not long to continue, ſuddenly brake out, and ſuddenly againe were extinguiſhed: But Papiſtrie, being the prop and pillar of Antichriſts kingdome, by whom the world muſt be deluded many yeeres, was at the beginning to worke cloſely and ſecretly, not breaking out at once into open impietie and blaſphemie, but under pretence of holineſſe to ſet abroach her deadly poyſon: therefore [a] S. Paul calleth it a myſterie of iniquitie, which began even to worke in his daies. And ſo ſaith [b] S. Hierome: Nunc quoque myſterium iniquitatis operatur, & garrit unuſquiſque quod ſentit: Even now the myſterie of iniquitie beginneth to worke, and everie man doth utter his owne fancies.

And whereas you alleage, that the Authors of every hereſie may bee aſſigned, which cannot bee ſhewed, you ſay, of your profeſſion: Bernard would have told you otherwiſe, if you had conſulted with him: for thus he writeth of the heretikes called Apoſtolici: Quære ab his ſuæ ſectæ authorem, neminem dabunt: Aske of them the author of their ſect, they can name none: which hereſie had not it proper author from amongſt men, as the Maniehees had Manes, the Sabellians Sabellius, the Arrians Arrius, &c. But with what name will you call this hereſie? ſurely with none: [c] non eſt ab homine illorum hæreſis, their hereſie is not of men, &c. yet is it not by revelation, ſed per immiſſionem & fraudem dæmoniorum, but by the fraud and deceit of the devill. Thus farre Bernard. Thus wee ſee, that the heretickes called Apoſtolicall, could name no author of their ſect, yet were they heretikes: ſo the Papiſts, that have ſo much in their mouthes, the Sea Apoſtolike, Apoſtolicall men, Apoſtolicall traditions, &c. and ſo ſhew themſelves to be the Apoſtolici of theſe daies: though the authors of their ſuperſtitions lay hid, yet this were not ſufficient to cleere them of hereſie.

Secondly, we alſo anſwer, that all theſe things, the authors of their ſects, the time, the perſons that withſtood them, may manifeſtly be detected: firſt, concerning the time, we have a manifeſt prophecie, [d] Apocal. 20. that Sathan ſhould be bound a thouſand yeeres, and afterward let looſe: when no doubt Antichriſt ſhould begin to ſhew himſelfe to the world. Concerning this ſpace of a thouſand yeeres, there are two probable opinions: ſome thinke they are to begin immediatly after our Saviour Chriſts time, and ſo counting a thouſand yeeres, all which time Sathan muſt be bound; then Antichriſt ſhould begin to appeare. Thus [e] Iohn Wickliffe expoundeth it. Others ſay, the thouſand yeeres ought to begin after the three hundred yeeres expired of perſecution: for all that while it is moſt like Sathan was let looſe, when he raged with open mouth like a Lion againſt the Church and Saints of God. Of this opinion was [f] Walter Brute ſomewhat after Wickliffes time: who by this meanes maketh the prophecie of Daniel of 1290. daies, and that in the Apocal. 12. of 1260. daies, to agree with the thouſand yeers of Sathans binding (a few yeeres excepted, which in the computation of hundreds and thouſands make no great oddes;) for taking everie day for a yeere, we ſhall come to 1290. yeeres after Chriſt: when the thouſand yeers muſt be expired, beginning from the three hundred yeeres of perſecution. If we count the thouſand yeeres from Chriſt, wee ſhall come to the time of Hildebrand, called Gregorie the 7. who was Pope of Rome a thouſand yeeres after Chriſt and upward: by whom the mariage of Miniſters is thought firſt to have beene forbidden. If wee begin after the ceaſing of perſecution, which continued three hundred yeeres, we ſhall fall into the yeere 1300. about the time of [g] Iohn Wickliffe, when the great rabble of Monkes and Friers began to ſwarme, and ſuperſtition to encreaſe.

But we will take a little paine briefly to touch the authors of many ſuperſtitions in Poperie, and of ſome of their erroneous and [h] hereticall opinions. Anno 420. Zoſimus Biſhop of Rome did challenge a prerogative above other Churches, that it might be lawfull to make appeales from other Churches to that Sea: and to ſet the better colour upon it, hee falſly alleaged a decree of the Nicene Councell, but there was no ſuch thing found there: wherefore it was decreed in the Councell of Carthage at that time, that none ſhould appeale over the ſeas to Rome.

Boniface the 3. purchaſed of the wicked Emperour Phocas the title of univerſall Biſhop. Tranſubſtantiation was firſt concluded againſt [i] Berengarius, anno 1062. under Leo the 9. but not publikely enacted before anno 1216. under Innocentius the 3. The Dominicke Friers brought in the ſame time, and their ſect eſtabliſhed by Innocentius the 3. Auricular confeſſion alſo was brought in anno 1215. under the ſame Pope. [k] Teleſphorus brought in the Lenten faſt: Calixtus inſtituted the foure Ember faſts in the yeere [illegible] [l] Hyginus brought in Chriſme. We can alſo ſhew by whom every peece of their blaſphemous Maſſe hath been patched together: Marriage was firſt prohibited by Nicholas the ſecond, Alexander the ſecond, Gregorie the ſeventh, about the yeere 1070. The Communion in one kind [m] forged, urged, and decreed in the Councell of Conſtance, not above two hundred yeeres agoe. By theſe few examples it may appeare, that it is falſe which the Ieſuit ſaith, that the authors of their ſects and hereſies cannot be ſhewed.

[k] Kemnit. exam. ſeſſ. 4.

[l] Object. How is Sylveſter then affirmed to be the author afterward? Anſw. Hyginus is confeſſed by ſome of them to be the firſt author, and by others Sylveſter: This is affirmed out of their opinion. See further, Retec. p. 77.

[m] Not firſt then thought upon, or defended, but firſt by a generall decree impoſed and enforced. See this objection further anſwered, Retect p. 8.

Now wee will briefly declare what oppugners and gainſayers they have had in all ages, ſince their groſſeſt opinions began to bee received : Such were Bertramus and Berengarius about Pope Hildebrands time, that mightily impugned the groſſe opinion of Tranſubſtantiation, Robertus Gallus 1291. Robert Groſthead Biſhop of Lincolne, who was called malleus Romanorum, the mallet or hammer of Fox præfat. the Romans, anno 1250. Franciſcus Petrarcha 1350. Iohannes de Rupeſciſſa, who propheſied againſt the Pope 1340. with many other, which ceaſed not to crie out againſt the abominable vices and erroneous opinions of the Church of Rome. Wherefore it is a great untruth, which the Jeſuite doth ſo ſtifly avouch, that wee cannot ſet downe the pedegree and deſcent of their Church and faith, and how it hath continually been reſiſted.

3 Now whereas they ſay, that they can name the ring-leaders of our ſect : we have none other maſters and authors of our faith, than our Saviour Chriſt and his Apoſtles, by whoſe holy writings we refuſe not to be tried. But you flie from the light, you diſgrace the Scriptures, making them imperfect, and inſufficient : this the true Diſciples of Chriſt would not doe : you are the Diſciples of Chriſt, as the Phariſies bragged that they were the Diſciples of Moſes. And as then the true Church was not in thoſe that ſate in Moſes chaire, though they could alleage great antiquitie, but in Chriſt and his Apoſtles: ſo is not now the true Church to be diſcerned, by cuſtome or number of yeeres, but by that truth which was taught and preached by our bleſſed Saviour and his Apoſtles. Auguſtine alſo ſaith, Poſſunt etiam latrones & adulteri pro ſe antiquitatem adferre : Theeves and adulterers can alſo alleage antiquitie for themſelves, *quaſt.ex veter. teſtam.*114. Antiquitie therefore is not a perpetuall note of the Church.

Here Bellarmine, whereas we alleage, that our Church is moſt ancient even from the Apoſtles time, though it hath a long time been hid, and not been notoriouſly knowne in the world, as the malignant Church hath been, doth thus reply againſt us : That if the true Church of Chriſt hath been ſo many yeeres buried in ſilence, it ſhould be in more miſerable caſe, than the people of the Jewes, which have had alwaies their Synagogues : and where is then that glory of the Church of Chriſt ſpoken of by the Prophets? Bellar.lib.4.de Eccleſ.cap.5.in. fine.

*Anſw.*1. As for the Jewes, though their name and nation yet remaineth, yet they are a people ignominious through the face of the earth, and as vagabonds doe wander from one nation to another, and therefore are not to be compared to the Church of Chriſt, which though it were in the firſt times obſcured in the cruell perſecutions of the Emperours, and ſince defaced through the ambition of the Biſhops of Rome, yet hath been ſince Chriſts time, for many yeeres a glorious and flouriſhing Church throughout the world. 2. Concerning the glory of Chriſts Church, foretold by the Prophets, it was rather ſpirituall in the propagation of the faith, and preaching of Chriſt to the Gentiles, 1 *Tim.*3.16. 1 Tim.3.16. than temporall in the outward glittering ſhew : and yet the Church alſo was outwardly glorious from the time of Conſtantine for many hundred yeeres after. The ſpirituall beautie of the Church hath and ſhall continue to the end of the world : the temporall glory it alwaies enjoied not, as in the perſecutions under the Romane Emperours, and ſince under the Italian Biſhops ; though in the middeſt of the hot perſecutions both then and ſince the true members of Chriſt ſhewed themſelves ; as partly I have touched before, in the ſecond part of this anſwer to their note of antiquitie, that for the ſpace of theſe five or ſix hundred yeeres, there have not wanted ſome of our Church that have taſted of their perſecutions.

But ſaith Bellarmine againe, moſt of your Evangelicall Doctors came out of our Church, as Luther confeſſeth himſelfe that he had been a Monke. Anſw. 1. And from whence, I pray you, ſprang our Saviour Chriſt and his Apoſtles ? came they not of the Jewes? and were not his Apoſtles taken out of the Jewiſh Church, that was then ſo corrupted in religion? 2. As under the government of the high Prieſts and Scribes, there were notwithſtanding many devout men, that expected the comming of the Meſſia, as Zacharie, and Simeon : ſo we doubt not, but that in Poperie there were many, and ſome of them Monkes, that had a taſte of the Goſpell, and loathed the corruptions of the Romiſh Church.

But concerning this note of antiquitie, that it is no ſufficient marke of the Church, wee can urge them with both their lawes, *Iuſt.Cod.lib.*8.*tit.*55.*l.*2. Conſtantine. Conſuetudo non valet, quæ rationem vincit non legem : That cuſtome or antiquitie is of no worth, which goeth againſt reaſon or law. But ſuch is your antiquitie againſt the law of the word of God. Ergo.

Secondly, out of your owne law, *Decr.p.*1.*d.*8.*cap.*4. Veritate manifeſtata, cedat conſuetudo veritati : After the truth is manifeſted, let cuſtome give place to the truth. *Cap.*5.Gregorius 1.Chriſtus dixit, Ego ſum veritas, non conſuetudo: Chriſt ſaid, I am the truth, not the cuſtome. *Cap.*8.Conſuetudo ſine veritate, vetuſtas eſt erroris : Cuſtome without truth, is the oldneſſe of error. Likewiſe, *Decret. Gregor.lib.*1.*tit.*4.*cap.*11. Conſuetudo non derogat juri divino : Cuſtome doth not prevaile againſt the divine law.

By all theſe decrees it is manifeſt, that cuſtome and antiquitie unleſſe it bee propped up with truth, and agreeable to the law of God, is of no force: Such antiquitie unleſſe you can ſhew for your Church, as we are ſure you cannot, you are able to ſay juſt nothing.

Laſtly, let them ſpeake that have ſealed this doctrine with their blood: firſt, Maſter Philpot denieth that truth ought to be meaſured by antiquitie : Ex divinis nulla occurrit præſcriptio : Preſcription Pag. 1639. hath no place in matters belonging to God, *pag.*1805.*exam.*5.c.a. col.1.10.

Maſter Bradford alſo ſaith, that theſe three notes of the Popes Church, unitie, antiquitie, conſent, may as well be in the devils Church as in Gods Church: as for example, the Idolatrie of the Iſraelites had them all three, pag.1622.col.1.

Pag.1473. col.1.60.

Pag. 1653. col.1.50.

Secondly, the ſame bleſſed Martyr Philpot plainly avoucheth, that his religion was older than the Papiſts by a thouſand yeeres, *pag.*1821.*exam.*11.*col.*1.

Roger Holland Martyr, thus alſo with great boldneſſe proteſted: The antiquitie of our Church is not from Pope Nicholas or Pope Ioane; but even from the beginning from the time that God ſaid to Adam, The ſeed of the woman ſhall breake the ſerpents head. Moreover of our Church have been the Apoſtles, Evangeliſts, Martyrs, and confeſſors of Chriſt, that have been at all times, and in all ages perſecuted for the teſtimonie of the word of God. But for the upholding of your Church, what antiquitie can ye ſhew? your Idolatrous Maſſe is not yet 400. yeere old, and ſome of your Maſſes are younger, as that Maſſe of S. Thomas the traitor: *hac Roger Holland.p.*2040.*col.*1.

Pag.1856. col.2.50.

Whereas then we here joine in iſſue with our adverſaries in theſe two points, that neither antiquitie is alwaies a ſure note of the Church, and that antiquitie for the moſt and chiefeſt points of their doctrine is not of their ſide. 1. For the firſt, wee have the judgement of other reformed Churches with us: Helvetia, latter confeſſion, cap. 17. We condemne all ſuch Churches as ſtrangers from the true Church of Chriſt, who are not ſuch as they ought to be, howſoever they brag of ſucceſſion of Biſhops, of unitie, antiquitie: Auſpurge. No cuſtome is to be allowed, which is contrarie to the word of God. Bohemia, *cap.*15. they thus alleage out of the Canons, Wee praiſe cuſtome, yet that onely which is knowne to uſe nothing contrary to the Catholike faith.

Harm.ſect.10. pag.311.

Sect.14.p.444. Diſtinct.8.11. e.conſuetud. pag.520.

Concerning the other point, that true antiquity is not of our adverſaries ſide. 1. The Greeke Church teſtifieth: for the Grecians affirme, that their Church is the princeſſe of other Churches, and hath borne the firſt prerogative in the orthodoxall verity: The Syrians boaſt themſelves to be the firſt Chriſtians in the world, becauſe that Peter had his ſeat ſeven yeeres at Antioch before ever he went to Rome.

Anſwer to the Councell of Auſpurg. cap.13.

Villamont voiages lib.2. cap.22.

Alvares deſcript.Ethiop. cap.29.

2 So alſo Preſter Iohn ſaid to Alvares, that the Church of Antioch was in a manner the chiefeſt, untill the Councell of Pope Leo, and therefore he asked him, why they had divided the Churches of Antioch and Rome, &c. So both the Eaſt and South Church, doe give the priority and privelege of antiquity unto the Church of Antioch before Rome.

3 And further, that the now Romane religion faileth of antiquitie in many chiefe points, it is the confeſſion of their owne writers: as that the celebration of publike prayer in an unknowne tongue, is againſt the practice of the ancient primitive Church, (and therefore a meere innovation) is confeſſed by Bellarmine; who alleageth out of Hierome, that in Eccleſiis urbis Romæ, &c. In the Churches of the citie of Rome, as a thundring heaven, the people were heard, ſounding, Amen. And Eraſmus marvelleth how this change came in. Another confeſſeth, that in former times the election of the Pope was confirmed by Chriſtian Emperours, &c. and he ſaith of the contrarie in that the Emperours approbation is not now required, nova rerum facies irrupit: A new face or faſhion of things is broken in: neither can the Romane Church ſhew antiquitie for the inhibiting of Miniſters mariage, which Eſpenceus ſheweth in time paſt to have been lawfull by a Canon of the Synod Gangrenſ. meminit Canon Epiſcoporum conjugii, &c. The Canon maketh mention of the mariage of Biſhops at that time lawfull. The cuſtome of receiving of the Euchariſt in one kind began to be generall not long before the Councell of Conſtance, as Gregor. de Valent. confeſſeth. Many ſuch innovations are to bee ſeene in the doctrine and practice of the Romane Church, whereof they have no ſhew of antiquitie, by their owne confeſſion, as is to be ſeene throughout in this Tractate.

19.Error.

OUr Church is univerſall, ſay they, both in reſpect of time, perſon, and place, it hath alwaies been in the world, in all countries and nations it hath flouriſhed: Ergo, it is the true Church.

That it is univerſall, they firſt prove by the name of Catholike, which is, ſay they, by Gods providence appropriate to them, which name they affirme without ground to have been impoſed by the Apoſtles upon true beleevers, *Rhem. in Act.cap.*11.*ſect.*4.*Bellar.lib.*4.*de eccleſ.cap.*4. ſo the Doway Bible, *pag.*22.

Act.11.26.

We anſwer: firſt the name of Chriſtians is a more honourable title than the name of Catholikes: for it is manifeſt, *Act.*11.26. that this name was uſed in the Apoſtles time, and by the Apoſtles themſelves allowed: but it is not certaine that the name Catholike came from the Apoſtles. Againe, many hereticks challenged this name to be called Catholikes, who did not ſo eaſily obtaine to bee called Chriſtians: as *Cod.lib.*1.*tit.*8.*leg.*6.Theod.. Gratian. It is decreed, that the Neſtorian heretikes, non abutantur nomine Chriſtianorum, ſhould not abuſe the name of Chriſtians: the law ſaith not Catholikes. But this ancient and honourable name the Papiſts doe deſpiſe: for in Italie and at Rome it is uſed as a name of reproach, to ſignifie a dolt or a foole, *Fulk.in Act.*11.26.

2 We ſay that you doe uſurpe this name, as the Donatiſts in Auguſtines time would bee called Catholikes: for what is the name of Catholike, without the Catholike doctrine? They are the true Catholikes that profeſſe the ancient and Apoſtolike faith: to us therefore, bee it knowne to you, this name of better right appertaineth, than to you (O ye Papiſts:) yet we have better arguments to prove our Church by, then by ſyllables and titles: Quaſi nos (ſaith Auguſtine) hujus nominis teſtimonio utamur ad demonſtrandam Eccleſiam, & non promiſſis Dei: As though wee (ſaith hee) doe leane upon this name to prove our Church by, and not rather upon the promiſes of God. And S. Hierome ſaith, lib.3.adverſ.Pelag. Quid ſi te alius Catholicum dixerit, ſtatimne aſſenſum tribuam? ſtultiſſimum eſt ſuper fide mea ex alterius pendere judicio: What if another man call thee Catholike, ſhall I give conſent? it is a moſt fooliſh point concerning my faith to depend of another mans judgement. So I ſay, it is a vaine thing for them to prove their faith, by the calling and naming of others.

Now then, although we much force not of this name, that heretikes alſo have challenged to themſelves: yet this title as it was firſt taken, doth alſo appertaine to us: for the Imperiall law ſaith, which was made by Theodoſ. Gratian. Valentinian, &c. that they which hold the equalitie of the Trinitie, ſhould be called Catholike Chriſtians. jubemus amplecti Chriſtianorum Catholicorum nomen: We will have them called Chriſtian Catholikes, Cod.lib.1.tit.4.l.1. But I truſt our adverſaries cannot ſay, but that we beleeve concerning the Trinitie as ſoundly as they themſelves. Therefore wee alſo doe make challenge of right to this title.

Secondly, they prove their univerſalitie, by the multitude of people that have received the Romiſh faith: and their Church (ſay they) hath repleniſhed the greateſt part of the world. They would prove this by the propagation of the Church, in the Apoſtles time, in Tertullian, Ireneus, Hierome, Auguſtine, yea and afterward in Gregories daies: yea and now alſo beſides many great countries in Europe, they have of their Church in India, America, and the unknowne parts of the world, Bellarm.cap.7. nota.4. So they of Doway, multitude of progenie promiſed to Abraham pertaineth to Chriſt, pag.205.

We anſwer: firſt, the truth is not alwaies to be meaſured by the judgement or opinion of the multitude: Follow not a multitude, ſaith the Scripture, to doe evill: the greateſt part is not the beſt: Chriſt calleth his flocke puſillum gregem, a little flocke: Feare not little flocke (ſaith he) Saint Hierome ſaith, Multitudo ſociorum nequaquam te Catholicum, ſed hæreticum eſſe monſtrabit: The multitude of your fellowes doth not therfore prove you a Catholike, but rather an heretike, lib.3.adverſ.Pelagian. And S. Auguſtine: Non omnes hæretici per totam faciem terra, ſed tamen hæretici per totam faciem terra, alii hic, alii ibi: All heretikes are not diſperſed over the face of the earth, yet heretikes are, ſome here, ſome there, Homil.de paſtorib. Thus wee ſee that heretikes may as well ſtand upon univerſalitie, as Catholikes.

The like alſo hath the Civill law, Cod.lib.1.titul.20.l.1.Iuſtinian. Neque ex multitudine authorum quod melius æquiuſque eſt, judicatote, cum poſſit unius forſan, & deterioris ſententia, & multos & majores aliqua in parte ſuperare: Neither by the multitude of authors judge ye what ſtandeth beſt with equitie, when as perhaps the ſentence of one that is inferiour, may in ſome reſpect goe beyond the greater and higher ſort, &c. As then equitie in civill cauſes goeth not by multitude, ſo neither veritie in divine.

Heare alſo one of your owne Popes teſtimonie, Nicholaus 1. ad Michael. Imperator. Numerus puſillus non obeſt, ubi abundat pietas; nec multiplex prodeſt, ubi abundat impietas: nolite igitur gloriari in multitudine, quia non multitudo, ſed cauſa, damnationem vel juſtificationem adducit: A ſmall company hindreth not, where pietie aboundeth, neither doth a great companie further, where impietie aboundeth; glorie not therefore in multitude, for not the multitude, but the cauſe juſtifieth or condemneth. The multitude promiſed to Abraham and performed to Chriſt is great in it ſelfe: as there were ſealed of the 12. tribes 144. thouſand, Revel.7.8. but yet in reſpect of the number of the wicked, Chriſts flock is but a ſmall one.

Secondly, you have nothing to doe with the Church which was propagated in the Apoſtles time, nor for the ſpace of five or ſix hundred yeeres after Chriſt: it was not your Church, for the moſt of your hereſies are more lately ſprung up than ſo. And you need not bragge of your univerſalitie now: for the Turke (I trow) hath a larger dominion than the Pope, and Mahometiſme is as largely ſpred as Papiſtrie, and further too. And for Europe, I hope you need not make your boaſt: the Pope had never leſſe juriſdiction then he hath now, and I truſt every day ſhall have leſſe. But many (you ſay) in the new found countries have been converted to your religion. Indeed, if you had had grace, ſuch an opportunitie being offered as the Spaniards had, you might have wonne that ſimple people to Chriſt. But you thirſted more for their gold, than for their ſoules health: it is notoriouſly knowne to the world what extreme crueltie hath been wrought upon that innocent people. Was that a Catholike part of the Spaniards to keepe dogs of purpoſe, to woarie and deſtroy the inhabitants, to uſe them as horſe and beaſts, to plough, to carrie, to digge? Thus by your crueltie, there were out of one ſmall Iland called Hiſpaniola, which was well peopled and inhabited, deſtroyed and rooted out in ſhort time, two millions of men and women: the ſtorie of Benzo an Italian, is abroad to be ſeene of this matter: you have none or few of your Popiſh Catholikes in thoſe countries, but of your owne brood that have been ſent thither. But enough of this.

Thirdly, we nothing doubt, but that our faith, the truth of the Goſpell hath bin long ſince knowne and publiſhed to the whole world.

Thoſe two conditions, which the Jeſuite putteth in, to make the Church univerſall, doe helpe us very well: the firſt is, that it is not neceſſarie, that all countries wholly ſhould profeſſe the Chriſtian faith; but it ſufficeth, if there be ſome of the Church in every countrie. The ſecond, it is not requiſite, that this univerſalitie of the Church ſhould be all at one time: but if it be done ſucceſſive, that is, in divers ages, one countrie to be joined to the Church after another, it is enough.

Now keeping theſe two conditions, we ſhall eaſily prove our Church to be univerſall: for there are no countries in Europe, and few in the whole world, wherein there are not ſome of our faith, namely, that abhorre worſhipping of Images, doe onely hope to be ſaved by faith in Chriſt without merit, and beleeve in the reſt, as we doe. And againe, taking one age after another, wee ſhall eaſily make it good, that our faith at times, hath ſpred it ſelfe over the whole world.

Now let us ſet to the ſeale of this our anſwer, the teſtimonie of the holy Martyrs.

Bleſſed Philpot firſt denieth that univerſalitie, unleſſe it be joined with veritie, is a ſufficient note of Pag.1656.2.40. the Church, *Fox pag.*1825. For the Church of God hath not for the moſt part the greateſt multitude, for it is the broad way that leadeth to deſtruction, and many there be that finde it, ſic Richard Woodman Pag.1810.2.60 martyr, *pag.*1996.*col.*1.

Secondly, Maſter Philpot denieth that univerſalitie is a note of the Romiſh Church: for the faith which that Sea now maintaineth, hath not conſent of all nations, neither ever had: for the Greeke Church, and a good part of Chriſtendome beſide, never received their ſervice in an unknowne tongue, neither yet your Tranſubſtantiation, your receiving alone, your purgatorie, your Images: ſic Roger Holland Pag.1851. 1.10 martyr, *pag.*2040.*col.*2.

Thirdly, ſaith maſter Philpot, our Church is rather to be counted univerſall, though it were but in ten perſons, becauſe it agreeth with the faith which the Apoſtles univerſally did plant: for Chriſts Church is not ſo much called Catholike, becauſe it is univerſally ſpred over all nations, for ſo was it Pag.1657.2.16 not in the Apoſtles time, but becauſe the doctrine which they had received of Chriſt, was perfect, and &p.1656.1.91 appointed to be preached to all the world. So ſaith Auguſtine, Eccleſia ideo dicitur Catholica, quia univerſaliter perfecta eſt, & in nullo claudicat: The Church is called Catholike, becauſe the doctrine thereof is univerſally perfect, and faileth not in any point, *lib. de Geneſ. cap.*1.

Now further, if univerſalitie, and multitude, were a note of the true Church: other Churches, which exceed in largeneſſe the Papall Juriſdiction will lay claime to it before the Romaniſts: firſt, In the Eaſt, the Grecians, Armenians and Syrians, and other nations profeſſing Chriſtianitie, in the Northerne and Eaſterne countries, doe farre in number exceed the Pope-catholikes: the Empire onely of the king of Muſcovia doth extend toward the Eaſt, almoſt to the kingdome of Perſia. Secondly, in Villamont lib.2.cap.14. Africa the kingdome of the Abyſſines, who are alſo (as* Moſius thinketh) the Caphites and Jacobites containeth more than fortie kingdomes. *Præf in Anaph. Baſilii.

Thirdly, concerning the name Catholike and univerſall, it cannot bee peculiar to the Romane Church, which ſhould be but one particular Church, and a part of the Catholike Church, if it were a true Church: the Catholike Church is that which is diſperſed over all the world, and in all nations, though not at one and the ſame time, ſome have bin found belonging to this true Catholike Church. Harm. ſect.10. p.307. Thus the Proteſtants of Helvetia, in the latter confeſſion, *chap.*17. There is but one Church which wee therefore call Catholike, becauſe it is univerſall, ſpread abroad through all the parts and quarters of the world, and reacheth unto all times, and is not limited within the compaſſe either of time or place. Bohe-Sect.10.p.317. mia, *chap.*8. This is to be thought of any Chriſtian fellowſhip, whether it be great or ſmall, that it ſelfe alone is not the holy Catholike Church, but only one part thereof, as the Apoſtle writeth of the Church of Sect.10.p.321. Corinth, 1.*epiſt. chap.*12. Ye are the body of Chriſt and members of him every one for his part. Engliſh confeſſ. art.4. We beleeve that there is one Church of God, and that the ſame is not ſhut up (as in times paſt among the Iewes) in ſome one corner or kingdome, but that it is Catholike and univerſall, diſperſed Harm. ſect.19. p.596. through the whole world. Saxonie in concluſ. We deſire that the whole true Church of God, that is the faithfull and learned, whereſoever they are, may underſtand what we ſay, who no doubt will be witneſſes with us, that this doctrine is the conſent of the true Catholike Church of God.

Waldenſ. doctrin. fid. tom 1. Fourthly, and that the Romane and Catholike Church are not all one, ſome of their owne writers confeſſe, as Waldenſis affirmeth: Errare poſſe particularem, &c. that a particular Church may erre: as lib.2 cap.19. for example, the Africane and Romane Church. Pighius ſaith, Quis per Romanam unquam intellexit Hierarch. Eccleſ. lib.6.c.3. univerſalem eccleſiam? Who by the Romane ever underſtood the univerſall, that is, the Catholike Church?

The third Note, of ſucceſſion.

10. Error. THey make great boaſt of the long and perpetuall ſucceſſion of their Popes from the Apoſtles for the ſpace of theſe fifteene hundred yeeres and more: condemning all Churches which cannot ſhew the like order of ſucceſſion, *Bellarm. cap.*8. *Rhemiſt. annot. in Epheſ. verſ.*13. And further, ſaith Bellarmine, there are two things requiſite in lawfull Paſtors and Biſhops, ſucceſſion, and ordination: for firſt they muſt ſucceed either immediatly ſome Apoſtle, as Clemens did Peter; or ſome conſecrated by the Apoſtles, as Ignatius ſucceeded Evodius, whom Peter made a Biſhop; or muſt bee conſecrated by him that hath the Apoſtolike authoritie: but ſuch ſucceſſion you can ſhew none in your Church, either from Apoſtle, or Apoſtolike men.

Secondly, ordination is requiſite in a lawfull Biſhop, that hee bee ordained of three Biſhops, which were ordained of others, and they of others before them, till they come to the Apoſtles: thus Iacob was ordained Biſhop at Jeruſalem by Peter, Iames and Iohn : Anacletus epiſt.2. according to the firſt canon of the Apoſtles : neither can you ſhew ſuch ordination of your Biſhops : Ergo, you have no true Paſtors, nor lawfull Biſhops, and ſo conſequently no Church, Bellar.cap.8.

Anſw. Firſt, as touching ordination, then concerning ſucceſſion. 1. That there ought to be in every Church a ſeemely ordination and conſecration of the Biſhops, Paſtors, and Miniſters, and that according to the example and rule of the Apoſtles, wee denie not ; and ſuch wee doubt not, but our Church hath. But ſuch ordination, as the Jeſuit requireth, is not neceſſarie, that every lawfull Biſhop muſt prove his ordination by three other ſucceſſively from the Apoſtles time : as thus it is ſhewed. Firſt, if you will credit S. Hierome, he ſaith, Olim, idem erat presbyter & epiſcopus : In the beginning, a Biſhop and Prieſt were all one : and before that ſchiſmes entred into the Church, communi presbyterorum concilio eccleſia gubernabantur, the Churches were governed in common by the whole presbyterie, &c. Which ſentence of his is allowed in your owne canons, Decret.par. 1. diſt.95. cap. 5. If it be thus, that this diſtinction of Biſhops and Prieſts was not brought in in the Apoſtles time, but afterward ; then can no ſuch ordination be ſhewed from the Apoſtles time. Secondly, notwithſtanding the Canon which goeth under the name of the Apoſtles, it ſeemeth the practice of the Apoſtles, and of the Church was otherwiſe a long time : for Timothie, whom you hold to have bin a Biſhop, was ordained by the impoſition of the hands of the whole presbyterie or elderſhip, which was not the aſſemblie of Biſhops onely, as Bellarmine would expound it, but of other paſtors alſo, as Hierome doth interpret it, epiſt. ad Evagrium : and the Rhemiſts alſo in the ſame ſence tranſlate it, the prieſthood, and in their annotations ſhew the ancient practice of the Church agreeable to this place of S. Paul, when as the reſt of the prieſthood lay on their hands together with the Biſhop. And your owne Canons to this purpoſe approve the ſentence of S. Hierome : Senatum Romani habebant, cujus concilio cuncta agebant, & nos habemus ſenatum noſtrum cœtum presbyterorum : The Romans had their Senate, by whoſe councell they did all things, and we have our Senate the company of Presbyters, Decret.part. 2.*cauſ.*16.*cap.*7. And S. Ambroſe thus writeth plainly : Non per omnia conveniunt ſcripta Apoſtoli ordinationi, quæ nunc eſt in eccleſia : The writings of the Apoſtle doe not in every point anſwer the ordination now uſed in the Church, in 4.ad Epheſ. How then is the Jeſuit able to prove their manner of ordination from the Apoſtles time ? The practice alſo of their owne Church is contrary : as *Decr.par.*1.*d.*65.*cap.*2. Martinus thus decreeth : That at the ordination of a Biſhop, adeſſe oportet omnes, qui ſunt in provincia ſacerdotes, all the other Biſhops of the province muſt bee preſent, whom the Metropolitane muſt ſummon by his letters : and if all come together it is well ; but if this cannot be, yet moſt of them muſt come : but they that cannot come, muſt bee preſent by their letters, that ſo the Biſhop may be ordained, omnium facto conſenſu, by a generall conſent of all. And then he concludeth thus : Si aliter factum fuerit, &c. But if it be done otherwiſe, than I have preſcribed, ſuch ordination is of no force. Likewiſe, *diſtin.*66.1. Anicetus : Archiepiſcopus ab omnibus ſuæ provinciæ Epiſcopis ordinetur : An Archbiſhop muſt be ordained of all the Biſhops in the province, &c. By theſe Canons a preſence of more than three Biſhops is required. Thirdly, whereas the Jeſuit ſaith, that Iames after this manner was conſecrated by three, Peter, Iames and Iohn, out of Anacletus, hee ſpeaketh he knoweth not what, & is too much confident upon his counterfeit Anacletus : for this Iames the Apoſtle named in the 2. to the Galathians with Peter and Iohn, is the ſame which is held to have bin Biſhop of Jeruſalem : for the other Iames was ſlaine long before by Herod, Act. 12. and this the Jeſuit elſewhere confeſſeth, *lib.*1.de Rom.pontifice cap. 18. but now he bringeth in a third Iames to be Biſhop of Jeruſalem. And if Iames muſt needs be ordained by three, how commeth it to paſſe, that S. Peter, againſt the Canon of the Apoſtles, himſelfe alone appointed Clement his ſucceſſor, ſaying thus, Clementem hunc Epiſcopum vobis ordino ? I ordaine Clement your Biſhop? *Decr.par.*2. cauſ. 8.quæſt. 1.*cap.*2. If it be anſwered, Peter was an Apoſtle, and more than a Biſhop, and therefore might ordaine alone ; why then did he not as well alone ordaine Iames Biſhop of Jeruſalem ? unleſſe you will ſay that it was the chiefe biſhopricke, and therefore required the preſence of more Apoſtles. This unleſſe you will ſay, you can ſhew no reaſon of Peters ſole ordaining Clement.

1. Tim.4.14.

Fourthly, whereas Bellarmine objecteth, that as in the old law the Prieſthood went by carnall generation and lineall deſcent from Aaron ; ſo in the new it muſt be derived by ſucceſſion from the Apoſtles ; Wee anſwer : firſt, that our Saviour Chriſt and his Apoſtles could ſhew no lineall deſcent from Aaron, neither had their ordination from his ſucceſſors ; and yet were the true paſtors of the Church. Bellarmine anſwereth, that Chriſt began a new Prieſthood after the order of Melchiſedech, and therefore hee was not tied to the lineall deſcent : but from Chriſt and his Apoſtles a ſucceſſion muſt now neceſſarily be ſhewed. Contra. To grant this difference for this time, though in deed Chriſt came not to diſſolve Moſes law, but to fulfill it ; yet this we ſay further, that both before Chriſt there were true Paſtors and Prophets, which were not ordained by the Prieſts of Aaron ; and ſince Chriſt, that received not their ordination ſucceſſively from the Apoſtles. Firſt in the old law, when the ordinarie Prieſthood was corrupted, God raiſed up Prophets from other tribes, that received not from the Prieſts their ordination and allowance ; ſuch an one was Amos, who was among the heardſmen, and as Hierome ſaith, Ruborum mora diſtringens ſubito propheta effectus : was made a Prophet as hee gathered wild blackberries. After the ſame manner, in the corrupt times of the Goſpell, the Lord hath raiſed up faithfull Miniſters to his Church, that could ſhew no ſucceſſion from the degenerated

Ad Heliodor.

Clergie. Againe, ſince our Saviour Chriſt S. Paul was appointed an Apoſtle, who had not his ordination from the other Apoſtles, but was immediately called by Chriſt: yet the Jeſuite telleth us that he was ordained of the other Apoſtles, and quoteth *Act.9. Act.13. Contra.*1. Act.9.17. Ananias layeth his hands upon Saul to receive his ſight, and to baptize him, but not to make him an Apoſtle: for Ananias himſelfe was but a Diſciple, no Apoſtle; how then could he ordaine an Apoſtle? Secondly, *Act.*13.3. The Prophets at Antioch named in the firſt verſe, laid hands upon Saul and Barnabas, not thereby giving them ordination of Apoſtles, but ſeparating and ſanctifying them for that eſpeciall worke: for if this impoſition were an ordination, and that other alſo by Ananias; by this reaſon, he ſhould be twice ordained: and againe here were none but Prophets at Antioch, no Apoſtles; how then could they ordaine Apoſtles? Thirdly, if S. Paul were ordained by the Apoſtles, then he himſelfe was no Apoſtle, for the Apoſtles had no authority to make new Apoſtles, but all Apoſtles were immediately deſigned from God. Fourthly, the Apoſtle himſelfe ſaith, he was no Apoſtle of men, or by men, but by Jeſus Chriſt, *Galath.*1.1. And againe he did not communicate with fleſh and blood, neither went up to the other Apoſtles, but after three yeeres, *verſ.*16.17. immediately after his calling from heaven preaching Chriſt. Here is no ordination from the Apoſtles, hee was acknowledged by them, and received into the number of the Apoſtles, but not ordained.

Galath.1.1.

If it be anſwered, that this example of S. Paul was extraordinarie, but now in the Church an ordination ſucceſſively from the Apoſtles muſt be ſhewed:

We reply againe, that we alleage not this example, as though we did expect the like extraordinary calling now, or refuſe ordination derived from the Apoſtles, but to this end, that if S. Paul were made an Apoſtle without the ordination of the lawfull Apoſtles; much more may the Lord raiſe up new Paſtors to his Church without ordination from the uſurpers of the Apoſtles. Secondly, wee alſo hold that an ordination from the Apoſtles is alwaies neceſſarie in the Church, but not ſuch as they meane by locall ſucceſſion, and outward tradition: but a lawfull conſecrating and ordaining of Paſtors and Miniſters by the authority of Chriſt and his Apoſtles, according to the word of God committed to the faithfull diſpenſers in every true Church and congregation of Chriſt; which ordination our Church hath. As for their ſuperſtitious ordination, wee refuſe it as ſuperfluous and unneceſſarie: there may bee lawfull Biſhops and Paſtors without it, as there were Prophets in the Law not of Aaron: yea and much more, for the Prieſthood of Aaron was of Gods inſtitution, ſo is not your Popiſh conſecration: And Saint Hierome here ſaith with us; Non facit Eccleſiaſtica dignitas Chriſtianum: The Eccleſiaſticall dignitie maketh not a Chriſtian, as he ſheweth by the example of Amos: and thus much concerning ordination. Now in the next place of Bellarmines objection for ſucceſſion.

We anſwer: firſt, they cannot ſhew ſuch an entire and perpetuall ſucceſſion, without any interruption, or diſcontinuance for ſo many yeeres: for ſometime there were two, ſometime three Popes together: and this ſchiſme continued 29. yeeres, till the Councell of Conſtance, where three Popes were depoſed at once, *Benedict.*13. the Spaniſh Pope, Gregorie 12. the French Pope, and Iohn 23. the Italian Pope. Beſide there are many other doubts in their ſucceſſion: Firſt, whether Peter were Biſhop of Rome or not, whereof more ſhall be ſaid afterward in the controverſie of the Biſhop of Rome: and your owne Canons affirme, that ambo Eccleſiam Romanam conſecrarunt: both Peter and Paul did conſecrate the Romane Church: you muſt ſhew then a ſucceſſion from both. Secondly, it is uncertaine who ſucceeded Peter; your decrees hold, that he ordained Clement, as wee have ſeene before: others affirme that Linus was primus poſt Petrum Epiſcopus, the firſt Biſhop after Peter, as *Dorotheus, Euſeb.lib.*3.*c.*4. Hieron. in catalog.&c. How then can you derive your ſucceſſion from Peter? Thirdly, your ſucceſſion hath been interrupted and broken off, as when Pope Ioane ſtept into the Papall chaire, and a woman managed the affaires of your Church, ſay alſo that ſhe was S. Peters ſucceſſor; ſo then they themſelves cannot ſhew that ſucceſſion which they boaſt of.

Anacletus.

2 If ſucceſſion be ſo ſure a note of the Church, it is found alſo in other Churches beſide, as in Conſtantinople where hath been a perpetuall ſucceſſion (as Nicepherus ſaith) from S. Andrew, and where Ieremiah is at this day Patriarch, at Alexandria from S. Marke, where Melitius alſo hath at this time his Patriarchall ſeat: in other Churches alſo of Grecia, they have yet their Metropolitanes, as at Theſſalonica, where Gabriel now ſitteth, at Epheſus alſo and Corinth: as it may appeare by theſe reverend Patriarchs and Metropolitans authentike letters directed unto our Churches here in the Weſt, in the yeere 1593. in the behalfe of Iacomo Miloita, a Grecian of Pathmos, who collecteth for his ranſome. Other Churches therefore wee ſee may alleage ſucceſſion, as well as the Church of Rome.

The Jeſuite here is driven to his ſhifts, and hath nothing to ſay, but this, that the argument followeth negatively, that where there is no ſucceſſion, there is no Church: not affirmatively, that where any ſucceſſion can be ſhewed, there ſtraightwaies it ſhould follow there is a true Church: So by the Jeſuites owne confeſſion he hath made but a bad argument for the Church of Rome: wee have a perpetuall ſucceſſiou of Popes from the Apoſtles time: Ergo, we are the Church. It followeth not, ſaith the Jeſuite: we grant it. Why then a little before did hee call it inſolubile argumentum, an inſoluble and unanſwerable argument?

3 Thirdly, we ſay, that a ſucceſſion of perſons in the ſame place, without ſucceſſion of doctrine, which they cannot ſhew, is nothing worth. A ſucceſſion of the Apoſtolike faith and doctrine proveth a continuance of Paſtors and teachers, and not contrariwiſe. We have the Apoſtolike faith, and therefore wee doubt not but that there have beene continually in the Church faithfull teachers, by whom that doctrine hath beene preſerved and kept, though they were not famous, nor carried a glorious ſhew in the world. For that outward ſucceſſion is not neceſſarie, neither ſo much to bee ſtood upon. Auguſtine when he had alleaged ſucceſſion againſt heretikes, concluded thus: Quanquam non tantum nos de iſtis documentis præſumamus, quàm de ſcripturis ſanctis : although (ſaith he) wee preſume not ſo much upon theſe documents as of holy Scripture. Epiſt.165.

Wherefore briefly to joyne iſſue with them: firſt we ſay that they themſelves can ſhew no ſuch ſucceſſion in place from S. Peter, as they pretend, as we have ſhewed before. Secondly, though they did ſucceed in place, yet not ſucceeding in faith and holineſſe, it is nothing: as Symmachus your owne Biſhop ſaith, that Petrus hereditatem innocentiæ transſmiſit ad poſteros, that S. Peter did leave to his ſucceſſors the inheritance of his innocencie: decr.p.1.diſt.40.c.1. Therefore having left his innocencie, they have left the ſucceſſion. Thirdly, whereas divers of the Fathers commend the ſucceſſion of that Sea from the Apoſtles, it was for that they kept alſo the Apoſtolike faith: as decr.p.2.cauſ.24.qu.1.c.14. Hierome thus writeth to Damaſum, Petri & fidem & ſedem tenes : You hold both the ſeat and faith of Peter. Fourthly, a ſucceſſion in doctrine is ſufficient to prove a Church, though in reſpect of the time and place, the ſucceſſion bee interrupted: ſo the Apoſtle ſaith: Cui ſervio à progenitoribus : whom I doe ſerve from my progenitors, meaning Abraham, Iſaack and Iacob, the firſt Fathers 1 Tim.1.3. of the faith, for we doubt his immediate progenitors did ſavour of the leaven of the Phariſees: As the Apoſtle proveth his faith by a deſcent, though interrupted, from his progenitors, ſo wee ſhew our Church, by ſucceeding the Apoſtles in doctrine.

And here your owne decrees do helpe us well, decr.p.1.diſt.40.c.12. Non cathedra facit ſacerdotem, ſed ſacerdos cathedram; non locus ſanctificat hominem, ſed homo locum; non omnis ſacerdos ſanctus, ſed omnis ſanctus ſacerdos : The chaire maketh not a Biſhop, but a Biſhop the chaire; the place doth not ſanctifie the man, but the man the place; every Prieſt is not holy, but he that is holy is a Prieſt, &c. Wherefore where there is no epiſcopall chaire by ſucceſſion, holineſſe of life and ſinceritie of doctrine may erect an Apoſtolike chaire.

Here wanteth nothing but the ſeale, I meane the blood of Martyrs given in teſtimonie of this and other points of our faith.

Bl. Philpot thus anſwereth to the argument of ſucceſſion: that it is no infallible note of the Church; for there may be a ſucceſſion of Biſhops where is no Church, as at Antioch, Jeruſalem: But if you put to ſucceſſion of Biſhops ſucceſſion of doctrine withall, as it was in Auguſtines time when he uſed this argument againſt the Donatiſts, it is a good proofe. Object. Why? will you not have the Church to be certaine? by whom then will you bee judged? Anſwer. I denie not, but that the Church is certaine, but not neceſſarily tied to one place longer than it abideth in the word, by which all controverſies ought to be judged, Sic Philpot, pag.1825. p.1656.2.80.

Bl. Bradford being preſſed with this argument, that he could not goe upward and ſhew a ſucceſſion of Biſhops, as they could, he might make a leape downward, but upward hee could not goe: maketh this anſwer. 1. The miniſterie of Gods word and miniſters be an eſſentiall point: but to tranſlate this, ſaith he, to the outward glorious ſucceſſion of Biſhops, is a plaine ſubtiltie.

2 S. Stephen, Acts 7. being accuſed to teach new and falſe doctrine, goeth not upwards to prove his faith, but beginneth at Abraham, and ſo goeth downwards till Iſaias time, and the captivitie; from whence he maketh a great leape untill the time he was in, which was about 400. yeeres. On this ſort can we prove our faith, and ſo can you never doe yours, ſic Bradford pag.1614.col.1. p.1465.2.80.

Our Country-men of Doway doe thus argue: there was a perpetuall ſucceſſion of ſpirituall governours in the Church during the law of nature: as from Adam to Noe, from Noe to Abraham, from Abraham to Moſes, p.206. ſo likewiſe, p.19.p.115. whereupon they inferre, that much more now ſince Chriſt, the Church hath had a perpetuall ſucceſſion.

Contra. 1. The argument followeth not, from the times of the law of nature and afterward, to the time of the Goſpell: for untill Chriſt, a lineall deſcent was to continue, to preſerve the line of Chriſt: which lineall ſucceſſion is not now neceſſarie. 2 And even then that genealogie of Chriſt was continued in many obſcure families, not outwardly famous and knowne in the world: ſo there hath bin alwaies ſince Chriſt, a ſucceſſion of faithfull Paſtors in the Church, though not glorious in the eye of the world, and tyed to one place. This argument then proveth not an externall locall ſucceſſion of Biſhops.

If ſucceſſion Epiſcopall were a ſure note of the Church, the Grecians and Ethiopians can ſhew a ſucceſſion from the Apoſtles, as well as the Romaniſts. 1. The Greeke Church doe ſtand upon the perpetuall ſucceſſion of their chiefe Biſhops of Conſtantinople, even from the Apoſtles time: and therefore, when as Pope Eugenius at the Councell of Florence, where the Patriark of Conſtantinople died, would have had the Grecians to elect a new Patriark, that might there by the Pope be confirmed, they utterly refuſed, ſaying, That their Patriark could not bee elected out of Conſtantinople : Surius trac.4. whereby it is evident, that they ſtand upon an entire ſucceſſion, without any dependance of the Pope. Concil.p 469. The Syrians doe alſo urge a ſucceſſion at Antioch from S. Peter. Villamont.

2 The Ethiopians alſo doe depend upon the Patriark of Alexandria, who pleadeth a ſucceſſion voiag.lib.2. c.12.

3 Yea, ſome of the Romaniſts confeſſe, that Peter had no more power given him of Chriſt, than the reſt of the Apoſtles, Nihil dictum eſt ad Petrum, &c. Nothing was ſaid to Peter, which was not ſaid to the reſt of the Apoſtles : for as it was ſaid to Peter, whatſoever thou bindeſt, &c. ſo it was ſaid to them, whatſoever ye binde. &c. Whereupn it followeth, that the other Apoſtles left as much unto the Biſhops their ſucceſſors, as Peter did to his : and ſo Barlaam reaſoneth for the Greeke Church, That the other Apoſtles have left ſucceſſours behinde them, among whom none were firſt, or laſt, but all equall, and of the ſelfe ſame order : as he alleageth out of Denis the Areopagite his Epiſtle to Demophilus a Monke, how he calleth the Biſhops the ſucceſſours of the Apoſtles.

4 The reformed Churches ſtand upon a ſucceſſion in true doctrine, not of perſons or place, Witemberg. *c.30. The fourth Note, of Vnitie.

21, Error.

OUr adverſaries doe ſtand much upon Unitie ; which they thinke is the glory of their Church : they doe embrace unity amongſt themſelves, and all joyne in obedience to their head. Their unitie alſo is ſeene, ſay they, in the wonderfull conſent of all their writers in matters of Religion : and the notable agreement and concord in the decrees of their Popes and Councels. But as for us, and our Church, they ſay, it is full of rents, ſchiſmes, and diviſions, Bellarm.cap.9. So alſo the Doway Tranſlate latines, doe tell us of ſects in England, divers from Luther, and each one from the reſt: every meane Preacher arrogateth to be his owne Judge, contemneth to ſtand to Luther or Calvin, &c. whereas the ſimpleſt Catholike in the world hath the ſame faith in all points with the whole Church, &c.*p.*50.

Firſt, of the unitie of their Church, and then of the unitie of ours. Their unitie, they ſay, is partly ſeene in their obedience, and loving ſocietie and fellowſhip, partly in their religion and doctrine.

Firſt, for their concord and love one toward another : we will take ſome paines, a little to decipher it. About the yeere of the Lord 900. there was pretie ſport amongſt the Popes, nine of them one after another. Stephen the ſixth abrogated all his predeceſſor Formoſus decrees : and not content with that, he tooke up his body which was buried, and cut two fingers of his right hand off, and commanded his body to be buried againe. After him ſucceeded Pope Rhomanus, Theodorus the ſecond, Iohn the tenth, who ratified and confirmed the doings of Formoſus. After them followed Pope Sergius, who diſanulling all their Acts, tooke up againe the body of Formoſus, cut off his head, and commanded his body to be throwne into Tiber, the great river in Rome. Was not here great amitie and love, thinke you, amongſt the Popes? ex Polycron.

Another notable example of their unitie we have in Pope Urbanus time the 6. againſt whom ſtood up a contrarie Pope in France named Clement : it is worth the noting, what coyle theſe two Popes kept : betweene whom many battailes were fought, many thouſands ſlaine, Pope Urbanus beheaded five Cardinals together after long torments. Biſhop Aquilonenſis, becauſe he did ride no faſter, was had in ſuſpition, and ſlaine and cut in peeces by Urbans ſouldiers, at his commandement. Behold here I pray you the unitie of theſe Catholikes.

Theoderic. Niem. de ſchiſmat.

Ex paralip. Abbat. Vrſp.

Wee will adjoyne one other example, no longer ſince than in King Henrie the eighths time. The Duke of Bourbon being the leader of the Emperours Armie, laid ſiege to Rome, and ſacked it : the Souldiers brake in upon the Pope, which was Clement the ſeventh being at Maſſe, ſlew divers of the Prieſts, and one Cardinall called Sanctorum quatuor : they laid ſiege to the Caſtle of S. Angell, ſo long till the Pope yeelded himſelfe. The Souldiers dayly that lay at the ſiege, made jeſts of the Pope : ſometimes they had one riding like the Pope with a whore behind him, ſometimes he bleſſed, ſometimes he curſed ; ſometimes with one voyce they would call him Antichriſt. See, here is their Catholike obedience to their chiefe Biſhop. Thus much concerning their unitie and concord in life.

Let us likewiſe take a view of their unitie in doctrine. Wee heard before how Pope Stephen and Sergius aboliſhed the decrees of Formoſus : how then ſaith the Jeſuite, that the decrees of Popes doe conſent together ? The Councell of Baſill and Conſtance before that decreed, that the Pope ſhould be ſubject to generall Councels : but this Canon was afterward reverſed, and now generally the Papiſts hold the contrarie, that the Pope is above Councels.

Let us ſee the conſent of their writers : Bellarmin.lib.1.de verbo, cap.12. maintaineth againſt Lyranus, Driedo, Genebrard, and others, that Iudith was in Manaſſes time. Againſt Alphonſus de Caſtro, that heretikes are no members of the Church. Lib.3. de eccleſ.ca.4. Againſt Iohannes de turre cremata, that faith is not neceſſarie to make one a member of the Church, Lib.3.de eccleſ.cap.10. And every where the Jeſuite taketh great libertie to confute and controll other his fellow Papiſts: belike having found out ſome ſtarting holes, that they either knew not, or were aſhamed to creepe into, as the Jeſuite doth: See more of their diſſentions in opinion, Tetraſtyl. Papiſt. piller.4.

But (ſaith he) wee denie not that wee have diſſentions, but they are not in materiall points, but in ſuch things as appertaine not to faith. I marvell he bluſheth not thus to ſay, himſelfe knowing the contrarie. Is it * not a ſubſtantiall point and belonging to faith, to know which bookes are canonicall Scripture, which are not? but in this queſtion they doe much diſagree. Cajetanus the Cardinall ſaith, that we muſt acknowledge no Scripture, but that which was either written or approved by the Apoſtles. But Catharinus a Papiſt doth reject that opinion. Hugo Cardinalis, Arias Montanus, doe hold no bookes of the old Teſtament to be Canonicall, which are written only in Greeke: the Papiſts now generally hold the contrarie: Ex Whitach. 1. contr.c. qu. cap. 6. Bellarmine ſaith, that all thoſe opinions which the Church holdeth as articles or precepts of faith, were delivered by the Apoſtles: and that the Church muſt not now ſeeke for new revelations, but content her ſelfe with the Apoſtolike traditions and doctrine, de Scriptur. lib.4. c.9. Out of the which words it doth neceſſarily follow, that the Church is not now to found any new article of faith: but this generally is denied by the Papiſts: and Stapleton an Engliſh Papiſt is not aſhamed to ſay, that the Church may adde more bookes to the Canonicall Scripture, by her abſolute authoritie.

* See the exception to this place anſwered: Retect. pag.69.

Further, to beleeve that the virgin Mary was without ſinne, yea conceived without originall ſinne, is now amongſt the Papiſts received for an article of faith: and therefore in Paris none are admitted to be Doctors of Divinitie, which doe not firſt confirme this article by their oath. Yet this was a great queſtion betweene the Scotiſts and Thomiſts, and a great and hot contention aroſe about this controverſie, anno 1476. betweene the Dominicke Friers, who affirmed that ſhe was conceived in ſinne, and the Franciſcanes, that held the contrarie. But theſe Franciſcanes had the upper hand, and foure of the other order were condemned and burned for it at Berne: and yet for all this our adverſaries will ſay ſtill, that they varie not in matters of faith. Thus wee have ſeene what is to be thought of popiſh unitie.

Caſpar. Peucer Chro. lib.5.

Now to anſwer briefly to their falſe accuſation, whereby they charge us with manifold ſchiſmes and diſſentions: yea Bellarmine is not aſhamed to ſay, that an hundred ſeverall ſects are ſprung up amongſt us, cap.10. lib.4. de Eccleſ.

1 We ſay with S. Paul, Oportet hæreſes eſſe, 1 *Cor.*11. There muſt be hereſies and diviſions in the Church. And it is a ſigne we have the truth, when the devill goeth about by ſchiſmes and contentions to hinder the preaching thereof. We anſwer to you, as Auguſtine did to the Pagans: Non proferant nobis quaſi concordiam ſuam: hoſtem quippe quem patimur, illi non patiuntur: Let them not boaſt of their concord, and caſt in our teeth the diſſention of Chriſtians: the enemie aſſaulteth not them as he doth us: Quid ibi lucri eſt, quia litigant, vel damni ſi non litigant: The devill ſhall get nothing if they ſhould diſagree, nor loſe any thing by their agreement: for he hath ſure hold enough of them alreadie, conſenting all in Idolatrie. But amongſt Chriſtians hee laboureth to hinder the truth by diſcord, becauſe he cannot otherwiſe withdraw them from the true religion. Hearken now (O yee Papiſts) if you conſent together, it is in evill: ſo long it pleaſeth the devill well enough: hee ſhould deſtroy his owne kingdome in ſowing diſſention amongſt you, for you fight for him. He uſeth to caſt fire-brands amongſt good Chriſtians, to withſtand by this meanes the proceeding of the Goſpell.

2 It is a great ſlander that there are ſo many diviſions amongſt us: an hundred, ſaith the Jeſuite, but he ſhall never prove ten. He might have bethought himſelfe of a full hundred of ſects amongſt his owne darlings the Monkes and Friers, as Maſter Fox hath truly gathered the number, *pag.*260. See more Tetraſt. papiſt. 4. pil. where you ſhall find ſome hundreds of divers opinions and diviſions among Papiſts. And whereas Bellarmine taketh upon him to prove the Proteſtants guiltie of twenty ſeverall hereſies, cap.9. I have reſerved the confutation thereof to another place in the treatiſe of the Pillars of Papiſtrie annexed to this booke: where in the ſecond pillar, par.3. I have anſwered the Jeſuites objections of hereſie, and repaied them with fortie hereſies more properly incident to their Church, than his twentie are into ours.

3 Thoſe few ſchiſmes and diſſentions which we have, (and yet too many, we muſt needs confeſſe) are not about points of faith, and articles of Religion: but concerning ſome things belonging to diſcipline and Church government; which matters we denie not, but have been ſomewhat too hotly and eagerly followed of ſome amongſt us: but God be thanked, this contention hath not been purſued by fire or death, as the Franciſcanes did perſecute the poore Dominicks: nor yet to the pronouncing of each other heretikes, as Eugenius your Pope was condemned as an heretike in the Councell of Baſil. Some among us indeed aſcribe too little to Luther, Calvine, Beza, and ſuch other worthie inſtruments: but they are ſuch as are beſotted with your ſchoole Divinitie, and dote upon your ſchoole Divines a little too much, which men of ſounder judgement doe miſlike amongſt us.

Now, that it may appeare what unitie is in the popiſh Church, I will give an inſtance in their head, I meane the Popes, and that out of their owne Canons.

Whereas then divers of them have decreed, not to tranſgreſſe the decrees of their predeceſſors, as Decr. p.2. cauſ.25. quæſt.1. cap.7. Zozimus: Contra ſtatuta patrum condere vel mutare aliquid, nec hujus quidem ſedis poteſt authoritas: No not this Sea hath authoritie to change the decrees of the fathers. And, qu.2.cap.4. Gregor. Si ea deſtruerem, quæ antecesſores. &c. non conſtructor, ſed everſor eſſe comprobarer: If I ſhould reverſe, what our predeceſſors have decreed, I ſhould not be a builder up, but a puller downe, &c. And not onely the Canons of religion, but other Civill conſtitutions of their predeceſſors ought to be kept: quaeſt.25.cap.16. Leo.4. Quod patres ſive in ſanctis canonib. ſive in humanis affixere legibus, &c. We muſt not tranſgreſſe, whatſoever our fathers have fixed either in the ſacred Canons, or other humane lawes. Yet notwithſtanding theſe conſtitutions, the Popes themſelves have one diſſolved anothers decrees, both in civill and religious matters.

Concerning civill and outward matters: Clemens 5. reverſeth Bonifacius 8. his conſtitution, as touching taxes and impoſitions laid upon the Church, Clem.lib.3.tit.17.c.1. Item Ioannes 22. Extrav. tit.9.cap.1. reverſeth the conſtitution of Clemens 5. which hee made againſt Juſtings and Tournaments. The ſame Clemens abrogateth the conſtitutions of Benedict.11. againſt the preaching Friers, Clem.lib.3.tit.7.c.1. Benedict.11. likewiſe correcteth the decrees of Bonif. the 8. as touching the immunites of the preaching Friers, Extrav.com.lib.5 tit.7.cap.1. Bonifac.8. revoketh whatſoever Celeſtinus had decreed, Extrav. Ioann.tit.7. And thus one of them is ſtill even with another. Bened.11. reſtoreth the Cardinals, whom Boniface 8. had depoſed and condemned: Extrav.comm.lib.5.tit.4. cap.1. Ioann.22. checketh the decrees of Gregor.10. and Boniface 8. as touching the reſervation of benefices.

The like agreement is found amongſt them in matters of religion. Ioann.22. determineth againſt Nichol.4. that Chriſt was no begger, but had a propertie in thoſe things he had, Extrav.Ioan.tit.14. cap.4. The ſame Ioannes 22. diſſolveth the ſect of the Fratricelles confirmed by Celeſtinus: Extrav Ioann.tit.7. The ſame Pope ratified the ſect of the Beguines diſſolved by Clem.5. Extrav.comm.lib.3. tit.9.cap.1.

If ſuch be the unitie of the heads, as we have ſeene, one of them ſtill oppoſing himſelfe againſt another, Iohn againſt Clement, Clement againſt Benedict, Benedict againſt Boniface, Boniface againſt Celeſtine, and they all againſt their predeceſſors, Zoſimus, Gregorie, Leo, &c. what ſhall we thinke of the reſt of the bodie, if the head be thus divided? And this is the unitie of the Popiſh Church, which they doe ſo much bragge of.

Laſtly, let us adde the ſeale of our doctrine: Maſter Bradford ſaith, that unitie is no ſure note of the Pag.1473.1.60. Church: for the idolatrous Iſraelites might have pretended this argument for themſelves, Brad.pag. 1622.col.1.

Maſter Latimer martyr ſaith, that a deforme diſagreement is better in the Church, ſo Chriſt be preached, than uniforme ignorance agreeing in Idolatrie, alleaging Hieromes example, whoſe tranſlation of the Bible cauſed diſſention in a Chriſtian congregation; yet Hierome ſaith, Sed ego in tali opere nec eorum invidentiam pertimeſco, nec ſcripturæ veritatem poſcentibus denegabo: But neither I (ſaith he) will feare their envie in ſo profitable a worke, nor yet withhold the truth of the Scripture from thoſe Pag.1588.2.70. which deſire it, Hieron.prolog.ſup. Canonic. epiſtol.Sic Latimer.epiſt.ad D. Ed. Baynton.pag.1750. col.1.

Roger Holland alſo thus teſtifieth: As for the unitie which is in the popiſh Church, what is it elſe but treaſon, murther, poyſoning one another, idolatrie, ſuperſtition? What unitie was there in your Church, when there was three Popes at once? where was your head of unitie, when you had a woman Pag.1851.1.20. Pope? Fox pag.2040.col.2.

Concerning this note of unitie objected by the Papiſts, wee affirme three things: firſt, that it is no Harm.ſect.10. pag 311. neceſſarie note of the Church: as herein the latter confeſſion of the Helvetians agreeth with us, chap. 17. who refuſe, ſucceſſion, unitie, antiquitie, as infallible markes of the Church: and there is more unitie and conſent of doctrine to bee found, both in the Eaſt Churches that follow the faith of the Grecians, and in the Ethiopike Churches, where fourtie kingdomes under Preſter Iohn, are of the ſame faith and religion.

Secondly, this unitie is not neceſſary in all ceremonies and outward rites, it is ſufficient if there be Harm ſect.10. pag.310. a conſent of doctrine. Helvetia, chap.17. We may not denie but that God was in the Church planted by the Apoſtles, howſoever there were ſtrifes and diſſentions in it. Auſpurg: Unto the true unitie of the Sect.10.p.320. Church it is ſufficient to agree upon the doctrine of the Goſpell, and the adminiſtration of the ſacraments, neither is it neceſſarie that humane traditions, &c. ſhould be alike in all places. And againe, art.4 Pag 494. they thus inferre out of Auguſtine: This whole kinde of things hath free obſervation, and Irenæus ſaith, the diſagreement of faſting doth not breake off the agreement of faith: ſo alſo Pope Gregorie in the Pag.499. twelfth diſtinction, inſinuateth, that ſuch diverſitie doth not hurt the unitie of the Church. Againe, in the latter confeſſion of Helvetia, chap.17. Becauſe there is found diverſitie of rites in the Churches, let no man ſay therefore, that the Churches doe not agree. Socrates ſaith, It is not poſſible to ſet downe in writing all the ceremonies in Churches, which are throughout cities and countries, &c. and wee at this day Harm ſect.17. pag.517. having divers rites in the celebration of the Lords Supper, and in certaine other things in our Churches, yet doe we not diſagree in doctrine and faith, &c. neither is the unitie of our Church cut aſunder.

Thirdly, unitie even in points of doctrine the Romane Church hath not, which they ſo much boaſt of: as Eraſmus is a ſufficient witneſſe in his Annotations, in 1 Cor.7. which worke was authoriſed by Leo the 10: there he ſheweth how divers Popes have been contrarie in their judgement one to another: as Iohn 22. and Pope Nicholas, whether Chriſt had any thing proper, or onely in common, the one judicially decreeing it, the other condemning it: Celeſtinus 3. alloweth divorce in the caſe of hereſie. Innocentius 3. decreeth the contrarie: Pope Pelagius ordained that certaine Subdeacons of Sicilia ſhould put away their wives, which they had lawfully married before that conſtitution: Gregory the 1. abrogateth that decree: Alexander 3. by his reſcript ſheweth, that marriage conſummate with one, and contracted with another before, was judged to be lawfull by ſome of his predeceſſors, which Innocencius condemned as adulterous: he addeth further, that Iohn 22. was forced by the Univerſitie of Paris to correct his errour, that the ſoules of the wicked ſhould not bee puniſhed before the day of judgement.

The fifth Note: Of the power of working Miracles.

THis they affirme both to be neceſſarie in the Church, to have power to worke miracles, for the confirmation of the faith, when there is any extraordinarie change or innovation of religion, and that it is a ſufficient note to deſcribe the Church: for it cannot bee (ſay they) but that, whereſoever this power is found, there ſhould be the true Church. 22. Error.

And hereupon they take occaſion to extoll the miracles of their Church, beginning at the Apoſtles time, and ſo in every age they take upon them to ſhew, that their Church never wanted thoſe that were endued with this power, Bellarm. cap. 14.

We anſwer: Firſt, the gift of miracles doth no more prove that to bee the true Church where they are wrought, than they to bee holy men and elected of God, that doe them. The Magicians wrought many ſtrange things in Egypt, contending a great while with Moſes: Antichriſt ſhall come working with ſignes and wonders, 2 Theſſal. 2. Therefore this proveth not a Church. The like ſtrange wonders and miracles are to be ſeene among the Turkes, amongſt whom their religious profeſſors doe many ſtrange things both alive and dead: as witneſſeth Septem-caſtrenſ. de Turcar. morib. cap. 14. The like things to be done in Dania ſome 300. yeeres ſince, reporteth Saxo Grammaticus: and not long ſince in Gothia, Olaus Magnus. Wherefore miracles make no probation of a Church.

Firſt Bellarmine anſwereth, that theſe were falſe miracles, and but forged, and onely to the eye, and in outward appearance, as Antichriſt is ſaid to come with lying wonders: or elſe ſuch things as though they ſeemed ſtrange to men, yet were not ſo in their owne nature, as the fetching downe of fire from heaven, &c. which things Satan can eaſily performe. Wee replie, firſt they are called lying wonders, not that they are done in ſhew onely, and have no ſuch thing indeed, but becauſe they are wrought to confirme lies, and diſcredit the truth. Secondly, your miracles are very like to bee ſuch, both wrought by the power of the devill, and ſome of them but jugling feats of couſoners. Thirdly, yet a wicked man may have power to worke miracles, not in ſhew, but verily and indeed, as to caſt out devils, and to doe it in the name and power of Chriſt; and yet be none of Chriſts Diſciples, Mat 7.22. And it is confeſſed in your owne Decrees, par. 2. cauſ. 1. quaſt. 1. that Magi Pharaonis faciebant ſimilia Moyſi, that Pharaoh his Magicians did like things to Moſes. And a writer of your owne ſaith: Miracula Deo & diabolo, Chriſto & Antichriſto communia: That miracles are common to God and the devill, to Chriſt and Antichriſt, Eſpenc. in 2 Timoth. p. 93. The miracles then of Chriſt and Antichriſt, of the true and falſe Prophet differ not onely or chiefly herein, that the one are in truth, the other in ſhew: but firſt in reſpect of the power; ſecondly, of the end: for the Saints of God worke by his power; the other by the power of Satan, whom God doth oftentimes reſtraine, as the Magicians were not able to doe the like, when Moſes turned the duſt into lice, Exod. 8.19. And therefore Nicodemus ſaith to Chriſt, Ioh. 3.1. No man can doe theſe workes, that is, ſuch great works as thou doſt, unleſſe God were with him. Secondly, Chriſt and his Apoſtles by their miracles ſought the glorie of God, and the good of men, in converting of their ſoules, and healing of their bodies: ſo Satan worketh not, but onely to deceive men, and confirme lies, as Origen ſheweth, lib. 1. cont. Celſum. And ſuch are moſt of Popiſh miracles, deviſed for the maintenance of Idolatrie and ſuperſtitious worſhip.

Secondly, Bellarmine bringeth in this diſtinction, that miracles doe demonſtrate the Church, not quoad evidentiam & certitudinem rei, in reſpect of the evidence or certainty of the thing, ſed quoad evidentiam credibilitatis, but doe ſhew onely the certaintie of credibility: His meaning is, that by miracles we may gheſſe by all likelihood, which is the Church, but not certainly know it. Bellarm. lib. 4. de Eccleſ. cap. 14.

Anſw. 1. Wee have then the Jeſuites owne confeſſion, that the power of miracles is no certaine, but a conjecturall note of the Church: what marke or note then call you that, whereby a thing cannot certainly bee diſcerned? 2. Wee ſay, that many times wee cannot ſo much as conjecture of the Church by miracles, which may be done without the Church, as the miracles which Antichriſt ſhall worke.

Heare alſo your owne authority, Decr. par. 2. cauſ. 1. quaſt. 1. cap. 56. Præter unitatem, & qui facit miracula nihil eſt: in unitate erat populus Iſrael & non faciebat miracula; præter unitatem erant Magi Pharaonis & faciebant ſimilia Moyſi: Hee that worketh miracles without the unitie of the Church, doth nothing: the Iſraelites were in the unitie of the Church, and did no miracles, the Magicians cians of Pharao were out of the Church, and yet did like things to Moſes: Ergo, true miracles ſuch as Moſes wrought, may bee done without the Church, and ſo conſequently they prove not the Church.

De unitat. Eccleſ cap.16.

Secondly, concerning your miracles we anſwer, that they are either fables, and old wives tales, and no credit to be given unto them; or elſe they are one of thoſe two ſorts, whereof Auguſtine ſpeaketh: Remoueantur iſta vel mendacia fallacium hominum, vel portenta mendacium ſpirituum: Away with thoſe miracles, which are either couſoning trickes of deceitfull men, or wonders of lying ſpirits.

Firſt, Monkiſh fables are not a whit daintie with our Romiſh Catholikes, their Legends are full of them: As that of Barinus, how being in the middeſt of the Sea ſailing into France, having forgotten ſomewhat at home, went backe walking upon the Sea, and came to them againe, having not one thred of his garment wet. Many like tales are reported of Aldelmus Abbot of Malmesburie, as how hee cauſed an infant at Rome of nine daies old to ſpeake, to cleere Sergius the Pope, who was thought to be his father: how hee drew along a great peece of timber, that went to the making of the Church at Malmesburie. Such good ſtuffe alſo they have of Iohn of Beverlie, of Egwine Abbot of Eversham, who when he had locked his feet in fetters, and caſt the key into the Sea, afterward a fiſh brought the key againe into the ſhip where he was ſailing. Read Maſter Fox, *pag.*125. All theſe and a thouſand more are but Monkiſh fables and dreames, whatſoever the Jeſuite maketh of them. And what elſe is that fabulous diſcourſe of theirs of the lives of the Saints, which they call, Legenda aurea, the golden Legend, but a dunghill of lies, containing ſuch monſtrous fictions and Monkiſh tales, as the better ſort amongſt them are aſhamed of. Hereof long agoe complained *Petrus Abbot Cluniacenſ.lib.*5.*epiſt.*29. about ſome foure hundred yeeres ſince, Noſti quantum me pigeant falſa in eccleſiâ Dei Cantica, &c. You know how much theſe lying ſongs in the Church doe grieve me, &c. and hee maketh mention of one ſonnet or hymne of Benedict, containing no leſſe than 24. lies. Lindanus a Popiſh writer maketh mention in his 3. booke, cap 3. de interpretandis Scripturis, of an ancient complaint of one Agobertus Biſhop of Lions, who ſaid he had corrected the Antiphonarie, amputatis quæ ſuperflua, levia, falſa, blaſphema, phantaſtica multa videbantur, cutting off many things that ſeemed ſuperfluous, light, falſe, blaſphemous, phantaſticall: which Biſhop (ſaith Lindane) if hee were now alive to ſee our Miſſals and Antiphonaries, Deum immortalem, quo ea pingeret nomine? Good Lord (ſaith he) how would he call them? And yet our Papiſts now adaies would make us beleeve, that all in the Legend is as true as the Goſpell.

What account is to be made of the Popes Legends.
In fine libri ſecund. de corrupt. artib.

I will adde hereunto the teſtimonie of Ludovicus Vives, of their Legend: Quàm indigna divis & hominibus ſanctorum hiſtoria, quam neſcio cur auream Legendam appellent, cum ſcripta ſit ab homine ferrei oris, plumbei cordis: How unworthie both God and men is the ſtorie of the Saints, which I ſee no reaſon why it ſhould be called the Golden Legend, being written by one that had an iron, that is, impudent face, and a leaden and lumpiſh heart, &c. Let any reaſonable man now judge, what we may thinke of the miracles of their Saints.

Secondly, beſide that moſt of their miracles are forged; they all tend to an ungodly end, to eſtabliſh their groſſe ſuperſtitions; as to prove the reall preſence to terrifie men with Purgatorie fire, to bring in adoration of Saints, and the worſhipping of Images, with ſuch like, as one example I will alleage in ſtead of many. The ſecond Nicen Councell which decreed moſt erroneouſly, that Images ſhould be worſhipped, bringeth in many moſt unſavourie tales and fables, to ratifie this their humane device: as in the fourth action of that Synode, a narration is brought in, how a certaine Monke was tempted with a ſpirit of uncleanneſſe, who appearing unto him ſaid; if thou wilt be rid of me, doe not worſhip this Image, which was the picture of the Virgin. Is it not like now, may any man thinke, that the devill will diſſwade men from Idolatrie? or if there be any matter of truth in this tale, it may bee applied againſt them, that therefore the devill was ſent to vex this Monke, becauſe hee was an Idoll worſhipper, and ſo ſoone as hee began to forſake his Idolatrie, the uncleane ſpirit alſo did forſake him.

The like fiction in the ſame place is brought in of a certaine image of Chriſt, which being in a certaine Chriſtians houſe, was forgotten of him when he left the houſe, and a Jew ſucceeding in the habitation, having invited other Jewes to dinner, one of them eſpied the Image in dinner while, which the other Jew affirmed he had not ſeene before: then they ran upon the Image all at once, and pierced it in the ſide, out of the which iſſued ſuch a ſtreame of blood, that they filled an hydria, that is, a great water-pot with it: and then they tooke counſell, to ſee whether there were any ſuch vertue in the blood, to ſprinkle ſicke folkes therewith, and many recovered thereby. The metropolitane of the place hearing hereof, tooke the blood, and ſent it in glaſſe veſſels into Aſia, Europe, Africa, requiring them by letters to keepe the fifth day before the Ides of November with a great ſolemnitie yeerely, as they kept the Nativitie, in remembrance of this miracle.

How many notable lyes are here couched together? Firſt, that the Chriſtian ſhould be ſo careleſſe to leave ſuch a monument behinde him, which he daily worſhipped. Secondly, that the Jew having it alwaies in his eye ſhould never ſee it, till it was ſpied by his gueſts. Thirdly, that blood ſhould come out of a peece of wood. Fourthly, that ſuch abundance to fill a water-pot of two or three firkins, ſuch as the Jewes uſed for their purification, as wee reade, Iohn 2. ſuch ſtore of blood as iſſued not out of Chriſts owne ſide upon the Croſſe. Fifthly, that the Jewes nothing aſtoniſhed at the ſtrangeneſſe thereof, ſhould ſeeke to worke miracles by it. Sixthly, that of this blood ſhould be ſent to all parts of the world: whereas Chriſt gave no charge to his Apoſtles to gather his blood and ſave it, that fell from him upon the Croſſe; but onely to drinke his blood ſpiritually in the Sacrament. Seventhly, that an holy day ſhould be erected upon this occaſion, which the Church of Rome it ſelfe, the mother of ſuperſtition, obſerveth not, nor yet (I thinke) any Church beſide.

Is not here goodly ſtuffe, to prove the adoration of Images by? But leſt any man ſhould thinke, that of my ſelfe I charge this Councell with forgerie, I will produce the teſtimonie of a late Pope Adrian the 6. who thus writeth in the beginning of the ſixth Quodlibet: Græci certè in ſua illa Iconomachia ſcriptis admodum incertis & fabuloſis rem egerunt, dæmonum ſpectris, & muliebribus ſomniis parum verecundè abutentes: The Grecians fighting for Images, doe proove their matter by fabulous and uncertaine writings; abuſing the illutions of devils, and womens dreames without all ſhamefaſtneſſe, ut legere eſt in ſynodo Nycena. 2. Act. 4. 5. as is to be ſeene (ſaith he) in the Second Nycene ſynode, the 4. and 5. action. Thus we ſee, that both our adverſaries doe abound with many forged and lying miracles, and the ſame brought in to eſtabliſh ſuperſtitious and damnable doctrines.

The like fabulous tales they have of S. Bernard, who in one day, as Bellarmine is not aſhamed to report out of Gotfridus, did give ſight to an eleven blinde, did heale ten maimed perſons, and 18. more that were lame, and all in one day: and (ſaith the Jeſuite) he wrought ſo many miracles beſide, as it is hard to number them, Bellarm. cap. 14. Thus if we will beleeve the Jeſuite, Bernard wrought more miracles, than either Chriſt or his Apoſtles: but whether is it more reaſonable to credit Bellarmine for this matter, or Bernard himſelfe? for he ſaith plainely, that he could worke no miracles, as Serm. de Benedict. Licet non habeamus noſtra, conſolatio nobis magna eſſe debent patroni noſtri miracula: Although we have no miracles of our owne, yet our patrons miracles (hee meaneth Benedict) are our comfort. And againe, Serm. 1. in die aſcenſion. Quis nunc dæmonia eiicit, linguis loquitur, &c. Who now adaies caſteth our devils, ſpeaketh with tongues, &c. devils are caſt out, when ſinnes are rooted out of the heart, &c. Is not this then hereticall forgerie, to faine ſo many miracles of a man, that denieth himſelfe that he hath any ſuch power?

In like manner, in the life of Damaſcene they forge, that his hand being cut off by the Saracenes for his profeſſion of the Chriſtian faith, he praying before the Image of the virgine Mary, and ſhewing his hand cut off, fell aſleepe, and awaking, found his hand joyned to his arme againe, onely a circle or ſeame of blood appearing: and yet the ſaid Damaſcene confeſſeth of himſelfe, ἡμεῖς γὰρ οὐδὲ τὸ τῶν θαυμάτων, &c. δεδέγμεθα, χάρισμα: We neither have received the gift of miracles, neither, &c.

Damaſcen. lib. 1. de fid orthod. cap. 3

Many ſuch fabulous miracles the Popiſh hiſtories are peſtred with: as how the virgine Mary came from heaven to viſite Fulbert when he was ſicke, and gave him her breaſts to ſuck: How an image of the Crucifix ſpake to S. Frauncis, that he had a rude Lambe, which uſed to goe to Maſſe, and kneele downe at the elevation: that Antonie of Padua converted an heretike by making his horſe adore the hoaſt: That a certaine woman to make her Bees fruitfull, put a conſecrated hoaſt into the Hive, and after a certaine time, ſhe taking of it up, found that the Bees had built a Chappell with windowes, and doores, and an Altar, and had laid the hoaſt upon the Altar, and ſung the Canonicall Hymnes unto it. Theſe tales are juſtified by their moderne Authors: So they ſay, that S. Patrike made a ſtolne ſheepe to bleate in the belly of him that had eaten it: and that Bede preached among ſtones, and they anſwered to his prayer, Amen venerable Bede: and to fill up the meaſure of lying iniquitie, Turſelline telleth us, that the Ladies houſe at Lauretto in Italy, was the ſame wherein ſhee was borne, and was tranſlated by the Angels out of Galilie into Dalmatia too thouſand miles, ann. 1291. and from thence within the ſpace of foure yeeres, was removed by the Angels into Picenum, to the Wood of Lauretto, at the comming whereof, all the trees of the Forreſt bowed themſelves, and ſo continued, till they were cut downe, or fell of them ſelves. Theſe ridiculous forgeries are unſavourie unto the graver and more modeſt ſort of Papiſts. Eſpencæus ſaith, no Stable is ſo full of dung, as their Legends are full of fables: And Canus ſaith, To this day I could never yet ſee one ſtorie that I could allow.

Thirdly, it is out of doubt, that ſome of them were well practiſed with the devill, and through his helpe could doe much. We will begine with Dunſtane, who cauſed a Roode to ſpeake, which was more ſtrange, than that of Balaams aſſe: for the aſſe had life, though ſhe had no reaſon; but this image had neither: Polydor Virgill thinketh little better of Dunſtane for this deed doing, but that he was a ſorcerer. Fox pag. 158. col. 2.

It is famous in hiſtories, how Silveſter the ſecond was advanced to the Papacie by the Devill, and gave himſelfe unto him; and how, having ſome remorſe before his death, he confeſſed the fact before the people, and willed that his bodie ſhould be drawne of wild horſes when he was dead, and there be buried where the horſes left it of their owne accord. How much ſuch diabolicall practiſes are favoured by the Sea of Rome, may appeare by this one example, which we will now touch: In Pope Adrians daies, not many yeeres agoe, there was a moſt abominable thing practiſed in Rome, even under the Popes noſe, and by his permiſſion and ſufferance, The Citie of Rome being at that time grievouſlie ſcourged and puniſhed of God with the peſtilence, there was one Demetrius a Grecian, who with the good liking of the whole Citie, to appeaſe the wrath of their gods, tooke a wild Bull, whom with magicall inchantments he made ſo tame, that he led him with a twine threed, and ſo ſacrificed him: And this being done, the ſickneſſe ſomewhat ſlaked. Call ye this the Church of God, that ſuffereth ſuch heatheniſh and abominable ſuperſtitions to bee done in it? Or ſhall I take theſe men for Chriſtians, that doe allow the idolatrous and deviliſh ſacrifices of the Heathen?

Pag.1084.2.50.

Pag.1115.2,20.

Fourthly, let us ſee what pretie fine jugling caſts have been wrought by the Papiſts to deceive the people. In King Henries daies, there was a monſtrous Idoll called the Rood of grace, which was ſo made ſo with wiers and engins, that one ſtanding within could make every part of the Idoll to move, the hands, the eyes, the mouth: if a man brought but a ſmall peece of ſilver, it would hang downe the lip; if it were a good peece, then ſhould his jawes goe merily: This abominable Idoll by the Lord Cromwels meanes was broken downe, and the engins and parts thereof ſhewed at Paules Croſſe. Such a like thing was the blood of Hales, which they made the people beleeve was ſome of Chriſts blood, but in the end it was found to be but the blood of a Drake, and ſhewed likewiſe at Paules Croſſe, Fox pag. 1188. At Caleis in the Sepulchre, it was ſaid, there were three hoaſts beſprinkled with blood, (as it was put in writing under Bull and Pardon:) but the place being ſearched at King Henries commandement, they found three white counters ſodred in the ſtone with the top-bone of a ſheepes taile, pag. 1224.*col.*1. A thouſand ſuch forged deviſes the Papiſts had, which they are not aſhamed to maintaine for ſtrange and holy miracles. By this that hath been ſhewed, it is evident (I hope) to the indifferent reader, what ſmall cauſe our adverſaries have, to boaſt of their miracles.

3 Now to adde ſomewhat concerning the miracles of our Church. Firſt, we truly ſay, that our doctrine is not new nor ſtrange, and therefore they are not to call for miracles at our hands. The miracles of Chriſt and his Apoſtles, are alſo our miracles, ſeeing that we profeſſe the ſame doctrine, which was confirmed by thoſe miracles. And as Iohn Baptiſt comming before Chriſt, and teaching the people to beleeve in him that was to come, wrought no miracle, ſeeing that Chriſt was to confirme that doctrine, which Iohn taught concerning the Meſſiah, with miracles: ſo we comming after Chriſt, and profeſſing the ſame faith which he taught, have leſſe need of miracles, ſeeing that the doctrine, which we hold, hath alreadie been avouched by the miracles of Chriſt and his Apoſtles. Bellarmines beſt anſwer is here, that Iohn taught nothing againſt the common and received doctrine, neither ſeparated himſelfe from the Prieſts.

Anſw. But theſe are untrue: for firſt, Iohn preached remiſſion of ſinnes by Chriſt, and miniſtred Baptiſme, both which were ſtrange unto the Jewiſh Church: and againe he lived apart in the wilderneſſe: the Scribes and Phariſes came to him, he went not to them: and he calleth them a generation of vipers; how then did Iohn communicate with them?

Hom. 19. operi imperfect.

In Matth. ſer. 28.

This notwithſtanding, wee affirme ſtill, that miracles are not now needfull: will you here what Chryſoſtome ſaith; Iam cum nullus ſit infidelis, nulla faciendorum miraculorum nunc eſt neceſſitas; igitur, qui ſignum vel inutile, vel non ſuo tempore facit, falſus propheta eſt, &c. Now ſeeing there are no Infidels, there is no neceſſitie of making miracles: and therefore hee, which goeth about now to worke a miracle unprofitable, and out of time, is a falſe Prophet. By this ſentence all Papiſts are falſe Prophets, that doe ſo much urge miracles. But I will further preſſe them with their owne authoritie. Nycen. ſynod.2. Act.4. Tharaſius the Preſident thus ſaid, Wherefore doe not our images now a dayes worke miracles? I anſwer with the Apoſtle: Miracula non credentibus data ſunt, &c. Miracles are not given to thoſe, that beleeve, but to thoſe, which beleeve not. Hearken then you Romaniſts, you are convinced of unbeliefe if you ſeeke for miracles. Secondly, yet, the Lord be thanked, wee are not deſtitute of miracles, as Auguſtine ſaith: Modo caro caeci non aperit oculos miraculo domini, at cor caecum aperit oculos ſermone domini: Now, ſaith hee, the blinde doth not receive his bodily ſight by the power of Chriſt, but the blinde heart is lightened and illuminate through the Goſpell of Chriſt. Such miracles (the Lord be bleſſed) we can ſhew: ſinners are converted, afflicted conciences are comforted; the ignorant are inſtructed; many are called by the preaching of the Goſpell.

Beſide theſe, which are daily converted among us by the preaching of the Goſpell, the examples of thoſe in this place would be remembred, that being enimies to the Goſpell; yet by the mightie working of Gods ſpirit, were miraculouſly converted from Poperie, even in time of perſecution, and gave their lives for the teſtimonie of the truth.

Pag.1534 1.60. edit. 1610.

Pag.1680.1.70.

George Tankerfield, haveing beene a Papiſt all King Edwards dayes, in Queene Maries time, ſeeing the great cruelty practiſed againſt Gods Saints, began to miſlike both the Papiſts opinions and doings, and grew into ſuch a liking of the Goſpell, that he gave his life for the ſame. See his ſtorie, Fox pag. 1689.89. Maſter Greene Martyr, firſt an obſtinate Papiſt, was drawne to a love and liking of the Goſpell, by frequenting Peter Martyrs Lectures, and died for the ſame afterwards, *Fox pag.*1851.*c.*1.

Among the reſt, the example of Iulius Palmer is moſt notable, and worthie eternall memorie: who all King Edwards dayes continued an obſtinate Papiſt, refuſing either to reſort to common Prayer, or to Sermons but by compulſion, and was for Poperie expelled Magdalen Colledge in Oxford, where hee was fellow: In Queene Maries dayes hee was reſtored to his fellowſhip by the Viſitors, all this while remaining a very Papiſt: Then by the conſtancie of the Martyrs and bleſſed ſervants of God in Oxford and elſewhere dying for the truth, hee began to ſettle his heart towards the truth, and by diligent reading of Scripture, and faithfull prayer being therein confirmed, hee became not onely a confeſſor, but a conſtant witneſſe and Martyr of the Goſpell: See his ſtorie, Fox pag. 1934.*c.*2.

The like examples we have of Miſtreſſe Lewes, which of a Papiſt in Queene Maries daies became a Pag.1756.1.20. Proteſtant : *pag.*2012.*col.*1. and the like of *Roger Holland, pag.*2039. both of them holy Martyrs. Pag 1825.1.20 What greater miracles can we deſire for confirmation of the Goſpell than theſe, ſhewed in their miraculous converſions? Pag.1849.1.70.

Yet if this will not content our adverſaries, but they will ſtill crie with open mouth, and ſay, where are your miracles ? Behold, to ſtop their wide and clamorous mouth, we will ſhew them alſo ſuch miracles, as they looke for, like to which they have none. Was not that a miracle, which Oecolampadius Anno 1525. reporteth to have been done at the martyrdome of Maſter Hugh Spengler: who being caſt into the Fox p.805 2.30. water and ſo drowned, preſently all the water was coloured with blood, he having received no wound nor hurt in his body before : at the which all the people were greatly amazed ?

But what thinke you of that ſtrange ſigne which George Scherrer ſhewed at his death; who being beheaded, the body lay a prettie ſpace upon the belly till one might have eaten an egge, and then turned it ſelfe upon the backe, and croſſed the right hand over the left, and the right legge over the left: the Magiſtrates ſeeing it, having condemned his body to be burned before, being moved at the ſight hereof, cauſed it to be buried : Fox ex Matth. Illyrico. Pag.810.1.20.

It is worth the remembring, that is reported in the French ſtories of Petrus Bergerius a bleſſed Martyr: who was caſt into a filthie dungeon, where a theefe had lien the ſpace of eight moneths, being almoſt eaten up with lice, and in ſuch miſerie, that hee curſed his parents that bare him. This man through the teaching and the prayers of the Martyr, felt ſuch comfort in the Goſpell, that hee became very patient in his affliction : and after his converſion this ſtrange thing was wrought upon him; that whereas before hee was ſo full of lice, that hee might have plucked out twelve at once betweene two of his fingers, the next day hee had not one : Fox ex Iohanne Criſpin. pag. 907. Pag.818.1.90. *col.*2.

Many ſuch other miraculous workes ſhewed in the life and death of the holy Martyrs, we are able to rehearſe : as that of Zuinglius, whoſe heart was found whole and unburned three daies after his body was conſumed with fire, ex Oſwald. Miconio . the like whereof is conſtantly reported of bleſſed Cranmer, that his heart was found unconſumed in the aſhes, his body being burned.

Stephen Brune Martyr at Rutiers in France 1540. could not bee conſumed with the fire that was twice made about him, with veſſels of oyle powred upon the faggots, ſo that the hangman in the end was faine to truſt him through with his pike : ex Iohan Criſpin.

Stephen Mangin Martyr burned at Meaux anno 1546. having his tongue firſt cut out, yet ſo ſpake, that he might be underſtood, ſaying The Lords name be bleſſed, *Iohan. Criſpin. lib.*6.

The like alſo is recorded of two other Martyrs, at Sanſerre, Iohannes Filieul, and Iulianus Leville, who ſpake, their tongues being firſt taken from them, Fox pag. 911. ex Iohan. Criſpin: ſo did alſo Peter Renſeau Martyr at Bloys, anno 1556. ex Iohan. Criſpin. Pag.831.1.60. One Faninus an Italian Martyr was burned at Ferrara, anno 1550. for the truths ſake, whoſe body in the burning gave an odoriferous fragrant ſmell of incomparable ſweetneſſe to all there preſent : *ex Henric. Pantal. lib.*7.

But wee need not ſearch forraine ſtories for ſuch miraculous workes : God hath ſhewed his great power, and ſet forth his glorie, even in our Engliſh Martyrs : it is credibly teſtified, that where Wickliffes bones were burnt, ſprang up a well, *Fox pag.*1044.*col.*1. Pag.952 2.10.

Iames Bainham in the middeſt of the flaming fire, his armes and legs being halfe conſumed, ſpake theſe words: O ye Papiſts, behold you looke for miracles, and here now you may ſee a miracle, for in this fire Pag 940.1.2. *I feele no more paine, than if I were in a bed of down, but it is to me as ſweet as a bed of Roſes, Fox p.*1030. *col.*2. What greater miracle can be looked for, than that the cruel rage of the fire ſhould be ſo ſtrangely ſlaked and mitigated, that it ſhould become not onely not grievous, but pleſant to the ſufferers? Pag.1447.1.20. The like mitigation of paine, that conſtant Martyr Maſter Haukes, gave a comfortable and cheerefull ſignification of, by thrice clapping of his hands over his head burning of a light fire, when every man Pag.1547.2.50. thought he had been dead, *Fox pag.*1592. Many ſuch examples might here bee brought in : as of Robert Samuel Martyr, whoſe body is ſaid to have ſhined bright like tried ſilver in the middeſt of the fire, *pag.*1704. Likewiſe after the burning of Iohn Noyes Martyr, there was found in the aſhes one of his Pag.1831.2 40. feete unburned, whole with the hoſe on, up to the anckle, Fox pag. 2022.

Who ſeeth not now, that if miracles were to bee ſtood upon, and that thereby wee would make proofe of our Church, that herein wee might have great advantage againſt our adverſaries? But their common anſwere is, that all theſe are fables, which we report of our Martyrs. And why, I pray you, doe theſe things ſeeme incredible ? May not God as well ſhew his power in theſe holy Martyrs, as hee did in the ancient witneſſes of truth, that were perſecuted and put to death under the heathen Emperours? for Gods armes are not ſhortned, he is able to doe as great workes now, as hee did then : And theſe his ſervants died for the ſame truth, for the which the ancient Martyrs gave their lives : Why ſhould it be more unlikelie, that ſome of the Martyrs of our Church have ſtood at the ſtake untouched of the fire, as we have heard before of Stephen Brune, than that Policarpus continued in the fire without burning, the fire having no power of his bodie, but was in the end thruſt through, as Stephen Brune alſo was ſerved, or that Cecilia remained a day and a night in a hot bath without hurt, as if ſhe had been in a cold place ?

Why might not the Lord give unto Stephen Mangin Martyr, and others power to ſpeake, their tongues to be cut out, as he did to Romanus, who being deprived of his tongue ſpake theſe words: *He that ſpeaketh Chriſt ſhall never want a tongue? Fox pag.*90.

Polycarpus before mentioned, his body in the middeſt of the fire gliſtered like ſilver or Gold, *pag.*43. Why may we not credit the like report of Robert Samuel? There came a moſt pleaſant ſmell from Polycarpus bodie, as it had been of mirrhe, or ſome precious balme: may not this as well be true of Faninus, whoſe example we ſaw before? Polycarpus being thruſt through with a ſword, for he could not burne, there guſhed out ſuch abundance of blood, as that the fire was quenched therewith. May we not as well beleeve, that which is teported of Biſhop Latimer? whoſe prayer unto God was, that hee might give his heart blood for his truth: and ſo it came to paſſe, that in the fire, his ſides being opened by the violence thereof, the blood iſſued out abundantly, which was ſtrange to behold: *Fox p.*1740. But I will be ſparing in theſe reports: for we have better arguments to prove our Church by, as ſhall afterward appeare.

Yet, before I leave this place, becauſe the Jeſuite hath ſuch aſpite at Luther, (he is agreat eyeſore to him) we will in a word or two declare what ſtrange things were wrought by Luther. It is credibly reported of him, that a certaine young man had bound himſelfe by obligation to the Devill, ſealed with his blood to give him his ſoule, ſo hee might have his wiſh and deſire ſaſtisfied with mony: In ſhort time he grew to great wealth: the matter being diſcloſed with much adoe to Luther, hee calleth the congregation together, and joyneth in prayer for this young man: and as they prayed, the obligation was caſt in at the window. This credible report of Luthers Act, may countervaile the lying tale of railing Staphilus, whom the Jeſuite ſo much crediteth, how that Luther attempted to caſt a devill out of a woman, and was in danger to be ſlaine of the devill himſelfe, *Bellarm.cap.*16. But why ſhould it ſeeme ſtrange, that by the prayers of the congregation the devill ſhould depart? For by two waies are uncleane ſpirits caſt out, one is by the extraordinarie gift and faith of miracles, which though it continued ſome ages after the Apoſtles, till the Goſpell was univerſally planted, yet wee hold it generally to be ceaſed now: the other way is ordinary by faſting and prayer, which our Saviour preſcribeth, Matth. 17.21. Whereby wee doubt not, but even in theſe daies, when it pleaſeth God, Satan is chaſed from the poſſeſſion of Chriſts members. And in this kinde Luther was ſingular, who uſed to pray ſo fervently, that the teares were ſeene to fall from his eyes in his prayer: And theſe are the weapons, whereby we fight againſt Satan, the word of God and prayer, which are more forcible, than your ſuperſtitious croſſings, conjurations, exorcizings, yea than your holy water, or holy water ſprinckle. The experience hereof Origene ſheweth, that as he was preaching of thoſe words, 1 *Sam.*2. of Anna My heart rejoyced in the Lord, one being preſent having an uncleane ſpirit cried out: upon which occaſſion Origene further ſaid thus: Contrarius ſpiritus exultationem noſtram in domino ferre non potuit: The adverſarie ſpirit cannot abide our rejoycing in the Lord, &c. Theſe meanes then of the Word and prayer ſeeing Luther had, wee may more eaſilie bee perſwaded of the truth of the ſtorie.

A notable and ſtrange miracle credibly reported of Luther.

And as he was earneſt in prayer, ſo his prayers wanted not effect; for as hee himſelfe confeſſed, hee had obtained of God, that ſo long as he lived, the Pope ſhould not prevaile in his country. And is not this alſo a thing to be wondred at, that for all the Pope and Emperour joyned together, and bent their forces againſt the ſillie poore man; yet the Lord defended him from the Lions teeth, and granted him to end his daies in peace?

Thus it is apparant and manifeſt, that the Lord ſheweth his miraculous power many times in his Saints, to aſtoniſh the wicked: the great miracles which have bin declared in their holy martyrdoms, would fill a large volume. But theſe arguments wee doe not chiefly ſtand upon: yet thus much was not amiſſe by the way to bee inſerted, to requite our adverſaries withall, who doe ſo greatly magnifie and extoll their Antichriſtian Church, for their lying and fained miracles.

Laſtly, if miracles were a ſure note of the Church: and though the Romaniſts could alleage true miracles done among them, yet they ſhould herein have no preeminence before the Eaſterne and Southerne Churches. 1. For the Greeke and Eaſterne Churches, Marcus Paulus a Venetian reporteth, that at the citie Taurus there is a mountaine ſhewed, which was removed by the prayer of a Chriſtian, at the inſtance of a certaine Saracen, who objected unto the Chriſtians, that if they had faith, as a graine of muſtard ſeed, if they ſhould ſay unto a mountaine, remove unto ſuch a place, it ſhould preſently remove. Villamont writeth of a towne in Syria called Sardinale, inhabited by the Chriſtians, where Turkes, Saracens, or Moores cannot dwell, but they die before the yeeres end. Faber writeth that not farre from the citie of Muſcovia, is a great Monaſterie, wherein is the ſepulchre of Sergius an Abbot, where two blinde men were reſtored to their ſight. Thomas Lopes reporteth, that the people of Mangalor reſort to the ſepulchre of S. Thomas, where many miracles are wrought.

2 Concerning the South Church, Alvares ſaith, that among the Ethiopians there is a ſepulchre of one of the ſonnes of King Abram, who was a Prieſt, that wrought miracles, and among the reſt, they ſay, that the Angels did miniſter bread and wine unto him when hee celebrated: the ſame author alſo ſaith, that the Ethiopians doe reſort to the ſepulchre of a King called Balibeta, where many miracles are wrought: But it is uncertaine, what credit theſe reports are of: but that is yet more ſtrange, and teſtified with more credit, which Philippus Camerarius ſetteth downe, of the apparition of the bodies of dead men, riſing out of the ground, not whole, but in parts, as the head, armes, legges, which may be touched, in a little barren hill within halfe a mile of Cairo in Egypt, once in the yeere about the 25. of March, which apparition continueth for the ſpace of 3. daies together: If then any confidence were to be had in miracles, other Churches may better challenge it than Rome.

Camerar. cap. 71. of his hiſtoricall meditations.

3 The French Church agreeth with us: artic. 5. Wee beleeve the word contained in the Canonicall writings proceeded from God, and for as much as it is the rule of truth, it followeth that neither antiquitie, nor cuſtomes, &c. nor viſions, nor miracles ought to be oppoſed to it.

4 And touching the judgement of the Romaniſts: Roffenſis ſaith, &c. that the promiſe of Chriſt, concerning the healing of the ſicke, caſting out of devils, taketh no effect in theſe daies, Nemo enim eſt, qui jam corporaliter ejicit, &c. There is no man that doth now corporally caſt out devils, &c. But this promiſe tooke place, pro tempore naſcentis Eccleſiæ, In the time of the Church then ſpringing up: Likewiſe Eſpencæus: ſeeing now there is no unbeleever, miraculorum nunc nulla neceſſitas, There is no neceſſity now of miracles.

And further whereas Bellarmine produceth the example of Xaviere the Jeſuite, a great wonder-worker among the Indians, that divers blind, deafe, dumbe, lame, were healed by him; yea one that was dead, was raiſed againe unto life: although we ſimply denie not, but God might upon this ſpecial and extraordinarie occaſion of converting Infidels, grant unto ſuch as are his faithfull Miniſters ſome power of miraculous workes: yet that this tale is unprobable, may appeare by the teſtimonie of another Jeſuite, one Acoſta, that was alſo in that countrie, and laboured among the Weſt Indians, who ſaith directly, prodigia nulla producimus, neque verò eſt opus. We bring forth no wonders, neither in deed is it needfull. And in another place hee giveth a reaſon thereof, that when the Grecians, and others which excelled in all humane wiſdome, were converted by ſimple and unlearned men, it was neceſſarie they ſhould bee furniſhed with the power of miracles: but now ſeeing they which are there converted, are inferiour every way to their converters, it ſeemeth not to bee ſo needfull: to this purpoſe Acoſta.

The ſixth Note, of the gift of Propheſying.

THis alſo our adverſaries hold to bee a perpetuall marke, whereby to know the Church: for they ſay that the true Church of God wanteth not thoſe which are endued with the ſpirit of prophecie: And ſo they beare us in hand, that in every age there hath flouriſhed ſome Prophet in their Church: The firſt, that the Church ſhall alwaies have Prophets, they would prove out of Ioel 2. I will powre of my ſpirit upon all fleſh, &c. The ſecond, that they have had ſuch Prophets, they doe inferre upon a few forged examples, of S. Bernard, and Saint Francis, a Popiſh Saint, and the founder of the ſuperſtitious order of the Franciſcans, and of ſuch others: Bellarmine cap. 15.

23. Error.

Ioel 2. 28.

To the firſt we anſwer. 1. The Prophecie of Ioel was accompliſhed in the Apoſtles time, Act. 2. as Saint Peter expoundeth it, and therefore wee need not looke further for the fulfilling of it. 2. The Church of the Jewes wanted Prophets for the ſpace of foure hundred yeeres and more before the comming of Chriſt: for we reade of no Prophet after Malachy: and the Church complaineth of this want, that they had Prophets no more: wherefore, the Church of God after the comming of Chriſt, may better ſpare this extraordinarie function of propheſying, ſeeing both Chriſt is alreadie come, who was the very ſubject and matter of all the ancient prophecies; and we have alſo moſt evident prophecies of the Apoſtles, Rom. 11. concerning the calling of the Jewes; 2 Theſ. 2. of Antichriſt: in the Apocalyps, of the generall eſtate and condition of the Church to the end of the world: ſome of which are alreadie accompliſhed, ſome to be fulfilled in their ſeaſon: in theſe prophecies, wee muſt reſt and content our ſelves, not looking for new revelations. 3. There have been Prophets amongſt the heathen out of the Church of God: they alſo can bring forth divers old prophecies; ſo that if the iſſue lay in this point, they might as well contend to be the Church of God. Aſtyages dreamed that hee ſaw a vine growing out of his daughter, that covered all Aſia: which came to paſſe in Cyrus. Auguſtine reporteth a prophecie of Hermes Triſmegiſtus, how that all the images and Idols of the heathen ſhould be broken downe through all Ægypt. The Indians were foretold of the Spaniards comming, many a yeere before their arrivall in thoſe places: Their Zemes, that is, their devils, which they worſhipped as Gods, told them, that there ſhould come a people with long beards, firce and cruell, that at one stroke ſhould ſtrike men off by the middle: And all theſe things fell out afterwards to that nation accordingly.

But they will anſwer, that theſe were not true prophecies inſpired of God, but uncertaine predictions of the devill. What will they ſay then to Balaam, that propheſied of Chriſt? There ſhall come a ſtarre of Iacob (ſaith he) Numb. 24. 17. and in the ſame place, he ſaith, he heard the words of God. And here our Doway Latine men confeſſe, that Balaam had the ſpirit of Prophecy, but not juſtifying grace, and that many worke miracles, and yet bee damned: pag. 373. how then can that bee a note of the Church (out of the which none can be ſaved) which doth not alway accompany ſalvation?

day : yea ſhee ſetteth downe the very name of the Meſſiah, Ieſus Chriſt. Theſe prophecies came not of the devill, for theſe myſteries, without all doubt, were not knowne to the evill ſpirits : for they were not fully revealed to the Angels themſelves before the comming of Chriſt, *Epheſ.*3.10. Wherefore we conclude thus, that as the gift of propheſying is no ſure ſigne that they are members of the Church and elected of God, which are endued with it; as Chriſt ſaith, *Math.*7.22. that many which had propheſied in his name, in the day of judgement ſhould be refuſed; and Balaam is ſet forth as an example of a falſe prophet and wicked man; Ep. Iude 11. So neither is this gift an infallible marke of the Church of God, whereſoever it is found. Your owne Canons avouch the ſame, decr. part.2. cauſ. 1. qu. 1. cap.79. Prophetavit & Saul malus rex, & tunc prophetavit, cum David ſanctum perſequeretur: Saul alſo propheſied an evill King, and at that time, when he perſecuted David. The gift then of propheſying, as it ſheweth not him to be a member of the Church, that hath it : ſo neither that to be the Church, where it is found.

To the ſecond part, concerning this miraculous gift which our adverſaries pretend to have : wee anſwer. 1. They are but fables which they bring : for if all that is reported of S. Bernard in his life, of his miracles and prophecies were true, neither S. Paul nor any of the Apoſtles were to be compared unto him for number of miracles : ſuch caſting out of devils out of men, women and children, healing of ſtrange diſeaſes, foretelling of things to come : the Goſpell almoſt hath not ſtranger things of our Saviour Chriſt. And S. Hierome, who was long before Bernards time, ſheweth that prophecie was then ceaſed : Prophetia domini paſſione ſignata eſt : All prophecie is ſealed up in the paſſion of Chriſt, Tom.3.ad Marcellam.

As for S. Francis, you may gheſſe by this, what ſpirit hee was of, that preſcribing to his followers a certaine ſtrict order of living, as to weare no girdle, to goe barefoot, and ſuch like, hee calleth it regulam evangelicam, the rule of the Goſpell : belike making himſelfe another Chriſt, and ſo bringing in another Goſpell : for to all Chriſts Diſciples Chriſts Goſpell is ſufficient. 2. But if they have any prophecies of credit, which they can ſhew, they are ſuch, as are reported of Pope Silveſter the ſecond, who had warrant from the devill, that he ſhould not die before he ſung Maſſe in Ieruſalem : and ſo it came to paſſe, for having ſung Maſſe in a chapell ſo called, he immediately died. Not much unlike to this was that of King Henry the fourth, who ended his life in a chamber at Weſtminſter called Ieruſalem, as he had an old prophecie. Edward the fourth alſo was told, that his ſucceſſors name ſhould begin with G, which was the cauſe of George the Duke of Clarence death, his owne brother : but the devilliſh prophecie notwithſtanding tooke place, for Richard Duke of Gloceſter was King after him. In like manner Valence the Emperour had a blind prophecie, that one ſhould reigne after him, whoſe name began with Theod. which made Theodorus to rebell againſt him : but ſo it came to paſſe indeed, that Theodoſius was Emperour after him. Such blind prophecies wee denie not but the Popiſh Church hath had many, which as you ſee, doe cauſe murther, ſedition, and bloodſhed; but other good prophecies comming of God, wee know them not to have any.

3 Wee denie not but that there have lived ſome amongſt them in their Church, which in thoſe daies were counted Prophets and prophetiſſes, as Hildegardis, an. 1146. likewiſe Bridget, Catharine Senenſis : whom Bellarmine reckoneth up amongſt others that wrought miracles, chap. 14. But concerning theſe we will anſwer, as the Jeſuite doth for Sibilla a prophetiſſe amongſt the heathen : that ſhe propheſied as touching ſuch matters as ſhould fall out to the Church, for a teſtimony of the faith of the Chriſtians; and ſo to be counted herein a prophetiſſe of the Church rather than of the heathen. *chap.*15. So we ſay, that if thoſe three above named were Prophetiſſes, they were of our Church, and not theirs; for they propheſied of the decay of their Church, and raiſing up of ours. Hildegardis firſt propheſied of the beginning of Friers, and of their deſtruction, ſaying, that in the end, when their gifts and rewards ceaſed, they ſhould goe about their houſes like hungrie and made dogges, drawing in their necks like doves. Briget propheſied of the Church of Rome, that it ſhould be as a body condemned of a Judge, to have the skin flaine off, and the fleſh to bee cut in pieces : Catharine de Senis ſpeaketh of a reformation of the Church, and ſuch a renovation of Paſtors, that the onely remembrance thereof ſaith ſhee, maketh my ſpirit to rejoyce in the Lord. All theſe things wee ſee now accompliſhed : the ſects of Friers in many places put downe : the Popiſh juriſdiction caſt out, a notable reformation to bee wrought in the Church : our adverſaries (I thinke) have not to rejoyce in theſe prophecies; neither have any great cauſe to challenge them for their Prophets. But I will helpe them a little, and bring to their remembrance a notable Prophetiſſe of theirs in King Henry the eights daies, which was one Elizabeth Barton a Nun, commonly called the holy maid of Kent, who being inſtructed by the Friers, fained, as though ſhe had many revelations : ſhe propheſied, that if the King proceeded in his divorce, then in queſtion betweene him and Queene Katherine, that hee ſhould not be King one yeere, no not one moneth : But (God bee thanked) hee lived almoſt twentie yeeres after that, by whom many worthy things were wrought for the good of Chriſts Church. This Prophetiſſe was afterward juſtly met withall, and worthily ſuffered for her demerits, with all her accomplices : amongſt the which, Fiſher B. of Rocheſter was one, who thereupon was impriſoned, and forfaited his goods to the King. If they will brag of their Prophets, let not the holy maid of Kent be forgotten in any wiſe.

propheciеs the Goſpell hath been adorned withall. Was not Iohn Huſſe a Prophet, who thus ſaid at his death; centum revolutis annis deo reſpondebitis: after an hundred yeeres you ſhall give account of this your doing unto God? Likewiſe Hierome of Prage, poſt centum annos vos omnes voco I cite you all to make anſwer after an hundred yeeres. Which propheсie of theirs tooke effect accordingly: for both theſe holy men ſuffered martyrdome about anno 1416. and juſt an hundred yeeres after, anno 1516. the Lord raiſed up Luther, who indeed called the Pope and his doctrine to account.

Was not Savonarola a Prophet, that ſaid one ſhould paſſe over the Alpes like Cyrus, who ſhould deſtroy all Italie? and is it not ſo come to paſſe? for neither Cyrus, nor whoſoever elſe could have more laid waſte the Popiſh Italian Church than the word of God hath done, and the lively preaching of the Goſpell? Walter Brute prophecied, that the temporalities ſhould be taken from the Clergie for the multitude of their ſinnes: this Walter lived in King Richards daies the ſecond. Bilney that conſtant Martyr and faithfull ſervant of God prophecied, that many Preachers ſhould come after him, which ſhould preach the ſame faith that he had taught, and ſhould convert many from their errors.

We will come unto neerer times: Did not Maſter Hooper prophecie, when taking his leave of Maſter Bullinger at Zuricke, he ſaid thus unto him, You ſhall be ſure (ſaith he) to heare from me, from time to time out of England: but the laſt newes of all I ſhall not be able to write, for there where I ſhall take moſt paines, you ſhall heare of me burned to aſhes. And ſo it came to paſſe, for he was burned at Gloceſter, where he was Biſhop, Fox pag. 1503. col. 1.

Pag. 1366 1. 60.

Maſter Latimer would alwaies ſay, that the preaching of the Goſpell would coſt him his life, and he was perſwaded, he ſaid, that Winchester was kept in the tower for the ſame purpoſe: pag. 1740. col. 1.

Pag. 1579. 1. 30

Maſter Rogers prophecied in Queene Maries daies, that the Goſpell ſhould be reſtored, and that the diſperſed Engliſh flocke ſhould be brought againe to their former eſtate, pag. 1492. A certaine woman alſo in Exceter that died for the truth, ſpake to the like effect: who entring as it happened into S. Peters Church, where ſhe found a cunning Duchman, makeing of new noſes to certaine Images, which had been disfigured in King Edwards daies, ſaid unto him, What a mad man art thou to make them new noſes, which within a few daies ſhall all loſe their heads: as it came indeed to paſſe, pag. 2051. col. 1.

Pag. 1356. 1. 60.
Pag. 1860. 2. 1.

Roger Holland ſtanding in examination before bloodie Boner, thus boldly ſaid unto him: This I dare be bold in God to ſpeake, which by his ſpirit I am moved to ſay, that God will ſhorten your hand of crueltie, for after this day in this place, ſhall there not any by him (meaning Boner) be put to death, pag. 2042. And after this day indeed, there was none put to death in Smithfield.

Pag. 1852 1. 10

What ſhall I ſpeake of Maſter Bradford, who writeth thus in his epiſtle to Cambridge: You know I prophecied truly to you, before the Sweat came, what would come, if you repented not your carnall Goſpelling. I might here alſo inferre the propheticall prayers of the Martyrs: as how Maſter Latimer prayed that the Goſpell might once againe be reſtored to England, and earneſtly ſued in his prayers for the preſervation of Lady Elizabeth, now our moſt gracious Queene: the which his prayers, the Lord, whoſe name eternally be bleſſed for it, in mercy to this land graciouſly granted. The like prayer Maſter Philpot made at the ſtake for the reſtoring of the Goſpell, pag. 1831, col. 1. And, to make ſhort, the five laſt martyrs burned at Canterburie, deſired God in their prayers before their martyrdome, that their blood might be the laſt that ſhould be ſhed: and ſo it was, Fox pag. 1053.

Pag. 1661. 1. 45.

I alleage not theſe examples, unto the which I could adde many beſides, to this end, as though I thought that theſe propheticall gifts are ordinarie in the Church, or that theſe holy martyrs had the calling of Prophets (though it cannot bee denied, but that at ſome times, and in ſome caſes they had the ſpirit of prophecie;) or that hereby we meane to prove our Church: but to anſwer a little unto our adverſaries vaine, and untrue bragges, that it may appeare to all men, with how much better right we might chalenge this propheticall gift in the behalfe and name of our Church.

Pag. 1862. 2. 55.

Hitherto wee have touched ſix onely of the principall notes of the popiſh Church: the reſt which the Jeſuite addeth to make up the number of fifteene, are ſuch vagrant and uncertaine notes, that I wonder, the Jeſuite for ſhame would ſtuffe his booke with them: I will therefore only name them.

Another note thereof of Bellarmines Church beſide thoſe ſet downe, is duratio diuturna, nec unquam interrupta, is the long and laſting continuance of their Church without any interruption: their Church, they ſay, hath endured 1570. yeeres and more alreadie, and is like to continue to the worlds end: but our Church is newly begunne, and ſhall ſoone come to an end: Bellarmine lib. 4. cap. 6.

Anſw. 1. Duration or continuance is no good argument of the Church: the heathen Idoleters could and did ſay as much for their Idolatrie: As Aſclepiades objected to Romanus (holy martyr) Thy crucified Chriſt, ſaith he, is but a yeſterdaies God, the Gods of the Gentiles are of great antiquitie. 2. It is not true that their Church hath endured ſo long, they muſt ſtrike off almoſt 600 yeeres from their account; and yet moſt of their errors are nothing ſo old: yet if they could make up the full number they ſpeake of, they have not much to bragge of: The kingdome of the Sycionians, as Auguſtine witneſſeth, endured 950. yeeres, the Monarchie of the Aſſyrians 1300. yeeres and more; yet were they not for all this the Church of God. 3. The deſcent and pedegree of their Church hath not all this while, they ſay, been interrupted. To this wee have anſwered before in the third note of ſucceſſion: Our ſaviour Chriſt and his Apoſtles could not ſhew a perpetuall deſcent of their Church not interrupted, yet were they the true Church. 4. Their Church ſhall indure to the end of the world: ſo ſhall Sathans kingdome wax ſtronger towards the end: There ſhall be a generall decay of faith and charitie; yea, and there ſhall be ſome remnant of Antichriſts kingdome even at the comming of Chriſt: but to what end S. Paul ſheweth, to bee aboliſhed with the brightneſſe of his comming. 5. Neither is our Church, as they falſly charge us, newly ſtart up: but of our Church were the Prophets, Apoſtles, and martyrs, as we have ſhewed: the Church of God may ſometime lie hidden in the world, and ſo hath ours. But they goe further, Our Church, they ſay, ſhall not long continue: So the heathen faced downe the Chriſtians, that their religion ſhould laſt but 365. yeeres: but it proved cleane contrarie; for the Chriſtian faith increaſed ſtill, and Paganiſme within that compaſſe was baniſhed. As for our Church, we know it ſhall continue to the worlds end, though with much trouble and perſecution, and ever after ſhall be with Chriſt.

2 Theſſ.2.8.

Auguſt.de civitat.Dei lib. 18, cap.52.

Another note, which Bellarmine maketh the ſixth in number, is, Conſpiratio in doctrina cum Eccleſia antiqua: Their conſpiring in doctrine with the ancient Church, cap 9. where hee taketh paines to caſt upon us twentie ſeverall hereſies.

*Anſw.*1. For the full anſwer of this ſlander, I doe referre the reader to the ſecond pillar of Papiſtrie, part.3. where it is evidently proved that the Papiſts (and not the Proteſtants) doe revive the old hereſies.

2 It may appeare by the perpetuall allegation of Auguſtine, and the decrees of Councels generall and provinciall, yea and of their owne Canons, throughout this Treatiſe in defence of our cauſe, that our doctrine agreeth with antiquitie, and not Papiſtrie.

See the 2. pillar of Papiſtry, part.3.

Notwithſtanidng as touching the Jeſuites challenge of hereſie, where he laieth to our charge twenty ſeverall hereſies, I have eaſily removed them, and requited him with forty ſeverall hereſies, all proved to be in their Church: for the particular anſwer to that place I referre the reader.

But now in generall it ſhall appeare by ſuch deſcriptions of heretikes, as heretofore have bin made, and by them cannot be refuſed, that not we, but they are the heretikes of theſe daies.

1 And firſt, if they will be tried by the definition of an heretike in the Civill law, we will not refuſe: as *Cod. lib.1.tit.4.leg.1. Gratian* and Valentinian thus define an heretike: Qui patris, filii, & ſpiritus ſancti deitatem ſub pari majeſtate non credunt, hereticorum infamiam ſuſtinere, &c. They which doe not beleeve the Deitie of the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghoſt to be of equall majeſtie, ſhall ſuſtaine the infamie of heretikes, &c. But wee doe ſo beleeve: Ergo, are no heretikes. The Popiſh Church is rather to be ſuſpected herein, that affirme, that Chriſt is not αὐτόθεος, God of himſelfe: now if the Father be God of himſelfe, and the Sonne have a beginning of his Godhead, then muſt there be an inequalitie in the Godhead. See more of this afterward, *Controv.20.part.2.quaeſt.*1.

2 Likewiſe, *Cod.lib.1.tit.*8 *leg.2.Gratian. Valentinian. Hereticus judicatur, qui à minimo fidei deviat articulo*: He is judged an heretike, that departeth from the leaſt article of the faith, &c. But it is an article of the faith to beleeve that Chriſt ſitteth at the right hand of God, and ſhall not come from thence till the day of judgement: which the Papiſts muſt needs denie, affirming Chriſts bodie to be really and corporally in the Sacrament: and ſo they muſt either make Chriſt to have two bodies, one in heaven, another in earth, or elſe they muſt hold that his body may be in two places at once, contrarie to the nature of a body.

3 We will not refuſe the triall of an heretike by your owne Canons: *Decret.par.2.cauſ.24. quaeſt.3. cap.28. Hereticus eſt, qui alicujus temporalis commodi, & maximè gloriae, principatuſque ſui gratia, falſas ac novas opiniones gignit:* He is an heretike, that for ſome temporall commoditie, eſpecially for glorie and principalitie ſake, doth deviſe and follow new and ſtrange opinions, &c. But the Papiſts doe ſeeke the glorie and principalitie of the Papall Sea, and the commoditie thereof, and thereto hold new opinions, as that it is of neceſſitie to ſalvation to beleeve the Pope to be head of the Church; that the Pope is above Councels and ſuch like: Ergo, they are heretikes. And to ſpeake the truth, moſt of the Popiſh opinions are ſuch as either tend to advance the pride of the Biſhop of Rome, as the doctrine of his primacie over other Churches, his ſuperioritie over Kings, Princes, and ſuch like; or elſe to make their owne purſes fat, as their opinions of their reall preſence, Maſſes propitiatorie for the quicke and the dead, purgatorie, pardons, pilgrimages, and ſuch other. And it was well ſaid (though merily) of Eraſmus to the Duke of Saxonie, who asked his judgement of Luther; that he medled with two dangerous matters that would not be touched, the Popes Crowne, and the Monkes belly.

4 Further, alſo it followeth thus in your Canons as touching an heretike: *Decret.par.2.cauſ.24. quaeſt.3.c.30. Qui non ad Propheticas voces, non ad Apoſtolicas literas, non ad Evangelicas authoritates, ſed ad ſeipſos recurrunt, magiſtri erroris exiſtunt, &c.* They which have not recourſe to the Prophets, Apoſtles writings, and the Evangelicall authorities, but run to themſelves, are become the maſters of errors. And what this meaneth is expounded by Pope Urbane in the ſame place, *cap.*32. Quia magiſter erroris eſt, non tantum haereticus, ſed etiam haereſiarcha dicendus eſt: Becauſe he is a maſter of error, he is not onely an heretike, but an hereſiarch, that is, a maſter of hereſies, &c. But the Papiſts, and not wee, leave the Propheticall, Apoſtolicall, Evangelicall writings, and run unto traditions, that is, to themſelves: Ergo they, not we, are the heretikes.

Like-

5 Likewiſe, Decr.p.2.cauſ.16 quæſt.7.Gregor.7. defineth, that he that ſhould grant away to lay perſons or others, than to Prieſts, oblations and tithes, inter maximos hereticos non minimus habeatur, let him be counted not the leaſt among the greateſt hereticks. But the Pope is the man that firſt alienated the propertie of tithes, and erected impropriations, and ſo maintained them; as it may appeare in King Henry the thirds time, when the Biſhops of this land made ſuit to the Pope to have impropriate benefices reſtored to the firſt uſe; at the contrarie ſuit of the Monkes, the Pope determined that they ſhould ſtand ſtill: Ergo, they are the hereticks.

Ex Flor. hiſtoriar.an.1261.

6 Againe, your owne Canons allow this ſaying of S. Hierome, deciphering the authors of hereſie, Decr.p.2.cauſ.24.quæſt.3.cap.33. Veteres ſcrutans hiſtorias invenire non poſſum ſcidiſſe eccleſiam, &c. & populos ſeduxiſſe, niſi eos, qui ſacerdotes a Deo poſiti erant: Looking over the ancient ſtories I cannot find that any did make ſchiſmes in the Church, and ſeduce the people but the Prieſts,&c. But the Papiſts ſay, that they only have the prieſthood, and that they are the true Prieſts. If hereſie then and ſchiſme begin among the prieſts, as Hierome in his reading obſerved, and the Papiſts take themſelves to be the prieſts of theſe daies; then the ſeminarie of hereſie is amongſt them. If it ſhall be anſwered, that Hierome ſpeaketh of the times before under the Law, not ſince: the words following ſhew the contrarie, Iſti vertuntur in laqueum tortuoſum, in omnibus locis ponentes ſcandalum, Theſe, ſaith hee, meaning the Prieſts,are become ſnares,in everie place putting a ſtumbling blocke. He ſpeaketh of the time preſent and then being.

7 Or will they allow of the Maſter of Sentences definition of an heretike, who out of Hilarie affirmeth thoſe to be heretikes, aliter interpretantes ſcripturas, quàm dictorum virtus poſtulat; de intelligentia enim hareſis, non de ſcriptura eſt, which doe interpret the Scripture, otherwiſe than the words are: for hereſie commeth not of the Scripture,but by the falſe underſtanding,lib.4.diſt.13.C. But the Papiſts doe thus interpret the Scripture cleane beſide the text: for the probation whereof I referre the reader to the Treatiſe annexed, 2. pillar, part. 2. Ergo, they are heretikes.

8 Heare alſo how one of your owne champions deſcribeth an heretike and hereſie: Hereſie is a falſe opinion defended with pertinacie cleerely repugning the word of God; Iohn Wynrime in his Sermon at S. Andrewes in Scotland, at the condemnation of M.George Wiſehart, an. 1546. *Fox p.*1268. But many ſuch opinions the Papiſts maintaine contarie to the Scriptures, as more at large in the place quoted before in the Treatiſe annexed I have ſhewed: Ergo, they are the heretikes.

Many other deſcriptions of hereſie I could alleage out of the Fathers, but theſe may ſuffice, gathered out of their owe authorities, by the which it is evident that Papiſts, not Proteſtants are heretikes.

The third note omitted,but with Bellarmine the eighth,is Sanctitas doctrina,the holines and pureneſſe of their doctrine, *cap.*11.

Anſw. I thinke theſe men will not bluſh in the end, to make a Saint of the Devill: for what more unchaſte and unpure religion can there be than Popery is?Call you that an holy religion,that canonized Thomas Becket for a Saint, who was a rebell and traitor to his Prince? Is that pure doctrine that calleth the marriage of Miniſters the worſt ſort of fornication, ſic Rhemiſt. That alloweth ſwearing and blaſpheming? One Sanpaulinus, for reproving a man of ſwearing, was ſuſpected to be a Lutheran,and thereupon examined,condemned,and burned,Fox pag.904. Is that an holy and perfect religion which reprobates may attaine unto? for the Popiſh profeſſion requireth no more than may bee found in reprobates. See a Treatiſe of this ſet forth by W. Perkins.

Laſtly, let Roger Holland ſpeake,firſt a Papiſt, afterwards by Gods mercifull working an holy Martyr: He confeſſing of himſelfe in the hearing of his enemies,that while he was a Papiſt,he was given to carding and dicing,to riot,drunkenneſſe,all kinde of wantonneſſe, in hope of auricular confeſſion to the Prieſt, and giving him ſomewhat to doe penance for him, thinking that having ſo done, he was of a cleere ground, and might returne to his old vomit againe. See his ſtorie, Fox pag.2040. Judge now what a pure Religion this may be which is a doctrine of libertie, and patron of all licentious living.

Pag.1849.1.70.

The fourth note omitted,but with *Bellarm.*the ninth,is Efficacia doctrina,the efficacie and force of their doctrin in converting many unto the faith,as he giveth inſtance in divers ages,as in the 7.8.9.11. centuries,or hundred yeeres, many were converted in Hungary, Germany, Norway,and other places to the papall faith,& many thouſands in the new Indian world in our age:to this purpoſe *Bellar.c.*12.

Anſw. 1. The converſion or drawing of people from one religion unto another, is not alwayes an argument of the right faith: for the Phariſies made many Proſelytes of their profeſſion, yet were they two-fold more the children of hell than themſelves: ſo in the time of Valens the Emperour, the Arrians converted the Goths: Bellarmine here anſwereth, Non converſos fuiſſe ab Arrianis, ſed miſere deceptos, that they were not converted by the Arrians, but miſerably deceived. The like doe wee ſay of the poore Indians, that they were not converted, but perverted rather by the Spanyards, and forced thereunto rather by their tyrannie, than perſwaded by their falſe Chriſtianitie.

Freculphus tom.2.lib.4. c.10.

2 The nations converted in the ages given in inſtance, were won not unto the Popiſh, but to the Chriſtian faith of the Trinitie,which is yet profeſſed in Poperie:for thoſe ages were not ſo full of Popiſh ſuperſtition, as this preſent age is peſtered now: and admit, that then the Chriſtian faith was over-ſpread with many ſuperſtitious rites, it was for the love of the faith, not of thoſe ſhadowes wherewith it was masked, that the nations yeelded themſelves, as the Bridegroome marrieth the Bride for love to her perſon, not for her apparrell ſake.

3 If the power of their religion appeared, in the converting of thoſe Countries from Paganiſme to Poperie, our religion is more powerfull, that hath reduced thoſe from Poperie to Proteſtancie: beſide, the converſion of many Papiſts to become Proteſtants, as in the age before us, George Tankerfield, Iulius Palmer, Miſtreſſe Lewes, Roger Holland: See before in the 5. note of miracles. And ſo ſince that time other Countries have afforded many like examples of our converts to our faith; as among the reſt of late, a noble woman, Marie the Abbeſſe of Drebnits in Germany, left her rich Monaſterie, and became a Proteſtant.

Mercurius Gallobelgic. ann. 1610. tom. 8. lib. 3 p. 24.

4 But the power of Proteſtants faith and religion, was chiefly ſeene in the firſt converſion of the Gentiles, by the preaching of the Apoſtles and Diſciples: for we profeſſe none other faith than they preached: and if the Proteſtants had the like opportunitie offered them, as the Spanyards had among the Indians, wee doubt not but wee ſhould ſee more powerfull effects of our religion, than they have found of theirs.

The fifth note omitted, with Bellarmine the tenth, is Sanctitas vitæ, the holineſſe of life of the authors, and profeſſors of their religion, cap 13.

Luitprand. lib. 6.

Anſw. Goe to then, let us ſee what holy Fathers the patrones of Poperie have beene; we will begin with their Popes: Was not Pope Ioane a holy woman, who having played the whore, fell in travell in the middeſt of Proceſſion? Was not Pope Iohn 13. another, who is ſaid to have drunke to the Devill, to have defloured virgins and ſtrangers; hee lay with Stephana his fathers Concubine, and at the laſt was ſlaine in adulterie? Silveſter the 2. was a Conjurer and a Sorcerer, and covenanted with the Devill for his Popedome: To theſe we will joyne Gregorie the 7. to make up a meſſe, of whom Benno writeth, that he raiſed up the Devill, and poyſoned ſix Popes his Predeceſſors. Many ſuch examples we may finde amongſt their Pope-holy Fathers.

To thoſe we may joyne other of their chiefe pillars. The Cardinall of Crema being ſent Legate into England, anno 1129. in a Councell at London inveighing againſt the marriage of Prieſts, ſaid it was a ſhamefull thing to riſe from the ſides of an whore, to make Chriſts body: who the night following, was ſhamefully taken with a notable whore, Fox pag. 1167.

Pag. 1065. l. 60.

Doctor Maillard a great Sorboniſt in Paris, was ſo notoriouſly practiſed in the filthy acts of Buggerie and Sodomitrie, that almoſt all the children in the ſtreets did know it: ex Iohan. Criſpin.

Fox, pag. 2102. Pag. 1905. l. 57. Edition 1610.

And to come neerer home: that ſtout champion of Poperie, and captaine diſputer Doctor Weſton, was he not apprehended in adulterie, and deprived of all his ſpirituall livings?

Neither were thoſe the practices of a few, but ſuch generally was the guiſe of their Clergie: It was one of the grievances exhibited by the Nobilitie of Germany in the Councell at Norenberg, that the Prieſts being forbidden to marrie, did goe about day and night to attempt and trie the chaſtitie of matrons, virgins, wives, &c. pag. 680. Yea, and it is too ſhamefull to rehearſe what filthy abominations were brought to light at the ſuppreſſion of the Abbeyes here in England, which they practiſed in corners, as the Apoſtle ſaith; It is a ſhame to ſpeake of the things, which are done by them in ſecret, Epheſ. 5. 12. See Maſter Bale his Preface to his booke De actis Romanorum Pontificum. Wherefore the Jeſuite needed not, ſeeing their nakedneſſe is laid open to the view of the world, thus to boaſt of the holineſſe of their profeſſors, as to make it a note of their Church, which falleth out cleane contrarie.

The ſixth note omitted, with Bellarmine the fifteenth, is ſaith he, Confeſſio adverſariorum, The confeſſion of their adverſaries. But here hee is verie weake in his prooves: Calvinus vocat Bernardum pium ſcriptorem: Calvin (ſaith the Jeſuite) calleth Bernard a godly writer, cap. 16.

Anſwer. Firſt, I pray you, what hath he got by Calvins confeſſion here? May not a man commend ſomething in one, and yet not commend all? Calvin commendeth Bernard for a godly devout man, yet hee approveth not his judgement in all things: godlineſſe of life is one thing; pureneſſe and ſinceritie of judgement another. But what if he had ſimply commended Bernard, what is this to them? who though in many things he ſavour of ſuperſtition, yet in the moſt points is a witneſſe with us rather than with them, as I could eaſily ſhew, if it were either needfull or convenient in this place.

Secondly, the Jeſuite, to prove the confeſſion of his adverſaries, giveth but one poore inſtance of Calvins confeſſion, and ſuch another of Melancthons, which make nothing for them. But wee can bring forth many confeſſions of the truth uttered by Papiſts: ſome for example ſake I will ſet downe.

Panormitane, that mightie champion for the Pope, having diſputed much in the Councell of Baſil, for the preeminence of the Pope above generall Councels, in the end, the matter going againſt him, returning to his lodging complained with teares, that he had beene compelled by his King, to ſtrive againſt the truth, and to put his ſoule in danger: ex Ænea Sylvio.

Ex Henric. Pantal. lib. 19. anno 1543.

Doctor Mollius an Italian Martyr, being before the Cardinals of Rome examined of his doctrine which he confirmed by Scripture, concerning Juſtification, Free-will, Purgatorie, at the length (they being not able to convince him) received this anſwer, that it was truth which hee affirmed; but it was not meet for this preſent time; becauſe it could not be taught without detriment of the Apoſtolike See.

Doctor Baſſinet openly in an Oration proteſted in a great aſſembly, that he was diſquieted in conſcience for giving judgement againſt thoſe which they called heretikes, becauſe hee found moſt part of their opinions agreeable to Scripture, Fox pag. 945. col. 2. Pag.862.2.30.

The Biſhop of Gavaillon in France, committed the articles of the Merindolians to a certaine Doctor of Divinitie to be examined, who after eight dayes peruſing of them, gave his anſwer that hee found them agreeable to Scripture, pag. 949. col. 2. Pag.866.1.40.

But amongſt all other, the confeſſion of Wincheſter lying upon his death-bed is worthy to bee remembred: who being put in minde by another B. of Juſtification onely by the blood of Chriſt, anſwered, that it was dangerous to open this gap to the people; yet to him, and ſuch other in his caſe it might be uttered: reported by one that was a great doer about Wincheſter, pag. 1788. col. 1. Pag.1623.1.51

I will alſo here adjoyne the teſtimony of Eraſmus, whom although the Jeſuite will not acknowledge wholly to be theirs, yet he vouchſafeth to call him ſemi-Chriſtianum a ſemi-Chriſtian, or halfe-Catholike: lib. 1. de verbo Dei, cap. 9. he thus writeth to the Archbiſhop of Mentz: That many things were condemned in the bookes of Luther of Monkes and Divines for hereticall, which in the bookes of Bernard and Auguſtine are read for ſound and godly.

We cannot deſire more large and ample confeſſions of our faith, than have been made by the enemies thereof, as in everie point of controverſie almoſt is ſhewed thorowout this Treatiſe: theſe examples may ſuffice: wherefore this note better a great deale ſerveth our turne, than it maketh for the Jeſuite.

Of the judgements of God upon Popiſh perſecutors.

TWo other of the Jeſuites notes remaine, the fourteenth and fifteenth: The unhappy end (ſaith he) of the enemies of their Church, and the externall happineſſe and flouriſhing eſtate of the defenders thereof, cap. 17. 18.

Anſwer. Firſt, more fearefull examples of Gods judgements we ſhall not finde in any, than have fallen upon the perſecutors and butcherly ſlaughtermen of Gods ſervants, for the Goſpels ſake: you ſhall finde a whole Treatiſe of this matter, wherein ſuch examples are gathered together, Fox p. 2100. Unto that place I refer the Reader, becauſe it were too long to give particular inſtances of everie thing: yet becauſe the Jeſuite produceth certaine examples of Gods judgements upon Luther, Zuinglius, Oecolampadius, Calvin, whom hee ſhamefully belieth; I will take a little paine, firſt to make anſwer to his ſlanders, and then to ſhew ſome notable examples of Gods judgements amongſt them. Firſt, he ſaith that Luther, after hee had ſupped merrily, and made all his gueſts ſport, died the ſame night; Zuinglius was ſlaine in battell; Oecolampadius died ſuddenly in the night; Calvin was conſumed of lice, and calling upon the Devill died, Bellar. cap. 16.

Anſwer. Firſt, in ſome of theſe reports the Jeſuite reporteth untruly: for Luther died not of a ſurfet or drunkenneſſe, as they report, but of an old infirmitie and weakneſſe of ſtomacke, and not in the night, but the next morning at eight or nine a clocke: alſo hee made a moſt comfortable end, with a ſweet prayer immediately before his death, and commending his ſoule heartily into the hands of God; as Melancthon reporteth the manner of his death. And Oecolampadius died not ſuddenly, but of an old ſickneſſe he had, increaſed with ſorrow for the death of Zuinglius, Fox pag. 873. col. 1. Pag.797.2.5.
And as touching Maſter Calvin, Bellarmine doth too ſhamefully belye him, who as hee lived, ſo died the ſervant of God, whatſoever theſe children of the father of lyes ſay to the contrarie: Maſter Beza, who hath written the ſtorie of his life and death, herein deſerveth more credit than any of your lying and railing Libellers. The like unſavourie lye Bolſecus, Bellarmines author, reporteth of Maſter Calvin, how he was confederate with one Bruleus Oſtum, a poore ſtranger at Geneva, that hee ſhould faine himſelfe dead, and ſhould be raiſed up to life by Maſter Calvin, and how the ſaid Bruleus ſo diſſembling, when Calvin came in, and ſaid his prayers over him, was found dead indeed, Bellarm. cap 14. But we doe nothing marvell at the impudent ſpirit of our adverſaries: for thus alſo they belied Bucer, that faithfull learned man, that hee ſhould deny at his death that Chriſt the Meſſiah was come: And that all the world may know their impudencie, even this laſt yeere, they were not aſhamed to blaze abroad in their writings, that Beza died a Papiſt converted, and that at his motion made at his death, the whole Church of Geneva was revolted to Papiſtrie: which lying Libell is confuted by Maſter Beza himſelfe, and the reſt of the Miniſters of Geneva, in a pamphlet publiſhed in this laſt yeere 1597.

Secondly, ſome of theſe judgements, which the Jeſuite rehearſeth, we take to be none at all, as to be ſlaine in battell, as Zuinglius was; who as a good ſhepherd gave his life for his flocke, and would not leave them fighting in the defence of the Goſpell: he did not goe as a Captaine to wage battell, as ſome of your Popes and Popiſh Biſhops have done, but as a Paſtor to teach and comfort them, which your owne Canons allow: as it was decreed, Synod. Franciſcan. That the ſervants of God, propter divinum miniſterium, for the divine miniſterie or ſervice might goe to warre. Neither is it to bee counted a plague to dye by the ſword, or of any other violent death, to him that hath lived well, as S. Auguſtine well ſaith: Noli timere, non poteſt male mori, qui bene vixerit: Feare not, he cannot die ill, that hath lived well. And againe, Vndecunque mors pio, bona eſt: Death howſoever it commeth to a godly man, is good: *in Pſal.*148. And further, ſaith he, Doeſt thou think it an evill death, to die of ſhipwracke, to be ſlaine by the ſword, torne of wilde beaſts? did not the Martyrs endure the like deaths?

Thirdly, it ſhall even now appeare, that all theſe judgements which the Jeſuite hath brought forth, and many more, have juſtly fallen upon Popiſh perſecutors. And for his five fained examples, we are able to give him ten times ſo many: but it ſhall not be needfull to rehearſe ſuch a number, yet ſome I will ſet downe.

Now then in the next place, as the Jeſuite hath endevoured, but to ſmall purpoſe, to ſingle out ſome Proteſtants as noted with Gods judgements; ſo I will, ſomewhat to ſatisfie the Reader, requite them with the like, not referring him altogether to Maſter Foxes Treatiſe of this matter. For as Auguſtine well ſaith, Novi quemadmodum ſoleat, contriſtare lectorem, cùm à libro, quem gerit in manibus in alium mittitur, quem fortè non habeat: I know how it doth trouble the Reader, when as he is referred from that booke he hath in his hands, to another which he hath not: and ſo he ſaith, ſatius eſt offerre habenti, quàm differre non habentem: It is better to offer to him that hath the booke, than to defer him that hath it not, Auguſt lib.2.de Baptiſ.cap.1. I will therefore, for their cauſe that have not that large volume, ſort out ſome notable examples of Gods judgements upon perſecuting Papiſts: and becauſe they may deny them, though they be ſtrange, to be judgements, I will together with the alleaging of them uſe theſe probations.

Firſt, the likeneſſe of puniſhment in the old perſecuting Pagans, & in the new perſecuting Papiſts. Secondly, the confeſſion of our adverſaries. Thirdly, the confeſſion of thoſe that were puniſhed and judged of God. Fourthly, the prediction of the Martyrs, whom they perſecuted. Fifthly, their deſperate ends. Sixthly, the ſame judgements fell upon them, which they procured upon others. Seventhly, the extraordinarie courſe of Gods judgements.

Firſt then, if we ſhall finde perſecuting Papiſts to have ſuſtained the verie ſame puniſhments with the Heathen Tyrants, no man can doubt, but that they were juſtly judged of God. Antiochus a miniſter of crueltie in the fifth perſecution under Alexander, while he was in the execution of torments upon one Agapitus for the Chriſtian faith, ſuddenly fell downe dead from his judiciall ſeat, crying out, that his bowels within him burned with fire, Henric. de Erford. lib.6 cap.29. So at the condemnation of Wolfgangus a Germane Martyr, the Commendator of S. Antony of Vienna ſitting for the ſpirituall Judge, ſuddenly fell downe and died, and the Abbot of Clarilocus his aſſiſtant not long after at the cracke of guns fell downe and died, anno 1525. Pantal.

Againe, Claudius Preſident under Valerian, in the eighth perſecution a cruell perſecutor, was vexed Pag.67.2.7. of the Devill, and biting his owne tongue into many ſmall peeces died, Fox pag.74. col. 2. In like manner Cardinall Creſcentius was vexed of the Devill, who was Preſident of the Tridentine Chapter, who ſitting up late to write letters to the Pope, ſaw in his chamber comming toward him an huge blacke dog with fierie eyes, and therewith ſtriken with a great feare dyed: upon whoſe death Pag.1909.1.89. the Councell was diſſolved, pag. 2107.

Maximinus that cruell Tyrant was ſtriken with a moſt fearfull diſeaſe, conſuming his entrals, whereout iſſued an innumerable multitude of lice, with a moſt filthy ſtinking ſavour, that no man could abide him: his Phyſitians, becauſe they could not cure him, he commanded to be ſlaine, pag. 82. Pag.74.1.30. col.1. In like ſort was Minerius plagued, the perſecutor of the innocent Merindolians, whoſe bowels rotted within him being conſumed with wormes: who alſo commanded his Surgeon to bee apprehended, that gave him good exhortation; and he miſerably died with extreme ſtinch of the lower Pag.1910.1.40. parts, with horrible blaſphemies, &c. pag. 913. col.2. Twyford likewiſe a furious Papiſt, who ſet Pag.1908.1.33. up the ſtakes in Smithfield, rotted above the ground, ſo that no man could abide him, pag. 1218. col. 1.

Phillips the betrayer of innocent Tyndall died of lice. Bale alſo the Promooter in Queene Maries Pag 985.1.25. dayes was eaten of lice, pag. 1101. col.1.

Maxentius that Tyrant falling with his horſe from the bridge, which hee did lay for Conſtantine, was drowned. The like judgement befell a certaine young Gentleman, an horrible blaſphemer, who being admoniſhed of his ſwearing, ſtill multiplying oathes, pricked forward his horſe, being upon the bridge: from the which the horſe ſprung aſide into the water, hee crying upon his backe, Horſe Pag.1907 2,50. and man and all to the Devill, pag. 2105. In like ſort Iohn Vander, a chiefe Officer of Antwerp, and a cruell perſecutor, riding to the Citie in his waggon, when hee was come to the bridge (the horſe ſtanding ſtill) cryed out to the Driver, Ride on in a thouſand Devils names: and the horſe ſpringing beſide, hee was caſt into the towne ditch, and ſo drowned. Thus wee ſee, how in all reſpects as tho perſecutors of the Primitive Church were puniſhed, ſo the enemies of Chriſts Church in theſe dayes were recompenced. If then ſtrange kindes of death were to be counted judgements in them, ſo are they in theſe.

Secondly, wee have our adverſaries owne confeſſion: for the Jeſuite noteth foure judgements of God, as I have ſhewed before, which hee falſly affirmeth to have fallen upon thoſe learned Proteſtants: firſt, ſuddenneſſe of death: ſecondly, to be vexed of the Devill: thirdly, to die blaſpheming: fourthly, to die ſecurely and merrily after pots and cups, as he ſlandereth Luther. Three of the firſt I have before touched, and given an inſtance of themſelves, that have taſted of thoſe judgements: and for the laſt, the Jeſuite might have remembred how Pope Leo the 10. ſitting at ſupper, and verie pleaſant, was ſuddenly ſtriken with a fever, whereof he died, pag. 854. And for ſecure death, Eckius, that mightie impugner of Luther, might have beene thought upon, whoſe laſt words when he died were theſe: In caſe the foure thouſand Guilders were ready, the matter were diſpatched: with the which, as it is thought, he ſhould have purchaſed ſome preferment at Rome.

Pag. 780. 1. 30.

Thirdly, let us heare their owne confeſſion that were puniſhed. King Henry the 2. of France having received his deadly wound at juſting, ſaid, hee feared hee was ſtriken for falſly impriſoning the poore Chriſtians, pag. 2112. Likewiſe one Baſtian Captaine of the armie, that went againſt the Proteſtants of Luſerne, and S. Martin, threatning that day to doe much againſt them, and returning wounded, it was ſaid unto him, Now it is well ſeene that their religion is better than ours, pag. 967.

Pag. 1913. 1. 10.

Pag. 882. 1. 5.

Fourthly, the prediction and foretelling of the Martyrs of the judgements that followed, doe ſhew that they were ſent of God, as M. Patrike Hamelton at his death did cite the blacke Frier Campbel, that was his accuſer, to appeare before the moſt high God to anſwer for the innocencie of his death at a certaine day of the next moneth: immediately before which day the Frier died, pag. 975. col. 2. Likewiſe, anno 1561. at Amboiſe in France certaine gentlemen being unjuſtly condemned to death by the Chancellour Olivier, one of them tooke of the bloud of his fellowes that were beheaded, and lift his hands to heaven, and ſaid; Lord behold the bloud of thy children, thou wilt in time revenge it: and ſhortly after the Chancellor died in great deſpaire, Fox pag. 2112.

Pag. 1906. 1. 30.

Pag. 1913. 1. 26.

Fifthly, the ſame judgements overtooke ſome of them, which they threatned, and had done to others: which ſheweth, that they were ſtriken of God: One Iohn Martin of Briquetas in France, threatned he would ſlit the Miniſters noſe; who was himſelfe aſſaulted of a wolfe, which bit off his noſe, whereof he died mad, pag. 955. Sir Rafe Ellerker Knight Marſhall at Calice, when Adam Damlip was executed, ſaid, he would not goe away before hee ſaw his heart: but hee himſelfe afterward was taken in a skirmiſh of the French, his privie members cut off, and his heart raked out of his belly, p. 1229. One Landeſdale a cruell enemie to the Goſpell, that ſuffered a poore man to dye in a ditch by his houſe, was not long after caſt by his horſe into a ditch, and ſo died, Fox pag. 2104.

Pag. 871. 1. 28.

Pag. 1904. 3. 42.

Pag. 1907. 1. 10.

Sixthly, their deſperate and fearfull ends do declare that Gods revenging hand was amongſt them; as Plackney and Hanington, both fellowes of New College in Oxford, drowned themſelves, and were taken up, with their Crucifixes hanging about their necks, pag. 2104. Clarke, an open enemie to the Goſpell, hanged himſelfe in the tower, pag. 1201. col. 1. and divers of them beſide killed themſelves: others died in deſpaire. Guarlacus a learned man of Lovaine, and a mightie defender of Poperie, uttering moſt horrible blaſphemies in his ſicknes, cried out, that his ſins were greater than could be forgiven: and ſo wretchedly in deſpaire ended his life: ex Epiſtol. Claudii Senarclæi ad Bucer. In like manner Iacobus Latomus, a mightie impugner of Luther, in his open Lecture in Lovaine fell mad, and ſo was carried home and ſhut up in a cloſe chamber till he died, who had nothing in his mouth, but that hee was damned: ex ead. epiſtol. Many ſuch examples might be alleaged to this purpoſe: but theſe may ſuffice to ſhew, that their deſperate madneſſe of ſome in killing themſelves, of others in dying in deſpaire without all comfort, doth evidently ſhew that they were judged of God.

Pag. 1906. 1. 65.

Pag. 1904. 1. 87.

Pag. 1908. 2. 29.

Pag. 1909. 1. 1.

Seventhly, it may appeare by the extraordinarie meanes whereby ſome of them were puniſhed: Doctor Whittington Chancellor, a perſecutor in King Henry the 7. dayes, comming from the burning of a faithfull woman, whom he had condemned, was ſlaine of a Bull, that offered to touch none of the people beſide, but comming againſt him, ran upon him, and toſſed him upon his hornes, trailing his guts all along in the ſtreet, pag. 775. Burton Bailiffe of Crowland, an earneſt defender of the Maſſe, and an enemie to the Goſpell, was poyſoned with the excrements of a Crow, which flying over his head, as he rode by the way, let them fall upon his noſe and beard, with the ſtinch whereof he fell into a continuall vomiting, whereof he died, pag. 2160. A Frier of Mounſter, as he was in the pulpit inveighing againſt the doctrine of the Goſpell, was ſmitten with a ſudden flaſh of lightning, and ſo died: ex Pantal. 2. part. &c. Wherefore as the Jeſuite noteth it to have beene a judgement of God upon Anaſtaſius the Emperour, a favourer of the Eutychian heretikes, that was ſmitten of lightning: ſo can it not be denyed, but in like ſort this was a judgement upon this Frier. Thus we ſee how little the Jeſuite hath gained by making the judgements of God a note of the Church.

Of the externall happineſſe of the Church, the fifteenth Note.

NOw concerning externall happineſſe and good ſucceſſe: firſt, it is no certaine note of the Church of God, which oftner is without it, than it doth enjoy it: for Chriſts kingdome is not of this world. And as the Lord ſuffered his people to ſojourne as ſtrangers, and to bee evill entreated foure hundred yeeres, from Abrahams time to Moſes: ſo is it the condition for the moſt part of the Church of God ſtill; as the Prophet Ieremie ſaith, Dedit dilectam animam ſuam in manus inimicorum ejus: He hath given his beloved and deare heart into the hands of the enemies thereof. And Saint Auguſtine ſaith, Beneficentiſſima providentia omnipotens Deus terrenam felicitatem conceſſit & impiis, ne pro magno quæreretur à bonis: Almightie God of his bountifull providence, hath granted earthly felicitie to the wicked, that the godly ſhould not ſo greatly deſire it, Epiſt. 120. ad Honorat. cap. 5. How then can that be a note of the Church which is common to the wicked? Nay, one of your own writers ſaith contrarie, that Crux eſt Eccleſiæ nota, the Croſſe is a note of the Church, Eſpenc. in 2.Tim.p.103.d. And againe, Prædixit Chriſtus labores, Pſeudochriſti proſpera: Chriſt foretold of labour and ſorrow, the falſe Chriſts propheſied of peace and proſperitie, pag.100.g. By this ſentence Bellarmine is a falſe prophet, that would have felicitie and proſperitie a note of his Church.

Secondly, as the Jeſuite ſheweth in the examples of Juſtinian the elder, and Heraclius the Emperour, that they proſpered in their warres till they fell to be maintainers of hereſie, then all things went backward, cap.18. The like examples we can produce of the evill ſucceſſe and unhappie end of thoſe who revolted from the Goſpell to Papiſtrie, whom God bleſſed in all their enterpriſes before. This was the King of Navarre his caſe, father to the late French King; who after he had ſuſtained a while the cauſe of the Goſpell, was content at the length to alter his profeſſion, and joyne with the Duke of Guize, and was ſtriken with a pellet at the ſiege of Roan, whereof he died, much repenting his revolt. It had been happie if the ſonne in the ſame caſe had remembred his fathers fall. The like experience of Gods wrath upon revolters, others of meaner place have felt: as Henry Smith ſometime a profeſſor of the Goſpell, afterward at Lovaine perverted to Poperie, comming home hanged himſelfe, with his Agnus Dei about his necke. One Williams a ſtudent of the Inner Temple, firſt a Goſpeller, then a Papiſt, fell ſtark mad, and ſo continued, Fox pag.2105. Arnoldus Bomelius a young ſtudent of the Univerſitie of Lovaine proſpered well, ſo long as he favoured the Goſpell: afterward being perverted by Tyleman Maſter of the Popes College, fell into deſpaire, and killed himſelfe with his dagger: whoſe ſtorie Maſter Fox hath at large, pag. 2106. Thus it doth appeare how unhappily it fareth with popiſh revolters, contrarie to the Jeſuites obſervation: therefore they cannot bragge of their outward felicitie.

Pag.1908.2.66.

Thirdly, neither of late can our adverſaries, I think, boaſt of ſuch good ſucceſſe of their kingdome: for ſince the reviving of the Goſpell in the world, the Popes Crowne and dignitie hath beene much impaired, and many Princes have withdrawne their collers and ſhoulders from under his yoke. And as for England (God enlarge our hearts to be thankfull therefore) there was never ſeene the like continuance of peace, and abundance of temporall bleſſings, as the Goſpell hath brought with it hitherto. And I am perſwaded, were it not for our ſinnes, wee ſhould enjoy many yeeres ſtill, as I truſt in God we ſhall, if we will humble our ſelves before God by true repentance.

Villamont. lib.2.cap.4.

Concerning forren teſtimonies: firſt, if outward proſperitie were a note of the true Church, the Emperour of Ethiopia hath better right unto it, than the Papall and Romane Biſhop, who at this day reigneth in peace over fortie kingdomes of Chriſtians, as Villamont reporteth.

2 But it is denied to be a ſure marke of the Church, and that in the judgement of the Eaſt Churches of the Grecians, Syrians, Armenians, who profeſſe themſelves to bee the Church of God, notwithſtanding they live and ſuffer much under the tyrannicall government of the Turkes and Perſians.

Harm.ſect.9. p.287.

3 Thus ſtandeth alſo the confeſſion of Saxonie: Doe not determine with thy ſelfe, that by reaſon of thy proſperitie thou art in favour with God, &c. Alexander doth not therefore pleaſe God, becauſe he is a conquerour, and enjoyeth a large empire, &c.

Commentar. Theolog.Tom. 3.p.141.

4 Yea, our adverſaries doe witneſſe with us: Gregorie of Valence confeſſeth, that ſometime the Church may be ſo toſſed by the waves of error and perſecution, that to ſuch as are unskilfull, it will bee verie hard to be knowne, as it fell out when the falſhood of Arrians bare rule almoſt over the whole world: and our Rhemiſts alſo grant, that during Antichriſts reigne, the externall ſtate of the Romane Church and publike entercourſe of the faithfull with the ſame, may ceaſe, &c. What ſhall then become of this externall felicitie, which they make to be a marke of the true Church.

Thus farre of the Jeſuites fifteene notes, whereby the popiſh Church is deciphered. Now it followeth, that we declare the infallible and moſt certaine notes of the true Church.

Of the true and infallible Notes of the Church of Chriſt.

THe outward tokens whereby the true viſible Church is diſcerned, are not many in number, as our adverſaries doe reckon up many: the Jeſuite no leſſe than fifteene, ſupplying belike in number, that which they want in weight. Neither in this place doe wee ſpeake of the univerſall Catholike inviſible Church, which is beleeved and not ſeene, being an article of our faith: but of particular viſible Churches, which are diſcerned and knowne by theſe two eſſentiall markes, the true preaching of the word, and right uſe of the Sacraments: Some alſo doe adde a third, namely Eccleſiaſticall diſcipline, Beza confeſſ. de Eccleſ. art.7. Hooper upon the Creed, artic.72. But this partly is comprehended in the two former: for there cannot be hearing and preaching of the word, and the frequenting of the Sacraments, unleſſe there be an exerciſe of Church diſcipline: partly alſo we ſay that it is not ſo eſſentiall a note, as the other are: for the abſence of the other make a nullitie of the Church. If the word or Sacraments in ſubſtance be corrupted, the Church alſo is defaced: but if there be not an exact forme of diſcipline, it doth not ſtraightway ceaſe to be a Church: it rather is required ad bene eſſe, to the well being of a Church, than ad eſſe ſimply to the being and eſſence thereof. Wherefore wee conclude, that the true preaching of the word, and right uſe of the Sacraments, are the onely neceſſarie and eſſentiall notes of the Church: where theſe two are rightly uſed according to Gods Word, there is a right Church, as here in England, God be bleſſed: where they are falſly and impurely handled, there is a falſe and corrupt Church, as among the Papiſts: where they are not at all in uſe, there is no Church, as amongſt the Turkes, Jewes, and Infidels. Firſt wee will examine our adverſaries arguments, and then bring forth our owne.

The Papiſts.

*Arg.*1. BEllarmine thus argueth: The true notes of the Church ought to be proper and particular, not common and generall, as theſe are: for everie ſect of heretikes doe challenge to themſelves the right preaching of the Word, and uſage of the Sacraments: Ergo, they are no true notes, Bellarm.lib. 4. de Eccleſ.cap. 2.

We anſwer: Firſt, it skilleth not how many do lay claime to thoſe notes: the word of God it ſelfe is a manifeſt Judge where pure doctrine is taught, and the Sacraments rightly kept according to the inſtitution. It is no matter, howſoever Papiſts and other heretikes doe make their brags, the Scriptures themſelves can ſoone decide this queſtion. And S. Hierome ſaith well to this purpoſe: Nec ſibi blandiantur, quod videantur de ſcripturarum capitulis affirmare, quod dicunt: Neither let them flatter themſelves, becauſe they prove their aſſertions out of Scripture: For ſo the Devill alſo alleaged Scripture: Sed ſcriptura non in legendo conſiſtunt, ſed intelligendo: But the Scriptures conſiſt not in the reading, but underſtanding, &c. Cont. Luciferian. So then although heretikes by the letter of Scripture may take upon them to prove their Church, yet by the true ſenſe thereof they ſhall never. Secondly, nay rather this argument may be turned upon the Jeſuites head: for it is therefore the more like, that theſe ſhould bee the true notes of the Church, becauſe everie hereſie doth labour to prove their Church thereby: for if it were not the right coyne, they would not goe about to counterfeit it. Thirdly, I marvell they are not aſhamed to object, that our notes are common ſeeing theirs are moſt common: for not only aſſemblies of heretikes, but even the heathen and idolatrous Gentiles might as well prove themſelves to be the Church, by thoſe popiſh notes, of univerſalitie, for Idolatrie had overſpread the whole world; of unitie, they all conſented to perſecute the Church of Chriſt; of antiquitie, for the worſhip of Idols continued above 2000. yeers; of ſucceſſion, for the monarchie of the Aſſyrians endured 1300. yeeres, their kings all this while one ſucceeding another. They had alſo prophets, and ſuch as wrought miracles. Our adverſaries may be now aſhamed to caſt us in the teeth, that our notes are common, when as theirs doe well agree to the Synagogues of Satan, and aſſemblies of Infidels.

Argum.2. Saith he, the note of the marke muſt be better knowne and more notorious, than the thing marked or notified by it: ſo are not theſe; for wee know not which is the word of God, nor what bookes are Canonicall, and to be taken for Scripture, but by the Church, Bellarm. ibid.

We anſwer: the Jeſuite ſtill beggeth that which is in queſtion: a foule fault in a profeſſed diſputer: for have we not largely proved before, 1.contr.quæſt.4. that the Church dependeth upon the authoritie of the Scripture, and not contrariwiſe, and that there is no more certaine and evident & undoubted thing in the whole world, upon the which a man may be bold to build and ground his faith, than upon the Scriptures? This ſure is a childiſh and ridiculous argument, to take that as granted, which is moſt of all in controverſie. Secondly, he committeth the ſame fault himſelfe, chap.14. where he maketh the power of miracles a note of the Church, and yet confeſſeth, Ex Eccleſia miracula demonſtrari: That true miracles are demonſtrated by the Church: why then may not the word of God as well ſhew the Church, although in ſome ſenſe the Church ſhew the word? Thirdly, the Jeſuite confeſſeth, cap.2. that where the Scripture is received, and the Church doubted of, there the Scripture declareth the Church: which is our verie caſe in theſe dayes: for ſeeing our adverſaries and wee are agreed concerning the moſt of the Canonicall Scriptures, but differ about the Church, in the Jeſuites judgement in this caſe we muſt demonſtrate the Church by the Scriptures. Fourthly, the Jeſuite miſtaketh the matter: for we doe not thus reaſon, where the Scriptures are acknowledged for the word, there is the Church; for the Jewes receive the old Teſtament, the Devill knoweth it is the word of God, which is contained in the Scriptures; but they are neither of the Church: but where the word is faithfully preached, profeſſed, received, and beleeved, there is the Church.

Argum. 3. The true notes (ſaith he) are inſeparable from the Church: it is never without them. But many true Churches have wanted theſe: The Church of the Corinthians was a true Church, and yet they beleeved not the reſurrection, 1 Cor.15. The Galathians were a true Church, and yet they held that Moſes Law was to bee obſerved together with the Goſpell. And the Corinthians likewiſe did not ſincerely obſerve the Sacraments, 1 Cor. 11. And as many true Churches have wanted theſe notes, ſo falſe Churches may have them: for there may be true doctrine among ſchiſmatikes, ſuch as the Donatiſts were: for ſchiſmatikes may hold all points of ſound doctrine, who faile in charitie rather than in faith: Ergo, theſe are no true ſignes, Bellarm. ibid.

We anſwer: firſt, this argument may with berter right be returned upon their owne head: for many true Churches have wanted their marks: Chriſt and his Apoſtles had neither ſucceſſion from Aaron, nor univerſalitie, and yet they made the true Church. The Church of the Jewes after Malachies time had no Prophets, nor miracles, for the ſpace of foure hundred yeeres before Chriſt, and yet were they the true Church, and ſo of the reſt of your notes, the Church of Chriſt hath many times wanted them. Secondly, it was not the whole Church of Corinthus that doubted of the reſurrection, but certaine falſe Apoſtles that laboured to ſeduce others. Some of you (ſaith the Apoſtle) have not the knowledge of God: he ſaith not, all. So likewiſe amongſt the Galathians there were falſe teachers, that ſtood for the Law of Moſes. A little leaven doth marre the whole lump. It was not therefore a publike doctrine in the Church, but ſecretly taught by falſe Apoſtles. Thirdly, there may be ſome error in the Church, but being not fundamentall, ſuch an one as deſtroyeth faith, it doth not diſſolve the Church: as there was ſome abuſe amongſt the Corinthians in receiving the Sacrament: but the forme and inſtitution and ſubſtance of the Sacrament was kept. Nay, yet to grant a little more: though the error be dangerous, and of great weight and moment, and ſuch an one, as being ſtifly maintained, would deſtroy the faith and Church too: yet if they have fallen into it rather of ignorance, than any other cauſe, and doe not continue in it, but doe ſubmit themſelves to be reformed by the Word, it ceaſeth not for all that to be a Church. So the Corinthians referred themſelves wholly and their opinions to the judgement and determination of the Apoſtle.

Galath.5.9.

To the ſecond part of the argument, that pure doctrine may be found in an impure Church.

We anſwer: firſt, the example which the Jeſuite alleageth of the Donatiſts, is nothing to his purpoſe: for the Donatiſts did not only offend in their ſchiſme, but they held alſo ſchiſmaticall and untrue opinions, as that the Sacraments were polluted by the Miniſters, that Baptiſme given by heretikes, ought to be iterated: that the Church in the earth conſiſteth only of the good without any mixture of evill men: that the Church was periſhed from the whole world, and remained only amongſt them: theſe were the opinions of the Donatiſts: they had not therefore pure doctrine. Auguſtine doubteth not to ſay unto a chiefe Donatiſt: Schiſmaticus es ſacrilega diſceſſione, hæreticus ſacrilego dogmate: Thou art a ſchiſmatike, for thy ſacrilegious departure from the Church, and an heretike for thy ſacrilegious opinions, Cont. Gaudent. lib. 3. Wherefore the Jeſuite was much overſeene in alleaging this example. Secondly, there are no ſchiſmatikes, which doe ſeparate themſelves from the Church, but they doe diſſent in ſome opinion, and ſo as well faile in faith as in charitie: for what elſe ſhould move them to be divided from the Church, but diverſitie and difference of doctrine? So Au-
Cont. Creſcon. cap. 9. guſtine anſwereth Creſconius, who made this difference of hereſie and ſchiſme: Hæreſis, ſaith the Donatiſt, eſt diverſa ſequentium ſecta, ſchiſma eadem ſequentium ſeparatio: An hereſie is a ſect of thoſe that follow other opinions, a ſchiſme is a ſeparation of thoſe which are of one opinion. No, ſaith Auguſtine, Nulla ſciſſio, vel ſchiſma eſt niſi diverſum ſequantur: There is no ſchiſme, unleſſe they follow divers opinions. And that ſaying of S. Hierome is allowed in your owne decrees, Nullum ſchiſma, non aliquam ſibi confingit hæreſim: There is no ſchiſme, which doth not invent ſome new hereſie: decr. par. 2. cauſ. 24. qu. 3. c. 26. For although a ſchiſmatike ſhould bee of the ſame judgement in all other things, yet herein he faileth in ſound doctrine, in that he thinketh it lawfull, to divide himſelfe from the Church: yet the Jeſuite ſhall never be able to ſhew me ſuch a ſchiſmatike, which did not beſide his ſeparation, hold ſome doctrine contrarie to the Catholike truth. And further we ſay, that ſchiſmatikes, though they hold ſome falſe points of doctrine, yet if their errors bee not fundamentall, and if they retaine the puritie of doctrine in all points neceſſarie to ſalvation, and the right adminiſtration of the Sacraments, may make a particular Church by themſelves, though they are no part of that viſible Church, from the which they are divided by ſchiſme. And here to this purpoſe I will remember a wiſe reſolution of Atticus Patriarke of Conſtantinople, next but one after Chryſoſtome, who being verie auſtere toward other heretikes, yet ſeemed to favour the Novatians, and ſuffered them to have their aſſemblies in the citie: and hereof he uſed to give two reaſons, both becauſe they had ſuffered
Socrates lib. 7. cap. 25. much together with other true Catholikes for the Orthodoxall faith under Conſtantius and Valens, two Arrian Emperours: and for that, although they had divided themſelves from the Church, in fide nihil innovarant, they had innovated nothing concerning faith, &c.

Wherefore we conclude, that whereſoever true and ſound doctrine is taught wholly and in everie
Philip. 1. 18. part, for the matter, though not for the manner, there is the Church: as S. Paul ſaith, So Chriſt bee preached, whether under pretence or ſincerely, I therein rejoyce.

The Proteſtants.

1 FOr the ſufficiencie of theſe notes, we would deſire no better arguments than thoſe which our adverſaries alleaged againſt us: for firſt our notes are proper only to the Church, and cannot be found in any place, where the Church of God is not. Secondly, they are moſt notorious markes, and a man by the Scriptures may more eaſily know what true doctrine is, and which are the right Sacraments, than which is the true Church. Thirdly, theſe markes cannot be abſent from the Church, but doe alwayes accompany it, and it is no longer a true Church, than it hath thoſe markes.

Argum. 2. We are able out of the Scriptures to prove theſe marks, which may ſtand in ſtead of ma-
John 10. 3. Epheſ. 5. 26. ny reaſons. His ſheepe heare his voyce. Cleanſing it by the waſhing of water through the word: Ergo, the Word and Sacraments are true notes of the Church.

Bellarmine anſwereth to the firſt place, that the hearing of the Word, is not a viſible note of the Church, but a ſigne unto everie man, whereby he may know his election. Wee reply againe: which way a man is knowne to be a member of the Church, by the ſame way the Church alſo it ſelfe is diſcerned: if the hearing of the Word doe make one a ſheepe of Chriſt, then doth it alſo ſhew which is the flocke and fold of Chriſt: As I know my hand or foot to bee a part of my body, becauſe it hath life and motion of the body; even ſo the body is diſcerned from a carcaſe, becauſe it moveth and liveth.

To the ſecond place he anſwereth verie ſimply: that the Apoſtle there ſheweth not, which is the Church, but what good Chriſt hath wrought for his Church. We reply againe: But the Church is beſt knowne by the benefits that Chriſt hath beſtowed upon it, amongſt the which the Word and the Sacraments are not the leaſt: Ergo by theſe the Church is knowne, and in that place by the Apoſtle deſcribed: and let the Reader judge, whether that place of the Apoſtle, where there is direct mention made of the Word and Sacraments, be not fitly applyed to our purpoſe, concerning the deſcription of the Church.

Argum. 3. Looke how Chriſt is knowne, ſo is his Church: but Chriſt is knowne onely by the Scriptures, as he himſelfe ſaith, Search the Scriptures, for they doe teſtifie of me: Ergo, the true Church is to be knowne by the Scriptures: The word of God therefore is an infallible note of the Church, argum. Bradford. epiſt. ad Cantabrigienſ. This argument alſo uſeth D. Ridley Martyr, alleaging a place out of Chryſoſtome to this ſenſe: In times paſt there were many waies to know the Church of Chriſt by, as by good life, chaſtitie, miracles, &c. but now theſe things are common to heretikes: and therefore the true Church is now to be knowne, tantummodo per Scripturas, only by the Scriptures: Hom. 49. in Mat. in oper. imperf.

S. Auguſtine alſo ſaith, In Scripturis didicimus Chriſtum, in Scripturis didicimus Eccleſiam, Epiſtol. 166. In the Scripture we doe learne Chriſt, in the Scripture let us likewiſe learne the Church, &c. His argument is the ſame that here we have uſed. Looke how Chriſt is knowne, ſo is his Church: but Chriſt is onely knowne by his word: Ergo, ſo is his Church.

Now let us adde the ſeale and ſtamp, which the holy Martyrs have ſigned this doctrine with, in their bloud. Richard Feurus Martyr, who ſuffered at Lions for the truth, anno 1554. ſaith, that the Church of God is onely to bee knowne by the word of God, and the right inſtitution of the Sacraments, Fox pag. 912. Fredericke Danvile Martyr at Paris, being asked whether theſe two were the notes of the Church, anſwered, That doe I beleeve, and therein will I live and die, Fox pag. 922. col. 2. See the confeſſion alſo of Thomas Benet Martyr, pag. 1039. col. 2. Of George Marſh Martyr 1565. col. 2. Of Bartlet Greene Martyr: The true marks of Chriſts Church, ſaith he, is the true preaching of his word, and miniſterie of the Sacraments, pag. 1852. col. 2. All theſe with many others adventured their lives, dying in the faith of that Church, which was knowne by thoſe two infallible notes. Let the Papiſts bring forth any that druſt doe the like for their univerſalitie, antiquitie, and the like.

Let us ſee what teſtimonies other Churches will afford us. 1 The Greeke Church hold the Scriptures ſufficient to lead into all truth: as Ieremie Oecumenicall Patriarke ſaith: Let theſe things ſuffice you, moſt deare brethren, which (as you ſee) doe beſt of all accord and agree with the Scriptures, &c. for feare that being once drawne, or led out of the way of Evangelicall doctrine, wee erre: they thus holding, muſt needs take that to be the Church, where the pure word is taught and profeſſed, as preſcribing all things neceſſarie to ſalvation. 2 The ſame is the faith of the Abyſſines and Æthiopike Church, that the Scriptures are ſufficient to ſalvation, without thoſe other bookes which they call Manda and Abetilis, whereof they make great account, and they deny not the name of true Chriſtians to thoſe that have not thoſe bookes: they hold them to bee true Chriſtians that beleeve the Scriptures, and all things therein contained.

3 This is the generall conſent of the reformed Churches, that the true Church of God is diſcerned by the preaching of the word, and the right uſe of the Sacraments. 4 We want not here the conſent of our adverſaries: Stapleton ſaith, that the preaching of the Goſpell is a verie cleere note of the Catholike Church, ſo it be done by lawfull Miniſters. The Synod of Colen determineth, that the Evangelicall doctrine, præcipuam Eccleſiæ notam, is the chiefe note of the Church: ſo alſo Interrelig. Cæſare. c. 10. Sunt Eccleſiæ veræ notæ, doctrina ſana & ſacramentorum uſus, quibus à Iudæorum & Ethnicorum cœtibus Eccleſia disjungitur, quorum utrique & ſana doctrina, & ſacramentis novi teſtamenti carent: The true notes of the Church are ſound doctrine, and the right uſe of the Sacraments, by the which the Church is diſtinguiſhed from the Jewiſh and heatheniſh aſſemblies, which neither have ſound doctrine, nor the Sacraments of the new Teſtament.

Princip. doctrin. lib. 1. cap. 22.
Enchirid. in Synod. Coloniens. pag. 22.

The fourth Queſtion, Of the authoritie of the Church.

THe Papiſts affirme, that the authoritie of the Church conſiſteth in theſe five points. Firſt, in authorizing the Scriptures, and defining which are Canonicall. Secondly, in giving the ſenſe of the Scripture. Thirdly, in determining matters beſide Scripture. Fourthly, in making lawes and conſtitutions for the Church. Fifthly, in exerciſing of diſcipline.

Act.15. 1 Cor.5.4. Concerning the two laſt, we doe not greatly ſtand with them. We acknowledge the Church hath authoritie to make decrees and conſtitutions, but ſo as the Apoſtles did: Viſum eſt nobis & ſpiritui ſancto, It ſeemeth good to us and the Holy Ghoſt: the Church muſt bee directed by the wiſdome of the Spirit ſpeaking in the Scriptures.

We alſo acknowledge the wholſome power of the Church in exerciſing of holy diſcipline: but it muſt be done in the name and power of Chriſt, not according to the will of men.

Concerning the two firſt: we have already ſhewed, that neither the Church doth give authoritie to the word of God, but doth take her authoritie from them: for the Scriptures are of ſufficient credit of themſelves, 1. controv. quaſt. 4. neither that the ſenſe of Scripture dependeth upon the interpretation of the Scripture, but that the Word expoundeth it ſelfe, 1. controv. quaſt. 6.

There remaineth therefore only one point to be diſcuſſed of the authoritie of the Church: namely, in deciding of matters beſide the Scriptures: which are of two ſorts, either neceſſarie, appertaining to faith, or indifferent concerning ceremonies: of both theſe in their order.

The firſt part, whether the Church hath authoritie in matters of faith beſide the Scriptures.

The Papiſts.

24. Error. WE ought to take our faith, and all neceſſarie things of ſalvation at the hands of our ſuperiors, Rhemiſt. Act. 10. ſect. 8. In points not decided by Scripture wee muſt aske counſell of the Church, Præfat. ſect. 25. The Church is the onely pillar and ſtay to leane unto in all doubts of doctrine, without the which there can be no certaintie nor ſecuritie: wee muſt therefore beleeve it and truſt it in all things, Annot. 1 Timoth. cap. 3 ſect. 9. Yea it hath authoritie, ſay they, to make new articles of faith: as in the Councell of Conſtance it was decreed to be neceſſarie to ſalvation, to beleeve the Pope to be head of the Church. In the Councell of Baſile it was made an article of the faith, to beleeve that the Councell was above the Pope; and therefore Pope Eugenius in not obeying the Councell was adjudged to be an heretike. Rhemiſt. 1. Tim. 3 9.

Ioh.15.27. Argum. 1. Upon theſe words in the Goſpell, Ioh. 15. 27. the ſpirit ſhall teſtifie of mee, and you ſhall beare witneſſe alſo: they conclude thus: Ergo, the teſtimony of the truth joyntly conſiſteth in the Holy Ghoſt and Prelates of the Church, Rhemiſt. Ioh. 15. ſect. 8.

Wee anſwer: the witneſſe of the Spirit, and of the Apoſtles, is all one witneſſe: for the Spirit firſt teſtifieth the truth to the Apoſtles inwardly, and the Apoſtles inſpired by the Spirit did witneſſe it outwardly: ſo the Paſtors of the Church witneſſing with the Spirit, which is not now inſpired by revelation, but onely found in the Scriptures, are to be heard: but if the Spirit teſtifie one thing in the word, and they teſtifie another, there we muſt leave them.

Argum. 2. The Church erreth not: Ergo, we muſt heare her in all things, Rhemiſt. 1 Timoth. 3. ſect. 9. We anſwer, firſt, the Church may erre, if ſhe follow not the Scriptures, proved before, 2. Controv. quaſt. 2. Secondly, ſo long as the Church heareth Chriſts voice, we are likewiſe to heare hers: and ſo long as ſhe is preſerved from errour, ſhe will not ſwerve from Chriſts precepts, neither impoſe any thing upon her children, without the warrant of her ſpouſe.

Argum. 3. Thou canſt prove nothing by Scripture, it is dead, it muſt have a lively Expoſitor: Ergo, the Scripture ought not to be judge in matters of faith, but the Church. Wincheſt. pag. 1486. Anſwer. The Scripture is alive and not dead, as you ſay, Reſponſ. Roger. Mart. ibid.

Pag.1350.2.2. Object. All heretikes have alleaged Scriptures, therefore we muſt have a lively Expoſitor for them, Worceſt. ibid. Anſwer. Yea, it is true, all heretikes have alleaged Scriptures, but they were confuted by Scripture, and by no other Expoſitor, Reſponſ. Roger. Mart. ibid. Pag 1350.2.5.

Object. The letter killeth, but the Spirit giveth life: Ergo, the Scriptures which are the letter cannot judge, ſic Boner pag. 1807. col. 1. Anſwer. Saint Paul meaneth not, that the word of God in it ſelfe killeth, which is the word of life, but that the word is unprofitable, and killeth him that is voyd of the Spirit of God: and therefore the Apoſtle ſaith, that the Goſpell was to ſome the ſavour of life to life, and to ſome the ſavour of death, &c. Reſponſ. Philpot. Mart. ibid. Pag.1640.2.50.

Object. The word cannot be judge of the word: Ergo, there muſt be another judge beſide, Arg. Stori pag. 1805. col. 1. Anſwer. Our Saviour Chriſt ſaith, Verbum quod locutus ſum, judicabit in noviſſimo die. The word that I have ſpoken ſhall judge at the laſt day: If the word ſhall judge at the laſt day, much more it ought to judge our doings now, Reſponſ. Philpot. Mart. ibid. Pag.1638.2.60.

The Proteſtants.

THat the Church hath no ſuch power to ordaine articles of faith, or impoſe matters to be beleeved neceſſarie to ſalvation, not contained or preſcribed in the holy Scriptures: we prove it thus, and we are ſure, that the true Church of Chriſt will never challenge any ſuch prerogative.

Argum. 1. All truths and verities in the Scriptures are not ſo neceſſarie to ſalvation, that the ignorance thereof ſhould bring perill of damnation: Ergo, much leſſe are any verities out of Scripture of any ſuch neceſſitie; the firſt is manifeſt: for to know the juſt Chronologie of time or ſpace of yeeres, from the beginning of the world to Chriſt, is a veritie in Scripture, yet not neceſſarie, ſo to beleeve that Mary continued a virgin ever after the birth of our Lord, was thought by Baſil to bee no neceſſarie point to ſalvation, if wee did hold her to have been a virgin afore : and many ſuch other points there are in Scriptures which a man may be ignorant of without perill of ſalvation; Ergo, much more may wee bee ignorant of unwritten verities, or rather Popiſh fables. For it is not like that the Scriptures doe abundare in ſuperfluis, abound in ſuperfluous things, that be not neceſſarie to ſalvation, & deficere non neceſſariis, and be wanting in neceſſarie.

Argum. 2. The Church hath no more authorite than the Apoſtles, nor yet in all things ſo much: but they had no power to make articles of faith : for S. Paul delivereth that which hee had received concerning the Sacrament, hee durſt not adde unto it, as the Papiſts have beene bold to doe ſince, 1 Cor. 11. Upon which place S. Ambroſe thus writeth : indignum dicit domino, qui aliter myſterium celebrat, quàm ab eo traditum eſt: non enim poteſt devotus eſſe, qui aliter præſumit, quàm datum eſt ab authore : The Apoſtle ſaith, hee is unworthie of the Lord, which doth celebrate the myſterie otherwiſe than it was by him delivered : for he hath no true devotion, which preſumeth to doe otherwiſe than the author preſcribed: Ergo, the Church may explane and open articles of faith out of the Scriptures, but not make new. Heare of this matter alſo a writer, whom ye will not refuſe: Vincentius Lirinenſis upon theſe words, 1 Timoth. 6. 20. O Timothie, Keepe that which is committed unto thee : Intelligatur te exponente illuſtrius, quod antè obſcurius credebatur : eadem tamen, quæ didiciſti, doce, ut cùm dicas novè non dicas nova : Let that bee underſtood more cleerely by thy expoſition, which was obſcurely beleeved before : yet teach none other things than thou haſt learned, that though you ſpeak them after a new manner, yet utter no new things. If Timothie then was to bring in no new thing, but only to explaine the old, how much leſſe the Paſtors of the Church now ?

1 Tim. 6. 20.

Argum. 3. Wee prove it by the confeſſion of our adverſaries. The fathers of Baſile, that concluded, it was an article of the Chriſtian faith to beleeve the ſuperioritie of the Councell, did gather it out of the ſaying of Chriſt, dic eccleſiæ, and therfore enforced it as an article. Whereby wee gather, that they held, that the Church could eſtabliſh no article of faith without Scripture. Bellarmine likewiſe ſaith, that the Church is not now governed by new revelations, but we ought to bee contented with thoſe decrees, which wee have received from the Apoſtles : Ergo, as Doctor Whitakers doth ſtrongly conclude, the Church cannot coyne new articles of faith.

Fox, pag 677.

Controverſ. de Script. quæſt. 6. cap 4.

Argum. 4. If the Scriptures doe teach all neceſſarie points both concerning faith and manners, then hath the Church no authoritie to eſtabliſh other articles of faith beſide: but the firſt is true : for the Apoſtle ſaith, that the Scriptures are able to make a man perfect to every good worke: but where perfection is, there is nothing wanting, 2 Timoth. 3. 17. Ergo, the Church hath no ſuch power: ſee more of this, controv. 1. quæſt. 7. part. 2.

2 Tim. 3. 17.

Laſtly, wee have before proved at large out of the word of God, that the Scriptures containe all things neceſſarie to ſalvation: and therefore all articles of faith muſt be derived from thence, 1. cont. quæſt. 7. And ſo wee conclude with Auguſtine: Lingua ſonos, quibus inter ſe homines ſua ſenſa communicent, pacto quodam ſocietatis ſibi inſtituere poſſunt : Quibus autem ſacris divinitati congruerent voluntatem Dei ſequuti ſunt, qui recte ſapuerunt : Quæ omnino nunquam defuit ad ſalutem juſtitiæ pietatique hominum : Men, ſaith he, may deviſe among themſelves what language they will uſe to expreſſe their mind : but how to ſerve God, wiſe men ever followed the will and commandement of God, which was never wanting to men unto ſalvation matters concerning righteouſneſſe and goodlineſſe, &c. By this Fathers ſentence, the Scriptures which containe the will of God, containe all neceſſarie things. Ergo, we need not ſeeke elſewhere.

Epiſtol. 49. quæſt. 2.

This truth is ſealed by the confeſſion and glorious witneſſe of the holy Martyrs, that the holy Scriptures being written by the inſpiration of the holy Ghoſt, are the very true word of God, and therefore to be heard accordingly, as the Judge in all controverſies and matters of religion : this was the confeſſion of the holy Martyrs ſet forth anno 1554. ſubſcribed by Iohn Hooper, Iohn Rogers, Rowland Taylor, Iohn Philpot, Iohn Bradford, Laurence Saunders, and others, Fox, pag. 1470. col. 2. 1471. col. 1.

Laſtly, we have the authority of their owne Councels, Concil. Baſilienſ. epiſtol. ſynodal. Pope Urbane is alleaged thus writing: Sciendum eſt quia inde Romanus pontifex novas leges condere poteſt, unde Evangeliſtæ nequaquam aliquid dixerunt, &c. Know this, that the Biſhop of Rome hath authoritie in this caſe to make new lawes, where the Evangeliſts and Scriptures are ſilent, &c. But the Scriptures are not ſilent in any point concerning faith and manners. See the Councell of Cavilon. can. 67. cited before controv. 1. quæſt. 7. part. 2. argum. 3. Ergo, neither the Church or Pope hath authoritie herein to make new lawes. And laſtly I will produce one of your owne Popes teſtimonies, Iohn 22. extrav. tit. 14. c. 5. verſus finem. Articuli fidei in ſymbolis continentur, &c. articuli fidei habent per ſcripturam probari: The articles of faith are contained in the Symbols or Creeds. Againe, the articles of faith muſt bee proved by Scripture. Ergo, the Church can make no new article of faith : but is bound to receive thoſe contained in the Creed, and proved out of the Scriptures. Likewiſe Concil. Ferrariæ ſeſſ. 9. Beſſarion thus ſaith, Sciatis addendi ſymbolo facultatem, non ſolùm Romanæ, verùm univerſali Eccleſiæ, generalique ſynodo interdictam eſſe: Know yee that to adde to the Creed, not onely the Romane, but the univerſall Church and generall Synod hath no authoritie.

He ſheweth that the Paſtors of the Church have no authoritie to excogitate new points of doctrine, but they muſt keepe that which is delivered unto them out of the Scripture: Bellarmine alſo himſelfe calleth the Scripture, regulam fidei certam, A ſure rule of the faith.

An Appendix or Member of this part of the Queſtion,

Whether we are to beleeve in the Church.

The Papiſts.

25. Error.

WE ought to beleeve and truſt the Church in all things: yea to beleeve in the Church, Rhemiſt. 1 Tim. 3. ſect. 9. the Scripture alſo uſeth this ſpeech, to beleeve in men, Annot. in 10. Rom. 1. ſect. 41.

Exod. 14. 31.

Argum. 1. Exod. 14. 31. they beleeved in God and Moſes. Ergo, Wee anſwer. Your owne vulgar text hath it, crediderunt Deo & Moſi ſervo ejus: they beleeved God and his ſervant Moſes: that is, having ſeene the great power of God in the deſtruction of the Egyptians in the red ſea, according to the word of Moſes, they gave credit unto Moſes, which ſpake unto them from God.

Philem. v. 5.

Argum. 2. Philem. verſ. 5. Hearing of thy love and faith which thou haſt toward the Lord Ieſus and unto all the Saints: See, ſay they, here is faith toward the Saints.

Wee anſwer: there is no man that is not perverſly diſpoſed, but may eaſily diſtinguiſh the Apoſtles words; to attribute faith to Jeſus Chriſt, and love to the Saints: which may appeare by the altering of the prepoſition, as they themſelves read in their owne tranſlation, love and faith in Jeſus Chriſt, and toward the Saints: ſo it muſt needs bee thus underſtood, faith in Chriſt, and love toward the Saints: this therefore is but a ſophiſticall cavill.

The Proteſtants.

THis word, Credo, beleeve, is taken three wayes: for there is credere Deo, to beleeve God, that is, to truſt him in all things, credere Deum, to beleeve God to be, credere in Deum, to beleeve in God, as our Creator, Lord, and Redeemer. So we doe credere Eccleſiam, we beleeve there is one holy Catholike Church: credere Eccleſiæ, we doe alſo beleeve and give credence to the Church, following the word of God: But we doe not in any wiſe credere in Eccleſiam, beleeve in the Church.

John 14. 1.

Argum. 1. We muſt not beleeve or put any confidence in a creature: the Church is but a creature: Ergo, for to beleeve in God is only proper to the Godhead: and therefore Ioh. 14. 1. where Chriſt ſaith, ye beleeve in God, beleeve alſo in me: we doe neceſſarily out of theſe words inferre that Chriſt is God, becauſe we are commanded to beleeve in him.

Argum. 2. Faith is of things that are abſent and not ſeene: but the Church is preſent alwayes upon earth, and alwayes viſible, as our adverſaries hold: how then can it be an object of our faith? We cannot beleeve in that which is viſible and ſeene, for it is againſt the nature of faith.

Ierem. 17. 3.

Tom. 3. diſput. 1. qu. 1. punct. 1.

Thom. 2. 2. q. 1. act. 10.

2. 2. qu. 11. ar. 2.

Argum. 3. The Prophet ſaith, curſed is the man that truſteth in man: but they which beleeve in the Church truſt in man: for they make the Church to be nothing elſe in the end, but the Pope himſelfe: as Gregor. de Valent. by the Church we meane her head, that is to ſay, the Romane Biſhop: and Thomas, the making of a new Creed belongeth to the Pope, as all other things doe which belong to the whole Church: yea, the whole authoritie of the Church abideth in him.

Auguſtine ſaith, Sciendum eſt quod Eccleſiam credere, non tamen in Eccleſiam credere debemus, quia Eccleſia non eſt Deus ſed domus Dei: de tempore ſerm. 131. We muſt know that we are to beleeve there is a Church, not in the Church, for the Church is not God, but only the houſe of God. Your owne decrees alſo doe approve that ſaying of S. Auguſtine, Hom. 3. ad Neophytos, decr. par. 3. diſt. 4. c. 73. Non quomodo in Deum credimus, ſic in Eccleſiam ſanctam catholicam, quæ propterea ſancta & catholica litea eſt, quia certè credit in Deum: Non ergo diximus ut in Eccleſiam quaſi in Deum crederetis, ſed ut in Eccleſia ſancta converſantis in Deum crederetis, &c. As we beleeve in God, ſo we doe not beleeve in the Church; which is therefore holy, becauſe it beleeveth aright in God: therefore wee ſaid not, you muſt beleeve in the Church as in God, but that having your converſation in the Church, you ſhould beleeve in God, &c From whence we reaſon thus: that which beleeveth upon another, is not to bee beleeved upon; but the Church beleeveth upon God: Ergo, the reaſon of the propoſition is this, becauſe faith and beliefe is the laſt refuge of a Chriſtian; but beyond our beliefe in the Church there ſhould be another beliefe in God. And againe, there is but one and the ſelfe ſame object of faith: but now ſhould there be divers, God the object of the Churches faith, and the Church the object of our faith.

For the confeſſion of this truth, that we ought to truſt onely in God, and not in men, and that we are bound no further to beleeve the decrees of the Church, than they are agreeable to the Scriptures: two conſtant Martyrs, H. Voes, and Iohn Eſch, gave their lives at *Bruxelles, an.*1523. *Fox pag.*874. Pag.798.2.60.

Laſtly, let us ſee the judgement of other Churches. 1 The Greeke Church doth hold all the ſayings, ſtatutes, writings, canons, and determinations of the Church of Rome to be nothing: ſo farre are they from giving credit or beleeving their Church. Sacranus de relig. Ruth.c.2.

2 And Zaga-zabo an Æthiopian Biſhop, confeſſed, that their Biſhops neither of themſelves nor in Councell could make any lawes, whereunto any man ſhould be bound under paine of mortall ſinne: ſo farre are they alſo from requiring any confidence, or beliefe to be repoſed in the Church. Damianus a Goes de legat. Indor.

3 Adde hereunto the judgement of the reformed Churches: as of *Auſpurge artic.*7. who allow that ſaying of Auguſtine, Neither muſt we ſubſcribe to Catholike Biſhops, if they chance to erre, or hold opinions, which be againſt the Scriptures. Harm.ſect.11. p.366.

4 Some of their owne Doctors are for us: as Thomas, Our faith reſteth and ſtayeth it ſelfe upon the revelation, given to the Apoſtles and Prophets which writ the canonicall bookes, and not upon revelation, if any ſuch have been made to other Doctors: Alliaco ſaith, Ad ſcripturas fit ultima reſolutio Theologici diſcurſus, &c. Unto the Scriptures is the laſt reſolution of Theologicall diſcourſe: but that onely muſt be the object of our faith and beliefe, which is the laſt refuge and reſolution. Thom 1.qu.1. art.8. 1.Senten. qu.1. art.3.1. Coroll.

The Second part of the Queſtion, concerning the ceremonies of the Church.

The Papiſts.

THey doe hold that the Church of God may uſe and bleſſe divers elements and creatures for the ſervice of God: as holy water to drive away devils: the hallowing of ſalt, wax, fire, palmes, aſhes, oyle, creame, milke, honey, *Rhemiſt.*1 *Tim.*4. *ſect.*12. & 13. Yea that the Church may borrow rites and ceremonies of the Jewes: *ibid. ſect.*18. Yea by the creatures thus bleſſed, or rather conjured, they ſay, remiſſion of ſinnes is obtained, *ſect.*14. 26.Error.

*Argum.*1. Remiſſion of ſinnes was annexed to the oyle wherewith the ſicke were annointed, Iam. 5. Ergo, remiſſion of ſinnes may be applied by the like conſecrated elements, Rhemiſt. 1. *Tim.*4. *ſect.*14. Iam.5.14.

We anſwer: Firſt, it followeth not becauſe the creature of oyle was uſed in the miraculous gift of healing, and by the appointment of Chriſt (which ceremonie alſo was no longer to continue than that miraculous gift endured) it followeth not that other elements may be uſed ſo now without any ſuch warrant, and there being not the like occaſion, ſeeing all ſuch miraculous gifts are now ceaſed. Secondly, it was not the oyle whereby their ſinnes were forgiven them, neither was it applied to that end, it was onely a pledge unto them of their bodily health: but the prayer of faith ſhall ſave the ſicke, ſaith the Apoſtle, *verſ.*15. for God hath promiſed to heare the faithfull prayers of his children both for themſelves and others.

*Argum.*2. S. Paul uſed impoſition of hands, which was a ceremonie of the law uſed in conſecrating of Prieſts: Ergo, it is lawfull to borrow ceremonies of the Jewes.

We anſwer: It followeth not, becauſe Chriſt and the Apoſtles by the ſpirit of God retained ſome decent actions uſed in the law, therefore now the Church at her libertie may take of the Jewiſh ceremonies: this is great preſumption to thinke it is lawfull for the Church to doe whatſoever Chriſt and his Apoſtles did.

*Argum.*3. They would warrant their ſuperſtitious ceremonies by S. Pauls example, how napkins and partlets went from his body, and they received health thereby: and the woman that came behind Chriſt, and touched the hemme of his veſture, was healed of her diſeaſe, by that ceremonie, argum. Fecknami.

Anſw. Concerning the firſt example, the text ſaith, God wrought no ſmall miracles by the hand of *Paul Act.*19.12. It was God therefore that wrought, not theſe ceremonies. And for the other, Chriſt ſaith, vertue is gone out of me: it was not then his veſture that healed the woman, but the vertue: and therefore our Saviour himſelfe ſaith, goe thy way, thy faith hath made thee whole, *reſponſ. Thom. Haukes. Mart. pag.*1588. *col.*2. Act.19.12. Pag.1443.1.50.

The Proteſtants

ALthough there be great moderation to be uſed in the ceremonies of the Church, and there is alſo ſome limitation for them: yet hath the Church greater libertie in the rites and ceremonies, which are appointed for order and comelineſſe ſake, than in the doctrine of faith and religion. The doctrine of ſalvation is alwaies the ſame and cannot be changed, and toucheth the conſcience: but rites and ceremonies are externall and commanded for orders ſake: and neither are they univerſall, the ſame in every Church, nor perpetuall, but are changed according to times, and as there is occaſion. Againe, the precepts of Chriſtianitie are either directly expreſſed, or neceſſarily concluded out of the Scriptures: but externall rites and ceremonies are not particularly declared in the world: there are onely certaine generall rules ſet downe, according to the which all ceremonies brought into the Church, are to be examined: As for the Sacraments of the Church, they cannot be altered, having a perpetuall commandement from Chriſt: Therefore the Church cannot appoint, what, how many ceremonies ſoever ſhe ſhall thinke good, but according to theſe foure rules and conditions, which follow here in order.

1 Cor.10.31. 1 All things ought to be done to the glorie of God, even in civill actions, much more in things appertaining to the ſervice of God. Our adverſaries offend againſt this rule, applying and annexing remiſſion of ſinnes to their owne inventions and ſuperſtitious ceremonies, as unto penance and extreme Unction, which they alſo make Sacraments: for this is greatly derogatorie to Chriſts inſtitution, who hath onely appointed the hearing of his word, and uſe of the Sacraments, for the begetting and encreaſing of faith, and by this faith onely is the death of Chriſt applied unto us for the remiſſion of ſinnes.

1 Cor.14.40. 2 All things ought to be done orderly and decently: Wherefore all ridiculous light and unprofitable ceremonies are to be aboliſhed: ſuch our adverſaries have many, as knocking, kneeling, creeping to the Croſſe, lighting candles at noone day, turning over of beades, and many phantaſticall geſtures they have in their Idolatrous Maſſe. as turning, retorning, looking to the Eaſt, to the Weſt: croſſing, lifting, quaffing, and ſhewing the emptie cup, with many ſuch toyes.

1 Cor.10.32. 3 All things ought to be done without offence. But to whom, that hath but a little feeling of religion, is not the abominable ſacrifice of the Maſſe offenſive? what good conſcience doth it not grieve that the Prieſt ſhould create his maker, as they ſay? ſhould offer up the body of Chriſt in ſacrifice, and be an interceſſour as it were for his mediator, deſiring God to accept the ſacrifice of his ſonnes body? as alſo to make it a propitiatorie ſacrifice for the quicke and the dead? But of theſe matters we ſhall have fitter occaſion to entreate afterward, when we come to the ſeverall controverſies.

1 Cor.14 12. 4 All things ought to bee done to edifying: But the Popiſh ceremonies are ſo farre from edifying, that by reaſon of their infinite rabble and number, they are a clogge unto Chriſtians, and more burdenſome than were the obſervations of the Jewes: They have hallowed fire, water, bread, aſhes, oyle, wax, flowers, branches, clay, ſpettle, ſalte, incenſe, balme, chalices, paxes, pixes, altars, corporals, ſuperaltars, altarclothes, rings, ſwords, and an infinite company beſides: doe theſe tend (thinke you) to the edification of the minde? Nay, they doe cleane deſtroy and extinguiſh all ſpirituall and internall motions, drawing the heart from the ſpirituall worſhip of God, to externall beggerly and ragged reliques and ceremonies, Fulk. 1. Timoth. 4. ſect. 1. Beza lib. confeſſ. de Eccleſ. articul. 18. 19. 20.

Gloſſ. ordin. de 4. Concil. primitive eccleſ. Let us ſee the conſent of antiquitie concerning ceremonies: Modus colendi deum per externos ritus, & ceromonias legis, quia hac fuerunt umbra Chriſti & myſteriorum ejus, ideo adveniente veritate Evangelica evanuerunt, & illicita facta ſunt: The manner of worſhipping God by externall rites and ceremonies of the law, becauſe they were a ſhadow of Chriſt, and of his myſteries, are now by the comming of the Evangelicall truth aboliſhed and made unlawfull.

But ſuch Jewiſh ceremonies many yet are retained in the Popiſh Church, Colonienſ. part. 9. cap. 16. Quicquid in hujuſmodi rebus ad abuſum & ſuperſtitionem ſpectat, & quo populus à Deo ad collocandum in externis rebus fiduciam, abduci poſſit, probibemus: Whatſoever in ceremonies tendeth to abuſe and ſuperſtition, and may withdraw the people from God to truſt in externall things, we forbid, &c. But that ſuch Jewiſh ceremonies are not to be retayned in the Church, neither that it is lawfull after the example of the Jewes to inſtitute the like ceremonies in Chriſts Church; heare further the teſtimonie of one of your owne Popes: Innocent. 3. decr. Gregor lib. 3. tit. 47. c. 1. Poſtquam umbra legis evanuit, & illuxit veritas Evangelii, ſi mulieres poſt prolem emiſſam actura gratias Eccleſiam intrare voluerunt, eis Eccleſiarum non denegandus eſt ingreſſus: After that the ſhadow of the law is vaniſhed, and the truth of the Goſpell hath appeared, if women after their deliverance will enter the Church to give thankes, it muſt not bee denied unto them, &c. But by the law, women could not, but after a certaine time enter into the temple: wherefore as in this ceremonie Moſes law bindeth not, ſo neither in the reſt. And to this purpoſe may be applied that rule in the Civill law; Cod. lib. 7. tit. 6. leg. 1. Juſtinian. Abſurdum eſt ipſa origine rei ſublata, ejus imaginem relinqui: It is an abſurd thing, the originall being removed, for the image or ſhadow to bee retained, &c. But the ceremoniall law of the Jewes is removed, and therefore there ought not ſo much as a ſhadow thereof to remaine. Unto theſe we will adjoyne the reaſons & judgement of the holy Martyrs concerning Popiſh ceremonies. Theſe orders of the Church are moſt pure, which doe come moſt nigh the example of the Primitive Church:

ſo doe not the orders of the Popiſh Church, but are furtheſt off from it: Ergo, they are unpure, argum. Laurent. Saund. Mart. p. 1494.

Boner anſwered, that the propoſition was falſe: for the Church was then in her infancie, and could not abide that perfection, which afterward was to bee furniſhed with ceremonies: Saunders replieth, that ceremonies were invented at the firſt, for the rude infancie and weake infirmitie of man; and therefore it was a token of greater perfection in the primitive Church, that it had few ceremonies, and of the rudeneſſe of the Papiſticall Church, becauſe it had ſo many ceremonies, partly blaſphemous, partly unſavory and unprofitable, ibid. And it is too too abſurd, to think the ſtate of any Church more pure, than the Primitive under the Apoſtles: as Gregor. Nazianzen. ad Gregor. Nyſſen. ut 3. Sanctorum patrem conſtitutiones, qui proximiores fuere Chriſto, agnoſcamus: Let us receive the conſtitutions of the Fathers, as they come nearer to Chriſt. So then as the waters neareſt the fountaines are cleareſt, ſo the times next to Chriſt pureſt.

Iohn Fortune Martyr alleaged this place of Scripture againſt Popiſh ceremonies: All things that are not planted by my heavenly father ſhall be plucked up by the rootes: So ſaith our Saviour, but ſuch are Popiſh ceremonies: Ergo. Object. Nay they are good and godly, neceſſarie to bee uſed. Anſwer. But S. Paul calleth them weake and beggerly, and ſaith, they are bewitched that ſeeke to bee in bondage unto them, Galath. 4.9. Fox pag. 1918. col. 2.

The First Queſton, whether the Church of Rome be the true Church.

THis queſtion hath to parts. Firſt, whether the Roman Church be the Catholike Church or not. Secondly, wether the Church of Rome be a true viſible Church.

The Firſt part, whether the Roman Church be the Catholike Church.

The Papiſts.

BEllarmine defining the Church, maketh this one part of the definition to bee ſubject unto the Biſhope of Romes juriſdiction, lib. 3. de eccleſ. cap. 2. And therefore they conclude, that they are out of the Church and no better than heretikes, that doe not acknowledge the Pope to bee their chiefe Paſtor, Caniſ. de pracept. eccleſ. cap. 9. So they make the Roman faith, and Catholike, to be all one: Rhemiſt. annot. in 1. Rom. ſect. 5.

27. Error.

Their reaſons are none other, than we have ſeene before, taken from univerſalitie, antiquitie, unitie, unto the which we have alreadie anſwered, quaeſt. 3. of this controverſie, Not. 1. 2. 3.

The Proteſtants.

WHile the Church of Rome continued in the doctrine of the Apoſtles, it was a notable and famous viſible Church, and a principall part and member of the univerſall Catholike: but now ſince it is degenerate and fallen away from the Apoſtolike faith, from being the houſe of God, to be a Synagogue for Antichriſt, we take it not to be ſo much as a true viſible Church. But never was it to be counted the Catholike Church, as though all other Churches were parts and members of it: but it ſelfe onely was a part as others, and Catholike too, while it continued in the right faith: but not Catholike as having juriſdiction over the reſt, and all to receive this name of her.

Argum. 1. The univerſall Catholike Church is ſo called, because it containeth the whole number Heb.12.23. of the elect and firſt borne of God, whereof many are now Saints in Heaven, many living in the earth, many yet unborne. But all theſe were not, neither are of the Romane faith: the holy men departed knew not of theſe ſuperſtitious and prodigious uſages, which now doe reigne in the Church of Rome, nay many of them never heard in their life ſo much as of the name of Rome: Ergo.

Argum. 2. It is called Catholike and univerſall, becauſe they that are to be ſaved, muſt belong unto this company, and be of this Church, for without the Church there is no ſalvation: for Chriſt onely Epheſ.5.25. gave himſelfe for his Church to ſanctifie it and cleanſe it: But all that die out of the faith of the Romane Church, doe not periſh. Nay verily, we doubt not to ſay, but that all which depart this life in the communion thereof without repentance, are barred from ſalvation, and die out of grace. You ſay, that who is out of your Church is damned; and we thinke verily on the other ſide, that if we depart from the true Church, whereon wee are graffed in Gods word, wee ſhould ſtand in the ſtate of damnation: ſee Philpot. Mart p. 1800. We are in the right faith: neither will we be our owne Judges, the Scriptures 1 Iohn 4.2. ſhall judge us: Every ſpirit that confeſſeth, that Ieſus Chriſt is come in the fleſh, is of God. We beleeve aright in both the natures and all the offices of Chriſt: which you doe not: which doe greatly deface his propheticall office, in not reverencing his word, but making it imperfect: his kingdome, in appointing him a Vicar and Vicegerent upon earth, as though he of himſelfe were not ſufficient to governe: his Prieſthood, in ſetting up another ſacrifice: Ergo, your ſpirit is not of God.

Argum. 3. The Catholike Church is ſo called, becauſe it embraceth the whole and onely doctrine Epheſ.2.20. of the Prophets and Apoſtles. But the Romane Church receiveth many things contrarie to Scripture, and addeth many things unto it, as it ſhall appeare thorowout this whole diſcourſe. Ergo.

The Catholike Church hath the name, becauſe it is diſperſed over the whole earth, Act. 1.ver.8. But ſo was never the Romane faith, which is now profeſſed, as we have ſhewed before, Quaſt. 3. de Eccleſ. Not. 2. Ergo. And this may further appeare out of S. Auguſtine thus writing to Saint Hierome, Epiſt. 19. If we count it an evill thing to faſt Saturday, we ſhall condemne the Romane Church, &c. but if we count it evill, non jejunare Sabbato, not to faſt Saturday, wee ſhall condemne ſo many Churches of the Eaſt, & majorem orbis Chriſtiani partem, and the greater part of the Chriſtian world: Ergo, the greater part of the Church did not receive the ceremonies of the Roman Church, and ſo conſequently, it cannot be the Catholike Church.

We will adde the teſtimonie of the holy Martyrs: Maſter Philpot reaſoneth thus, the world being divided into three parts, Aſia, Europa, Africa; two parts thereof, Aſia, and Africa, profeſſing Chriſt as well as wee, did never conſent unto the Church of Rome: yea and moſt part of Europa doth not allow the Church of Rome; as Germanie, Denmarke, Poland, a great part of England and Zeland: Ergo, neither your faith nor your Church is univerſall or Catholike, Fox pag. 1804.

He alleageth alſo a ſaying out of Auguſtine, Æſtimamus fidem Catholicam à rebus præteritis, præſentibus & futuris: Wee judge the Catholike faith of that which hath beene, is, and ſhall be: If then you be able to prove that your faith and Church hath been from the beginning taught, is, and ſhall be, then may you count your ſelves Catholike, otherwiſe not.

Iulius Palmer Martyr uſeth this reaſon: your Church of Rome is not univerſall, but a particular Pag.1759.2.70 Church of ſhavelings: Ergo, it is not the Catholike Church, Fox pag. 1939. col. 1.

For this truth alſo with other, George Marſh gave his life, for ſaying that the Church of Rome is Pag.1422.2.60 not the true Catholike Church, Fox p. 1566. col. 1.

1 See alſo for this point your owne authoritie, Baſilienſ. Concil. epiſtol. Synod. 3. Dicimus Romanam ſedem principalem inter alias ſedes; ſed nunquid dum partem laudatis, obliti eſtis totius: nunquid dum unam Eccleſiam extollitis, eam quæ univerſalis eſt, in qua Romana continetur, prætermittitis? Wee grant, that the Roman Sea is the principall among others; but while you commend a part, forget not the whole: Is it reaſon, that while you advance one Church, the univerſall Church, in the which the Romane is comprehended, ſhould be pretermitted?

Againe, in the appendix of the ſame Councell, Romana Eccleſia non eſt univerſa, ſed de univerſitate. The Romane Church is not the univerſall Church, but of the univerſall Church: and Concil. Ferrar. ſeſſ. 9. Romana Eccleſia univerſali Eccleſia inferior eſt: The Roman Church is inferiour to the univerſall Church. By theſe authorities it appeareth, that the Roman Church is one, the univerſall and Catholike another.

2 See alſo to this purpoſe the lawes Imperiall: Cod. lib. 1. tit. 5. l. 15. Leo, Anthemius, Sacroſanctam hujus religioſiſſimæ civitatis Eccleſiam, matrem noſtræ pietatis & Chriſtianorum orthodoxæ religionis omnium, honores jure ante alios reſidendi habere judicamus, &c. The holy Church of this moſt religious Citie (meaning Conſtantinople, where Acatius was then Partiarke, as appeareth in the beginning of the law) the mother of our faith, and of all right beleeving Chriſtians, we doe decree to have this honor to have the firſt place before all other, &c. Here then we have the Conſtantinopolitane Church the mother of the orthodoxall faith every where profeſſed: and ſo by this law the Church of Rome alſo ſhall be a daughter of that Church, and therefore not the mother or univerſall Church it ſelfe.

3 Herein alſo concurreth the South and Ethiopike Church : who preferre the Greeke Church before the Latine, as Alvares reporteth, that Preſter Iohn ſent unto him, to aske why we have divided the Churches of Antioch and Rome, ſeeing that the Church of Antioch was in a manner the chiefeſt untill the Councell of Pope Leo. But the Church of Alexandria, the Patriarke whereof they acknowledge, they preferre before both the other, as is evident in their Liturgie, wherein after the Prince they pray for the chiefe of Alexandria : Theſe are farre off from acknowledging the Roman for the true Catholike Church.

Alvares deſcr. Æthiop c.29.
Liturg. Æthiop.

4 The reformed Churches thus deliver their ſentence : French confeſ. artic. 26. We condemne the Papiſticall aſſemblies, becauſe the pure truth of God is baniſhed from among them. Sweveland, artic. 15. They cannot by any meanes repreſent the Church of Chriſt, &c. which are not Chriſts, and therefore propound no Chriſtian things, but whatſoever is contrarie to the doctrine of Chriſt, &c. Theſe doe not acknowledge the Roman for a true Church, much leſſe for the only Catholike, and herein we have the joynt conſent of all the reformed Churches. See further in the end of the next queſtion.

Harm. ſect. 10. pag. 320.
Ibid. pag. 335.

The ſecond part : the Church of Rome is not a true viſible Church.

The Papiſts.

THeir arguments are as wee have heard, queſt. 3. of the notes of the Church, grounded upon their ſucceſſion, miracles, gift of propheſying : anſwered ſufficiently afore, Note 4.5.6. We need not, nor muſt not for brevities ſake repeat the ſame things often.

18. Error.

The Proteſtants.

WE denie utterly that they are a true viſible Church of Chriſt, but an Antichriſtian Church, and an aſſemblie of heretikes, and enemies to the Goſpell of Jeſus Chriſt.

1 That cannot be a true Church where the word of God is not truly preached, nor the Sacraments rightly adminiſtred according to Chriſts inſtitution : So are they not in the Popes Church : For the word is not ſincerely taught, but they have added many inventions of their owne, and doe preach contrarie Doctrines to the Scripture. The Sacraments alſo they have not kept, for firſt they have augmented the number : they have made five more ; of Confirmation, Orders, Penance, Matrimonie, Extreme unction : beſide, the Sacraments of Chriſt they have corrupted. In Baptiſme, beſide water, they uſe ſpettle, ſalt, oyle, chriſme, contrarie to the inſtitution : and they lay ſuch a neceſſitie upon this Sacrament, that all which die without it, ſay they, are damned. In the Lords Supper, they have turned the Sacrament to a ſacrifice, made an Idoll of bread, changed the Communion into private Maſſes, taken the cup from the lay people, and many other abominations are committed by them : Ergo, neither having the Word, nor Sacraments, according to the inſtitution, they are no true Church.

The propoſition or firſt part of this argument is S. Pauls, Galath. 1.8. He that preacheth otherwiſe than the Apoſtles taught, is accurſed : yea that Church that ſo teacheth is accurſed ; whether it adde to Chriſts doctrine, or detract or take away from it. And Ambroſe of taking away from Chriſts inſtitution thus ſaith : Negat Chriſtum, qui non omnia qua Chriſti ſunt confitetur : He denieth Chriſt, which doth not confeſſe and acknowledge all that Chriſt taught, lib. 6. in Luc. And for adding to the Scripture hee thus teſtifieth, writing upon thoſe words of our Saviour, Be not the ſervants of men, 1 Cor. 7. Servi hominum ſunt, qui humanis ſe ſubjiciunt ſuperſtitionibus : They are the ſervants of men, that ſubmit themſelves to humane ſuperſtitions, &c. If they bee the ſervants of men, they are not the ſervants of Chriſt : ſo S. Paul concludeth, Galath. 1.10. Thus the propoſition is ſtrengthened. But the Popiſh Church doth adde unto the Scriptures, as it is evident in the Sacraments, wherein they uſe many rites beſide Chriſts inſtitution : It doth alſo detract, as in denying mariage to Miniſters, and the cup to the Laitie, both which the Scripture alloweth : Ergo, it is not the true Church.

Galath 1.10.

Argum. 2. They which are enemies to the true Church, and doe perſecute the members thereof are no true viſible Church : they cannot be of that Church which they perſecute ; as Bellarm. ſaith of Paul: how could he be of that Church which he with all his force oppreſſed ? de Eccleſ. lib. 3. cap. 7. But they perſecute the Saints of God, and are moſt cruell towards them, as their conſciences beare them record. Ergo. So ſaith Auguſt. Eſt mundus qui perſequitur, de quo Chriſtus, ſi odit vos mundus, me prius odio habuit : eſt & mundus quem perſequitur; Deus erat in Chriſto mundum reconcilians ſibi : mundus damnatus, quicquid præter eccleſiam, mundus reconciliatus eccleſia : There is a world that perſecuteth, of the which Chriſt ſpeaketh, If the world hate you, it hated me firſt. There is another world which it perſecuteth, of the which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, God was in Chriſt reconciling the world to himſelfe, 2 Cor. 5. the reconciled world is the Church, the damned world beſide the Church : Ergo, by Auguſtines ſentence the perſecuting Church, ſuch as is the Church of Rome, is not the true Church.

And yet more plainly Chryſoſtom, as he is cited by one of your owne writers, Hom. 19. oper. Imperfect. Nunquid ovis lupum perſequitur, non potius lupus ovem, &c. Doth the ſheep perſecute the wolfe, and not rather the woolfe the ſheepe ? the ſheepe eateth herbes, the woolfe devoureth fleſh : he therefore whom thou ſeeſt to feed upon the herbes of Scripture, is a ſheepe : quem in ſanguine perſecutionis gaudentem, lupus : whom to delight in bloody perſecution, he is a woolfe, &c. But who are they which niſie the Scriptures, and only feed of them, as ſufficient to ſalvation ? they are not the Papiſts, who ground their faith upon unwritten traditions, but Proteſtants : They are not then the ſheepe : and they are knowne to bee the moſt bloodie perſecutors of theſe daies : then they are the wolves, and therefore not the Church.

*Argum.*3. The habitation of Antichriſt cannot be the Church of Chriſt ; ſo is theirs : the Pope himſelfe is Antichriſt, for who elſe but he ſitteth in the Temple, being an enemie to Chriſt ? Where have you a citie in the world built upon ſeven hils but Rome ? *Apocal.*17.9. But of this matter wee ſhall of purpoſe intreat afterward : Ergo, they are not a true viſible Church. And that Rome is the ſeat of Antichriſt, it appeareth by their owne confeſſion, who by Babylon underſtand Rome, Rhemiſt, annot. in 1 *Pet.*5.13. and ſo likewiſe *Apocal.*17.*verſ.*5. But Babylon is the ſeat of Antichriſt, and Rome is Babylon : Ergo. They have here commonly two evaſions : firſt, it was called Babylon in reſpect of the perſecuting Emperours, Rhemiſt. Secondly, becauſe that before the end of the world Antichriſt ſhall have his ſeat there, ſic Bellarm. But Saint Hierome in his time doubted not to call Rome Babylon, when as both the Heathen perſecutions were ceaſed, neither yet their Antichriſt, whom they ſay ſhall come, revealed : as thus he writeth, Fugite de medio Babylonis, &c. cecidit Babylon, & facta eſt habitatio dæmonum : Flie out of the middeſt of Babylon, let every man ſave his owne ſoule : for Babylon is fallen and become an habitation for devils, &c. Hee exhorteth them to leave Rome, which here he calleth Babylon.

And that the Pope is Antichriſt, ſee one of their Popes authoritie, *Decr.p.*3. *diſt.*3. c.12.Gregor. They that forbid any worke to be done upon the Saturday, are the preachers of Antichriſt, who when he commeth ſhall command upon the Saturday as well as the Lords day, to ceaſe from all worke, &c. But this doth the Pope, forbid labour upon the weeke daies, making them feſtivall and holy daies, and neceſſarily to be kept. Ergo.

Laſtly, for this doctrine, that the Church of Rome, as it now ſtandeth, is not the true Church of Chriſt, many holy Martyrs have given their lives : Thomas Man Martyr, for holding that the Popiſh Church was not the true Church, artic. object. 9. *Fox.pag.*815. Richard Feurus Martyr at Lyons, anno 1554. for ſaying it was not the true Church, becauſe it was governed by the traditions of men, and not the word of God, *pag.*912.*col.*1.

Maſter Robert Glover Martyr, by theſe arguments proveth the Church of Rome not to bee the Church of Chriſt : Firſt, Chriſts Church acknowledgeth Chriſt Jeſus only to be their head : the Church of Rome ſetteth up the man of ſinne for their head. Secondly, Chriſts Church heareth his voice, and is ruled by his word, neither adding to, nor taking ought from it : the Church of Rome addeth to Gods word, and runneth a whoring after their owne inventions. Thirdly, the true Church laboureth to reſiſt the luſts and deſires of the world, the fleſh and the devill : thoſe for the moſt part give themſelves to all voluptuouſneſſe, ſecretly committing ſuch things, which as Saint Paul ſaith, it is a ſhame to ſpeake of. Fourthly, the Church of Chriſt is perſecuted : the Church of Rome doth perſecute, murther, and ſlay the ſervants of God : Ergo, it is not the true Church : plura apud Fox, pag. 1710.*col.*2.

Hereunto further ſhall bee added the teſtimonies of other Churches, leſt the opinion of Engliſh Proteſtants ſhould ſeeme to be ſingular. 1. The Greeke Church to this day hath no fellowſhip or communion with the Roman Church : [a] one writeth, that the Chriſtians of Taprobane, and the Iſlands neere thereunto, doe not acknowledge, nor their fathers never did acknowledge the Popes, Cardinals and Prelates of Rome : alſo the Neſtorians, and other Indians doe call the Pope a Biſhop unapproved. [b] The Muſcovites and Ruthenians doe ſay that the Pope is an Heretike, and doe excommunicate him and his Clergie, at ſuch times as they doe celebrate the Lords Supper. Another teſtifieth thus ; The Greeks departed long ſince from the Church of Rome, and appointed them Patriarkes, whom they acknowledge to be their heads, and not onely the Greeks obey them, but all the provinces which follow the Greeke religion, as Walachia, Bulgaria, Muſcovia, Ruſſia.

4 Nay, we have here a teſtimonie of one of their Councels againſt them, namely, the Councell of Baſile, which decreed the Pope to be ſubject to a Councell: If the Church be a mother, the Pope muſt acknowledge himſelfe to be a ſonne, otherwiſe how ſhall he have God to be his father? this our Saviour ſhewed, when he ſaid to Peter (tell the Church) which authority, if the Pope ſhall contemne, he ought to be accounted as an Ethnike and publican. But now the Pope refuſeth to ſubmit himſelfe to a generall Councell, and taketh himſelfe to be ſuperiour unto it: hee is therefore by the ſentence of this Synod held no better than an Ethnike: If the head bee ſo, what ſhall the body be? a true Church it is not whoſe head is to be held as an Ethnike.

That the Church of the Proteſtants is a true viſible Church.

The Papiſts.

THe arguments which our adverſaries uſe againſt us to prove us to bee no Church, drawne from antiquitie, univerſalitie, ſucceſſion, the power of miracles, propheſying, and ſuch like, I have anſwered at large before in their ſeverall places, that I ſhall not need to repeat them againe. But generally the ſumme of our anſwer is this, that, whereas their argument may be thus framed: That Church which hath neither antiquitie, univerſalitie, unity, ſucceſſion, &c. is no true Church: but ſuch is the Church of the Proteſtants: Ergo. To this argument we have thus anſwered: firſt, denying the propoſition, and ſhewing, that neither that alwaies is a Church where theſe notes are found; and that there may be a Church where they are wanting. Secondly, we alſo infringe the aſſumption: for moſt of theſe notes I have declared to bee more agreeable to our Church, and rather to bee found amongſt us, than with them. But who deſirteh to ſee our anſwer more fully, I referre him to the ſeverall places before, wherein theſe things are handled.

The Proteſtants.

THat the Churches of the Proteſtants, and namely the Church of England, are true viſible Churches, and notable members of the Catholike Church, beſide the arguments drawne from the preaching of the word, and adminiſtration of the Sacraments, which alwaies prove a Church; we will produce other reaſons, and ſuch as might perſwade our adverſaries themſelves, if they were indifferent Judges.

*Argum.*1. That Church which ſendeth forth Martyrs, as Chriſts faithfull ſouldiers, is the true Church: but the Church of the Proteſtants hath brought forth many Matyrs: Ergo.

The propoſition, I thinke, is not doubted of: for out of the Church there are no Martyrs: as S. Cyprian ſaith, Qui occiſi, &c. They which are ſlaine out of the Church, doe not win a crowne of their faith, but a reward of their follie, *lib.*1 *epiſt.*1. Againe, the Martyrs of Chriſt are undoubtedly ſaved, their ſoules are under the Altar, which is Chriſt. *Apocal.*6.9. And as Origen applieth that place of the Prophet, Eſay 63.1. To them the Angels doe thus ſay and welcome them into heaven: Quis eſt iſte qui aſcendit ex Boſra? Who is this that aſcendeth from Boſra? that is, from the bloodie field: but there can be no ſalvation out of the Church. And further, the ſame Origen thus reaſoneth out of the words of our Saviour, I have a baptiſme to be baptiſed with, Luk. 12.56. meaning his paſſion: Chriſtus profuſionem ſanguinis baptiſma vocat: Chriſt (ſaith he) calleth the ſhedding of his blood baptiſme, &c. But there is no kinde of true baptiſme and acceptable to God, but within the Church: Ergo, true martyrdome, which is a kind of baptiſme, is onely to be found in the Church. But the propoſition needs no long proofe: I come to ſhew the aſſumption, that thoſe Saints, which out of our Church have died for the Goſpell, were true and unfained Martyrs.

Revel 6.5.
Eſa.63.5.
Luk.12.56.
Hom.7.in Iudic.

The ancient writers do give us foure rules wherby to know and diſcerne the Martyrs of the Church: the firſt is Saint Cyprians rule, by their ſingular patience: Sunt qui certis artibus, &c. There are ſome which by certaine artificiall meanes doe ſtupifie their bodies that they feele not the torments: there be alſo ſome impotent and outragious affections, which take away the ſenſe of the bodie, &c. ſed placidum illud & manſuetum non videmus niſi in Chriſti martyribus: but wee finde not that quiet and meeke kinde of death, but onely in the Martyrs of Chriſt, &c. But ſuch examples of patient death in the bleſſed Martyrs of our Church we have many: and their patience appeareth both by their owne comfortable words and teſtimonie, by their couragious and conſtant behaviour, as alſo by the con-feſſion of their enemies. Firſt, for their owne teſtimonie: one Nicholas or Francis Thieſſen, or one of day, and upon a Saturday I ſhall be married againe to Chriſt, pag. 903. *col.*1. Notable is the teſtimo-nie of that reverend and godly Biſhop and Martyr B. Farrer, who thus ſaid to one Maſter Richard Pag.1413.1 60. Ihones, who ſeemed to lament the painfulneſſe of his death, that if hee ſaw him once to ſtirre in the paines of his burning, he ſhould then give no credit to his doctrine: and as hee ſaid, ſo being aſſiſted by Gods ſpirit he performed the ſame. But amongſt all other, moſt glorious is the teſtimonie of James Baynham Martyr, who having his armes and legges halfe conſumed in the fire, thus cried out; Behold O ye Papiſts, you looke for miracles, and here now may you ſee a miracle: for in this fire I feele no more paine than if I were in a bed of downe, but it is to mee as ſweet as a bed of Roſes, pag.

Pag 940.1.4. 1030 *col.*2.

Now for their conſtant and couragious behaviour, it was ſuch as became the valiant ſouldiers of Chriſt, void of all feare and doubtfulneſſe. Five conſtant Martyrs burned at Lyons, anno 1553.
Pag.826.2.87. when the fire was readie to be put unto them, they made this petition, that each might embrace and kiſſe the other, as being no whit afraid of death, pag. 906. *col.*1. Six Martyrs being burned together number might be alleaged, of their conſtant and quiet behaviour: but theſe may ſuffice.

Their conſtancie alſo may appeare by the confeſſion of their adverſaries. Firſt, William Huſſon Martyr at Roane, anno 1544. ſo cheerefully carried himſelfe in his death, that whereas ſome maliciouſly ſaid hee had a devill, they were of others reproved, who ſaid, that if hee had a devill hee ſhould have fallen into deſpaire, *pag.*900. A poore Martyr which ſuffered at Paris, anno 1549. being exa-cruell and painfull death was ſo couragious, that the beholding therof did more aſtoniſh the King than all the other before, *pag.*903. Likewiſe that reverend Archbiſhop and holy Martyr D. Tho- mas Cranmer did ſo manfully and valiantly endure the fire, not once moving or ſtirring in the middeſt of the flames, that one Frier Iohn being ignorant of the conſtancie of Martyrs, ſaid to the Lord Pag.1714.1.46. Williams, he died in deſpaire: who ſmiling onely ſo rebuked the Friers follie, *pag.*1886. But enough hath been ſaid concerning the probation of this matter, namely, the patience of the Martyrs, no whit inferiour to the conſtancie of the ancient Martyrs in the Primitive Church. And thus much of the firſt rule to know a Martyr by.

The ſecond and third rule are Bernards, who thus writeth: Illa mors precioſa eſt, quam commendat vita, &c. That death is precious which a good life commendeth: but that is more precious which a good cauſe commendeth, *Ser. parv.*24.

Secondly, then true Martyrs are to be judged by their holy life and innocent converſation: for as Pſal.116. it is in the *Pſalm.*116. Precious in the ſight of the Lord is the death of his Saints, or holy ones. They then that have lived an ungodly and uncleane life, unleſſe they be converted and change their waies, are no fit witneſſes of Gods truth: But ſuch the Lord appointeth for the witneſſe of his truth, that are of unſpotted life and of a godly converſation. The Popiſh Church hath canonized for Martyrs, ſome that were rebels and diſobedient to their Prince, as Thomas Becket, and S. Hugh: ſome that were Sorcerers and Magicians, as Hildebrand their Pope, and S. Dunſtane: ſome have been taken for Saints amongſt them that were ſlaine in their drunkenneſſe, as it may be ſeene, *Decr. Greg, lib.*3. *tit.*45. *cap.*1.
But our Church can ſhew another kind of Martyrs, men of excellent vertuous life: as Maſter Brad- ford holy Martyr, a notable example of chaſte and continent life: Biſhop Cranmer of innocencie, Biſhop Hooper of hoſpitality; Maſter Latimer of painfull and diligent preaching; Tomkins of continuall and fervent prayer. See their ſeverall ſtories, and I thinke they cannot name one of the Martyrs of the Goſpell of an infamous life, after they came to the knowledge of the Goſpell: and ſo is a true Revel.14.5. Martyr deſcribed, *Apocal.*14.5. In their mouthes is no guile, &c.

Thirdly, this note of an innocent life is not ſufficient of it ſelfe, unleſſe it bee joyned with he other, namely the goodneſſe of the cauſe; which no doubt our Martyrs had, and I ſhew it thus: Firſt, it is a good cauſe to die in defence of the true worſhip of God, againſt the falſe adoration or worſhip of Idols: but ſuch is the cauſe of the Martyrs of the Goſpell in theſe daies: Ergo. The propoſition is proved by a particular induction of the ancient Martyrs both before the law, under the law, and ſince
Geneſ.31.30. the law, which have been perſecuted for this cauſe: as before the law Laban perſecuted Iacob, becauſe Geneſ 35.2. of his Gods. And Iacob putteth away all the ſtrange gods in his familie. In the time of the law under the Judges Gedeon ſhould have been ſlaine, for deſtroying the Altar of Baal. Under the Monarchie of the Chaldeans the three children were put into the fierie fornace, becauſe they would not bow downe to the image of gold, *Dan.*3. Since the time of Chriſt under the Romane Emperours many thouſand Chriſtians were put to death, becauſe they refuſed to worſhip the Idols of the Heathen.
the

Judge.5.30.

Now then that our Martyrs have died in the ſame cauſe, which is the ſecond part of the argument, it may bee thus proved. Firſt, our adverſaries themſelves cannot denie but that they have put many Proteſtants to death for refuſing to worſhip their images of gold, as the ſtorie of the Martyrs is full of ſuch examples. But here is their evaſion, that their images are not like the Heathen Idols, nor the worſhip of their images Idolatrie, Contra. That they are the only knowne Idolaters of this time, firſt it is cleere by the Scripture, *Apocal.*9.20. for there the Apoſtle and Prophet ſpeaketh of the worſhipping of Idols of gold and Silver, after the opening of the ſeventh ſeale, and the blowing of the ſixth trumpet, which muſt be by courſe of that prophecie long after the Idoll worſhip of the Heathen: ſo that the popiſh Church muſt needs thereby be ſignified, there being no knowne nation beſide in theſe parts of the world that worſhippeth Images. Secondly, the Jewes themſelves doe ſay, that Chriſtians worſhip Images contrarie to the law of God: as a Jew objected to Maſter George Wiſchart as they ſailed together upon the Rhene, *Fox pag.*1269.*col.*2. Wherefore it is manifeſt, that our Martyrs having ſtrived by death againſt the idolatrie of theſe times, have died in the ſame cauſe, for the which the ancient Martyrs gave their lives againſt the idolatrie of the Heathen.

Apoc.9.20.

Secondly, it is a good cauſe to die for the faith of Chriſt, and they are the faithfull Martyrs which hope only to be juſtified by his death: *Apocal.*7. 14. Theſe are they which have waſhed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lambe. But in this faith have our Martyrs died, hoping only to finde life by faith in Chriſts blood: whereas the Papiſts ſeeke to make their robes white in the blood and merits of Saints. And againe, whereas the Apoſtle ſpeaking of the laſt times of perſecution, ſaith, Here is the patience of the Saints, here are they that keepe the Commandements of God, and the faith of Ieſus. There have none elſe in all the world been perſecuted for the faith of Chriſt in theſe latter times, but the Proteſtants only: the Papiſts perſecute, they are not perſecuted: and where they ſuffer, it is not for religion or the faith of Jeſus, but for treaſon, and wilfull tranſgreſſion of the Princes lawes. Thus then it is evident that our Martyrs are they in this place propheſied of, and dyng in ſo good a cauſe, muſt needs be the faithfull witneſſes of God.

Apoc.7.14.

A fourth rule to diſcerne true Martyrs in their death, is by thoſe miraculous and ſtrange workes of God declared in their martydome, though wee doe not alleage this either as a neceſſarie or univerſall note. So S. Ambroſe extolleth the martyrdome of S. Paul: De Pauli cervice unda lactis, &c. Out of Pauls neck being beheaded, ſtreamed milke rather than blood. And no marvell if the nouriſher of the Churches abounded with milke, who ſaith (writing to the Corinthians) I gave you milke to drinke, &c. So Policarpus could not be conſumed with fire: Romanus ſpake, his tongue being cut out: Cecilia remained a day and a night in an hot bath, not being hurt. The like miracles are credibly reported to have been ſhewed in the death of the Martyrs of the Goſpell. Stephen Brune could not be conſumed with the fire being twice renued, though oyle were powred into it, but the hangman was conſtrained to thruſt him thorow. Stephen Mangin Martyr ſpake, his tongue being cut out. The like alſo is recorded of Gabriel Berandinus a French Martyr, anno 1550. *pag.*904. See more of ſuch examples before in the ſecond controverſie, third queſtion, in the fifth note of Miracles: but we ſtand not ſo much upon this point. Wherefore ſhortly to conclude this argument, where true Martyrs are, there is the Church: the Proteſtants Church hath true and faithfull Martyrs, as I have ſhewed, by their ſingular patience, holy life, their honeſt and good cauſe, and by the wonderfull workes ſhewed in their death: Ergo, we are the true Church of Chriſt.

Serm.68.

*Argum.*2. Secondly, we reaſon thus: That Church which hath been from time to time perſecuted in the world, is the Church of God: that which hath alwaies perſecuted and been filled with the blood of the Saints, is the malignant Church. But our Church for theſe foure or five hundred yeeres hath been alwaies perſecuted; and they have been the perſecutors. Ergo.

For the probation of the aſſumption or ſecond part of the argument, we need not much labour: for all the world knoweth how the popiſh Church continually hath perſecuted the Proteſtants, and eſpecially within theſe fiftie or ſixtie yeeres ſince the reviving of the Goſpell: in which time they have ſpilled the blood of not ſo few as an hundred thouſand of Gods Saints, if an account be taken thereof. For in France only in that bloody maſſaker in the yeere 1572. there were put to the ſword in one moneth thirtie thouſand Proteſtants, *Fox pag.*2153. And the Pope at Rome hearing tell thereof, hee with his Cardinals cauſed a ſolemne proceſſion to be made with ſinging of, Te Deum, and proclaimed a yeere of Jubilee. We have alſo for this point the confeſſion of the Rhemiſts: That Proteſtants (whom they call heretikes, as Paul of the perſecuting Jewes was counted an heretike, *Act.*24.14.) are put to death at Rome, and that they allow of their puniſhment in other countries, *Rhemiſt. annot. in Apocal.*17.*ſect.*8.

Now for the truth of the firſt part of the argument, that it is the lot of the Church of God to be perſecuted in this world, the Apoſtle thus witneſſeth, *Gal.*4.29. As then he that was borne after the fleſh perſecuted him that was borne after the ſpirit, ſo is it now. And further, that it is a proper badge of the malignant Church to ſuck the blood of the Saints, wee read in the Revelation, 17.6. I ſaw the woman man drunke with the bloud of the Saints,&c. In which place by the bloodthirſtie whore of Babylon is ſignified the perſecuting Antichriſt at Rome: which is ſo plaine a text to convince the adverſarie, that they cannot poſſibly avoid it, though they have found out divers ſhifts and evaſions, and eſpecially three, but all to little purpoſe, I will ſet them downe in order.

Galath.4.29.

Revel.17.6.

Firſt, by this whore the Rhemiſts would underſtand the whole corps of all the perſecutors that have been from the beginning of the world to the end, Apocal. 17.ſect.6. Contra. But this cannot bee ſo. Firſt, *chap.*17.*verſ.*1. the Angell ſaith to Iohn, I will ſhew thee the damnation of the great whore: ſpeaking of the time to come, not of the time paſt. Secondly, verſ.6. She is drunken with the blood of the martyrs of Ieſus: which muſt of neceſſitie be underſtood of the peſecution ſince the manifeſtation Revel.17.18. of Jeſus to the world. Thirdly, *verſ.*18. The whore is the great citie, that raigneth over the kingdoms of the earth: It is a certaine Citie or regiment, therefore not an uncertaine and indefinite bodie or companie.

Secondly, by the whore of Babylon the Rhemiſts underſtand, the terrene ſtate of the perſecuting Emperours, not the Church or Eccleſiaſticall ſtate there, *annot.*17.*Apocal.ſect.*4. Contra. Firſt, the beaſt, whereon the whore ſitteth, ſignifying that great citie, which bare rule over the kingdomes, was Revel.17.8. and is not, *cap.*17.8. that is, the imperiall ſtate was removed, when the Popes ſucceeded; yet in them Revel.13.11. was revived the imperiall tyrannie. And hereunto agreeth that propheſie, chap. 13.11. *Another beaſt commeth out of the earth, which did all that the firſt beaſt could doe, and healed his deadly wound, and gave life and ſpirit to the image of the beaſt, verſ.*15. This is the beaſt that was, and is not, namely the beaſtly tyrannie of the perſecuting Emperours revived by the cruell Popes: wherfore the whore cannot ſignifie the terene ſtate of the Emperours, for this beaſt was, and is not. Secondly, S. Hierome alſo thus expoundeth, ſaying to Rome, Maledictionem &c. Thou maiſt by repentance eſcape that curſe threatened thee by our Saviour in the Apocalypſe, lib.2.adverſ.Iovinian. But when S. Hierome thus did write, the heatheniſh perſecution was ceaſed: wherefore by Babylon the imperiall ſtate is not ſignified.

Thirdly, the Rhemiſts by the beaſt, that was, and is not, doe inſinuate Antichriſt, who is not yet come (ſay they) in our daies, neither ſhall come as long as the Empire of Rome ſtandeth, ibid.

*Contra.*1. By the ſame reaſon we conclude that Antichriſt is alreadie come, becauſe that which 2 Theſſ.2.6. letted, or hindred the revealing of Antichriſt, as the Apoſtle ſaith, 2 *Theſſ.*2.6.7. namely the Roman Empire, is taken away: for nothing now remaineth of the Emperiall ſoveraigntie, but only an image thereof: firſt, the large dominion of the Empire is loſt; he beareth little ſway that is Emperour, but in his owne Seignorie, which he hath beſide the title of the Empire. Secondly, the ſeate of the Empire is changed, which was at Rome, but now is in no certaine place. Thirdly, then the Empire went by deſcent and ſucceſſion, now by election. Fourthly, they were called the Roman Emperours, now the Emperours of Germanie. Fifthly, then Rome and Italie were ſubject to the Emperour, now hee hath nothing to doe there: ſo that the Roman Empire is long ſince decaied and diſſolved; and upon the diſſolution thereof Antichriſt was to be revealed. 2 Whereas Antichriſt by their owne confeſſion muſt be the ſeventh Regiment, five were then paſt in S. Iohns time, the Regiment of Egypt, Canaan, Babylon, the Perſians, Greekes, the ſixth was the Roman Empire: (though theſe ſix Regiments are better referred to the ſix formes of government among the Romans; the Kings, Conſuls, Decem-viri, Tribuni militum, Dictators, Emperours) than the ſixth, which is the Roman Empire, being aboliſhed (for now there is no Emperour, but a king of the Romans, and that but a bare title neither, the Emperour of Germanie) the ſeventh which is Antichriſt muſt needs ſucceed: wherefore Antichriſt is alreadie come. 3 S. Hierome thus did write in his daies, calling Rome Sodome, epiſt.ad Lucinum. And againe, Dum in Babylone verſarer, & purpurata meretricis eſſem colonus,&c. While I was in Babylon, meaning Rome, and was an inhabiter of the skarlet whore,&c. præfat. ad Paulin. He neither underſtandeth this propheſie of the time paſt, nor ſuſpendeth it for the time to come, but even in thoſe daies ſheweth how it began to be accompliſhed, the Heathen perſecution being then ceaſed. So then it is cleare, that Rome was not only, neither ſhall be only, but even now is and hath been a great while that skarlet whore of Babylon, drunken with the blood of the Saints: and what Saints blood have they ſucked, but of the Proteſtants? And thus much for our ſecond argument.

*Argum.*3. Thirdly, the holie Apoſtle ſaith, Euery ſpirit that confeſſeth that Ieſus Chriſt is come 1 Iohn.4.2. in the fleſh, is of God, 1.*Ioh.*4.2. But the Church of the Proteſtants ſo confeſſeth: Ergo, it is of God.

Object. The Rhemiſts in their Annotations upon this place ſay, that this was a note onely for thoſe times: for there are many which confeſſe that Chriſt is come in the fleſh, and yet are heretikes.

Contra. Firſt, the contrarie appeareth, for that the Apoſtle in the firſt verſe giveth a caveat to trie every ſpirit, and afterward ſetteth downe this rule whereby to trie them: this rule then is generall for every ſpirit. Secondly, by this rule Antichriſt is to be tried, both he that was then come, and hee that ſhould come, verſ.3. Ergo, it was a rule alſo for afterward. Thirdly, this rule is the ſame with that Matth.16.18. confeſſion of Peter, Thou art Chriſt the ſonne of the living Lord, Matth. 16.18. Upon which rocke Chriſt ſaith he would build his Church: Ergo, this confeſſion being the foundation of the Church, is a touchſtone for all ages. Fourthly, I will oppoſe againſt them a Synode of their owne, that maketh this rule generall for all ages: *Synod. Colonienſ.p.6.c.*15. Fidelis diſpenſator, &c. He is a faithfull diſpenſer, as Iohn witneſſeth, whoſe only ſcope Chriſt is, and whoſe ſpirit confeſſeth that Chriſt is come in the fleſh,& as S. Paul doth interprete, *Tit.*2. that the grace of God our Saviour hath appeared to all men, to teach us to denie ungodly luſts, &c. in the which words the Apoſtle doth comprehend two natures in Chriſt; of the Word, in teaching us the will of his father; of the fleſh, in being offered for us, &c. Fifthly, though ſome heretikes may in word confeſſe Chriſt to be come, yet if they detract from any of his offices, as the Papiſts doe from his Prieſthood, in making other mediators, and ſatisfactions, in that they denie that for the which Chriſt came, they deny Chriſt. Wherefore we conclude, that ſeeing we hold the confeſſion of Peter, upon the which the Church is builded, and acknowledge that Chriſt for his natures God and man, for his offices our only King, Prophet, Prieſt, and Mediator is come in the fleſh; our ſpirit is of God, and our Church the true Church of Chriſt.

*Argum.*4. Fourthly, wee reaſon thus; that Church which maintaineth no hereſie contrarie to the Scriptures, is the true Church of Chriſt: but ſuch are the reformed Churches of the Proteſtants. Ergo.

The propoſition cannot be denied, the aſſumption or ſecond part is thus proved: They which beleeve the Law and the Prophets, and all things contained in the Scriptures, cannot maintaine any hereſie: ſo doth Saint Paul cleere himſelfe from the accuſation of hereſie, Act. 24.14. But the reformed Churches beleeve all written in the Scriptures, ſubmitting themſelves to the judgement of the word for the triall of their faith and doctrine: Ergo, our Church cannot be juſtly charged with hereſie. Beſide, I have ſhewed before, by the ſeverall definitions of hereſie, that it can in no ſence bee laid to our charge. And againe, in the other treatiſe of the pillars of Papiſtrie it is proved at large, that the Churches of the Proteſtants hold no one opinion, in the pure ages of the Church condemned for hereſie. And though Bellarmine doth charge us with twentie hereſies, he ſhall never be able to prove one: but into their ſinke of ſuperſtition, fortie ſeverall hereticall ſtinking puddles at the leaſt doe runne downe, as in the ſame place more at large may be ſeene. So then Proteſtants are no heretikes, nor yet their Church hereticall, and conſequently a true Church.

See before queſt. 3. in the ſixth note of the Church,

*Arg.*5. Fifthly, where the true foundation is laid, which is Jeſus Chriſt only, there is the houſe of God. But our Churches lay no other foundation beſide Jeſus Chriſt: Ergo. The propoſition is the Apoſtles, 1 *Cor.*3.11. Other foundation can no man lay, then that which is laid, Ieſus Chriſt. And *Eph.*2. 20. The Church is thus deſcribed to be built upon the foundation of the Prophets, and Apoſtles, Ieſus Chriſt being the chiefe corner ſtone.

1 Cor.3.11. Epheſ.2.20.

The aſſumption alſo is manifeſt: for that we receive only the Scriptures, no unwritten traditions: we acknowledge no Mediator but Chriſt; no ſatisfaction for ſinne, but his blood, and in all things make him the onely foundation of our building: whereas our adverſaries doe joyne as fellow with Chriſt the virgin Mary; as the Jeſuite in the end of all his bookes moſt blaſphemouſly doth aſcribe the honour and praiſe of his labours to Chriſt, and the bleſſed Virgin. So beſide faith onely they have brought in merits, ſatisfactions, works of ſupererogation, and ſuch like:& they doe not condemne any doctrine of the Proteſtants more than faith only, which in effect is to deny Chriſt only, the object of faith, to be the foundation. Wherefore they laying another foundation, are not the Church: and the Proteſtants by the ſame reaſon are the Church, being builded only by faith upon Jeſus Chriſt the only foundation.

Thus farre then I have by moſt evident arguments ſhewed, that the reformed Churches of the Proteſtants are the true Churches of Chriſt: firſt, for that they have ſent forth conſtant Martyrs as faithfull witneſſes of Chriſt. Secondl , becauſe they have been alwaies perſecuted and kept under by the malignant Synagogue. Thirdly, they have the true confeſſion of Jeſus Chriſt to be come in the fleſh, which proceedeth from the ſpirit of God. Fourthly, they can ſhew no hereſie, condemned in the purer ages of the Church for hereſie, to bee maintained by our Church. Fifthly, they are founded upon the true foundation Jeſus Chriſt, and therefore are the right buildings and true Churches of Chriſt. Many other reaſons might be alleaged, and may hereafter at better leiſure, for the demonſtration of our Church: but I will content my ſelfe with theſe for this time, and ſo proceed unto the reſt.

THE THIRD GENERALL CONTROVERSIE, CONCERNING COVNCELS.

A Councell is nothing elſe but an aſſemblie and gathering together of the people of God, about the affaires and buſineſſe of the Church: and they are of two ſorts, either univerſall in the name of the whole Church; or particular, which are either Nationall, when the learned of a whole Realme are called together; or Provinciall, when as the Churches of one Province doe aſſemble into one place to conſult of Religion.

There may be two eſpeciall occaſions of Councels: the one for reſiſting and rooting out of hereſies, as the Apoſtles and elders met together, *Act.*15. againſt thoſe which would have impoſed the Jewiſh ceremonies upon the beleeving Gentiles. So the Councell of Nice was celebrated the yeere of the Lord 327. to confound the hereſie of Arrius, who denied Chriſt, as he was God, to be equall to his Father. In the Councell of Conſtantinople, anno. 383. or thereabout, the hereſie of Macedonius was condemned, which denied the holy Ghoſt to be God. In the Epheſine Councel the firſt, Neſtorius hereſie was overthrowne, which affirmed Chriſt to have two perſons, anno 434. The Councell of Chalcedon was collected, anno 454. about the hereſie of Eutiches, which held that there was in Chriſt but one nature after his incarnation; ſo confounding his humanitie and divinitie together.

The other cauſe of the calling of Councels, is, to provide and eſtabliſh wholeſome Lawes, decrees and conſtitutions, for the government of the Church: ſo the Apoſtles called the brethren together *Act.*6. to take order for the poore. And in the Councell of Nice an uniforme order was eſtabliſhed for the celebration of Eaſter, which before had much troubled the Church.

Ex admonit. legator. ſeſſi. Concil. Trident.

Unto theſe two cauſes of aſſembling Councels, which are exterpatio hæreſis & reformatio morum, the rooting out of hereſies, and the reformation of manners, may alſo be added a third, and that is, pax externa Eccleſiæ, the externall peace of the Church, namely in compounding of controverſies, and in working reconciliation betweene ſome principall members of the Church. As in the generall Councell of Epheſus, the matter was agreed betweene Zenon Biſhop of Cyprus, and the Patriarch of Antioch. who chalenged a prerogative over that Ilaud, that the Biſhops of Cyprus ſhould chuſe their owne Metropolitane. In the Councell of Chalcedon, action. 11. 12. the ſtrife betweene Baſſianus and Stephanus for the Biſhoprick of Epheſus was taken up: Concil Baſilienſ. An order of agreement was ſet betweene the French King, and the Duke of Burgundie. Concil. Florentin. great labour made for the uniting of the Latine and Greeke Church. &c.

Ex Appendice Concil.

The queſtions betweene us and the Papiſts concerning Councels, are theſe: Firſt, wether generall Councels be abſolutely neceſſarie. Secondly, by whom they ought to be called. Thirdly, of what perſons they ought to conſiſt. Fourthly, who ſhould be the Preſident of the Councell. Fifthly, concerning the authoritie of them. Sixthly, whether they may erre or not. Seventhly, whether they are above the Pope. Eightly, of the conditions to bee obſerved in generall Councels. Ninthly, which are to be counted the true generall Councels: of theſe in order.

The firſt Queſtion Concerning the neceſſitie of Councels.

The aſſertion of the Papiſts.

29. Error.

THey ſeeme in words to affirme, that generall Councels are not abſolutely neceſſarie: for the Primitive Church was without any Councell for the ſpace of three hundred yeeres and more: yet they hold that ſome Councels, either generall or particular, are of neceſſitie to be had, *Bellarm. de concil. lib.*1. *cap.*11. And yet this is to be marvelled at, that they ſhould ſo much ſtand for Councels, ſeeing they might uſe a farre more compendious way, in referring all to the determination of the Pope, whom they boldly, but very fondly affirme, that he cannot erre.

Although they ſeeme not to lay a neceſſitie upon generall Councels, yet in truth they doe contrarie: for they allow no Councels at all, without the Popes conſent and authoritie; neither thinke ir lawfull for any Nation or Province, to make within themſelves any innovation or change of religion. So in the aſſembly at Zuricke, anno 1523. for the reformation of religion, Faber tooke exception againſt that meeting, affirming that it was no convenient place, nor fit time for the diſcuſſing of ſuch matter, but rather the cognition and tractation thereof belonged to a generall Councell. Sleid. lib. 3.

And further they hold, that what hath beene decreed in a Councell, cannot be diſſolved but by the like Councell, as if the Councell of Trent were to be diſanulled, it muſt bee done by the like Synod, *Bellarmine de concil. lib.3. cap.*21. Which Councell they affirme to have beene generall; and therefore another generall Councell muſt by their opinion neceſſarily bee expected, before it can bee revoked.

The confeſſion of the Proteſtants.

WE doe hold that generall Councels are an wholeſome meanes for the repreſſing & reforming, both of errours in Religion, and corruption in manners: and that true generall Councels ought to bee much deſired, and conveniently expected: that is, ſuch a Councell, where everie man franke and free may utter his minde without feare: an holy Councell, where everie man may goe about to ſet up godlineſſe, not to oppreſſe the truth. Such a Councell King Henry the eighth of worthy memorie in his proteſtation for the Church of England, for not comming to the Councell of the Pope truly affirmeth, that he deſired and craved nothing ſo oft of God: but becauſe there is no hope of any ſuch Councell, ſeeing the Pope would be the chiefe doer in it; and it is too unreaſonable, that the ſame man ſhould be both a partie and a Judge; wee doubt not, but that it is lawfull by the word of God, for everie Prince, Duke, Lord, within his owne Seigniorie, without any further delay, or expectation, by the advice and counſell of the learned and godly of the land, according to Gods Law, to reforme their Church.

Firſt, becauſe all delay in matters of the Church are dangerous, and inconveniences are at the firſt hand to be met withall, as we ſee Act. 6. and Act. 15. immediately when any queſtian did ariſe, the Apoſtles aſſembled together. In the Councell of Baſil, where it was decreed that the Pope was ſubject to the Councels, Panormitane a ſtiffe champion on the Popes ſide, would have the decree ſtayed till the returne of the Princes Embaſſadors: But Arelatenſis that worthy Cardinall ſtepped up, and ſhewed what danger there might be in a ſmall delay, by the example of Hannibal, who deferring his going but one day to Rome, was driven cleane out of Italy, having beene verie like to have taken the Citie, if he had uſed the opportunitie. But without all controverſie, matters of faith ought not to be delayed: which could not be avoided, if a generall Councell ſhould alwayes be waited for.

Secondly, a Prince hath the like authoritie in his dominion, as the houſholder hath in his houſe. But everie man ought to reforme his houſe, without any further delay, adviſement or conſultation, as Ioſua ſaith, I and my houſe will ſerve the Lord, 24. verſ. 15. Wherefore the Prince may and ought to Ioſua 24.15.
performe the like in his Countrey.

To this purpoſe is that place fitly applyed in the ſecond Pſalme: Erudimini qui judicatis terram: Get you learning ye that are Judges of the earth: to what end? that they may be able to underſtand the diſeaſes of the ſicke Church, and to ſeeke redreſſe for the ſame within their owne Realmes, Sic Henric. Rex in poteſtat.

Laſtly, we finde by experience that the Lord hath bleſſed ſuch reformations, which have been made by Princes in their owne territories: as that in Zuricke, anno 1523. at Berne, 1528. and the moſt happie reformation of our Church of England begun by King Henrie the eighth, encreaſed by that moſt vertuous Prince King Edward the ſixth, and proſperouſly continued and eſtabliſhed by our late gracious Soveraigne Queene Elizabeth: and now againe ratified and confirmed by his excellent Majeſtie.

I will adde the teſtimony of Auguſtine, who anſwering to the Pelagians, which objected that they were condemned by certaine ſingle Biſhops in their owne Dioceſſe, without a Synod, hee ſaith thus, Ac ſi congregatione Synodi opus erat, ut aperta pernicies damnaretur, quaſi nulla hæreſis aliquando, niſi Synodi congregatione damnata ſit. &c. cont. 2. Epiſtol. Pelag. lib. 4. cap. 12. As though, ſaith hee, a Synod or Councell were alwayes neceſſarie to condemne a knowne hereſie: Nay, we finde that more hereſies without compariſon, have beene in the ſame places condemned, where they firſt ſprang without any ſuch neceſſitie, more ſo than otherwiſe.

The ſame alſo hath beene the judgement of the holy Martyrs, that in reforming of religion, generall Councels are not alway to be expected. So ſaith Richard Feurus Martyr in his examination, ſpeaking of the Church of Geneva, that albeit the Pope and the Miniſters of the Church of Rome were not called to the inſtitution of the foreſaid Church of Geneva; yet it followeth not that there was no lawfull order obſerved in eſtabliſhing that Church, ex Iohan. Criſpin. lib. 6. Pag.834.1 60.

Thus alſo Biſhop Ridley that godly and learned Martyr. We doe not read that Chriſt in any place hath laid ſo great a burthen upon the members of his Spouſe, that he hath commanded them to go to the univerſall Church; Chriſt ſendeth them that would know the truth, to ſearch the Scriptures. But that all men ſhould meet together out of all parts in the world, to define the articles of our faith, I

Fox p.1562.2. 20. neither finde it commanded of Chriſt, nor written in the word of God, Reſponſ. Rid. ad object. 9. Mar. Amor.

See alſo the conſent of antiquitie, Concil. Agripinenſ. ſub Iulio. 1. Valerianus a Biſhop thus ſpeaketh, Etſi non hìc omnes conſeniores apud Agrippinam conveniſſemus, ſufficeret à 5. Epiſcopis Euphratem blaſphemum pronunciari: Although all wee fellow Elders had not met here in this Councell, it had beene ſufficient if five Biſhops had pronounced Euphrates a blaſphemous heretike, for denying Chriſt to be God.

Concil. Aquileienſ. Palladius an Arrian heretike refuſing to anſwer, ſaying hee expected a generall Councell: Ambroſe being preſent maketh anſwer thus: Ibi multitudine opus non eſſe, ubi veritas non laboraret in plurib. ſi locata eſſet in paucis: There needed no multitude to bee aſſembled, where the truth remained with a few. There is no ſuch neceſſitie therefore of generall Councels.

Now I will adde the practice and judgement herein of other Churches.

Guagnin. de religion. Moſcovitar. 1 The Greeke Church holdeth not ſuch neceſſitie of generall Councels: the Muſcovites under the great Dutcheſſe Othe, and Volodomirus her ſonne, generally received the Chriſtian faith, and reformed their idolatrous Countrey, in the yeere 942. not ſtaying for a generall Councell.

Damianus a Goes de mor b. Æthiop. 2 For the South Church, David Emperour of Æthiopia thus profeſſeth in an Epiſtle written to the Biſhop of Rome, anno 1524. Prædeceſſores mei nulla alia ope adjuti, quàm divina, &c. My Predeceſſors being aſſiſted by none other than the divine help, have propagated the faith in their large Kingdomes, which I alſo ſtill endevour to doe, &c. Which faith he there ſheweth to have beene continued amongſt them without any alteration, ever ſince the converſion of the Eunuch: by Philip, who returning home baptized the Queene, and preached the faith. This great Emperour ſtayed not for a generall Councell to reforme his Countrey.

Harmon. of confeſſ. ſect. 19. Confeſſ. of Sweveland in concluſ. 3 Thus alſo the Church of Sweveland ſupplicateth to the Emperour of Germany, If ſo be that in time we may not have opportunitie for a generall Councell, yet at the leaſt your Majeſtie may appoint a provinciall aſſembly &c.

4 Neither doe the Romaniſts themſelves hold generall Councels ſo neceſſarie, ſeeing the Pope hath diſcontinued that decree of the Councell of Conſtance, for the holding of generall Councels everie tenth yeere. I will alſo urge againſt them a teſtimony of one of their Popes, Decret. part. 2. cauſ. 24. qu. 1. cap. 2. Gelaſius: Sabellius was condemned by a Synod, neither was it neceſſarie afterward for the condemnation of his followers, ſeverally to celebrate or ſolemnize Synods. Wherefore Synods are not in everie caſe neceſſarie now: we may inſiſt and reſt upon the decrees of the ancient Synods agreeable to Gods word.

The ſecond Queſtion, By whoſe authoritie Councels ought to be called.

The Papiſts.

30. Error. THey doe generally hold that generall Councels ought onely to bee called and appointed by the Popes authoritie, or his aſſignement: ſome of their reaſons are theſe.

Matth. 18. 20. Argum. 1. Councels ought to be congregate in the name of Chriſt, that is, by him that hath authoritie from Chriſt ſo to congregate them: Matth. 18. Bellarm. lib. 1. de Concil. cap. 12. Anſwer. See here is a goodly expoſition, to aſſemble in the name of Chriſt, is to aſſemble by the authoritie of the Pope: ſo belike where Chriſt ſaith, whereſoever two or three are gathered together in my name, &c. Chriſt will not be preſent with them, unleſſe we ſend up to Rome for licence that two or three may come together.

Then are Councels aſſembled in Chriſts name, when they ſuffer themſelves and their actions to be governed by the Spirit of God ſpeaking in the Scripture. But who ſhall be Judge (ſaith Bellarmine) whether Councels are ruled by the word of God, for both Papiſts and Proteſtants alleage Scripture for their decrees in Councels: wherefore this point is yet left uncertaine, unleſſe we doe referre this matter, of calling and judging of Councels to the Pope, that hath received that authoritie from Chriſt. Anſwer. 1. The Scriptures themſelves ſhall be Judges, whoſe decrees are agreeable to Scripture: they need not any ſuperiour Judge. And whatſoever our adverſaries ſay for their decrees, it is certaine, the moſt of them are not grounded upon Scripture: nay it is their doctrine, that the Scriptures containe not all things neceſſarie concerning faith and manners: this one opinion ſheweth how well the reſt of their decrees agree with Scripture. 2 We deny that the Pope hath received any ſuch authoritie from Chriſt, as ſhall afterwards appeare: I marvell then that the Jeſuite will ſtill preſſe us with that point that is in queſtion betweene us.

Argum. 2. Generall Councels ſhould be appointed by them that have generall authoritie to command men to come to the Councell: but this authoritie over the whole Church never any Emperour had, in ſuch ample manner as the Pope hath: Ergo. Anſwer. Firſt, it is a great untruth, that the Popes ſpirituall juriſdiction which he falſly challengeth, was at any time greater than the Emperours dominion; for Conſtantine ruled over both the Weſt and Eaſt Churches: but the Churches of Greece were never, nor are not to this day ſubject to the See of Rome. For Pope Eugenius would have diſſolved the Councell of Baſil under this pretence, becauſe the Greekes which ſhould come unto the Councell for the uniting of their Church, would not paſſe the Alpes: but this uniting never went forward, an. 1431. Againe, if the commandement of one Emperour or Potentate bee not large enough to appoint a generall Councell, as in theſe dayes it is not, it may be done by the conſent and agreement of Princes.

Argum. 3. Provinciall Councels are aſſigned and ſummoned by Metropolitans in their Provinces, and nationall by Primates or Patriarkes: therefore generall Councels muſt alſo be ſummoned by the Pope; for as the Metropolitan is to his Province, the Biſhop to his Dioceſſe: ſo is the Pope to the univerſall Church, Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. 1. It followeth not, that the Pope may doe that in the univerſall Church, which is lawfull for the Metropolitan in his Province, or a Biſhop in his Dioceſſe: As it is no good conſequent, there may be a Monarch over one or two Kingdomes: Ergo, alſo over all the world: for why ſhould there be one Eccleſiaſticall Prince rather over the univerſall Church, than one civill Magiſtrate over all the world?

2 We deny that it belongeth to Metropolitans or Primates in their Provinces to appoint provinciall Councels, for eſtabliſhing Eccleſiaſticall Lawes: but that it appertaineth of right to the Princes and Dukes in their Seigniories. Neither is the Convocation of the Clergie in England ſummoned without the Princes authoritie: neither any decree made to ſtand in force without the royall aſſent. As for the Synods, Scenes, Viſitations and ſuch like of Metropolitans, Biſhops, Archdeacons in their ſeverall juriſdictions, they are for another end; not to enact new Eccleſiaſticall Lawes, but to ſee to the execution onely of them which are already enacted.

The Proteſtants.

WE hold it as a fond and unreaſonable aſſertion, that generall Councels ſhould be ruled at the Popes becke, but that this authoritie is due, and hath beene of old unto Chriſtian Princes and Magiſtrates, and the Pope in ſo doing doth but uſurp upon their right.

Argum. 1. That the Pope hath not abſolute authoritie to call, remove diſſolve, or eſtabliſh Councels, it is proved out of Scripture: for Act. 6. 2. the twelve Apoſtles, and not Peter onely, whoſe ſucceſſour the Pope doth falſly challenge to bee, called the multitude together about the election of Deacons.

Act. 6. 2.

Argum. 2. The Councels in times paſt were ſummoned by the Emperours, which our adverſaries themſelves cannot deny, as the Nicene firſt, by Conſtantine the great: Conſtantinopolitane 1. by Theodoſius the elder. Epheſin. 1. by Theodoſius the younger: Chalcedonenſ. by Martianus. But, ſay our adverſaries, theſe Councels were not appointed without the conſent of the Biſhops of Rome. I marvell they are not aſhamed ſo to ſay: for when Theodoſius called the Councell of Chalcedon, Leo then Biſhop of Rome, neither liked the time, for he would have had it deferred; nor the place, being deſirous to have it in Italy: yet he was content to obey the Emperours commandement, and ſent his Agents to the Councell there to appeare for him: Epiſt. 31. 34. ad Martianum: This was alleaged by Tunſtall and Stokeſlie, two Archpapiſts, in their Epiſtle to Cardinall Poole.

It ſeemeth therefore to be a meere forgerie, that Gelaſius writeth, Epiſtol. ad Epiſcop. Dardaniæ, Authoritate ut Synodus Chalcedonenſ. fieret, ſola decrevit apoſtolica ſedes: The Apoſtolike See by it ſole authoritie decreed, that the Councell ſhould be holden at Chalcedon: for firſt Leo miſliked the time; Epiſcopali Synodo Imperator nimium breve & anguſtum tempus indixit, Epiſtol. 13. The Emperour hath ſet too ſhort a time for the Councell. Secondly, he would have had the Councell removed into Italy: Omnes ſacerdotes cum lachrymis manſuetudini veſtræ ſupplicant, ut generalem ſynodum jubeatis intra Italiam celebrari, Epiſtol. ad Imperator. 23. All the Clergie with teares doth beſeech your clemencie, that you would command a generall Synod to be kept in Italy: to the ſame effect he writeth to Theodoſius, Epiſtol. 31. and to Pulcheria Auguſta, Epiſtol. 34. For all this ſuit, the Emperour would not condeſcend to have the Councell in Italy: but whereas he had ſummoned it to be kept at Nice, he from thence removeth it to Chalcedon, whither alſo hee ſendeth for Leo himſelfe to come, who excuſeth himſelfe for not comming, by reaſon of other great lets, yet ſendeth his Legates in his place, Epiſtol. Leon, 13. It appeareth then that Leo at this time wanted of his will, and was overruled by the Emperour, as it was good reaſon, to whom the ſoveraigne right of ſummoning Councels did onely appertaine.

Bellarmine granteth that theſe ancient Councels were congregate by the Emperours, yet the right was in the Pope ſtill: hee rendreth two reaſons why the Emperours authoritie was then requiſite: firſt becauſe, although it belongeth to the Pope to call Councels, yet he cannot gather the aſſemblies in any Citie or convenient place, without the leave and conſent of the Lord of the ſoile: as if now a Councell ſhould bee appointed by the Pope, and ſome place aſſigned for it, in Germany, France, or Spaine, the conſent of the Lord of the Citie muſt firſt be required.

Anſwer. Firſt, the matter is then come to this iſſue: the Pope cannot call a Councell without the leave of the civill Magiſtrate, but may be by him letted from his purpoſe: but the Prince may call his ſubjects together, and aſke the Pope no leave; neither is the Pope able to reſiſt his proceedings: I pray you which of theſe hath the beſt right, and the moſt ſoveraigne power to congregate theſe great aſſemblies?

Secondly, if the Pope hath received authoritie from Chriſt, as you ſay, to proclaime and ſummon generall Councels: what reaſon is there that Chriſt ſhould wait upon earthly Governours, and aske their leave, to have his ordinance take place? Nay, if Chriſt had entitled the Pope with any ſuch matter, he would both have given him power ſufficient, and all helps and meanes requiſite, to effect and accompliſh his holy, ſovereigne, and puiſſant commiſſion.

Bellarmines ſecond reaſon, why the Emperours authoritie is not now ſo needfull as it was then: becauſe in thoſe dayes they were Lords of the world, and the Pope did ſubject himſelfe to the Emperour in temporall matters: But now the Pope is a temporall Prince in his owne Seigniorie, as any of the reſt are.

Anſwer. 1. Yea, but unleſſe the Pope were a temporall Prince over all the Chriſtian world, as the Emperours were, the Jeſuite hath anſwered nothing: If he be a Prince in his owne Territorie, let him meddle with his owne ſubjects, to call them together at his pleaſure; but what is this to generall Councels? Secondly, doe ye then confeſſe that the Pope was then a ſubject to the Emperour, but ſo he is not now: that then he was no temporall Prince, as now he is? Why maſters, what juggling is this? If it be Saint Peters patrimony which now the Pope hath, why hath he not alwayes had right unto it? And why ſhould the Popes now challenge more than their predeceſſors, ſeeing they would beare us in hand that by perpetuall ſucceſſion, even from S. Peter, they can fetch the juriſdiction of Popes both ſpirituall and temporall.

Argum. 3. It is a good reaſon which was alleaged in the Councell of Baſil, that if Popes onely ſhould call Councels, there ſhould be no meanes left to withſtand a wicked and vicious Pope. Who would thinke (ſay they) that the Biſhop of Rome would congregate a Councell for his owne correction, or depoſition?

Act.21.18.

Pag.621.2.60.

Argum. 4. The Pope hath no more authoritie, nor by their leave, nothing like as Peter had: but he challenged not this dignitie amongſt the Apoſtles, to ſummon Councels. We read of foure onely Councels of the Apoſtles, ſay the Fathers of Baſil (for this alſo is their argnment) the firſt was for the chooſing of Matthias, Act. 1. congregate at the commandement of Chriſt, who enjoyned them not to depart from Jeruſalem. The ſecond, Act. 6. congregate by the twelve, not Peter onely, for the election of Decons. The third, which was holden as touching the taking away of Circumciſion, and other ceremonies of the Law, was gathered together by a generall inſpiration, Act. 15.6. The fourth, wherein certaine things contained in the Law are permitted, ſeemeth to be gathered by James, Act. 21.18. Upon theſe reaſons the Councell thus concludeth: That if the Pope would reſiſt, and have no Councell congregate; yet if the greater part of the Church doe judge it neceſſarie to have a Councell, the Councell may bee congregate, whether the Pope will or not, Ex Ænea Sylvio, Fox pag. 676. col. 2.

Auguſtine ſaith, Catholicos Epiſcopos & partis Donati juſſu Imperatoris diſputando inter ſe contuliſſe, Brevicul. collation. lib. 1 cap. 1. That the Catholike Biſhops and the Donatiſts did meet together, to diſpute at the commandement of the Emperour: There were in that Councell, wich was at Carthage, of the Catholike Biſhops 286. and of the Donatiſts 279.

Nilus lib.2.de primat.

Wee have alſo further evidence. 1 Nilus ſhall ſpeake for the Greeke Church, who giveth inſtance of the firſt, third, & fourth generall Councels, which were aſſembled by the Imperiall decree, as in the firſt Nicene the Chriſtian Biſhops aſſembled, do profeſſe that the grace of God, &c. Κωνςαντῖνος συναγείρας, and Conſtantine gathered them together. The Epheſine Councell thus writeth to the Emperours, Theodoſius and Valentinian: The Synod was gathered together by the grace of God, καὶ νεύματι τοῦ ὑμετέρου κράτους, and by the becke of your power: ſo in the ſubſcription of the Chalcedon Councell, they acknowledge it was gathered together by the grace of God, and κατὰ θέσπισμα, &c. and by the decree of their moſt Chriſtian Kings.

Nilus lib.2.de primat.

Damianus a Goes de morib Æthio.

2 The ſame is the judgement of the South Church: for in the ſixth generall Synod at Conſtantinople, which was congregate by the Emperour Conſtantinus, as appeareth in the firſt action of that Synod, then was preſent one Petrus Presbyter of Alexandria, ſupplying the place of the Apoſtolike See there, who ſubſcribed unto the acts of the Councell. And at this day the Emperour of Æthiopia ſtileth himſelfe Columna fidei, the pillar and propagator of the faith, as is extant in the ſecond Epiſtle of the Emperour David ſent to the Biſhop of Rome: to whom elſe then ſhould it belong to congregate Councels for the propagation of the faith, than to him who is the chiefe pillar and propagator of the faith.

Confeſſ. Suevia in concluſ.

3 And of this opinion alſo are other reformed Churches: as they of Sweveland thus ſupplicate unto the Emperour, That you would procure that as ſpeedily as may be, a generall, true, and Chriſtian Councell may be ſummoned, &c.

Cuſanus Concord. Cathol. lib.2.c.15.

4 And of the Romane Church, Cardinall Cuſanus confeſſeth, that the eight generall Councels, per Imperatores congregabantur, were congregate by the Emperours, and that the Biſhop of Rome, as well as other Patriarkes, did receive the Imperiall monitions for comming or ſending to the Councell, &c.

Laſtly, we have the determination of two Popiſh Councels againſt them, Concil. Conſt. ſeſſ. 1. It was decreed, that the going away of the Pope ſhould bee no let or ſtay, but the Councell might proceed. So Pope Eugenius would have diſſolved the Councell of Baſil, but the Councell cited him to appeare by himſelfe or his Legates, under a great penaltie.

By this it appeareth, that the Pope hath no right to call, continue, or diſſolve generall Councels.

We have alſo their owne Decrees againſt them, Decret. part. 1. diſt. 15. cap. 1. The Nicene Councell was peracted under Conſtantinus, the ſecond generall at Conſtantinople was aſſembled under Theodoſius the elder, &c. that is, by their authoritie: Et diſt. 16. cap. 6. The ſixth Synod Conſtantinus the Emperour congregated.

The third Queſtion, Of what perſons the Councell ought to conſiſt.

The Papiſts.

WHereas there are foure ſorts of men uſually preſent at Councels, the Princes and Magiſtrates, 31. Error. Biſhops and inferiour Miniſters and Prieſts, and other Lay-people: of all theſe, Biſhops (they ſay) onely muſt have a deciding or determining voice: Prieſts and other learned may diſpute and have a conſultative voice: Princes are there to defend the Councell, and ſee order kept; other of the Laitie may bee there as officers and miniſters, as Scribes and Notaries: but the ſuffrages and voices muſt onely be given by Biſhops, Eckius loc. de concil. Bellarm. de concil. lib. 1. cap. 15. Let us ſee ſome of their reaſons.

Firſt, to teach and to feed is proper for the Paſtors only, and to eſtabliſh and decree in Councels, is nothing elſe but to feed and teach: Ergo, Paſtors only muſt rule in Councell: which none are but Biſhops: Soli Epiſcopi paſtores ſunt (ſaith the Jeſuite) neque laici neque eccleſiaſtici quicunque: Only Biſhops are Paſtors, and none other of the Clergie beſides: And to them only, he ſaith, that is to be applyed, Act. 20. Take heed to your ſelves, and the flock over the which God hath made you overſeers. Act. 20. 28.

I anſwer: Firſt, what an abſurd ſaying is this and void of ſenſe, that the Biſhop is the onely Paſtor of his Dioceſſe, and that everie Miniſter is not Paſtor in his owne pariſh? Nay, if the Jeſuite would ſpeake truth, he ſhall finde that popiſh Biſhops are neither Paſtors nor Doctors, for the moſt of them neither feed nor teach; and they be not aſhamed to profeſſe it. Anno 1540, or thereabout, Thomas Forret Martyr, being found fault withall by the Biſhop of Dunkelden in Scotland, becauſe hee preached ſo oft, exhorted the Biſhop againe, and wiſhed that he did preach. The Biſhop anſwered: Nay, nay, let that be, we are not ordained to preach. And in further talke the blinde blockiſh Biſhop bewrayed his owne ignorance, I thanke God (ſaith he) that I never knew what the old and new Teſtament was. Thereupon roſe a common proverb in Scotland, You are like the Biſhop of Dunkelden, that knew neither the old nor new Law: Fox Martyrol. pag. 1266. col. 2. Pag. 1153. & 70.

With this blinde ſaying of the popiſh Biſhop, our Countrey-men of Rhemes alſo doe agree, which doubt not to ſay, that many which have no gift to preach, yet for their wiſdome and government, are not unmeet to be Paſtors and Biſhops: Annot. in 1 Tim. 5. ſect. 13.

2 I anſwer, the Jeſuite bewrayeth his ignorance, in making no difference betweene communis, and propria politia Eccleſia, the common and ſpeciall policie and office of the Church: for there are proper offices and duties, ſome of Paſtors, ſome of Governours, ſome of other Miniſters: but this office to bee performed in generall Councels, is not proper to Paſtors, but common to the whole Church: whereupon we deny, that it is proprium paſtorum munus, ſuffragia ferre in conciliis, the proper dutie of Paſtors, to give voices and make decrees in Councels.

3 By the Jeſuites argument, the Fathers of Baſil doe conclude cleane contrarie out of that place, Epheſ 4. Ephes. 4. 12. That becauſe Chriſt inſtituted not only Apoſtles and Prophets, but Paſtors and Teachers for the worke of the Miniſterie, who doubteth (ſay they) but that the governance alſo of the Church is committed unto others together with the Apoſtles? And hence they inferre, becauſe the worke of the Miniſterie is laid upon the reſt of the Clergie, that therefore they ought not to bee excluded from Councels.

4 That place, Act. 20. urged by the Jeſuite, is otherwiſe expounded by S. Hierome: Ad unius Eccleſia ſacerdotes ita Paulus loquitur, &c. Paul thus ſpeaketh to the Miniſters of one Church, calling them all Biſhops: whom before, verſ. 17. hee calleth Presbyters or Prieſts: And from this place hee concludeth, that in the Apoſtles time there was no difference betweene a Biſhop and a Prieſt: Hieron. Evagrio.

Argum. 2. Secondly, Panormitane in the Councell of Baſil thus reaſoneth for Biſhops: That they were the pillars and keyes of Heaven, and therefore had only deciding voices. Unto him anſwered at that time the wiſe and couragious Cardinall Arelatenſis, ſhewing Auguſtines judgement upon thoſe words (I will give thee the keyes of Heaven) that the judiciall power was given not only to Peter, but alſo to the other Apoſtles, and to the whole Church, the Biſhops, the Prieſts. Whereupon he inferreth, that if the Prieſts have a judiciall power in the Church, they alſo ought to have a determining voice in Councels.

Argum. 3. Thirdly, Lodovicus the Prothonotarie in the ſame Councell thus argued: Albeit (ſaith he) Chriſt choſe twelve Apoſtles and 70. Diſciples, notwithſtanding in the ſetting forth of the Creed, only the Apoſtles were preſent; thereby giving example, that matters of faith did pertaine only to the Apoſtles, and ſo conſequently to Biſhops. To him Arelatenſis made this anſwer: Firſt, it followed not becauſe the Apoſtles only are named, that they therefore onely were preſent at the ſetting forth of the Creed: for we ſee that Princes beare the name & commendation of many actions, which are done notwithſtanding by their helpers. Secondly, Lodovicus cannot be ignorant (ſaith hee) that there be ſome articles in the Creed, which were not put to by the Apoſtles, but afterward by generall Councels: as that part wherein mention is made of the Holy Ghoſt, which the Councell of Lyons did adde. Thus much out of the Councell of Baſil.

The Proteſtants Confeſſion.

OUr opinion grounded upon truth and Scripture is this: that not only Biſhops, but all other Paſtors admitted to the Councell, and the learned and diſcreet amongſt the Lay-men, ought to have concluding voyces in Councell: and that rather the diſcuſſing and conſulting of matters pertaineth to the learned Divines, the deciding to all, than contrariwiſe.

Argum. 1. Firſt, that inferiour Paſtors are to be joyned with Biſhops and Prelates, it was amply proved in the Councell of Baſil, of the which I have ſo often made mention, as noble Arelatenſis reaſoneth thus: The dignitie of the Fathers is not to be reſpected, but the truth: neither will I prefer a lye of any Biſhop, be he never ſo rich, before a veritie or a truth of a poore Prieſt. This is his firſt reaſon, that the truth ought to be received at any mans mouth, be he never ſo ſimple: and therefore Prieſts as well as Biſhops are to be admitted to the Councell.

Argum. 2. He declareth the ancient practice of the Church: In the Councell of Nice, where there were aſſembled 322. Biſhops, Athanaſius being then onely a Prieſt, withſtood the Arrians, and infringed their arguments. In the Synod of Chalcedon, there were preſent ſix hundred Prieſts, which name is common both to Biſhops and Prieſts. When Paul Biſhop of Antioch preached that Chriſt was a man of common nature: the Councell aſſembled againſt him at Antioch, where the ſaid Paul was condemned: neither was there any man which did more confound the ſaid Paul, than one Malchion Prieſt of Antioch, which taught Rhetorike there.

Act.15.22.

Concerning the ſecond part, that Lay-men alſo with Prieſts ought to be admitted: firſt wee have teſtimony out of the word of God for it, *Tit.*3.13. For this cauſe Zenas the Lawyer is joyned as fellow in commiſſion with Apollos. But we have a more evident place, *Act.*15.22. It ſeemed good to the Apoſtles and Elders with the whole Church. Here we ſee that not only the Elders but the whole multitude were admitted into conſultation with the Apoſtles. To this place our adverſaries doe thus anſwer: Lodovicus the Prothonotarie firſt thus raſhly and fondly gave his verdict in the Councell of Baſil, that there was no argument to be gathered of the Acts of the Apoſtles, whoſe examples were more to be marvelled at, than to be followed. But to this Arelatenſis replyed, that he would ſtay himſelfe moſt upon the Apoſtles doings: for what (ſaith he) is more comely for us to follow, than the doctrine and cuſtomes of the Primitive Church? And Æneas Silvius reporteth (who writeth of the acts of that Councell) that all men impugned this ſaying of Lodovicus, that the Apoſtles were not to be followed, as a blaſphemie.

Wherefore the Jeſuite hath found out another anſwer; hee ſaith that none but the Apoſtles gave ſentence, the reſt only gave conſent, and inward liking and approbation. This cavill Arelatenſis met withall long before the Jeſuite was borne, in the forenamed Councell. Neither this word, ſaith hee, It ſeemed good, ſignifieth in this place conſultation, but deciſion and determination. And ſo it doth indeed, for ſeeing there is one word applyed to them all, ἔδοξε, placuit, it ſeemed good to the Apoſtles, Elders, and the whole multitude, why ſhould it not be taken in the one and ſelfe ſame ſenſe, and after the ſame manner underſtood of them all?

Argum. 2. Seeing the Councell doth repreſent the whole Church, there ought to be preſent and to give ſentence of all ſorts and callings of men: and the rather, becauſe the matter of faith and religion is a common cauſe, and as well appertaineth to Lay-men as to Biſhops, it behoveth them alſo to be preſent. And further, it were more reaſonable that Princes and temporall Magiſtrates ſhould binde their ſubjects to their lawes, without their conſent, than that eccleſiaſticall perſons ſhould lay yokes upon Chriſtians againſt their wils, for civill matters are more indifferent and left to our choice than ſpirituall are: Yet we ſee there are no lawes enacted in our Realme, but by the high Court of Parliament, where alwayes ſome are appointed for the Commons, even the whole nether houſe, without whoſe conſent no act can paſſe. So it were verie reaſonable, that no law ſhould bee laid upon the Church, without the generall conſent thereof.

Thirdly, Auguſtines judgement we heard before alleaged by Arelatenſis, that ſeeing the judiciall power of the keyes is committed to the whole Church, to Biſhops, to Prieſts, they all ought to be entertained in generall Councels.

Laſtly, that not only Biſhops, but other alſo of the Clergie have determining voyces in Councell, wee have the conſent of antiquitie. In the Councell of Antioch aſſembled againſt Samoſatenus, the whole Synod writeth thus: Epiſcopi, presbyteri, & diaconi dilectiſſimis fratribus in Domino ſalutem: The Biſhops, Prieſts, and Deacons, to our beloved brethren in the Lord, greeting. And in their Epiſtle they write thus: Neceſſarium eſt viſum, hunc reſiſtentem Deo, neque acquieſcentem vera fidei abjici, &c. It ſeemed neceſſarie to us, that this fellow enemie to God, and not obedient to the truth, to be cut off: They all both Elders and Deacons gave conſent to his condemnation.

Aquiſgranenſ. ſub Lodovico: Cœtus venerabilium præſulum, & ſequentis ordinis religioſorum ſacerdotum dotum ſynodaliter congregatum: The aſſembly of the reverend Prelates, and of the next order, of the devout Prieſts, being councellike aſſembled together, &c.

Chalcedonenſ. action. 1. Orientales Clerici unà cum Epiſcopis clamarunt, Flavianus in propria loco quare non ſedet? The Clergie of the Eaſt parts together with the Biſhops cried out, Why doth not Flavianus ſit in his proper place? This Flavianus Patriarch of Conſtantinople, was diſgraced in the hereticall Councell, Epheſin. 2. and thruſt downe to the fifth place: and therefore in this Catholike Councell, the Clergie thus cried out: then the Egyptians together with Dioſcorus the Eutychian heretike, cried againe, Imperator Epiſcopos vocavit, Synodus Epiſcoporum eſt, ſuperflui quare clamant? The Emperour hath called the Biſhops together, the Synod conſiſteth of Biſhops, theſe fellowes are ſuperfluous. Theſe heretikes were the firſt that tooke exception againſt the voice of ſimple Prieſts in Councell, calling them ſuperfluous.

We have alſo here further evidence. 1 Nilus ſhall ſpeake for the Greeke Church, who thus writeth, ſpeaking of the acts of Councels, οἳ ἐν τοῖς κοινοῖς τῆς πίστεως λόγοις, κοινὴν ποιοῦνται τὴν ζήτησιν: which in matters belonging to the common faith, did make a common inquiſition, that is, required the ſentence of all. The ſame Author alſo alleageth out of the 11. action of the ſixth Synod, how Conſtantinus an Archdeacon (no Biſhop) did ſubſcribe among the reſt to the acts of that Synod.

Nilus lib. 1. de primat.

2 The ſame was the cuſtome of the South Church, as appeareth in the ſubſcription of the ſeventh Synod, where Ioannes a Presbyter of Alexandria, called πατριαρχικὸς ζωάστρος, an aſſiſtant to the Patriarke was preſent, and ſubſcribed. And at this day the Patriarke of Ethiopia hath twelve Eccleſiaſticall perſons his aſſiſtants (which are not required to be Biſhops) in the government of the Church and Eccleſiaſticall affaires.

Titelman. de fide & morib. Æthiop. in fine.

3 So alſo other reformed Churches require the preſence as well of other learned men, as of Biſhops: as the Church of Sueveland thus ſupplicateth to the Emperour, that his ſacred Majeſtie would appoint a provinciall aſſembly, as they call it, of the learned men of everie degree and ſtate whereunto all, for whom it is expedient to be preſent, may freely and ſafely reſort, everie man may be heard, &c. And againe a little after: that all the beſt learned, and moſt godly men being called together, they may finde out of the divine Scriptures, what is to be thought of everie point of doctrine, &c.

Confeſſ. Suev. in concluſion. Harm. p. 602.

4 Concerning the Latine, beſide the judgement of the Councell of Baſil, before alleaged thorowout this queſtion, long before that it was the uſe for Presbyters, as well as Biſhops, to give voice in Councels, as in the Romane Councell under Pope Hilarie, in the laſt Canon, where it was propounded, that no Biſhop ſhould appoint his ſucceſſor, but that he ſhould be elected. Ab univerſis Epiſcopis & Presbyteris acclamatum eſt: An acclamation was made by all the Biſhops and Prieſts, ex citation. Eſpenc. in 1 Timoth. p. 371. c.

And leſt it ſhould be ſaid, that the Prieſts did not ſit as Judges, but only to adviſe and diſcuſſe matters, I will anſwer them out of their owne Decrees; Decret. p. 1. diſt. 23. c. 1. In the Laterane Councell under Nicholaus 2. this report is made, Conſidentibus reverendiſſ. Epiſcopis, Abbatibus, Presbyteris, &c. While the reverend Biſhops, Abbots, and Prieſts did ſit, &c. Nicholaus began thus, &c. they all therefore did ſit as Judges. And yet more evidently, diſt. 95. c. 6. Presbyteri ab initio negotiorum judices eſſe mandati ſunt, & intereſſe ſacerdotum concilio: Prieſts in the beginning were appointed to be the Judges of the affaires of the Church, and to be preſent in Councels, &c. Marke this, they muſt be preſent as Judges.

As touching alſo the preſence of grave and wiſe men of the Laitie in Councels, wee have the practice and examples of former times. In the Chalcedon Councell there were preſent 7. noble Earles, appointed as Judges, Anatolius, Palladius, Tacianus, Vincomalus, with the reſt, and ten noble Senators, Florentius, Naurius, Protogenes, with others.

Toletan. 6. cap. 3. Conſonam cum rege, corde & ore promulgamus ſententiam, ſimul etiam cum ſuorum optimatum, & illuſtrium virorum conſenſu ſancimus, &c. Wee decree our ſentence, in heart and voice according with our Prince, and together with the conſent of his Nobles, we doe enact, &c. Here the Eccleſiaſticall and Civill State decree in Councell together.

We have alſo a moſt cleere teſtimony even of a Pope himſelfe: Nichol. 1. Epiſtol. ad Michaelem Imperatorem. Vbinam legis Imperatores anteceſſores veſtros in ſynodalibus conventibus interfuiſſe, niſi forſitan, in quibus de fide tractatum eſt, quæ univerſalis eſt, quæ omnium communis eſt, quæ non ſolum ad Clericos, verùm ad Laicos, & ad omnes omnino pertinet Chriſtianos? Where, I pray you, doe you read that the Emperors your predeceſſors were preſent in Synods, but where they treated of faith, which is common to all, and doth not only concerne the Clergie, but Lay-men alſo, and generally all Chriſtians? Ergo, of matters of faith Lay-men may together with ſpirituall perſons conſult in Councels.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that Pope Nicholas is ſo to be underſtood, that the Emperour may bee preſent not as a Judge, but onely as one to defend the faith by good lawes, and where need is with the ſword.

Contra. But the Emperour Martian ſaith otherwiſe in his Oration in the Chalcedon Councell: Nos ad confirmandam fidem, non ad oſtendendam virtutem, &c. Wee by the example of Conſtantine thinke good to be preſent in the Synod, to confirme the faith, not to ſhew our power, &c. But the Jeſuite ſaith, to ſhew his power, and uſe his ſword.

The

The fourth Queſtion, Who ought to be the Preſident and chiefe Moderator in Councels.

The Papiſts.

WIth one whole conſent they all agree and hold, that the Pope only ought to have the chiefe place in Councels, either himſelfe in his owne perſon, or elſe his Legates and Deputies for him, and that as ſupreme Judge hee ſhould moderate all things, Bellarmine cap.19. they reaſon thus.

Iohn 21.15. 1 The Pope is the chiefe Paſtor of the univerſall Church: for unto Peter onely it was ſaid, Paſce oves meas, Feed my ſheepe, and he is called and ſaluted in Councels by the name of father: and all other both Princes and Biſhops are ſheepe in reſpect of him, Bellarm. cap. 19.

We anſwer: firſt, in the Jeſuites argument there is petitio principii, a begging of that which is in queſtion: for yet hee hath not proved that the Pope is the univerſall Paſtor. Secondly, that place, Feed my ſheepe, proveth it not: Auguſtine ſaith, Redditur negationi trina trina confeſſio: ne minus amori lingua ſerviat, quàm timori: In Iohan. tract.123. He recompenceth a threefold deniall with a threefold confeſſion, leſt that his tongue ſhould be leſſe ſerviceable to love than it was to feare. So then, by this fathers judgement, it was no privilege to Peter to be thrice admoniſhed, but he is thereby put in minde of his thrice deniall of Chriſt. Againe, I marvell the Jeſuite can ſo ſoone forget himſelfe: for in the fifteenth chapter afore, hee proved by theſe words (Feed my ſheepe) that Biſhops only were Paſtors; and he can now turne the words to ſerve only for the Pope. Thirdly, what great matter is it for the Pope to be called father, ſeeing hee is not ignorant that all Biſhops aſſembled in Councell and other learned, are called by that name? Nay, it is no rare matter for other Biſhops to bee ſaluted by the name of Pope: as Proſper writing to Auguſtine, twice in one Epiſtle calleth him, beatiſſimum Papam, moſt bleſſed Pope, Tom 7. Princes and Biſhops to the Pope are ſheepe, ſaith the Jeſuite. Firſt, for Biſhops, though he had a juriſdiction over all, which it will be hard for him to prove, yet ſhall they bee no more his ſheepe, than Prieſts are to Biſhops, and Biſhops to their Metropolitans, who cannot be ſaid to be their ſheepe, though they have ſome preeminence over them: for Auguſtines rule muſt ſtand; Nemo ſe noſtrum Epiſcopum Epiſcoporum conſtituit. de Baptiſ. 2. 2. No man is a Biſhop of Biſhops, nor Shepherd of Shepherds. Secondly, for Princes hee hath nothing to doe with any but thoſe in his owne Biſhoprick: and as they are his ſheepe one way, as they are taught of him; ſo hee and his Cardinals are the Magiſtrates ſheepe another way, and in reſpect of the civil government he is their Shepherd: And both he and they, Prince and Prieſt are ſheepe-fellowes, under Jeſus Chriſt the chiefe Shepherd: as Auguſtine ſaith, Tanquam vobis paſtores ſumus, ſed ſub illo paſtore vobiſcum oves ſumus: in Pſal.126. We are Shepherds to you, but both you and I are ſheepe under that great Shepherd.

Argum. 2. Peter was Preſident in the Councell of the Apoſtles, Act. 15. Ergo, the Pope ought to be now, Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, S. Iames ſeemeth rather to have beene Preſident there than S. Peter, and to have determined the matter in queſtion: firſt, becauſe S. Iames ſpeaketh laſt, S. Peter firſt: and the laſt place is commonly given to the moderator or determiner. Secondly, S. Iames, when hee had ſpoken, concludeth thus: verſ.19. wherefore my ſentence is, &c. he determineth and giveth ſentence: whereas Saint Peter ſaith not ſo, my ſentence is, as a moderator, but rather as a perſwader and counſellor: Now therefore, why tempt ye God? &c. verſ.10. Thirdly, it is confeſſed by our adverſaries, that S. Iames was Biſhop at Jeruſalem, and therefore was moſt like to bee the chiefe, if any were, in his owne juriſdiction. Acts 11.10.19.

But we affirme neither of theſe to have had any ſuch preeminence above the other, to be the Preſident and chiefe Judge, or to have an overruling voice: but that the matter was decided by an uniforme conſent of them all, being directed by the Holy Ghoſt: It ſeemed good to the Holy Ghoſt and us, verſ.28. Yet we grant, that Peter had for the moſt part a prioritie of ſpeaking for order ſake, as being the moſt ancient: as Act. 1. in the election of Matthias, and *Act.*2. when the Apoſtles had received the Holy Ghoſt hee ſpake firſt, and for the reſt: and thus much the Greekes confeſſe that they gave unto him, τὴν τοῦ πρῶτα λέγειν τιμὴν, the honour to ſpeake firſt: Bellarmine de Principat. cap.2. Yet it followeth not, that he had a negative, overruling, or approving voice, which prerogative the Romaniſts challenge to the Pope. Acts 15.28.

Secondly, though Peter had beene Preſident then, it followeth not that the Pope ſhould be now: for we deny the Pope to be Peters ſucceſſor, either in his Apoſtolike doctrine, or Apoſtolike office; as ſhall appeare when we come to that place.

Argum. 3. Bellarmine taketh upon him to prove that the Pope was Preſident by his Legates in the eight generall Councels, and maketh a particular induction of them all.

Anſw. But this argument rather maketh for us, as it followeth argum. 3. that becauſe the Pope was not Preſident in any of the eight generall Councels, therefore the Preſidentſhip belongeth not unto him: for in ſome of them the Pope was not preſent neither perſonally, nor by his Legates, as in the firſt of Conſtantinople, where Nectarius was Preſident: in ſome the Pope was reſiant in the citie, but not preſent in the Councell, as Vigilius was in Conſtantinople, what time the fifth generall Councell was there held: in ſome of them the Popes Legates were preſent, but they had not the chiefe or Preſidents place, as in the fourth generall Councell. But ſee more hereof afterward, argum. 3.

The Proteſtants.

WE doe truly affirme, that the ſovereigne Majeſtie of the Emperour and chiefe Magiſtrate, or his Legate, if he either be preſent himſelfe, or ſend, ought to bee Preſident of the Councell: or elſe in their abſence, one to be choſen and elected by the Councell for that function, as Cardinall Arelatenſis was choſen in the Councell of Baſil by the Fathers to be Moderator.

Argum. 1. Firſt, that it belongeth to the Prince to have this prerogative, it is hence proved, becauſe he is the chiefe Judge in all matters and cauſes, both Civill and Eccleſiaſticall: and it appeareth by the ancient practice of the godly Kings in Iſrael and Juda: David gathered a Councell together, when he brought the Arke to Jeruſalem, 1 Chron. 15 3. where he was the chiefe doer and director; for he appointed the Levites their courſes, and ſet forth a certaine forme of thankſgiving to be uſed, 1 Chron. 16. 4. 7. Hezekiah aſſembled a Councell, 2 Chron. 30. 2. where it was decreed that the Paſſeover ſhould be ſolemnely kept: and the poſts were ſent forth with the Kings writ or commiſſion. In Ioſiah his reigne there was a great aſſembly at Jeruſalem, of the Princes, the people, Prieſts and Levites, and all from the greateſt to the ſmalleſt: where the King himſelfe was Preſident and chiefe Agent, reading the Law before the people, 2 Chron. 34. 30. 31.

1 Chron. 15. 3.
1 Chron. 16.
2 Chron. 30. 2.
2 Chron. 32. 30.

Bellarmine anſwereth. 1. Theſe are extraordinarie examples: David and Salomon did deale in Eccleſiaſticall matters, not as Kings, but as Prophets.

Anſ. That David and Salomon were Prophets we grant, as by their propheticall writings may appeare: But for the reſt of the godly Kings of Juda, how is it likely that they were Prophets, ſeeing neither by word or writing they delivered any prophecies? Againe, the care of religion was neither in David, or the reſt, extraordinarie or propheticall: for how can that be extraordinarie, which was uſuall and commonly practiſed of all the religious Kings? And further, it was not the Prophets, but the Kings office to command their ſubjects to aſſemble together, as Hezekiah and Ioſiah did: for if it belonged to the Prophets, not to the Kings to aſſemble Councels, then Nathan, not David; Iſaia, not Hezekiah; Ieremias the Prophet, not Ioſias ſhould have called thoſe holy aſſemblies, which were ſummoned by theſe Kings. Laſtly, not onely theſe godly Kings of Judah tooke this upon them, but even the King of Ninive with the conſent of his Nobles did call a faſt, Ionas 3. 7. So properly is it incident to the Emperiall Crowne to take care of religion.

Ionas 3. 7.

Bellarmine. 2. We ſee that ſome of the Kings were puniſhed, for medling with the prieſtly affaires: for this cauſe Uzziah was ſtricken with leproſie, 2 Chron. 26. by this it appeareth, that it was extraordinarie in Kings to handle matters Eccleſiaſticall, Bellar. ibid. cap. 20.

2 Chron. 26. 20.

Anſw. Uzziah would have offered incenſe upon the Altar, which was only lawfull for the Prieſt, and therfore was worthily puniſhed. Neither doe we ſay that the Prince ought to deale with preaching of the Word, adminiſtring of the Sacraments, giving of orders, or ſuch like duties, which are properly incident to the Paſtors office: But concerning theſe duties of ſummoning Councels, and enacting Eccleſiaſticall lawes, and the commanding of all eſtates and perſons even in religious matters, we affirme that the right and power hereof is meerely civill, and belongeth properly to the civill Governour.

Argum. 2. Secondly, we finde that the Emperours themſelves have been preſent at Councels: as in the Nicene, Conſtantine the great was preſent; in the Councell of Chalcedon, Martianus: in the Conſtantinopolitane 3. Conſtantinus the Emperour; in the Conſtantinopolitane 4. Baſilius the Emperour was preſent. Is it to be thought that theſe noble Emperours were at the Councels as inferiours or underlings? or had they not the chiefe places? then ſure they were Preſidents: for in the Councell the chiefe place belongeth to the Preſident. They might appoint a ſpeaker or prolocutor for them, as in the Parliament houſe, though the Prince be preſent, yet the Lord Chancellor ſpeaketh: but the chiefe power and ſovereigntie in the Councell was in the Emperours.

Bellarmine here anſwereth by a diſtinction: Imperator non præſidebat concilio propriè ut judex, præſidebat ſaltem quo ad locum materialem: The Emperour was not Preſident in Councels properly as Judge, but only as chiefe in the place: And a little after he ſaith, Non tam ex loco, quam ſubſcriptione colligenda eſt præſidentia: The Preſidentſhip is not ſo much by the place to be knowne, as by the ſubſcription: de Concil. lib. 1. cap. 19.

Anſwer. Firſt, the Jeſuites diſtinction is nothing worth: for hath not alwayes the Judge in place of judgement the chiefeſt roome? ſeeing then the Preſident or Judge in Councels hath the ſupreme and chiefe authoritie, and to the higheſt perſon of right belongeth the higheſt place; how can it otherwiſe be, but that to whom the chiefeſt place in Synods was aſſigned, the Preſidentſhip alſo of right appertained?

Secondly, that the Emperours, and in their abſence their Legates, were Preſidents in Councels, not onely in reſpect of the higheſt place, but as Judges properly: we are able to juſtifie it by the ancient acts and monuments of antiquitie, Concil. Epheſin. Epiſtol. ad Theodoſium, rogamus clementiam tuam, ut per literas tuas pietatis ratum eſſe jubeas confirmeſque concilii decretum: The Councell writeth thus to the Emperour: We beſeech your clemencie that by your godly letters you would ratifie and confirme the decree of the Councell.

Martianus the Emperour in his Oration to the fourth generall Councell of Chalcedon ſpeaketh thus: Nos ad confirmandam fidem, non ad oſtendendam virtutem exemplo Conſtantini adeſſe Synodo cogitavimus: We not to ſhew our power, but to confirme the faith, have thought good, by Conſtantines example, to be preſent in the Synod, &c. To whom now (I pray you) did it belong to confirme and ratifie the Acts of Councels, but to the Judge and Preſident? but this did the Emperours. Ergo.

In the Chalcedon Councell, Action. 1. thus we finde Reſidentibus magnificis, & glorioſiſſimis judicibus in medio, &c. The moſt glorious and magnificent Judges ſitting in the middeſt, and on the left hand the reverend Biſhops, Paſcaſinus and Lucentius, Leo the Biſhop of Romes Deputies, and Anatolius Archbiſhop of Conſtantinople: and on the right hand, Dioſcorus Patriarch of Alexandria, &c. We ſee then that the Noble-men ſupplying the Emperours place, were Judges and Preſidents in this Councell, not ſo much becauſe of their ſeat, as for their authoritie: for whereas Paſcaſinus and Lucentius tooke exception againſt Dioſcorus, ſaying, Non ſedeat in Concilio, ſed audiendus intromittatur: Let him not ſit in the Councell as Judge, but come in to be heard and judged, &c. yet the noble Judges permitted it not.

3 That the Emperours were Preſidents, they or their Deputies in their name: wee prove it not only by their place in Councels, but by their ſubſcription, Concil. ſub Sylveſtr. cap. 20. Conſtantinus with his mother Helena ſubſcribed, Toletan. 3. Reccaredus the King, together with Badda the Queen ſubſcribed to the decrees of the Councell, Concil. 6. general. Conſtantinop. action. 18. Conſtantinus the Emperour ſubſcribed thus: Subſcriptio piiſſimi & Chriſto dilecti Conſtantini Imperatoris: The ſubſcription of the moſt devout and beloved of Chriſt Conſtantinus the Emperour.

Iuſtinianus the ſecond ſubſcribed to the decrees of the ſixth generall Synod aſſembled in Trullo. Wherefore if the Emperours had the chiefe place in generall Councels, and the greateſt authoritie, and by their royall conſent and ſubſcription confirmed the acts and decrees of Councels, why ſhould it be doubted that they were chiefe Preſidents in Councels, and ought of right ſo to be?

Argum. 3. As wee have ſhewed that Emperours or their Deputies were Preſidents in generall Councels; ſo with as eaſie labour can we make it plaine, that the Popes and Biſhops of Rome were not in their owne perſons, or by their Legates, Preſidents in any of the eight generall Councels.

In the firſt generall Councell Nicene, Euſtathius of Antioch was Preſident: ſo witneſſeth Felix Biſhop of Rome, Epiſtol. ad Zenonem Imperatorem.

Wherefore Bellarmine in ſaying, that Vitus and Vincentius the Biſhop of Romes Legates were the Preſidents, doth oppoſe himſelfe againſt the teſtimony of the Biſhop of Rome himſelfe, and giveth him the lye. Their owne decrees alſo thus teſtifie, decr. part. 1. diſt. 15. c. 3. Gelaſius, That the Nicene Synod was celebrate, Mediante Conſtantino: Conſtantinus the Emperour being the Mediator, or Moderator; and Euſtathius was his ſpeaker or prolocutor.

Conſtantinopol. 1. The ſecond generall Councell was celebrated under Nectarius, Patriarch of Conſtantinople; ſic patres Chalcedon. Synod. action. 16.

Here Bellarmine confeſſeth that neither the Pope, nor his Legates were preſent, but that Nectarius was Preſident: Ergo, by his owne confeſſion the Pope was not Preſident in this Councell: And whereas he ſaith the Emperour was not Preſident, it is contrarie to their owne decrees, decr. part. 1. diſt. 15. c. 3. Gelaſius, who affirmeth that the ſecond generall Synod was held at Conſtantinople: Mediante Theodoſio ſeniore: Theodoſius the elder being Mediator.

Epheſiæ Synodo ſanctæ memoriæ Cyrillus præſedit: Cyrillus of bleſſed memorie was Preſident in the Epheſine, the third generall Councell, ſic Leo Epiſtol. 45.

Bellarmine ſaith that Cyrillus was the Popes Legate in this Councell. Anſwer. 1. Leo before cited maketh mention of no ſuch thing. 2 The Pope did uſe to ſend Legates of his owne, and not to nominate Biſhops of the Greeke Church. 3. Cod. lib. 1. tit. 8. l. 3. Valentinian, Martian thus teſtifie of this Synod, Cui beatæ memoriæ Cyrillus præfuit: Where Cyrillus of happy memorie was Preſident. The ſame witneſſeth Gelaſius, decr. part. 1. diſt. 15. c. 3. In the Epheſine Synod, Neſtorius with the conſent of Celeſtinus was condemned. Mediante Cyrillo, &c. Cyrillus being the Mediator or Preſident. And againe, diſt. 16. c. 10. The Fathers in this Councell did conclude twelve articles againſt ſo many hereſies of Neſtorius, authore Cyrillo, Cyrill being the author.

Gelaſius, decret. de Apocryphis, affirmeth the Councell of Chalcedon, which was the fourth generall to be celebrated, Mediante Martiano Auguſto, & Anatolio Conſtantinopolitano: By the mediation or Preſidentſhip of Martianus the Emperour, and Anatolius Patriarch of Conſtantinople. Yet notwithſtanding this authoritie of Gelaſius, Bellarmine ſtill avoucheth that the Popes Legates had the Preſidentſhip in this Councell. Contra. 1. The Synod ſaith, Reſidentibus magnificis judicibus, &c. The moſt magnificent Judges ſitting, &c. there was ſeven Noble-men by the Emperor appointed as Judges: but who elſe is Judge but the Preſident? 2 Theſe ſeven Judges ſit in the middeſt by the Altar, the Patriarch of Alexandria on their right hand; Paſchaſinus and Lucentius, the Biſhop of Romes Legates, on the left hand: wherefore by their place it ſeemeth they were not Preſidents. 3 They would have Dioſcorus excluded out of the Councell, but the Judges would not permit it.

4.Decr.part.1.diſt.16.c.10. Anatolius is ſaid to bee authour of the 27. Canons made againſt Eutyches; wherefore hee rather was the Preſident than the other. See alſo to this purpoſe the ſecond Nicene Councell, action. 1. where Tharaſius Preſident of that Councell ſaith, Anatolium quarta Synodi principem fuiſſe: That Anatolius was the Prince or Preſident of the fourth Synod: Ergo, the Popes Legates were not.

Conſtantinopol. 2. The fifth generall Councell was kept, Præſidente ſanctiſſimo & beatiſſimo Domino noſtro Patriarcha Menna: Our moſt holy and bleſſed Lord Mennas Patriarch of Conſtantinople being Preſident, *act.*1.2.3.& 4. Yet Bellarmine is bold to ſay, that not Mennas, but Eutychius his ſucceſſor was Preſident in the fifth generall Councell; whereas in everie action of this Councell, which are but foure in all, there is mention only made as before, of the Preſidentſhip of Mennas.

But what hath Bellarmine gained, if Eutychius and not Menna was Preſident? What maketh this for the Popes Preſidentſhip? And if it be ſo, that Vigilius the Biſhop of Rome was at that time preſent at Conſtantinople, as the Jeſuite thinketh, why came he not to the Synod to challenge his Preſidentſhip, but that he feared to be thruſt downe into the ſecond place, as Illyricus truly conjectureth, and is without cauſe challenged by the Jeſuite of a lye, ſeeing he himſelfe confeſſeth as much in the beginning of the 19.chapter, alleaging this as a reaſon, why the Popes refuſed perſonally to be preſent in the Greeke Synods, becauſe the Emperour or his Legates would ſit in the Preſidents place?

*Conſtantinopol.*3. The ſixth generall Councell, action. 1. Præſidente piiſſimo Imperatore Conſtantino, The moſt devout Emperour Conſtantinus being Preſident.

Yet notwithſtanding the words of the Councell ſtand thus, Bellarmine ſaith that the Legates of Agatho the Biſhop of Rome had the Preſidentſhip: whereas beſide the direct teſtimony of the Councell, as we have heard, which maketh the Emperour Conſtantinus Preſident, the Legates of the Biſhop of Rome ſate upon the left hand of the Emperour, and on the right George Archbiſhop of Conſtantinople, and Macarius of Antioch, as the chiefer men.

Nicen. 2. The ſeventh generall Councell, Tharaſius Patriarch of Conſtantinople was Preſident and Author of the decrees.

This is notwithſtanding denyed by Bellarmine that Tharaſius was Preſident: and yet the words of the Synod are theſe: wee thinke it verie meet and convenient, that the moſt holy and high Paſtor and Rector Preſident of the imperiall Citie of Conſtantinople, new Rome, in the beginning do propound what matter ſhall bee handled, and as it were to open a doore to the reſt, &c. But whoſe office was it elſe, but the Preſidents to propound the queſtions, and to moderate the diſputations? Though we need not to contend for this Synod, which was moſt erroneous, groſſe and idolatrous, and not worthy to be counted amongſt the eight generall Councels, and indeed it is none of them.

Conſtantinopol. 4. The eighth generall Councell, Baſilius the Emperour was preſent and Preſident, for he concludeth the Councell thus, Præſtamus omnibus qui in mente aliquid habent ambiguum, in medium exhibeant: Wee give licence to all that have any doubt to bring it forth. Hee was then the Preſident; whatſoever the Jeſuite can object to the contrarie.

In theſe eight generall Councels the Pope of Rome was not himſelfe perſonally preſent: what will you ſay now to a generall Councell, where the Pope was preſent in perſon, and yet not Preſident.

In the Councell of Florence, Palæologus Emperour of Conſtantinople, and Ioſephus Patriarch there, alſo Eugenius the fourth Biſhop of Rome were perſonally preſent, with the whole State Eccleſiaſticall both of the Greake and Latine Church: yet was not Eugenius Preſident, as may appeare by theſe arguments.

1 At their firſt meeting there was great contention about their ſeats in the Councell, the Pope would have placed the Greekes with their Emperour on the left hand, the Latine Clergie on the right, and himſelfe to ſit in the upper end in the middeſt betweene them both: but the Emperour would not ſuffer that, ſaying, that that place was meeter for him than for the Pope: Hereupon the Pope relented, and was contented to ſit on the right ſide over againſt the Emperour; but if hee had beene Preſident, that place in the middeſt of right had belonged unto him.

2 The Grecians craved leave of their Emperour and Patriarch when they began to ſpeake, as Beſſarion doth ſeſſ. 1. and Marcus Biſhop of Epheſus ſeſſ. 3. and ſeſſ. 23. Iohannes Monachus ſaith thus to Marchus, Non ego, ſed Imperator, tibi legem imponere poteſt. Not I, but the Emperour is to appoint you the law of diſputing: But this onely belongeth to the Preſident and Moderator, 3.*Seſſ.*20. Imperator juſſit ut iterum ſeſſio haberetur, The Emperour commanded another Seſſion to bee kept: Ergo, he was Preſident, and not the Pope.

Argum. 4. Laſtly, not to heape up many reaſons in ſo plaine a cauſe; I will alleage one example moſt manifeſt out of Auguſtine: who writeth that in that great Councell at Carthage, where the matter was diſcuſſed betweene the Catholikes and the Donatiſts, there being preſent more than 500. Biſhops of both ſides, Marcellinus was appointed to be Moderator of that diſputation: who divers times putteth in his ſentence in the diſputation, and laſt of all, bidding both parts to goe aſide, hee writeth the ſentence definitive, and concludeth againſt the Donatiſts, approving the acts of the Catholike Biſhops, hec Aug. brevicul. collation.

And for further evidence herein. 1 The Greeke Church holding, as hath beene ſhewed before in the ſecond queſtion, that the right of calling Councels belonged to the Christian Emperours, conſequently alſo doe allow them to be Preſidents, and to have the chiefe place in Councels, as hath been alleaged before out of the acts of the Councell of Florence, where Palaeologus the Emperour of Conſtantinople was preſent: Yea Nilus goeth further, and ſheweth how Peter, though hee ſpake firſt, did not challenge unto himſelfe any ſuch Preſidentſhip or judiciall authoritie in that Councell, Act. 15. but rather, τοῖς παρὰ τ Ἰακώβου ἐπιλεχθεῖσι πάντες, ϗ Πέτρος αὐτὸς, All aſſented unto theſe things which Iames ſpake, yea Peter himſelfe.

Lib.1. de primat.

2 The ſame alſo is confirmed by the practice of the South Church: for in the Chalcedon Councell there were ſeven Judges appointed by the Emperour as Preſidents ſitting in the middeſt, where was preſent Dioſcorus Patriarch of Alexandria placed on their right hand, allowing of their Preſidentſhip: And at this day the Emperour of Æthiopia, called Preſter Iohn, maketh no reckoning of any unlawfull decree made by their Abuna, or Patriarch, but ſaith, hee would burne the copie of ſuch commandement: ſo he alloweth not unto him any deciding, or definitive voice.

Alvares deſcript. Aethiop. cap.29.

3 The ſame is the judgement of the reformed Churches, that the civill Magiſtrate inſtructed by the word of God, and directed by the learned, hath the chiefe authoritie to confirme and eſtabliſh the decrees of Councels: as the confeſſion of Sueveland thus writeth to the Emperour, That it would pleaſe your ſacred Majeſtie to follow the examples of the moſt mightie and happie Emperours, Conſtantine, Iovinian, Theodoſius, and others, who both by doctrine taught in all meekneſſe, by moſt holy and vigilant Biſhops, and alſo by Councels lawfully aſſembled, and by a wiſe diſcuſſing of all things, did deale with them that erred, &c.

Confeſſ. Sueve. in concluſ.

4 Cardinall Cuſanus confeſſeth, that in the ſecond Epheſine Councell they proceeded, not expecting the preſence of the Ambaſſadours of Pope Leo, after many delayes of their comming: here the Pope was neither preſent, nor Preſident. Franciſcus de Victoria alleageth out of Cardinall Turrecremata and Sylveſter, that a Councell may be congregate, contra voluntatem Papa, againſt the will of the Pope, to redreſſe his inſolencies, as the Emperour aſſembled a Councell againſt Iohn 12. an incorrigible Pope. It were an hard matter to make the Pope Preſident in ſuch a Councell, and to ſet him to be a Judge, where he is to be cenſured and judged.

The Papiſts.

THey are not all agreed what to determine of this matter: ſome affirme that Generall Councels can in no wiſe erre, although the conſent of the Pope be wanting: thus the Fathers in Baſil concluded, Who is it, ſay they, that will prefer a ſinfull man before an undefiled Church? But Bellarmine more the Popes friend than ſo, holdeth that even generall Councels may erre, unleſſe they follow the inſtructions and directions of the Pope: Yea that it is not ſufficient for the Pope to call a Councell, and ſend his Legate thither, but he muſt write continually for advertiſement from his Maſter before any thing bee concluded: and therefore they doubt not to ſay that the Councell of Baſil erred, though it had the conſent of the Popes Legate in defining that the Councell is above the Pope, becauſe he had no ſuch direction from the Pope, Bellarmine de concil. lib. 2. cap. 11.

Nay the Jeſuite goeth further, that particular Councels being approved by the Pope cannot erre, cap. 5. So they hold that the holy fathers of the cruell[a] Inquiſition cannot erre: Yea Panormitane was not aſhamed to ſay openly in the Councell of Baſil, that he would prefer the judgement of the Cardinals of Rome before all the world. This then is the Jeſuites opinion, that no Councels by the Pope confirmed can erre: and that a particular Councell having his allowance, is to be preferred before a generall without. Let us ſee ſome of their reaſons.

1 They doe wreſt certaine places of Scripture for their purpoſe: as that Act. 15. It ſeemed good to us and the Holy Ghoſt: I am with you to the end of the world: He that heareth you, heareth me. Bellarmine cap. 2. Rhemiſt. in Act. 15.8.10. ſo then thus they argue, Councels are never without the Spirit of God: therefore they cannot erre. Anſwer. As though the Spirit of God were at their commandement, or were tied to places or perſons: They muſt firſt performe the condition before they can challenge the promiſe: that is, to follow the rule of Gods word, and obediently to ſubmit themſelves thereunto; then will God vouchſafe to be preſent. The Goſpell ſaith, that whereſoever two or three are gathered together in my name, I will be preſent even in the middeſt of them: Here promiſe is made not to thouſands or hundreds, but to two or three; and therefore by this place an aſſembly of few perſons may as well be exempted from errour, as Councels: But there is a condition, In nomine meo, in my name, and then followeth, in medio illorum, in the middeſt of them: if then they are not met in the Lords name, they cannot looke for the preſence of Chriſt. I pray you where was the Holy Ghoſt preſent in that Councell at Rome under Iohn 23. when there appeared a great Owle, which ſtared and outfaced the Pope, who bluſhing at the matter, and fuming, roſe up and departed? At the ſight of which Owle they whiſpered one in anothers eare, that the Spirit appeared in the likenes of an Owle: & after that in another ſeſſion the ſame Owle appeared, & could not be driven away, untill by throwing bats & cudgels at her, ſhe fell down dead before them, ex Nichol. Clemang. In the beginning of the Councell of Conſtance after the accuſtomed hymne ſung, Veni ſancte ſpiritus, a bill was ſet up with theſe words, aliis rebus occupati, nunc adeſſe non poſſumus. We are now otherwiſe occupied, we cannot be preſent with you. Wee ſee now how ſure the Papiſts are of the holy Ghoſt in their Popiſh Councels.

*Argum.*2. *Act.*15.28. It ſeemed good to us and the holy Ghoſt: As the Apoſtles might ſay, that their Act.15.28. decrees were the decrees of the holy Ghoſt: ſo all other Councels are ſure to have the aſſiſtance of the ſpirit: Ergo, they cannot erre, *Bellarm.lib.*2.*cap.*2.

Anſwer. First, if the Councels which are now held in the Church, are as ſure not to erre as the Apoſtolicall Councels, by the ſame reaſon every particular Paſtor of the Church may have as good a privilege, to be exempted from error, as the Apoſtles themſelves had: for their Councels which erred not, conſiſted of particular members likewiſe not erring. But there is not the like reaſon of the Apoſtles, and their Councels then, as there is of ours now, for the Apoſtles, whoſe preachings, decrees, and writings, are now, and were then to be rules of our faith, for this cauſe received the ſpirit of God, whereby they were aſſured to be led into all truth, *Ioh.*16.13. But Councels now are not to ſet rules of Iohn.16.13. our faith, neither are their decrees to be taken for Scripture: therefore there is not the like reaſon of the aſſiſtance of the ſpirit now in ſuch meaſure, as they had it.

*Anſwer.*2. Yet wee graunt that the ſpirit of God is preſent ſtill in Councels aſſembled in Chriſts name, to direct them in all things neceſſarie: ſo that they be content to be ruled by the Scriptures as we ſee the Apoſtles grounded their decrees upon Scripture, *Act.*15.16. For thus the Apoſtles concluded, that ſeeing God foretold by his Prophets, that the Gentiles ſhould be called as well as the Jewes, that they were not therefore to be clogged with Jewiſh ceremonies, ſeeing they were ordained to be a people holy unto God, as well as the Jewes: But if the Paſtors of the Church refuſe to heare the voyce of God in the Scriptures, they are very like to be deceived, yea, are ſure to miſſe the line of truth.

*Argum.*3. The Church cannot erre: for the Apoſtle calleth it the pillar of truth, 1 *Timoth.*3. 1 Timoth.3. but a generall Councell repreſenteth the whole Church: Ergo, it cannot erre. *Bellarm.lib.*2.*de Concil.c.*2.

Anſwer. First, concerning the aſſumption or ſecond part of this argument, we grant, that a generall Councell lawfully aſſembled in ſome ſort repreſenteth the univerſall Church, but is not the univerſall Church: few Councels are ſo generall, at the which ſome of every nationall Church are preſent, which thing ought to be in an univerſall Councell. And againe, a generall Councell may erre, when as notwithſtanding ſome particular members of the Church hold the truth: as in that generall aſſembly of 400. of Baals Prieſts in Achabs time, they all being in error, the Prophet Micaiah onely was in the right.

Secondly, concerning the propoſition, firſt we denie that the Church is abſolutely freed from error, neither doth it follow, it is the pillar, therefore cannot erre, for Peter erred, and yet was a pillar, *Galath.*2. Galat.2. Secondly, the Church is called a pillar, and ground of truth, not abſolutely or ſubſtantially, as though the truth ſhould be meaſured by the Church, but onely demonſtratively, becauſe it profeſſeth the truth, and as a golden candleſticke holdeth out the light in the world, which is not elſe where to be found but in the Church: and it is the pillar of the truth, as it is the houſe of God, ſuffering it ſelfe to be ruled and guided by the word of God.

WE doubt not to ſay, that Councels have erred, and may erre, preſuming any thing beſides the warrant of Gods word, and that neither univerſall or particular Councels are privileged, much leſſe any one man, no nor the Pope, not to erre in matters of faith, otherwiſe, than following the truth of the Scriptures, for in ſo doing, they are ſure not to be deceived.

*Argum.*1. We have examples in the Scripture of Councels that erred, as that aſſembly in Achabs daies of 400. Prophets, who were all deceived. The Jeſuite thus anſwereth, that it was an aſſembly of Prophets, not of Prieſts: as though Prieſts were more priviledged from error, than Prophets. And the Jeſuite, if he be well remembred, whereas we alleaged the examples of David. Hezekiah. Ioſias, that aſſembled Councels, he gave us this anſwer, that they did it as Prophets, and not as Kings: wherefore by his owne confeſſion it belongeth to Prophets as well as to Prieſts to aſſemble, and be aſſembled in Councell. Secondly (ſaith he) theſe were falſe Prophets, not Prophets of the Lord. We grant ſo, and this withall, that whereſoever the Lords Prophets and Paſtors, and Miniſters aſſemble, that there they will heare the Lords voyce: which the Pope in his Councels doth not. But he ſtill ſuppoſeth, that the Pope and his Miniſters are Chriſts diſciples: which is an unreaſonable ſuppoſition, ſeeing we hold him to be Antichriſt, and that the Jeſuite knoweth. Thirdly, this Councell was called by the authoritie of the King, not of the high Prieſt, and therefore might erre. Anſwer. First, the holy Councels ſommoned by David, 1 *Chron.*15.3. by Hezekiah, 2 *Chron.*30. by Ioſias, 2 *Chron.*34. though they were by the authoritie of the King, not the high Prieſt collected, were notwithſtanding godly and lawfull Councels. Secondly, neither was it the authoritie of the high Priſt, that could priviledge Councels from error, ſeeing they themſelves erred, as Uriah the high Prieſt under that ungodly King of Juda Ahaz was a moſt groſſe idolater, 2 King.16.11. Wherefore the Jeſuite hath here anſwered 2King.16.11. nothing.

*Argum.*2. Such a Councell alſo was that of the Jewes, *Ioh.*9. where all they were excommunicate that confeſſed Chriſt, and *Mark.*14. Chriſt himſelfe was by the Councell condemned: It cannot be denied, but that this Councell erred. Let us heare the Papiſts goodly anſwers: ſome ſay that the Councell erred in a matter of fact, de facto, non de jure, not in a caſe of right, as whether Chriſt ſhould be put to death; As though in condemning him, they denied not that he was the Meſſiah. Other that they erred in their owne opinion, not in the ſentence given, for Chriſt indeed was guiltie of death, ſay they, becauſe he did beare our ſinnes: the Jeſuite findeth not much fault with this anſwer, and yet it is an open blaſphemie, as is that alſo of the Papiſts, that the Jewes had ſinned mortally, if they had not put Chriſt to death. Some of them ſay, the Councell erred not in that which was done, but in the manner of judgement, becauſe it was tumultous and diſorderly, and done by ſuborning of falſe witneſſes: and this ſaith the Jeſuite, is probabilis reſponſio, a probable anſwer, ſaith he, being moſt impious and blaſphemous. And their Maſter of ſentences determineth otherwiſe: Occidere Chriſtum fuit mala actio & peccatum: To kill Chriſt was an evill and ſinfull action, *lib.*1. *diſt.*48. b. But he dare not reſt in this anſwer, but findeth out a fourth of his owne, that the chiefe Prieſts and Councels of the Jewes could not erre before the comming of Chriſt, but after he was come, they might. A blind Popiſh anſwer; for doth not Chriſt every where impugne the traditions and decrees of the Elders, as *Mark.*7. which our Saviour ſhould not have done belike, ſeeing the Elders before his comming could not erre: or will they ſay, that thoſe traditions were right and good before, and afterward erroneous? I know not elſe what they ſhould ſay.

Diſtinct.13. item in Margin.

Popiſh blaſphemie.

Againe, I oppoſe againſt the Jeſuite the determination of their owne Maſter: who ſaith, In Chriſti morte terminata eſſe Legalia omnia: That all the Legals were determined and tooke their end in the death of Chriſt; and ſo long Circumciſion (ſaith he) was in force, *lib.*4. *Senten. diſt.*3. k. But the law and Prieſthood ceaſed together: Ergo, till Chriſts death the Prieſts ſhould be privileged not to erre, if they had any ſuch privilege at all.

*Argum.*3. Wee ſee by experience that many Councels have erred. In the third Councell of Antioch, celebrated anno 345. Athanaſius was condemned. In the fourth Antiochene Councell anno 367. the Macedonian hereſie was confirmed: anno 354. a Councell of 300. Biſhops at Millaine decreed againſt the Catholike faith: the Arimine Councell of 600. Biſhops, ſtood for the Arrians: But they will tell us, that thoſe generall Councels erred, becauſe they were not ratified by the Pope: as though the Popes themſelves have not erred, as ſhall be ſhewed afterward, how then can they preſerve others from error? and how like it is, that one man ſhould be alwaies freer from error, than a whole Councell, let any indifferent man judge; we will then give inſtance of ſuch Councels as have beene confirmed by the Pope.

In the Councell Neoceſarea confirmed by Leo the fourth *can.*7. ſecond mariage is forbidden: that the Prieſt ſhould neither give conſent to ſecond mariage, nor be preſent at the mariage feaſt, but rather enjoyne penance for ſecond mariage.

Bellarmine anſwereth, Non prohiberi matrimonium, ſed ſolennitatem ſecundi matrimonii, that not ſecond mariage, but the ſolemnitie of ſecond mariage is forbidden; for the celebritie of mariage was once onely accuſtomed to be done in the Church (ſaith hee) when as virgins were coupled in matrimonie.

*Contra.*1. The Canon ſpeaketh not of any ſolemnitie in the Church, but of the feaſt at home, Preſbyterum convivio ſecundarum nuptiarum intereſſe non debere, That the Prieſt or Miniſter muſt not be preſent at the ſecond mariage feaſt. Secondly, the Canon ſaith, Quis eſt preſbyter, qui propter convivium illis conſentiat nuptiis: He is a Prieſt of no worth, that for the feaſt ſake will give his conſent to ſecond mariage. And againe, Præcipitur ſecundis nuptiis pœnitentiam tribuere: He is commanded to enjoyne penance for ſecond mariage: not for the ſolemnitie of ſecond mariage, but for the mariage it ſelfe. It is plaine therefore, that this Canon forbiddeth ſecond mariage it ſelfe. Thirdly, neither is it true which the Jeſuite ſaith, that all ſolemnitie in the Church was cut off in ſecond mariage: It was decreed indeed, *Concil. Lateran. part.*9. *cap.*2. in ſecundis nuptiis non debet benedictio iterari: The matrimoniall or mariage bleſſing muſt not be iterate in ſecond mariage, becauſe it was once given before: yet both firſt and ſecond mariage was to be ſolemnized in the Church, *Synod. Colonienſ. part.*7. *cap.*43. Conjunctio conjugum in facie eccleſiæ peragenda: The joyning together of couples is to be done in the face of the Church. He ſaith not in the firſt or ſecond mariage, but indefinitely of all.

Toletan. 1. *can.*17. Is qui non habet uxorem, & pro uxore concubinam habet, à communione non repellatur: He that hath not a wife, but in ſtead of his wife a concubine, is not for this cauſe to be repelled the communion: a manifeſt error. This Councell was confirmed by Leo, as it may appeare canon 21. Bellarmine anſwereth, that a concubine is here taken for a wife, Ducta ſine dote, & externa ſolennitate, maried without a dowrie, and any outward ſolemnitie, as Agar is ſaid to be Abrahams concubine, yet ſhe was indeed his wife: and Keturah likewiſe.

*Contra.*1. A wife is one thing, a concubine another, Sicut aliud libera, aliud ancilla, as a free woman is one thing, a bond woman another: ſo ſaith Leo the approver of the foreſaid Councell, as he is alleaged, *Synod. Triburienſ. cap.*38. And further, he ſaith, that if a man give his daughter to one in mariage that hath a concubine, Non ita accipiendum eſt, quaſi eam conjugato dederit, It is not ſo to be taken, as if he had given her to one maried alreadie: Niſi forte illa mulier ingenua ſit facta, & dotata legitime, & in publicis nuptiis honeſtata videatur: Except the woman be made free and have her dowrie, and be received in marriage publikely ſolemnized, &c. Therefore ſhee that is neither endued with dowrie, nor ſolemnly married, is no wife, but a concubine, which cleane overthroweth Bellarmines anſwer.

2 Whereas Bellarmine telleth us, that in the Civill law a wife married without ſolemnitie, is called a concubine; his law here deceiveth him: for whether he will be tried for this point by the Civill law or Canon, they make both againſt him. As Cod. lib. 5. tit. 16 leg. 2. Antonin. forbiddeth that a ſouldiour ſhould make a gift to his focaria, or concubina, his concubine or houſe-maid: which there is taken for one that is kept without mariage. Likewiſe, titul. 16. l. 1. Conſtantin. It is lawfull for no man to keepe a concubine, conſtante matrimonio, as long as he is married. In the ſame ſenſe is a concubine taken in the Canon law: Decret. p. 1. diſt. 34. c. 6. Et ſi non habetis uxores, &c. Though you have no wives, yet is it not lawfull for you to have concubines, &c. Thus then a concubine is one, and a wife another.

3 That Agar was not Abrahams wife, but his concubine, it appeareth thus: Firſt, ſhee was not made free, but remained a bond woman ſtill, Gen. 16. and 21. Secondly, ſhee had no dowrie, nor her ſonne any inheritance with Iſaac, Gen. 21. 10. Thirdly, if ſhee had beene Abrahams wife, hee ſhould have done evill in diſmiſſing of her, and ſending her away. Fourthly, the Scripture onely calleth Sara Abrahams wife, Gen. 16. 3. the other a bond-woman, even after ſhe had a childe by Abraham, Gen. 21. 13. ſhe is alſo called the maid of Sarai, and Sarai her dame or miſtreſſe, Gen. 16. 6. 9. Sara alſo giveth Agar to Abraham, and ſaith, It may be I ſhall receive a childe by her, Gen. 16. 2. the bond-womans childe is by right her dames and miſtreſſes according to the law, Exodus 21. 4. All this proveth that Agar was a concubine onely, not wife to Abraham in any reſpect.

Exod.21.4.

As for Keturah, it cannot be denied, but that ſometime the Scripture calleth her Abrahams wife, Gen. 25. 1. ſometime his concubine, 1 Chron. 1. 32. yet in a divers reſpect: for ſhee was his concubine, as ſome thinke, while Sara lived, and his wife afterward: and the Jewes doe hold that Keturah and Agar are all one woman. To which opinion Hierome ſeemeth to incline, being moved thereunto by two places of Scripture: the firſt, 1 Chron. 5. 19. where beſide the Agarens, are named Iethur and Naphiſh, as enemies to Iſrael, which were the ſonnes of Iſmael, Gen. 25. 15. The other is, Pſal. 83. 6. where the Iſmaelites and Agarens are named as two divers nations: but Agar had no more ſonnes but Iſmael, ſo that the Iſmaelites and Agarens muſt be all one, unleſſe the ſonnes of Keturah be underſtood for Agarens, which is moſt like. But how could Keturah her ſonnes be named Agarens, if ſhee alſo were not Agar? But leaving this as a conjecture of hiſtorie, whether Keturah were the ſame that Agar, or not, it is verily to be thought that ſhe was both a concubine and a wife, the firſt while Sara lived, the ſecond after her death. So whatſoever the Jeſuite hath ſaid, or can ſay, the Toletan Councell decreed an error.

In the 6. generall Synode, Can. 2. the Councel under Cyprian which concluded that heretikes ſhould be rebaptized, is approved, Can. 72. The mariages betweene Catholikes and heretikes are judged to be voyd, hujuſmodi nuptias, ſaith the Canon, irritas exiſtimari, a manifeſt error, and contrarie to S. Paul, 1 Cor. 7. 13. Can. 12. ſpeaking of the Canons of the Apoſtles, Can. 6. which permitteth Miniſters to dwell with their wives, which by them is forbidden in this place, they ſay thus, Statum eccleſiaſticum in pulchriorem ordinem provehi volentes: Being deſirous to reduce the eccleſiaſticall ſtate to a more beautifull and perfect order, than it was in the Apoſtles time. As though any Church ſince was purer than the primitive under the government of the Apoſtles. Can. 67. Damnamus eos qui cujuſcunque animalis ſanguinem aliqua arte condiunt, & ſic comedunt: Wee condemne thoſe that by skill of Cookerie doe dreſſe the blood of any beaſt to be eaten. But Saint Paul ſaith, every creature of God is good, and not to be refuſed, &c. 1 Tim. 4. 4. Theſe and divers ſuch errors were concluded in the generall Councell: conſented and ſubſcribed unto by Iuſtinian the Emperour, the Biſhop of Rome, the Patriarch of Conſtantinople, and by 200. Biſhops beſide and more, as may be ſeene Can. 102. And approved in the 7. generall Councell, action. 4. where Tharaſius the Preſident ſpeaketh thus of the Canons of the ſixth Councell, Scandalum eſt dubitare an ſint ſextæ ſynodi: It is ſcandalous, or offenſive to doubt, whether they be the right Canons of the ſixth Synod. And Adrian Biſhop of Rome thus writeth to the ſame Tharaſius, as he is alleaged in the Decrees: I receive the ſixth Synod with all the Canons thereof, Decr. p. 1. diſt. 16. c. 5.

1 Timoth.4.4.

Concil. Carthaginenſ. 3. Can. 47. The Apocryphall bookes of Tobie, Iudith, Eccleſiaſticus, Sapientia, the Macchabees, are made Canonicall, contrarie to the Laodicen Councell, cap. ultim. where all theſe bookes are rejected out of the ſacred Canon. Therefore the Councell of Carthage erred.

Bellarmine anſwereth, firſt that the Councell of Carthage is of more authoritie than the Laodicen; becauſe it is the latter, and that it is ratified by Leo 4. diſt. 20. c. 1. and ſo is not the other.

Contra. 1. The Councels the more ancient they are and neerer the Apoſtles times, ought to bee ſo much the more had in authoritie, and not the new to be preferred before the old: I marvell that the Jeſuite, which ſo much urgeth antiquitie, would have uttered ſuch a ſpeech. 2. And againe, the ſame Leo the 4. in the ſame place confirmeth the Laodicen Councell: and likewiſe Felix 4. Decret. 2. citeth the 26. and 59. Canons of this Synod: and it is confirmed in the ſixth generall Councell, Can. 1. and ſo is not the Councell of Carthage: as it is alſo alleaged in the Decrees, diſtin. 16. c. 7. Wherefore the Laodicen is to be preferred, and the Jeſuite hath ſaid nothing.

In the ſecond Councell of Nice, act.5. it was concluded, that Angels and the ſoules of men have bodies of their owne, and are circumſcriptible & imitabiles picturæ, and may be diſcribed by picture, and that the Angels multoties in proprio corpore viſi, have often been ſeene in their owne bodies. Action.1. It was decreed, Hanc eſſe veritatem ut in ſanctis eccleſiis veneranda imagines colantur: That in holy Churches the images of Saints ſhould be worſhipped. Yet in the Eliberin Councell it was long befor determined in this wiſe, Can. 36. Placuit, picturas in eccleſia eſſe non decere: It ſeemeth good to us, that there ſhould be no pictures at all, or images in the Church. And to this Councell ſubſcribed Oſius Biſhop of Corduba in Spaine, who had beene preſent before in the firſt Nicene Councell, and ſubſcribed for the Biſhop of Rome: this appeareth therefore to be a manifeſt error, which was decreed concerning the adoring of Images. And to make the error more foule, being blaſphemous enough in it ſelfe, action.4. one Iohannes Monachus ſteppeth up, and ſaith, Imago major eſt quàm oratio: An Image is more worth than prayer: whereas prayer is inſtituted of God, an Image is the device of man. And in the ſame place, the ſame ſuperſtitious and Idolatrous Monke ſaith, that it were better for a man to breake his oath, & juramentum pejerare, and to be forſworne, than to keepe his oath, in diſtructionem imaginum, for the pulling downe of Images. And yet for all this Bellarmine will not yeeld that this Councell erred.

In the Councell of Rome under Pope Stephen the 7. all the acts of Formoſus his predeceſſor were revoked. And in the Councell of Revenna under Iohn 9. Pope, Formoſus acts were eſtabliſhed, and Stephans decrees abrogate.

Bellarmine here anſwereth, that Pope Stephen erred onely in a matter of fact, being falſly enformed that Formoſus was not the lawfull Pope. Contra. But to reverſe all the acts and decrees made by the Pope, ſheweth an error in judgement alſo in one of them, either in him that firſt enacted them, or in him that after reverſed them: As the putting of Chriſt to death, though it were a matter of fact, yet proceeded from a corrupt, blind, and reprobate judgement. By this ſhift the Jeſuite alſo may excuſe the high Prieſts from error, that put Chriſt to death.

Laſtly, in the Councell of Conſtance, they are excommunicate, that receive the Sacrament in both kindes: the Councell of Baſil on the contrarie ſide, permitteth and giveth leave to the Bohemians to uſe both kindes. One of theſe Councels muſt needes erre, and both of them were confirmed by the Popes: the Councell of Conſtance by Matrin the.5. the Councell of Baſil by Felix.5. By this Induction of many particulars we inferre and conclude, that Councels even approved by the Pope, may and have erred.

Lib.2.de baptiſm.cont. Donatiſt.tom.7.

4 Laſtly, Auguſtines opinion is this, that provinciall Councels ought to give place to generall: Et ipſa plenaria priora poſterioribus emendare: And the former generall Councels muſt be amended by the latter. The Rhemiſts have found out this ſhift, that in matters indefferent, which are to be changed, according to time and place, Councells may be altered, Act.15.ſect.8. But to that it is anſwered, that the word emendare ſignifieth not onely a change, but a correcting of that which is amiſſe. And that clauſe of Auguſtines muſt be put in, why Councels muſt be amended: Si à veritate deviatum ſit, If they ſwarve from the truth: de Baptiſm. lib.2.cap.3. Wherefore we conclude that Councels may erre.

Againe, that ſaying of Auguſtine is confirmed in your owne Decrees: Ego ſolis eis ſcriptorum, &c. I have learned, onely to thoſe writers which are called Canonicall, to attribute this honour, that I beleeve none of them to have erred in writing, &c. Decr.p.1.diſt.9.c.5. If the holy writers onely are priviledged from error, then all other that are not Canonicall may erre, and ſo Councels among the reſt.

Laſtly, let us put to the ſeale of this doctrine, the teſtimonie of the holy Martyrs witneſſed by their blood: M. Rogers Martyr, alleageth the authority of a learned Lawyer of the Church of Rome, namely, Panormitane, which ſaith that unto a ſimple lay-man, that bringeth the word of God with him, there ought more credit to be given, than to a whole Councell gathered together: unto which ſentence, the ſaid bleſſed Martyr giveth his conſent, Fox pag.1487.

Concerning the teſtimonie of forraine Churches. 1. The Greekes rejecting all the generall Councels, which Bellarmine reckoneth up to be eighteene in all, lib.1.de concil.c.5. Excepting onely the firſt ſeven: as Ieremie Patriarch of Conſtantinople profeſſeth: and others of the Greeke Church, doe conſequently hold, that the other pretended generall Councels were in error.

2 The Chriſtian Aethiopians, as appeareth by the confeſſion of Zaga Zabo one of their Biſhops, doe ſpecially reverence the foure firſt generall Councels gathered againſt the Arrian, Macedonian, Neſtorian, and Eutychian heretikes; other Councels in the ſaid confeſſion are not mentioned, as neither of like truth or authoritie.

3 The reformed Churches doubt not, but that generall Councels, if they follow not the rule of the Scripture, are ſubject to error, Confeſſ. of Wittemberg.c.34. as it is wont to fall out in civill meetings, ſo doth it alſo in the meetings of the Church, for the moſt part the greater ſide overcommeth the better. And a little after, Seeing the doctrine of the Apoſtles and Prophets is confirmed of God, the ſentence of no one man, nor of any aſſemblie of men, is to be received ſimplie without triall for the oracle of the holy Ghoſt. The Church of Saxonie, *artic.*11, among other doctrines differing from the Goſpell, counteth this for one, That Synodes cannot erre, wherein their Biſhops give their voices: and *artic.*23. Let the Councell ſee to it, that they condemne not a manifeſt truth. 4. Yea, the Romaniſts themſelves do refuſe ſome Canons of generall Councels: as Surius ſaith, that the 28. Canon of the Chalcedon Councell, which giveth like privileges to the Patriarch of Conſtantinople, as to the Biſhop of Rome, was rejected by Leo. Likewiſe the ſame Surius ſaith of the 52. Canon, of the ſixth generall Councell, which findeth fault with the Church of Rome for faſting upon Saturdaies: Hic Canon non recipitur, quia reprehendit, &c. This Canon is not received, becauſe it reprehendeth the Romane Church, the mother of all Churches: It followeth then, even by their owne practice, that generall Councels may erre.

The Sixth Queſtion, Concerning the authoritie of generall Councels, whether they may abſolutely determine without Scripture, and neceſſarily bind all men to the obedience of their Canons.

The Papiſts.

IN words they would ſeeme to magnifie the Scripture above Councels: for they ſay, that the authoritie of the Scripture dependeth not in it ſelfe, of Church, Pope, or Councels; but in reſpect of us: the word of God, is the word of God, ſay they, though there be no determination of the Church: but we doe not know it ſo to be, but becauſe the Church hath ſo defined: *Bellarmine lib.*2.*de con.cap.*12. Here is a goodly gloſſe, but nothing to the purpoſe: for in that they ſay the Church hath abſolute authoritie to declare and pronounce which is the word, (which indeed it hath not without teſtimonie and warrant of the word it ſelfe) by this meanes it commeth about, that much is taken for the word of God which is not: and ſo the Church doth not onely declare the word, but maketh that the word which is not.

34.Error.

Firſt, beſide the Apocrypha, which they make part of the word, as we have ſhewed afore, they hold that their traditions are alſo the word of God, *Bellarmine cap.*12. Secondly, Gratian is ſo bold to affirme, that the decretall Epiſtles of the Popes are to bee counted amongſt the Canonicall Scriptures, *diſt.*19.can. in canonicis, and that the Canons of Councels are of the ſame authoritie, *diſt.*20.can.decretales. And *Greg.*1.*epiſt.*24. ſaith, he doth reverence the foure generall Councels, as the foure Evangeliſts. Thirdly, they boldly affirme, that whatſoever the Paſtors and prieſts doe teach in the unitie of the Church, is the word of God, *Rhemenſ.*1 *Theſ.*2.*verſ.*12.

Firſt then they conclude, that Councels are not bound to determine according to the Scriptures, but as judges may determine of their owne authoritie. Secondly, that all men are bound of neceſſitie to receive the decrees of Councels, without any further triall or examination. They reaſon thus out of Scripture.

*Argum.*1. *Deut.*17. 12. He that harkeneth not unto the prieſt, that man ſhall die. But marke I pray you, what goeth before, *verſ.*11. according to the law which they ſhall teach thee, and according to the judgement which they ſhall tell thee, ſhalt thou doe: See then, here is no abſolute judiciall power given to the Prieſt, but according to the law of God.

Deut.17.12. Bellar.lib.1.de concil. cap.18.

Thus anſwered Maſter Latimer Martyr, to the like objection made by Biſhop White: If any controverſie did ariſe, they were indeed referred to the Prieſts who were to judge, not as they would themſelves, but ſecundum legem Dei, according to the law of God, *Fox.pag.*1762.

*Argum.*2. The example of the Apoſtles *Act.*15. is as fondly alleaged, where it was decreed (ſaith the Jeſuite) that the Gentiles ſhould not be burthened with ceremonies, which, ſaith he, was not determined by the Scriptures, but by the abſolute ſuffrages of the Apoſtles. Againe, their decrees were abſolutely impoſed upon the Churches, without any further examination of the Diſciples: Ergo, we are now abſolutely bound to obey all decrees of Councels, *Bellar.de.concil.*1.18.

We anſwer: firſt, it is falſe, that this matter was determined without Scripture: for Iames alleageth Scripture: and Peter thus reaſoneth, We beleeve through the grace of God to be ſaved aſwell as they, *verſ.*11. therefore what need this yoke of ceremonies? Secondly, Though there had been no Scripture, who ſeeth not that the ſpirit of God ſo ruled the Apoſtles, that their writings and holy actions ſhould ſerve for Scripture unto the ages following? Thirdly, the Diſciples needed not to examine their decrees, knowing that they were governed by the ſpirit, as they themſelves write: It ſeemeed good to us and the holy Ghoſt: yet we ſee the brethren of Beræa ſearched the Scripture for the truth of thoſe things, which the Apoſtles preached, *Act.*17.11. When they can prove ſuch a plenarie power and fulneſſe of the ſpirit in their Paſtors and Councels, as was in the Apoſtles, we will alſo beleeve them.

Act.17.11.

*Argum.*3. Our Saviour Chriſt ſaith, if he refuſe to heare the Church, let him be unto thee as an heathen man and publicane: Ergo, the Church is abſolutely to be obeyed in all things, *Bellar.lib.*1.*de concil.cap.*18.

Marth.18.15.

Anſwer : firſt, our Saviour in this place ſpeaketh not of the Canons and decrees of the Church concerning faith : but onely preſcribeth the forme of Church diſcipline, for reformation of manners and correction of ſinne : *If thy brother treſpaſſe againſt thee, &c.verſ.*15. Our Saviour Chriſt ſaith no more then this, that Chriſtians ought to obey the ſentence of the Church in cenſuting of ſin: but it followeth not that we ought not to receive new articles of faith impoſed by the Church beſide Scripture. Secondly, Chriſt ſpeaketh not of every Church abſolutely, but of a Church guided and ruled by his word, and aſſembled in his name, *verſ.*20. for otherwiſe by the Jeſuites collection, our Saviour Chriſt and his Apoſtles ſhould have been as Publicans, becauſe they obeyed not the Scribes and Phariſies, amongſt whom they cannot denie, but that the Church was at that time.

The Proteſtants.

WE do firmly beleeve that neither the Church nor Councels have any ſuch abſolute power to determine without the holy Scriptuers, either beſide or againſt them; or to bind other men to obey ſuch decrees; Neither that the true Church of God dare, or will arrogate ſuch power unto it ſelfe: But that Councels are ordained for the diſcuſſing and deciding of doubtfull matters, according to the Scriptures and word written.

*Argum.*1. If the Apoſtles preachings might be examined according to Scripture, much more the acts of all other Biſhops and Paſtors. But that was lawfull in the Diſciples of Berœa, act.*17.11. which are commended for it: therefore called noble couragious Chriſtians, becauſe of this their promptneſſe, and diligence in ſearching out of the truth.

Rom.10.10.

*Argum.*2. All things neceſſary to ſalvation to be beleeved, are articles of our faith: but all ſuch articles muſt be grounded upon the word of God: therefore nothing can be impoſed as neceſſarie to ſalvation without the word of God. Wherefore it is a blaſphemous ſaying of the Papiſts, that the Church may make new articles of faith, Rhemenſ. annot. in 1.Tim.3.ſect.9. And Eckius maintained the ſame point againſt Luther, in the diſputation at Lipſia, and brought foorth a new article of faith, agreed of in the Councell of Conſtance, that it is de neceſſitate ſalutis, of the neceſſitie of ſalvation, to beleeve that the Pope is the head of the Church. The fathers of Baſil more modeſt than ſo, concluding that it was an article of faith to beleeve that Councels were above the Pope, doe uſe this reaſon: Thoſe things (ſay they) which we alleage for the ſuperioritie of generall Councels, are gathered out of the ſayings of our Saviour Chriſt: Ergo, we are all bound to obey them. Therefore we conclude, that the word of God onely written is the rule of faith. and of all things neceſſarie to be beleeved: Rom.*10. 10.Faith commeth by hearing, and hearing by the word. Councels are to explane and declare articles of faith, not to eſtabliſh new.

*Argum.*3. S.Paul ſaith, that if an Angell ſhould preach otherwiſe then the Apoſtles had preached, (the ſumme of whoſe preaching is now onely to be found in their holy writings) let him be accurſed, Galath. 1. 8.9. But an Angell preaching beſide Scripture, is to be heard as ſoone, nay ſooner then a Councell aſſembled of men decreeing any thing beſide the word of God: Ergo, neither is ſuch a Councell to be received, but rather to be judged accurſed.

This was the faith alſo of the holy Martyrs, for the which they nothing doubted to give their lives, that the Scriptures contained all things neceſſarie to ſalvation: neither would they receive any decree of Church, Pope, or Councell, not agreeable to the ſame.

Thus we ſee our doctrine hath been laid to the touchſtone, and tried in the fire; and neither the workemen were aſhamed, nor yet their worke burned. Wherefore it remaineth ſound and ſure, againſt the contentious brabling, and ſophiſticall cavils of all the Papiſts in the world.

Laſtly, we will heare Auguſtine ſpeake, Nec tu debes Ariminenſe, neque ego Nicenum tanquam præjudicaturas proferre concilium, ſcripturarum authoritatibus, &c. Neither muſt I alleage the Nicen Councell, nor you the Arimine, I am neither bound to the one, nor you the other, let the matter be tried by Scripture, cont. Maxim. Arrianum lib.3.cap.14. By the fathers ſentence therefore, no man is bound of neceſſitie to be tied to Councels, but the Scripture only is abſolutely to be beleeved,

We have alſo for this matter the evident teſtimonie of antiquitie, Conſtantius the great thus ſpake in the Councell of Nice: Evangelici ſunt libri & Apoſtolici antiquorumque Prophetarum ſanctiones, qui nos erudiunt, quid de ſacra lege ſapiamus: expellentes igitur hoſtile certamen, ex verbis divinitus inſpiratis ſolutionem quæſtionum mente capiamus; There are the bookes of the Goſpels, of the Apoſtles, and Prophets, which doe teach us, what to hold in religion: therefore expelling all hoſtile and bitter contention, let us ſeeke the ſolution of theſe queſtions out of Scripture.

Florentin, concil.ſeſſ.3. Andreas Coloſſenſ. thus ſpeaketh in the name of the Latine Church: Divino Evangelio ſupremum obtinenti locum & dignitatem, imprimis nobis eſt innitendum. We muſt relie eſpecially upon the holy Goſpell, as having the chiefe place and dignitie, &c. Councels then muſt determine according to the Scripture, neither are we bound otherwiſe to give eare unto them.

The civill law thus ſaith, Cod.lib.1.tit.4.leg.3.Marcian. Iuxta Apoſtolicas expoſitiones, &c. Thoſe things which concerning the faith were decreed in the Councell of Chalcedon by our commandement, were defined according to the expoſitions of the Apoſtles, &c. Et tit.1.leg.4.Valentin. ſpeaking of the Chalcedon Councell he ſaith: Nihil adimens ſacroſancto ſymbolo, nec adiiciens: Adding nothing to the ſacred Creed, not taking from it. Councels then muſt determine according to Scripture, and cannot adde new articles of faith.

So likewiſe their owne decrees teſtifie: Decr.p.2.cauſ.24.queſt.1.cap.21. Non afferamus ſtateras doloſas, &c. Let us not bring deceitfull waights, to waigh as we think good our ſelves, ſaying, this is heavie, this light: but let us bring the waights and balance out of the Scriptures, &c. And their owne Maſter of Sentences thus ſaith: Ne ultra præfinitionem dei ſermo de deo ſit, forma fidei certa eſt, non ergo aliquid addendum: That of God beyond Gods owne warrant, we ſhould not ſpeake: the forme of faith is certaine, and nothing to be added to it, lib.1.diſt.33.c.

Adde hereunto the teſtimonies of other Churches. 1. The Greeke doe not hold an abſolute authoritie of all generall Councels: for they acknowledge only ſeven generall Councels, and anathematize all the reſt. Ieremie Patriarch of Conſtantinople, thus writeth concerning the authoritie of the Miniſters of the Church, Siquidem fidei dogma pervertat, etiamſi angelus ſit, obaudire noli: If any pervert the doctrine of faith, though he be an Angell, hearken not unto him. If an Angell be not to be heard teaching otherwiſe than the Scriptures, much leſſe mortall men, though gathered together in Councell.

2 Zaga Zabo ſhall ſpeake for the Aethiopike Church: That to the bookes of the old and new Teſtament, it is lawfull to adde nothing to detract, quandam Angelus de cœlo id nobis perſuadere conaretur, although an Angell from heaven ſhould ſeeke to perſwade us, And it followeth; Quare nec patriarcha, &c. Wherefore neither our Patriarch, nor our Biſhops by themſelves or in Councell doe thinke, that they may make lawes, quibus ad mortale peccatum obligari quis poſſet, whereby any may bee bound unto mortall ſinne, &c. That is, if they tranſgreſſe them: then in his opinion, new articles of faith cannot be deviſed by Councels, nor any bound abſolutely under paine of mortall ſinne to obey their decrees.

The Seventh Queſtion, whether Councels be above the Pope or not.

The Papiſts.

THis is a matter yet not fully determined amongſt the Papiſts: neither are they all of one opinion. In the Councell of Conſtance and Baſil, it was fully concluded, that the Councell is above the Pope. Gerſon of Paris, that was alſo preſent in the Councell of Conſtance, and a great doer againſt Iohn Huſſe, ſtiflie maintaineth the authoritie of Councels above the Pope. Other Papiſts more favourable to their new god amight, ſay, that the Pope is by right above the Councell, but hee may (if hee will) ſubmit himſelfe to the Councell. But now commeth in the ſtout Jeſuite, and ſaith with the reſt of the Schoolmen, that the Pope hath ſuch a ſoveraigntie above the Councell, that hee cannot be ſubject to their ſentence; though he would, Bellarm. de concil. lib.2.14. Yet he is in a mammering with himſelfe: for ſaith he, in periculo ſchiſmatis, When there is a ſchiſme, and it is not knowne who is the true Pope; in ſuch a caſe the Councell is above the Pope. Let us examine ſome of his beſt reaſons,

35. Error

Argum.1. Now commeth in a great blaſphemie. All the names, ſaith the Jeſuite, that are given to Chriſt in the Scriptures, as head of the Church, are aſcribed to the Pope, as he is called fidelis diſpenſator, Luk.12. a faithfull ſteward in the Lords houſe: Paſtor gregis, Ioh.10. the ſhepheard of the flocke: Caput corporis eccleſiæ, Epheſ.4. the head of his bodie the Church: Vir ſeu ſponſus, Epheſ.5. the husband or ſpouſe of the Church: All theſe titles (ſaith he) are due to the Pope: Ergo, he is above the Church, and ſo conſequently above generall Councels, Bellarmine de concil. lib.2.17.

O Lord, what great blaſphemie is heere, to appropriate the titles of Chriſt, to a mortall man! But goe to Bellarmine, and the reſt of that pack, fill up the meaſure of the iniquitie of your forefathers; thers: ſay with Pope Athanaſius, that the people of the world are the parts of his bodie: with Cornelius the Biſhop in the Councell of Trent, the Pope being the light came into the world, and men loved darknes rather than light: with Pope Calixtus in the Councell of Rhemes, who, when hee ſaw the Councell would not conſent to excommunicate the Emperour, impiouſly cried out that they had forſaken him, as Chriſt was left of his Diſciples: with Innocentius the third, that all things in heaven and earth, and under the earth doe bow the knee unto him: with Otho no Pope but a Cardinall, that ſitting amongſt his Biſhops, blaſphemouſly applied to himſelfe the viſion of Exechiel, chap 1. reſembling the Biſhops to the foure faced beaſts, himſelfe unto God that appeared to the Prophet in the midſt. Even thus with the like ſpirit of blaſphemie, doe the Jeſuites crie out, that the Pope is the chiefe ſhepheard, ſteward, husband, and head of the Church upon earth.

But we will leave to charge them ſo deeply with blaſphemie, which notwithſtanding they cannot avoid: let us heare what the fathers of Baſil ſay to this point. Bellarmine ſaith, the Pope is the husband; but they reaſon cleane contrarie: the Church (ſay they) is the ſpouſe of Chriſt: the Pope, make the beſt of him you can, is but a Vicar: but no man doth ſo ordaine a Vicar, that he maketh his ſpouſe ſubject unto him, but that the ſpouſe is alwaies thought to be of more authoritie than the Vicar, forſomuch as ſhe is one bodie with her husband; but the Vicar is not ſo: thus have they to the full anſwered the Jeſuite, ex Ænea Sylvio. Better arguments they have none for the Popes prerogative, than we have ſeene.

*Argum.*2. The Pope by his ſole authoritie may congregate a generall Councell: Ergo, hee is above a generall Councell.

Anſw. Firſt, to this anſwereth the Councell of Baſil, Epiſtol. Synodal. after this manner: by denying of the argument Ante Concilii congregationem Concilium non eſt, ſed ut primum congregatum eſt, ſtatim poteſtas univerſalis eccleſiæ, quæ eſt immediatè à Chriſto, in ipſum transfunditur & fit ipſum Concilium ſupra Papam: Before the gathering together of the Councell, it is as yet no Councell: but as ſoone as it is congregate, the power and authoritie of the univerſall Church is transfuſed into it, and ſo the Councell becommeth above the Pope: therefore it followeth not, that becauſe the Pope doth call it before it be a Councell, that he is above it when it is called.

Secondly, we anſwer, as we have ſhewed in the queſtion before, that this authoritie of ſummoning Councels belongeth not to the Pope.

Other arguments uſed by our adverſaries are anſwered to the full, by Iohannes Patriarch of Antioch, opuſculo Baſil. Concil. annexo: As firſt the Church receiveth the juriſdiction of the keies from the Pope: Ergo, it is inferiour. Secondly, Chriſt ſaid to Peter, Feed my ſheepe, the Paſtor is above the ſheepe. Thirdly, the Pope is the head of the Church: Ergo non licitum eſt membra ab obedientia capitis recedere: Therefore it is not lawfull for the members to depart from the obedience of the head.

Anſw. The Patriarch anſwereth thus: to the firſt, Petrus recepit claves ſub nomine & ſigno eccleſiæ: Peter received the keyes not in his owne name, but in the name and ſignification of the Church. The Church then receiveth them not from Peter, but he received them for the Church.

To the ſecond, Chriſt in ſaying to Peter, Feed my ſheepe, gave him power ſuper ſingularia membra, over ſome particular members, not over the univerſall Church.

To the third he frameth this anſwer: firſt, he denieth the Pope to be head of the univerſall Church. Secondly, and yet he ſaith, Si caput in humano corpore efficitur languidum, &c. If the head in the body be weake and diſtempered, it is lawfull for the parts, illud ligare & cauterizare, to bind and cauterize it, leſt the ſicknes of the head ſhould affect the whole bodie. And againe, he putteth this caſe: Si Papa eſſet furioſus, & diſcurreret cum gladio, &c. If the Pope were mad, and ſhould run up and downe with a drawne ſword, killing whom he met, it were lawfull for his ſubjects to take him, and bind him: Si hac liceret pro ſalvatione corporis, &c. If this be lawfull to be done by private men, for the health of the body, much more may a generall Councell repreſenting the univerſall Church do it, for the health of the ſoule. Who liſt to ſee ſhall find divers other popiſh arguments there anſwered: opuſcul. Iohan. Patriarch. Antiochen.

The Proteſtants.

THat the Pope is by right, and ought to be ſubject to generall Councels, and that they have authoritie to judge, examine, ſuſpend, puniſh, and depoſe him, if there be juſt cauſe, it is proved thus: This matter was pithily diſputed upon by the fathers of Baſil, ſome of whoſe reaſons it ſhall be ſufficient here to follow.

1 They prove this concluſion out of Scripture, Firſt, whereas Panormitane had ſaid, that the Pope was Lord of the Church: unto him Segonius anſwered, that it was the moſt honourable title of the Biſhop of Rome, to be called the ſervant of the ſervants of God: and Peter, ſaith he, forbiddeth Paſtors to behave themſelves as Lords over the Clergie, 1 *Pet.*5. And if Chriſt the Son of God came not to be miniſtred unto, but to miniſter and ſerve, how then can his Vicar have any dominion? So was Panormitane anſwered.

Againe, the Divines thus argued: Chriſt ſaith to Peter, Dic eccleſiæ, Peter is ſent to the Church or Councell: Ergo, the veritie doth remit the Biſhop of Rome to the Councell. But to this the Jeſuite ſaith, that Peter was not yet entred into his office to bee chiefe Biſhop, but was as a private perſon. So then belike, this rule of our Saviour Chriſt, dic eccleſiæ, tell it to the Church, did but blinde Peter, till Chriſt were aſcended, and hee received his Vicardome.

This cavillous anſwer the fathers of Baſil wiſely foreſaw, and prevented it: for they ſhew how Peter was ſubject to Councels even after the aſcenſion: as Acts 11. Peter is rebuked (ſay they) by the congregation, becauſe he went to Cornelius, an heathen man: as if it had not been lawfull for him to attempt any great matter without the knowledge of the congregation. But that ſeemeth to make more for the purpoſe, Galath. 2. where Paul rebuked Peter to his face, becauſe contrarie to the decree of the Councell of the Apoſtles, he did cogere gentes Iudaizare, he would conſtraine the Gentiles to doe like the Jewes: Ergo, Peter was ſubject unto the Councell, ex Ænea Sylvio.

Galath.2.11.

Other reaſons many were alleaged by the fathers of Baſil. Firſt, the Biſhop Burgenſ. As in every well ordered kingdome, the whole realme ſhould be of more authoritie than the King, ſo the Church ought to be of more authoritie than the Pope, though he were prince thereof.

Argum. 2. The Divines brought theſe arguments: The Church is the mother of the faithfull, and ſo of the Pope, if he be a faithfull man: the Pope is then the Churches Son, as both Anacletus and Calixtus Biſhops of Rome confeſſed: Ergo, how much the ſonne is inferiour to his mother, ſo much is the Church ſuperiour to the Pope. Secondly, the Pope is inferiour to Angels, hee is not greater than Iohn Baptiſt, of whom it is ſaid, that the leaſt in the kingdome of God is greater than he: but the Angels doe reverently accord unto the doctrine of the Church, Epheſ. 3. 10. Ergo, the Pope is bound to doe the ſame, who is leſſe than the Angels. Theſe fathers thought none ſo abſurd to denie the Pope to be inferiour to Angels, and therefore labour not to prove it. Yet Antoninus an old Papiſt ſaith, Non minor honor datur Papa quàm Angelis: There is no leſſe honour due to the Pope, than to the Angels. Nay another ſaith (I thinke it be Pope Paſchalis) Datur Epiſcopis, quod ne Angelis, ut Chriſti corpus crearent: It is granted to Biſhops, which is not given to the Angels, to create the bodie of Chriſt. But the fathers of Baſil thought not theſe men worthie the anſwer; no more doe wee, and ſo let them paſſe. Thirdly, the Pope (ſay they) being the Vicar of the Church (for he is more truly ſo called than the Vicar of Chriſt) he may be depoſed of the Church: for a Lord may put out his Vicar at his pleaſure: Ergo, the Pope is under Councels.

Epheſ.3.10.

Argum. 3. If the Councels might not overrule the Pope, there were no remedie left to reſiſt a wicked Pope! Shall we ſuffer all things, ſay they, to run into ruine and decay with him? for it is not like, that he would congregate a Councell againſt himſelfe. To this the Jeſuite anſwereth: that there is no remedie left, but to pray to God in ſuch a caſe; who will either confound, or convert ſuch a Pope. Here is goodly divinitie: wee know that Antichriſt ſhall at length be deſtroyed at the comming of Chriſt: but if hee ſhould be let alone in the meane while, and not be brideled, hee might doe much hurt, as he hath done two much alreadie. Yet the Jeſuite confeſſeth, that a wicked Pope may be reſiſted by force and armes: and why not I pray you, as well by peaceable meanes? theſe ſayings are contrarie. Bellarm. cap. 19.

So then, this is Popiſh divinitie, that be the Pope never ſo wicked, doe he never ſo much harme, he is not to be controlled of any mortall man. Such doltiſh Schoole points, maintained eſpecially by begging Friers, the fathers of Baſil complained of: As that they ſhould ſay, that no man ought to judge the high and principall ſeate; that it cannot be judged, either by Emperour, Clergie, King, or people. Other affirme that the Lord hath reſerved to himſelfe the depoſition of the chiefe Biſhop. Others, yet more mad, are not aſhamed to affirme, that the Biſhop of Rome, though he carrie ſoules in never ſo great number to hell, yet is he not ſubject to any correction, or rebuke, For all theſe ſtrange and blaſphemous poſitions, the fathers concluded, as ye have heard, that the Pope, ought to obey generall Councels.

Decret. p. 1. diſt. 40. cap. 6.

Laſtly, I will adjoyne the judgement of Auguſtine, who writing in his 162. epiſtle concerning the Donatiſts, whoſe cauſe was heard and determined by the Emperours appointment at Rome before Miltiades then Biſhop there, and other Biſhops aſſiſtants: and yet for all this the Donatiſts would not be quiet: Thus he ſaith, Putemus illos iudices qui Romæ iudicaverunt, non bonos iudices fuiſſe: Reſtabat adhuc plenarium eccleſiæ univerſæ concilium, &c. Put caſe (ſaith he) that the Biſhop of Rome & the reſt, judged corruptly: there remained (yet another remedie) a full Councell of the whole Church, where the Judges & the cauſe might further have bin tried & examined, and their judgement, if there were cauſe, reverſed, &c. Whereby it appeareth, ſay the fathers of Baſil, that not onely the ſentence of the Pope alone, but alſo the Pope with his Biſhops joyned with him, might be made fruſtrate by a Councell. Here the Jeſuite paltereth and ſaith, that a matter determined by the Pope in a particular Councell, may be called againe in queſtion by the Pope in a generall Councell. Firſt, what need that, ſeeing that a particular Councell having the Popes authoritie, as the Jeſuite confeſſeth, cannot erre: Againe, Auguſtine ſaith, Vbi cum ipſis iudicibus cauſa poſſit agitari: In the which generall Councell, the cauſe together with the judges, of the which Miltiades was one, may be tried & examined: ſo that the Pope himſelfe might be adjudged by the Councell, and not the cauſe only: Upon the premiſſes wee truly and juſtly conclude, that the Pope is, and of right ought to be ſubject to generall Councels.

This alſo was the judgement of the holy Martyrs: Biſhop Cranmer appealed from the Pope to the next generall Councell: the tenour of whoſe appeale you may finde, Fox pag. 1882. Maſter Latimer alſo being unjuſtly Condemned by Biſhop White, the Popes Commiſſioner, appealed from his ſentence to the next generall Councell which ſhould be congregate in Chriſts name. And with this appellation the Biſhop ſeemed to be content, contrarie to the opinion of the Jeſuite, who maketh the Pope ſupreme Judge of generall Councels, and ſuperiour unto them, Fox pag.1767.col.1.

Pag.1603.a.75.

Let us ſee the conſent of antiquitie. In the ſixth generall Councell, Conſtantinopol. action.3. Honorius Biſhop of Rome was condemned, becauſe he was a Monothelite, affirming one will only to be in Chriſt, and ſo conſequently but one nature. Sergio & Honorio anathema, Pyrrho & Paulo anathema: We hold Sergius and Honorius, Pyrrhus and Paulus accurſed: thoſe three were Patriarkes in Conſtantinople and held the ſame error: the Councell judged and condemned Honorius: Ergo, it was grater in authoritie.

Marcellinus alſo was condemned in the Sinueſſane Councell, for offering incenſe to Idols. Bellarmine anſwereth firſt, that in the caſe of infidelitie ſuch as this was, the Councel may diſcuſſe the Popes caſe. Ergo, by his owne confeſſion in ſome caſe the Councell is above the Pope.

Secondly ſaith he: Marcellinus firſt condemned himſelfe, and after that hee was judged of the Councell.

Contra. But the matter appeareth to be farre otherwiſe: 1. Marcellinus appeared foure times before the Councell: the firſt time he laid the blame upon the Prieſts and Deacons that did forſake him: the ſecond time hee asketh one of the witneſſes upon what day hee ſaw him offering incenſe, and ſo would have denied the fact: thirdly, he extenuateth the fault, that he did not offer ſacrifice, but onely burnt the incenſe in the fire. 2. There were 72. witneſſes produced againſt him, to convince him. 3. One Quirinus a Biſhop ſeeing Marcellinus ſo ſtiffe in his owne defence, roſe up in the Councell and ſaid thus: Non recedam de ſynodo, I will not depart from the Synod, till thy heart be manifeſted, &c. and ſo Marcellinus at the laſt fell flat to the earth, and confeſſed his ſinne, and was condemned of the whole Councell, where were preſent thtee hundred Biſhops, and thirtie Prieſts. Wherefore the Jeſuite may be aſhamed to goe againſt ſo evident a ſtorie.

Sixtus the third was accuſed of one Baſſus: Whereupon the Emperour Valentinian aſſembled a Councell, wherein he was cleered and purged: Decret.part.2.cauſ.2.queſt.5.c.10.

Symmachus in a Romane Synode, dignitate ſua expoliatus, was deprived of his dignitie: Decr.part. 2.cauſ.2.quaſt.7.c.41.in gloſſa.

Likewiſe the Church of Rome did anathematize Dioſcorus Pope after his death: cauſ.24.queſt.3. cap.6. Wherefore by theſe particulars it appeareth, that Councels have been of an higher authoritie than the Popes: we can urge alſo their owne authorities againſt them.

Conſtant.Concil.ſeſſ.4. it was thus, decreed: Synodus in ſpiritu ſancto congregata generale concilium faciens poteſtatem a Chriſto immediate habet, cui quilibet cujuſcunque ſtatus, etiamſi papalis exiſtit obedire tenetur: A Synod congregate in the holy Ghoſt making a generall Councell, hath power immediatly from Chriſt, to the which every man, of what ſtate ſoever, although he be the Pope, is ſubject to obey. And ſeſſ. 45. Pope Martin ratified and confirmed whatſoever was decreed in this Councell, in materiis fidei, in matters of faith: And that this was veritas fidei catholica, a veritie of the Catholike faith, to hold generall Councels to be a bove the Pope, it was concluded, Baſilienſ. Concil.Seſſ.33. The practice alſo of theſe two Councels was according to their decrees: for in the Councell of Conſtance, three factious Popes were depoſed: Iohn 23. Gregorie 12. and Benedict. 13. and Martinus the fifth choſen Pope. In the Councell of Baſil Eugenius the fourth depoſed, and Felix the fifth elected.

Laſtly, Ægidius Viterbienſis, in his oration or ſermon before the Laterane Councell, in the hearing of Pope Iulius the 2. ſaid thus: Siqui forte ipſum pontificem per ſe inermem parvipendere auſi ſunt, ſynodi authoritate metuere, & vereri conſueverunt: Nam ſi ſynodorum res geſtas repetamus, nihil illis potentius, nihil majus, nihil munitius intelligemus. If any have been ſo bold, as to ſet light by the Pope, being but weake of himſelfe, yet they feared and ſtood in awe of a Councell: for if we will but call to minde the acts of Synods, we ſhall underſtand that there is nothing of greater power, ſtrength, or defence than they, &c. Here is a large confeſſion, uttered even in the hearing of the Pope, without checke or controlement, that Councels are of greater authoritie than the Pope. And it is agreeable alſo to their owne Canons: Decret.p.2.cauſ.2.qu.7.c.35. If Peter were corrected by Paul, &c. how much more eaſily that which is confirmed by the whole Church, Unius Epiſcopi authoritati &c. ought to preferred before one Biſhops authoritie. And, cauſ.25. queſt. 1.c.1. Gelaſius, Every Chriſtian ought not to be ignorant, that what the univerſall Church in Synode hath aſſented unto, nullam magis exequi ſedem oportere, no Sea ought more readily to execute, than the firſt. So that by this Canon, even the firſt Sea is bound to keepe the decrees of the univerſall Church.

Concerning forraine teſtimonies, that the Pope is no ſuperiour, but ſubject to generall Councels: firſt, Nilus Archbiſhop of Theſſalonica ſhall ſpeake for the Greeke Church, who bringeth in divers arguments to this purpoſe: whereof ſome are theſe: 1. If others were bound to aſſent to the Popes decrees, an Oecumenicall and generall Councell were ſuperfluous. 2. He alleageth the 34. Canon of the Apoſtles, that the Primate himſelfe ſhould not decree any thing, without the ſentence of all. 3. Then he urgeth the example of Honorius Biſhop of Rome, who was judged and anathematiſed of the ſixth Synod. 4. Further hee thus reaſoneth: If any man ſay that the Pope is not ſubject to the lawes and ſtatutes of the fathers, he is by no meanes to be borne: becauſe he himſelfe hath received his prerogative from the fathers.

Nilus de primatu, ἀρχῆς τ῀ πάπου, lib.1. pag.30. lib.2. pag.71. παρὰ τ῀ πατέρων αὐτὸς τὸ πρεσβεῖον εἴληφε, lib.1.pag.82.

2 The Emperour of Ethiopia ſaid to Alvares, that if their Abuna (which is their Patriarke) ſhould preſume ſo farre, as to uſe toward them any unlawfull commandement, they would burne the copie of ſuch commandement. They doe not give an abſolute authoritie to their Patriarke to overrule their Councels. Alvares deſcr, Æthiop.p.29.

3 Of the ſame opinion are the reformed Churches. Confeſſion of Sueveland. In the concluſion they ſupplicate to the Emperour, that a generall true and Chriſtian Councell may be ſummoned, &c. for the ſetting of Eccleſiaſticall affaires at a ſtay: which were to no purpoſe, if the Pope, the chiefe diſturber of the Church, ſhould be judge of, and not be judged and tried by Councels. Harm.p.601.

4 The judgement of many of the Latine Church is ſeene before in the practice of the Councels of Conſtance and Baſil, which tooke upon them to judge, and depoſe the Pope.

The Eighth Queſtion, of the Conditions and qualitie of generall Councels.

The Papiſts.

THeir unreaſonable and unequall conditions are theſe and ſuch like, as follow.

1 That the Pope only ſhould have authoritie to ſummon, call, proroge, diſſolve, and confirme Councels, and he only to be the judge, Preſident and moderator in Councels, or ſome at his appointment.

2 They will have none to give voyces but Biſhops, and ſuch as are bound by oath of alleageance to the Pope.

3 That the Councell is not bound to determine according to Scripture, but to follow their traditions, and former decrees of Councels.

4 That no Councell is in force without the Popes aſſent, yea the Pope himſelfe (ſay they) by his ſole authoritie may abrogate and diſanull the Canons and decrees of Councels.

Theſe and ſuch other conditions the Papiſts require in their Councels: So they will bee ſure that nothing ſhall be concluded againſt them. And how unreaſonable theſe conditions are, I have ſhewed ſeverally in the particular queſtions belonging to this matter.

The Proteſtants.

OUr conditions, which wee would have obſerved and kept, in generall Councels, are theſe, moſt juſt and reaſonable:

1 That the Pope, which is a partie, ſhould be no judge: for it is unreaſonable, that the ſame man ſhould be both a partie and a judge: and therefore he ought not to meddle with calling and appointing Councels, with ruling, or moderating them, ſeeing it is like hee would worke for his owne advantage.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that this rule, that the ſame man ought not to be a partie and a judge, may hold in private and inferiour judges, but not in the chiefe judge, *Bellarm.lib.*1.*cap.*21.

Contra. If it be juſt that no man ſhould be judge in his owne cauſe, the ſame rule of juſtice ought to bind both the inferiour and ſuperiour judges: ſo Athanaſius tooke exception againſt the Patriark of Antioch, by whom he was depoſed, becauſe he was his enemie, and a partie; and his exception was admitted in the Chalcedon Councell, *Decret.p.*2.*c.*3.*qu.*5.*c.*15.

Alſo Pope Nicholas the firſt, Epiſt.ad Michaelem Imperator. bringeth in a ſaying of Gelaſius ſometime Biſhop of Rome: Quaro, judicium, quod pratendunt, ubinam poſſit agitari? an apud ipſos ut iidem ſint & teſtes & judices? ſed tali judicio, nec humana committi poſſunt negotia: I aske, that courſe of judgement, which they pretend, where ſhould it be handled? would they have it among themſelves, to bee both witneſſes and judges? Which is not to be admitted, no not in humane affaires: Ergo, the Pope, by the teſtimony of a Pope himſelfe, ought not to bee both accuſer and judge. Yea both the Civill and Canon law doe refuſe him as an incompetent judge, that is a partie in the cauſe: as *Cod.lib.*2.*tit.*6.*leg.*6. Valentin. That no man in the ſame cauſe ſhould be an advocate and a judge, *lib.*3.*tit.*5. *leg.*1.Gratian. Nemo in ſua cauſa judicet: That no man ſhould be judge in his owne cauſe. So likewiſe their owne Canons; *Decret. part.*2.*cauſ.*4. *qu.*4.*c.*1. Fabianus: That no man ſhould preſume to be both an accuſer and a judge. And *c.*2.Damaſus; The ſame parties muſt not be both accuſers and judges. Yea and that the Pope himſelfe, whom they make the ſupreme judge, ought to obſerve this rule, a preſident we have in the Chalcedon Councell, where, when as Paſchaſinus and Lucentius the Biſhop of Romes Legates would have Dioſcorus excluded out of the Councell, the judges ſaid thus to Lucentius: Si judicis obtines perſonam, non ut accuſator debes perſequi: If you take upon you the perſon of the judge, you cannot proſecute the matter as an accuſer. Wherefore we juſtly take exception againſt ſuch Councels, where the Pope taketh upon him to be judge, ſeeing he ought not to be a judge in his owne cauſe.

2 That ſuch a time and place bee appointed, as when and where the Churches of Chriſtendome may moſt ſafely and conveniently meet together: not at ſuch a time as Paulus the third called a Councell, when all Princes in Chriſtendome were occupied in great affaires: nor ſuch a place, as hee then appointed at Mantua in Italie, whither Princes could not come without perill of journey and danger of life, being penned in by the Popes garriſons. Thus Pope, or Biſhop Leo, (for then there were no Popes) wrote to Martianus the Emperour, to have the Councell removed from Calchis to Italie, but he prevailed not. So Pope Eugenius would have diſſolved the Councell at Baſil, and brought it under his owne noſe: but was withſtood by the Councell.

Concerning the quietnes and freenes of the place to be choſen for the Councell, the Synod of Baſil thus writeth to the Bohemians, that whereas they had complained in times paſt, that they could not have liberam audientiam, a free and ſafe hearing, jam ceſſabit, ſay they, omnis querela occaſio, now all occaſion of complaint ſhall ceaſe. Ecce jam locus & facultas plena audientia prabetur: Behold we offer unto you both freedome of place, and libertie of hearing.

Here Bellarmine maketh this anſwer, that whereas Cyprian hath this Canon, lib. 1. Epiſt.3. That controverſies ſhould there be tried, where they ariſe: that this is to bee underſtood of the particular ſuites of men, not of matters of faith, which may be in any place determined, as he ſheweth by divers preſidents.

Contra. That ſuch a place, not for judgement of matters of fact onely, but in deciding of points of faith ought to be choſen, to the which all parties may ſafely, and without danger reſort, both the Civill law, and your Canons doe warrant; as firſt, Cod.lib.3.tit.14.l.1.Conſtantin.Perſona miſerabiles,&c. Miſerable and poore perſons muſt not be drawne out of their province, And lib.7.titul.62.l.26.Gratian. Itineris longinquitas,&c. The length of the journey doth hinder appeales to be made a farre off: So alſo the decrees conſent hereunto, p.2.cauſ.3.qu.6.c.13.Anacletus. Peregrina judicia ſubmovenda; That judgements in a ſtrange countrie muſt no be admitted, decr.Gregor.lib.1.tit.3.cap.28.Innocent.3. That no man ſhould be called above two daies journey from home, no not by the Apoſtolike letters, becauſe of expenſes, and wearineſſe of journey &c. theſe two cauſes being rendred both by the Civill law and Canon, why no man ought to be ſummoned a farre off, may very well ſtand, and be obſerved in congregating and calling of Councels.

3 We would have it a free Councell, where every man might fully utter his mind, and that there ſhould be a ſafe conduct granted to all to come and goe: which the Pope for all his faire promiſes is unwilling to doe, as it was flatly denied to Hieram of Prage in the Councell of Conſtance; to whom it was anſwered, that he ſhould have ſafe conduct to come, but none to goe. Neither if they ſhould give a ſafe conduct, were they to be truſted, for it cannot be forgotten, to their perpetuall infamie, that they brake the Emperour Sigiſmunds ſafe conduct granted to Iohn Huſſe in the Councell of Conſtance, ſaying, that faith was not to be kept with heretikes.

Concerning this point alſo, the libertie of ſpeech in Councels: Conſtantinus the Emperour thus writeth epiſtol.ad Nicen.2.Damus unicuique libertatem, ut ſine omni formidine ea eloquatur, qua ſecum animo deliberaverit, quo veritas magis magiſque eluceſcat, & intrepida voce audiatur: We give unto every man libertie, to utter without feare, what hee hath deliberated in his mind, and to be heard without dread, that the truth may better appeare.

Bellarmine here anſwereth, that it is reaſonable, a ſafe conduct ſhould be granted, as was offered of late at the Councell of Trent.

Contra. Indeed ſuch a ſafe conduct, as was offered to Iohn Huſſe by the Councell of Conſtance, as I have ſaid, which they might breake at their pleaſure; but that ſuch a place ought to bee choſen indifferently, where every man might goe and come ſafelie, one of your owne Popes thought it reaſonable, thus writing in defence of the King of Sicilie, cited and ſummoned by the Emperour: Clementin.lib.2.tit.11.c.1.Nunquid venire debuit ad judicem exercitu feroci ſtipatum,&c. What ſhould he come to a judge being garded with a fierce armie? Or to a populous place and of great power which was bent againſt him? &c. Now if the Pope would call a Councell in Rome or in Italie, or in any other place, where hee is received, may we not uſe the ſame defence, which Pope Clement did for the King of Sicilie?

4 The matter ſhould not bee left wholy to Biſhops and Prelates, but the learned of the Clergie and Laitie beſides, ſhould give voyces, ſeeing the cauſe of religion is common and concerneth all. But moſt of all, nothing ſhould be caried with violence or popularity, againſt the Scriptues, but every matter determined according to the truth thereof.

See for this matter the teſtimonie of Pope Nicholas the firſt, cited before queſtion 3. of this controverſie. Fides univerſalis eſt, omnium communis eſt, qua non ſolum ad Clericos, ſed Laicos pertinet,&c. That faith is univerſall, and a thing common to all, and appartaineth not onely to the Clergie, but to Laymen, and generally to all Chriſtians.

Bellarmine here anſwereth, that it is againſt the forme of all Councels, that any but Biſhops ſhould have deciding voyces in Councels.

Contra. The Jeſuite if hee would ſpeake his conſcience, knoweth the contrary: for firſt in that Councell held by the Apoſtles, whoſe authoritie was greater than of Biſhops, Act.15, the queſtion is determined by the whole conſent of the Apoſtles and Presbyters or Elders, as verſ.6. The Apoſtles and Elders came together to looke to this matter, and verſ.22. It ſeemed good to the Apoſtles and Elders,&c.

So in the Chalcedon Councell there were aſſembled 630. Fathers, not all Biſhops, but many of them Prieſts, as in the firſt action, the Ægyptian heretikes tooke exception againſt the Prieſts, calling them ſuperfluous: and Martianus alloweth the acts of this Councell, inſtituta à Sacerdotibus; which were done by Prieſts aſſembled at Chalcedon, Cod. lib. 1. tit. 4. leg. 3.

And S. Hierome ſaith, whoſe ſentence is approved, Decr. p. 1. cauſ. 16. qu. 1. c. 7. That as the Romans had their Senate, without whoſe Councell they did nothing: Ita & nos habemus Senatum noſtrum, cœtum Presbyterorum: So the Church alſo hath their Senate, the company of Presbyters: Wherefore if Prieſts be as Senators in Councels, there is no queſtion but they ought to have determining voices.

5 It is a moſt reaſonable condition, that all things in Councels ſhould bee decided by the Scriptures. Bellarmine anſwereth no, becauſe according to the Law of Martian nothing ought to be called in queſtion, which hath beene concluded in Councell, as this hath been determined in the ſeventh generall Synod, that traditions not written ought to be received, Bellarm. lib. 1. c. 21. reſponſ. ad. 4. condition.

Contra. Firſt, the Law of Martian ſpeaketh of articles of faith once concluded, which ought not afterward to be doubted of, and of ſuch concluſions as are made juxta Apoſtolicas inſtitutiones: according to the inſtitutions of the Apoſtles, Cod. lib. 1. tit. 4. leg. 3. But this decree of the ſeventh Synod is neither an article of faith, nor yet agreeable to the Apoſtles inſtitutions. Secondly, as for the ſeventh Synod, wee reject it as an idolatrous Synod, and afterward repealed with the acts thereof in the Councell of Frankford, under Charles 1. yea one of their owne Popes, Adrian the ſixth thus writeth of this Synod, Parum verecundè abutentes, &c. They doe without all ſhame abuſe old wives fables and dreames, &c. Thirdly, that it is agreeable to the ancient practice of Councels, to have all things decided by Scripture: ſee before queſtion 6. of this controverſie.

Adrian quodlibet. 6.

Such a Councell we refuſe not, nay wee much deſire, which is the true generall Councell: that is not generall, where all men cannot ſpeake; no freedome nor libertie granted for men to utter the truth, where all things are partially handled, and are ſwayed by one mans authoritie. Wherefore the Rhemiſts ſlander us in ſaying we raile upon generall Councels, Annot. in Act. 15. 10. and that we refuſe them, 2. Galath. 2. Whether wee or they are enemies to true, generall, free, holy, indifferent Councels, let all men judge.

Concerning forraine teſtimonies of this matter. 1 Nilus the Greeke Archbiſhop thinketh it unreaſonable, that enemies ſhould ſit as Iudges: it were unfit then for the Pope to be Judge in his owne cauſe. And touching free acceſſe and libertie of ſpeech: Ioannes Baſilius, that ſterne Emperour of Muſcovia, did freely grant it unto Rohit a Miniſter: whereas, ſaith he, thou writeſt that thou mayeſt freely and boldly ſpeake, we remembring our promiſe, Nihil te metuere jubemus, doe bid thee to be afraid of nothing: the Pope is not ſo equall.

Nil. lib. 2 de pri at. ἐχθροὺς κριτάς.

Reſponſ. ad Rohit c. 14.

2 The Æthiopike Chriſtians doe not like that the Pope or any other ſhould impoſe his decrees upon other Churches, as Zaga Zabo an Æthiopian Biſhop ſaith; I am not ſent hither from my mightie Lord to the Biſhop of Rome for diſputation ſake, either to increaſe or decreaſe humane traditions, but to make amitie and friendſhip, &c.

Sect. 14 p. 63.

4 Touching the judgement of the Latine Church, ſee the decrees of Fabianus and Damaſus, Biſhops of Rome, before cited.

The ninth Queſtion, Which are to be counted the true generall Councels, and of the number of them.

BEllarmine reduceth all the generall Councels to foure orders. 1 Some are ſimply refuſed and diſanulled. 2 Some ſimply approved. 3 Some partly approved, partly refuſed. 4 Some neither allowed nor refuſed.

36. Error.

Of the firſt ſort he reckoneth the 3. Antiochene Councell celebrated ann. 345. wherein Athanaſius was condemned, the 4. Antioch. ann. 367. which confirmed the hereſie of Macedonius: the Councell of Millaine, ann. 354. againſt the Catholike faith. The ſecond Epheſine, ann. 449. where the Eutychian hereſie was ratified. Of the ſecond ſort he numbreth eighteene, the 1. Nicene, the 1. of Conſtantinople, the 1. Epheſine, the Chalcedon, the 5, 6, 7, 8. generall Councels held at Conſtantinople, 4. Laterane Councels under Caliſtus 2. Innocentius 2. Alexander the 3. Innocentius 3. two at Lyons under Innocentius 4. and Gregorie 10. the Councell of Vienna in the time of Clement the 5. the Councell of Florence under Eugenius the 4. the fifth Laterane under Leo 10. and the Councell of Trent under Paulus 3. Iulius 3. Pius 4.

Of the third ranke are the Councell of Sardis, the Syrmian Synod, the Councell of Frankford under Charles the great, the Councell of Conſtance and Baſil.

Of the fourth ſort he mentioneth onely one, the Piſane Councell anno 1460. which depoſed Gregorie the 12. and Benedict the 13. and choſe Alexander the 5.

The iſſue betweene us is concerning theſe 18. Councels, which they would have approved, and ſome of thoſe which he refuſeth, as the two Councels of Conſtantinople condemning the worſhip of Images. Bellarmine hath no other reaſon for the credit of thoſe 18. Councels, but this, that they were ratified and confirmed by the Pope, *Bellar.c.*5.6.7.8. *lib.*1. de Concil.

Bellar. lib.2. de Roman.Pontif. c.22.

Centur. 7. p.460 ex Hugon. de Concil. Diſtinct. 16.c.8.

Anſwer. 1. All theſe generall Councels had not the Popes conſent: for Leo Epiſt. 59. as Bellarmine alſo confeſſeth, alloweth not the Chalcedon Councell the fourth generall, but ſo farre only as it decreed concerning the faith: becauſe the like privileges were yeelded to Conſtantinople as to Rome. And Pope Sergius refuſed to confirme the acts of the 6. generall Councell, becauſe the 13. 36. 46. 52. Canons were againſt the Church of Rome. Neither doe the Romaniſts herein allow theſe Councels to this day: which notwithſtanding is againſt the Popes profeſſion, that he will ad unum apicem immutilata ſervare, keepe in everie tittle without change the eight generall Councels.

2 So farre is the Popes conſent from eſtabliſhing generall Councels, that wee therefore refuſe all thoſe wherein the Pope hath uſurped as chiefe Moderator, Director, and Confirmer of Canons, as being a partiall Judge in his owne cauſe.

The Proteſtants.

WE differ here from the Romaniſts in theſe two points. Firſt, we neither allow all theſe to be generall Councels, which they doe, onely the foure firſt, whereunto alſo wee care not to adde the fifth, we acknowledge to be true generall Councels: Secondly, we reject not ſome of thoſe generall Councels, which they refuſe, as the 7. generall Councell under Conſtantinus Copronymus.

Canon. Concil. Trident. at Colen 1575. Lib 23. anno 1552.

For the firſt our reaſons are theſe. 1 Divers of thoſe Councels are erroneous: the ſixth generall Councell alloweth the rebaptizing of thoſe which are baptized by heretikes: The 7. and 8. do decree the adoration of Images. 2 After the 7. generall the Pope tooke upon him to be the chiefe Preſident of Councels, and ſo ruled all according to his owne pleaſure: whereupon the Greekes acknowledge but onely the firſt 7. generall Councels. 3 Many of thoſe Councels are not extant, but onely ſome ſcraps of them collected by others: as the firſt and ſecond Laterane, the firſt and ſecond of Lyons, the Councell of Vienna: none of theſe are extant. 4 Some of them were no generall Councels, as that of Trent, wherein Bellarmine telleth us there were 280. Biſhops, with Archbiſhops, Cardinals, Abbots generals: ſome other count 255. But Sleidane more truly reporteth, that there were in all but 62. Now againſt this laſt Councell, which the Papiſts doe ſo much brag of, wee take theſe exceptions.

1 The number was not ſufficient to make a generall Councell: there have beene more in ſome provinciall Synods.

2 They were all ſworne to the Pope, and ſo ruled and directed by him.

[a] Æneas Sylvius lib. 1. ſect. 13.

[b] In tit. 1. p. 42.

3 The moſt of the Biſhops there were Italians: which nation onely in number of Biſhops, aut ſuperat aut æquat alias nationes, Doth either exceed or equall other nations, as [a] Lodovicus Cardinall of Arles ſaid in the Councell of Baſil. And [b] Eſpenceus ſaith, Hæc eſt illa Helena quæ nuper Tridenti obtinuit, This is that Helena which won the ſpurs of late at Trent, &c. for Italy hath above 300. Biſhops, Archbiſhops, and Patriarkes, as many as all Europe beſide.

Iuel defenſ. of the Apol. p. 79. Innocent. Gentil. exam. p. 96.

4 Some of them were Biſhops without Dioceſſe: as Rich. Pates B. of Wincheſter, that had been blinde, Sir Robert of Armath.

5 While they were ſitting in the Councell, the Pope was deviſing Canons at Rome, which were ſent downe by packets, Poſts going to and fro continually. This then was a partiall conventicle, no true generall Councell.

Eſpenc. in 1 Tim. lib. 2. c. 2 p 257. In Luc. c 6 upon theſe words, If the blinde lead the blinde, Fox p. 210. Ex proteſtation. Concionat. Germ. adverſ. convent. Tridentur.

6 Adde further the inſufficiencie and ſcandalous behaviour of the Popiſh Biſhops there aſſembled. Eſpenceus ſaith, that none of them was knowne to preach all the while the Councell continued: and Stella ſaith, that the Biſhops brought with them doctos Theologos qui ipſos illuminent: learned Divines to illuminate them: And he addeth further: In hac quidem re non potui mihi à riſu temperare: I could not but laugh (ſaith hee) thoſe Biſhops ſhould have done better to have given over their Biſhopricks to theſe Divines, &c. And for their behaviour, two of their Biſhops were ſlaine being taken in adultery, the one wherof was ſeen the next morning hanging dead out of a window. Now I appeale unto any indifferent man, whether this be not worthy to be numbred among the number of generall Councels.

For the other point, that the Councell of Conſtantinople held under Conſtantinus Copronymus, wherein the adoration of Images was condemned, is rather to be held the 7. generall Councell, than the 2. Nicene under Conſtantinus and Irene his mother, wherein that ſuperſtitious adoration was confirmed: our reaſons are theſe.

Zonaras tom. 3. Platin. & Bargomen. lib. 10.

1 The Emperour Conſtantin. Copronymus decreed the other to be held for the 7. generall Synod, and the Fathers of that Councell agreed thereunto.

2 The 2. Nicene was held by the Empreſſe Irene, in the nonage of her ſonne Conſtantine, who afterward cauſed the ſame to be abrogated and diſanulled.

3 The 2. Nicene was maintained by violence and fraud: for whereas there was a Synod held before at Conſtantinople, where in open diſputation they which ſpake againſt the adoration of images were ſuperiour to the other, and convinced them out of Scripture: the adverſe part diſſolved the Synod: and in the meane time prevailed ſo with the Empreſſe, that the Orthodoxall Biſhops were partly diſarmed, ſome baniſhed, and then a ſufficient army being provided, the Nicene Synod was ſummoned.

Paul.Diacon lib 23.

4 The whole Synod was ſwayed by the authoritie of the Popes Legates: and the Biſhops confeſſe that they did conſent to the adoration of images, Legatorum Romanorum inſtinctu, by the inſtinct and perſwaſion of the Romane Legates: they gave conſent to pleaſe them.

Nicen.2.action.3. Centur. 8. p. 603.

5 Tharaſius the Patriarke of Conſtantinople, and Preſident of this Councell, was an ignorant man, and newly of a Lay-man made a Biſhop: and therefore as Carolus Magnus alleageth againſt him, it was no marvell, Si non recte prædicat qui ad prædicandi officium non recte pervenit: If hee preach not aright, that came not the right way to the office of preaching: Et ea docere quæ conſtat cum nunquam didiciſſe, and ſo teacheth thoſe things which it is certaine he never learned himſelfe.

Eſpenc. relat. lib. digreſſ. 2. p. 299.

6 Whereupon Carolus aſſembling a Councell at Frankford, anno 794. cauſed the decrees and acts of the ſaid 2. Nicene Councell to be reverſed.

Abeatium li. 4.

Thus then it may appeare upon what good ground the 7. Councell held at Conſtantinople is preferred before the 2. Nicene.

Now then to conclude, whereas ſome onely receive the two firſt Councels, as the Neſtorians, becauſe their hereſie was condemned in the third. Some only admit the three firſt, as the Eutychians, which were condemned in the fourth. Some allow of the ſix firſt, as[a] Adelbertus. Bellarmine[b] alſo maketh the authors of the Centuries of that opinion, but hee ſheweth not the place. The Greeke Church receiveth onely ſeven: as[c] Barlaam confeſſeth, and Ieremie the Patriarke, who writing to the Germane Miniſters, ſaith, that they alſo profeſſe to receive and embrace the ſeven generall Synods: but therein hee doth threape kindneſſe of them. Some doe acknowledge the whole rabble of them, even 18. generall Councels, as Bellarmine. We refuſing all thoſe, doe onely approve the foure firſt generall Councels, whereunto alſo may be added the fifth.

And herein. 1 We have the conſent of the Greeke Church, who allow and ratifie the acts of the five generall Councels, with ſome other, as is ſeene before.

2 The Æthiopike Church at this day doth reverence theſe foure above all other, as Zaga Zabo teſtifieth.

THE FOVRTH GENERALL CONTROVERSIE, CONCERNING THE BISHOP OF ROME, COMMONLY CALLED THE POPE.

THis great and weightie Controverſie containeth ten ſeverall queſtions.

1 Whether the regiment of the Church be Monarchicall.

2 Whether Peter were the Prince of the Apoſtles, and by our Saviour Chriſt made head of the Church.

3 Whether Peter were at Rome, and died Biſhop there.

4 Whether the Biſhop of Rome be the true Succeſſour of Peter.

5 Concerning the primacie of the Biſhop of Rome: ſix parts of the queſtion. Firſt, whether he have authoritie over other Biſhops. Secondly, whether appeales are to be made to Rome. Thirdly, whether the Pope be ſubject to the judgement of any. Fourthly, whether he may be depoſed. Fifthly, what primacie he hath over other Churches. Sixthly, of his titles and names.

6 Whether the Biſhop of Rome may erre, and likewiſe whether the Church of Rome be ſubject to error.

7 Of the ſpirituall juriſdiction of the Biſhop of Rome: two parts. Firſt, whether he can make lawes to binde the conſcience. Secondly, whether other Biſhops doe receive their juriſdiction from him.

8 Of the Popes temporall juriſdiction: two parts. Firſt, whether he have authoritie above Kings and Princes. Secondly, whether he be a temporall Prince.

9 Of the prerogatives of the Pope.

10 Concerning Antichriſt: nine parts. Firſt, whether Antichriſt ſhall be ſome one ſingular man. Secondly, of the time of his comming. Thirdly, of his name. Fourthly, of his nation and kinred. Fifthly, where his place and ſeat ſhall be. Sixthly, of his doctrine and manners. Seventhly, of his miracles. Eighthly, of his kingdome and warres. Ninthly, whether the Pope be the verie Antichriſt: of theſe in their order.

The firſt Queſtion, Whether the Regiment of the Church be Monarchicall.

WE are not ignorant that the Philoſophers made three formes and ſtates of government in the Common-wealth: the Monarchicall, when as the principall and ſoveraigne power reſted in one, as in the King, Queene, or Emperour: as Rome ſometime was ruled by Kings, and many yeares after by Emperours. Secondly, the Ariſtocraticall, when the Common-wealth was governed by an Aſſembly and Senate of Nobles, as the Romanes had a long time their Conſuls and Senators. Thirdly, the Democraticall, which is the popular ſtate, when the people and multitude bare the greateſt ſway: as ſometime in Rome alſo, Tribuni plebis, the officers for the people had the chiefe authoritie. Now of all theſe in Common-wealth matters, the firſt kinde is the beſt and ſafeſt, the Monarchicall or Princely government. The queſtion now is, whether the ſame forme ought to be retained in Church government: and in this queſtion certaine things are to bee obſerved: Firſt, that wee have not to deale in this place with that part of Eccleſiaſticall regiment, wherein the Prince hath intereſt, as in ordaining Eccleſiaſticall Lawes, and ſeeing to the execution thereof, but the queſtion is onely of that regiment Eccleſiaſticall, which is proper to the Governours of the Church, which conſiſteth in the miniſterie of the Word and Sacraments, in ordaining and electing of Church-miniſters, in the diſpenſing of the keyes of the Church, in the Eccleſiaſticall cenſures and diſcipline, and ſuch like: whether in the Church there ought to be one chiefe Biſhop, from whom all other receive this power in the premiſſes. Secondly, the queſtion is not of the ſpirituall government of Chriſt, who is the chiefe Monarch and King of his Church, but of the outward and externall regiment upon earth. Thirdly, we ſpeake not of the ſtate of any particular Church, either nationall, provinciall, or oppidall, but of the generall ſtate of the Church: whether over all Churches there ought to be one chiefe Biſhop. Theſe things premiſed, we come now to the queſtion.

The Papiſts.

37. Error.

THat there ought to bee one chiefe Monarch and high Biſhop over all the Church, in all Eccleſiaſticall matters, for the deciding of controverſies, preſerving the unitie of the Church, from whom all other Eccleſiaſticall Miniſters doe receive their power and authoritie, they thus would prove.

Heb.8.5.

Revel.12.7.

Argum.* 1. The militant Church is in all things anſwerable and correſpondent to the triumphant company in Heaven: as Heb.8.5. Moſes was bid to make all things according to the patterne ſhewed in the Mount. But in Heaven there is beſide God himſelfe, a Monarch and chiefe commander of the Angels, even Michael the Archangell, Revel.12.7. Michael and his Angels fought. Ergo, it ought to be ſo upon earth, Bellarmine lib. 1. de Rom. Pontif. cap. 9.

Revel.21.22.

Wee anſwer: Firſt, the Church upon earth neither is, nor can be altogether like to the celeſtiall congregation: for there is no temple, Revel.21.22. There ſhall enter no uncleane thing: and many ſuch like differences there are: We are bid to follow them in holineſſe and obedience, ſo farre wee muſt imitate the Angels, as in the Lords Prayer, 3. Petit. As for imitation and conformitie in other things, we have no ſuch commandement: we are promiſed hereafter to be like them, but that is not yet. Neither doth that place prove any ſuch thing, Heb.*8. For how followeth it, Moſes was ſhewed a patterne to make the Tabernacle by: Ergo, the Church hath a patterne of her government from Heaven? When they can ſhew any ſuch patterne revealed in the Word (for their dreames and phantaſies wee will not beleeve) for the Church, as Moſes had for the Tabernacle, then they ſhall ſay ſomewhat.

2 It is a vaine curioſitie ſo to deſcant of the Angels, as to appoint them a Captaine and Commander, and to make nine orders or bands of them, as our Rhemiſts annot. 1. Epheſ. ver. 21. Theſe are but their dreames, they have not a word in Scripture for it. And concerning Michael, they are much deceived, for in that place, Apocal. 12. 7. Chriſt is called Michael: Michael and his Angels fought againſt the Dragon. And who, I pray you, is the chiefe Captaine of the Church againſt the Devill and his hoſt but Chriſt? And ſo it is expounded verſ.*10. Now is ſalvation in Heaven, and the ſtrength and kingdome of our God, and the power of his Chriſt: Here he is called Chriſt, who before is Michael.

In other places alſo, Michael is underſtood to be Chriſt, as *Dan.*10.21. there is none that holdeth with me but Michael your Prince: here Michael is the Prince of the Church, and not of the Angels. And that Michael is not the Prince of the Angels, as our adverſaries meane, taking Michael for an Angell, it is proved out of the 13. verſe; Michael one of the chiefe Princes: the Angels are all called Princes, and not one to be a Prince above them.

Likewiſe the nature and ſignification of the word Michael agreeth hereunto: for it is compounded of three Hebrew particles, as much as to ſay, one that is equall unto God; which name in that ſenſe cannot be given unto any creature.

Further, Epiſtle *Iud.*9. there is mention made of Michael the Archangell, who ſtrove againſt the Devill, and ſaid, the Lord rebuke thee Satan: where the Apoſtle alludeth to that place of Zachar. 3.2. where the verie ſame words are found: but there the Prophet calleth him Iehovah, that ſpake thoſe words, and here the Apoſtle calleth him Michael: So that in this place it muſt needs be underſtood for Chriſt.

Zachar.3.2.

To conclude, we deny not but that Michael may be the name of ſome glorious Angell: but out of theſe places it cannot be proved. And againe, we will not ſtand with them, but that there may be degrees of excellencie amongſt the Angels, as there ſhall be amongſt the Saints: but that any one hath any ſuch ſoveraigne and commanding authoritie over the reſt, it is a curious and preſumptuous ſurmiſe.

Argum. 2. The Church of the old Teſtament was a figure of the Church under the New: but they had a high Prieſt above the reſt: Ergo, there ought to be now, Bellarm. ibid.

We anſwer: firſt, we grant the high Prieſt was a figure, but neither of Peter nor Pope, but only of Chriſt: for in two things did the high Prieſt reſemble Chriſt, in offering of ſacrifice (ſo hath Chriſt offered up himſelfe, *Heb.*7.27.) and in entring into the Sanctuarie to make attonement for the people: ſo Chriſt is entred into the Heanens, to appeare in ſight for us before God, as the Apoſtle ſaith, Heb. 9.24. I trow in neither of theſe the high Prieſt could be a type either of Peter or Pope. Yes, ſaith Bellarmine, Aaron was a figure not of Chriſt onely, but of Peter and his ſucceſſors, *cap.*9.reſp.ad 3.ration. Contra. Firſt, then belike Peter and his ſucceſſors are Prieſts after the order of Aaron: How then are your Prieſts after Melchiſedechs order, as ſome of you have blaſphemouſly affirmed; they cannot be both after the order of Aaron, and of Melchiſedech too. Secondly, the Apoſtle thus reaſoneth, *Heb.*7.12. Where there is a change of the Prieſthood, there muſt be a change of the Law; and ſo conſequently, where the Law is changed, the Prieſthood muſt be likewiſe: how then can the Prieſthood of Aaron be a patterne of the Prieſthood under the Goſpell, the Law being changed?

Heb.7.27.
Heb.7.12.

2 Neither doth it follow, becauſe there was an high Prieſt in one Countrey, therefore there ought to be one over the Churches in all countries: as the Jeſuite frameth another argument by a compariſon: becauſe a Biſhop is over his Dioceſſe, a Metropolitan over his Province, there may be as well a Pope over the whole Church. For by the ſame reaſon, becauſe a Lord may bee the chiefe in his Seignoritie, a Duke in his Province, a Prince in his Kingdome, therefore there ought to bee an Emperour over all the world: or as M. Calvin ſaith, becauſe one field is committed to one Husbandman to dreſſe and to till, therefore the whole world may: which were a thing impoſſible.

Bellarmine anſwereth; firſt, it followeth rather ſtrongly on the contrarie, that if one particular Church had need to have one chiefe Prieſt to keepe it in unitie; much greater need hath the whole Church to have one principall, becauſe the whole Church is in greater danger of ſchiſme and diviſion than one particular.

Contra. Firſt, the Jeſuite had ſaid ſomething, if one man were as well able to provide for the peace of the whole Church, as for the unitie of one: but now he is not. But the beſt way to avoid ſchiſme, is for everie Countrey to be governed in it ſelfe: as in the Civill State one Monarch is better able to keepe one Kingdome from rebellion, than many Kingdomes: And this is the reaſon why the great Monarches were diſſolved, for that their Provinces rebelled, and withdrew their obedience from them. Secondly, there is alſo one head of the univerſall Church that doth preſerve it in unitie, Jeſus Chriſt, and therefore we need none other: as the Apoſtle ſaith, *Epheſ.*4.15. Let us follow the truth in love, and grow up unto him which is the head, that is Chriſt.

Epheſ.4.15.

Bellarmine ſecondly thus anſwereth Maſter Calvins ſimilitude: that one husbandman is not by himſelfe ſufficient, yet by his ſervants may occupie many large fields: and ſo the Pope by his miniſters may be Paſtor of the whole Church.

Contra. Yet the ſimilitude holdeth ſtill: for as it were inconvenient that all tillage in the world, nay in one Countrey, ſhould be occupied under the title and intereſt of one man; for by this meanes corne might be engroſſed, prices raiſed, the Common-wealth hindred: ſo were it as hurtfull for the Church to bee under the command of one that foreſtalled all cauſes, and ſought advantage to himſelfe, &c.

Argum. 3. The Popiſh Engliſh College of Doway, whoſe chiefe arguments in everie queſtion ſhall bee diſperſedly handled, have found out new arguments for the univerſall Monarchie of the Church: As becauſe there was one onely Arke, and one chiefe Governour thereof; they inferre that there muſt bee one chiefe governour of the Church: and againe, ſay they, Moſes reciteth the monarchicall ſucceſſion of one chiefe and ſupreme head from Adam, by the line of Seth, Enos, Canaan, Malalael,

In their edition of part of the old Teſtament, Annot. in 7. c. Geneſ. pag. 28.

Ialael, &c. and Noe: whereupon they give this note in the margen, one ſupreme head of the Church.

In the remonſtrance after the 7.c.p.35. Pag. 28.

Contra. 1. To the firſt part they ſhall make anſwer themſelves, who thus note in the margen, and Noe ſignifieth Chriſt, the Arke the Church: this one chiefe Governour then of the Church is Chriſt. 2 It followeth not, becauſe thoſe Patriarkes were the chiefe in their families, and the moſt ancient, were the chiefe Doctors of the Church of God, which lived there together in thoſe parts of the world about Chaldea and Meſopotamia, that therefore there ſhould be one chiefe Governour of the univerſall Church diſperſed over the world. 3 Whereas all theſe long lived Patriarkes lived together, Adam, Seth, Enos, Kenan, Melaluel, Iared, Henoch, Methuſelah, Lamech: and after the floud, Noe, Sem, Arphaxad, Selah, Eber, Peleg, Rega, Serug, Nahor, Terah, continued a while alive together, it will bee hard for them to ſhew which of all thoſe had the monarchicall chiefdome over the reſt: it may bee thought rather that they were all joyned together in a kinde of Ariſtocraticall government.

The Proteſtants.

Iuel anſw. to the Apol.pag. 637.

THat there ought not to bee any one chiefe Biſhop, Pope or Prelate, to exerciſe juriſdiction over the whole Church, we doe thus make it good.

Argum. 1. We acknowledge no head of the Church but Chriſt, neither doth the Scripture attribute this title of Majeſtie over the whole Church, but onely to Chriſt. If the Pope or any elſe bee the head, the Church is his body, which Bellarmine dare not grant. Pope Athanaſius doubted not to call populos mundi, partes corporis ſui, the people of the world, the parts of his body.

Epheſ.4.16.

Againe, if he be the head, he muſt doe the dutie of an head, which is to knit and joyne the parts together, and to give effectuall power to everie part, *Epheſ.*4.16. where the Apoſtle alludeth to the government of mans body: in the which the parts receive a double benefit from the head, the knitting and joyning together by ſinewes which come from the head; and ſenſe and motion alſo given to everie part from the head: but it were blaſphemy to think this of the Pope, that he giveth any influence to the Church. If they anſwer, hee is but a miniſteriall head, Chriſt is the principall. Wee ſay againe, that although theſe things are principally wrought by the principall head, yet they muſt be done inſtrumentally, or miniſterially by the miniſteriall head: or elſe it is but a rotten head, ſuch an one as the Wolfe found in a Carvers ſhop (as you know the fable is) a goodly head, ſaith he, but without wit or braine. If Chriſt performe all the dutie of the head himſelfe, then is there no other head: if the Pope doe ſomewhat that belongeth to the head, tell us what is it? If he will be an head and doe nothing, ſurely he muſt needs be a brainleſſe and witleſſe head.

Argum. 2. It is a dangerous and impoſſible thing to have the charge of all Churches committed to one man: God alone is ſufficient to beare that burthen. Saint Paul ſaith, who is ſufficient for theſe things? No Paſtour or Miniſter, that is but ſet over one flocke or pariſh, is ſufficient to preach the word: much leſſe is any one man ſufficient to governe the whole Church.

2 Cor.11.28.

Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt, S. Paul ſaith of himſelfe, that hee had the care of all Churches, 2 Cor. 11.28. We reply againe, firſt, then belike S. Paul was univerſall Paſtor and not Peter. Secondly, wee muſt conſider that the Apoſtles were ſent to all the world: their calling was not limited; when they had planted the Goſpell in one place, they did take care alſo for other places: but now there is no ſuch Apoſtolicall calling. Thirdly, Paul did not beare this burthen alone, but the Apoſtles and Evangeliſts were his coadjutors and fellow-helpers.

Secondly, ſaith he, why may not the care of the whole Church be committed to one man, as well as the government almoſt of the whole world was appointed by God to Nebuchadnezzar, Cyrus, Auguſtus; ſeeing the government of the Church is eaſier than the civill and politike regiment.

1 King.4.21.

Wee reply: Firſt, wee never read of any that had dominion over the whole world, as the Pope challengeth to have over the whole Church, which is diſperſed thorowout the world. Secondly, theſe great and large Monarches are ſaid to have been given of God, *Dan.*2.37. Not that this large dominion and uſurpation over other Countries ſo much pleaſed God; for the people of God the Iſraelites in their moſt flouriſhing eſtate never had ſuch ſoveraigntie over other Countries, but by voluntarie ſubjection, as in Salomons dayes, 1 *King.*4.21. the Kings round about brought preſents unto him; but becauſe the Lord turned and uſed this their large and mightie dominion to the good of his Church; for Cyrus was a defender of the Church, againſt all that bare evill will thereat: and the large Empire of the Romans ſerved very commodiouſly for the propagation of the Goſpell. Thirdly, the Jeſuite ſheweth his skill, when hee ſaith, that the regiment of the Church is eaſier than the government of the Common-wealth: Whereas there is no greater and weightier burthen upon earth, than is the charge of ſoules. It ſeemeth the Pope taketh his eaſe, finding the care of the Church to bee ſo eaſie and pleaſant a thing: indeed as hee uſeth it, it is no great matter; for he preacheth not, but giveth himſelſe to eaſe and idleneſſe, and all princely pleaſures. But England hath found by experience, and ſo did that worthy and famous Prince King Henry the eighth, that there was never matter ſo hardly compaſſed, as was the reformation of the Church, and the ſuppreſſion of idolatrie, and ſuperſtition in this land. Saint Chryſoſtome better knew the weightie charge of a Biſhop, than any of the Popes that preach not, or than the Jeſuite ſeemeth to underſtand: he writeth cleane contrarie, Eſſe difficilius Epiſcopum agere, quàm Regem: That it was an harder matter to bee a Biſhop than a King,&c. And againe, the whole world hath but one Emperour, Unius urbis Epiſcopus,&c. A Biſhop is but over one citie, but his care is ſo much the greater, as a tempeſtuous ſea exceedeth a ſmall river troubled with the wind, Hom.8.in Acta. This godly father ſheweth the vanitie of the Jeſuites argument,that an example from the Civill State is not to be taken for Eccleſiaſticall government. And how impoſſible it is for one man to manage all the buſineſſe of the Church, one of your owne Popes thus complainingly writeth: Boniſac.8.Extrav.commun.lib.3.tit.6.c.2. Multis arduis, quaſi torrens pragravemur negotiis,&c. We are overcharged with multitude of buſineſſe, as a brooke that runneth downe with many waters,&c. Wherefore Auguſtine thus ſaith, Nemo noſtrûm ſe Epiſcopum Epiſcoporum conſtituit, aut quaſi tyrannico terrore ad obſequendi neceſſitatem collegas ſuos adigit, de Baptiſ. 2. 2 None of us doth count himſelfe a Biſhop over other Biſhops,or taketh upon him after a commanding manner, as Tyrants uſe, to enforce his fellowes to obey. Ergo, by his judgement all Biſhops are of like and equall authoritie.

Argum. 3. The Apoſtle deſcribing the Hierarchie of the Church, ſaith, that Chiſt hath given ſome to be Apoſtles,ſome Prophets, &c. he ſaith not, hee hath ordained one chiefe Biſhop. And againe, one body, one ſpirit, one baptiſme, one faith: he ſaith not, one Pope, &c. *Epheſ.*4.11.

Epheſ.4.11.

Bellarmine anſwereth. 1 That the chiefe government of the Church was committed to all the Apoſtles while they lived: but after the death of the Apoſtles, the Apoſtolike authoritie remained in Peters Succeſſour onely, and ſo the Pope is ſignified in the Apoſtles, Reſp. ad argum. 2.

Contra. Firſt, why ſhould not the reſt of the Apoſtles have power as well as Peter, to leave their authoritie to their Succeſſors, as S. Paul ſaith, 1 *Cor.*9.5, Have we not power,&c. as well as Cephas to lead a ſiſter [a] a wife,&c. As he had power equall to Peter in this particular,ſo in the reſt alſo. Secondly, if Peter left the government Apoſtolicall to his Succeſſor, what doe you thinke of S. Iohn, the ſurvivor of the Apoſtles,had he alſo reſigned his Apoſtleſhip to Peters ſucceſſor,for he lived after Peter? Thirdly, there were other Sees alwayes as well counted Apoſtolicall, as Rome, Syricius Epiſtol. 4. can. 1. Extra conſcientiam ſedis Apoſtolica,&c. That no man ſhould take upon him to ordaine a Biſhop, without the knowledge of the Apoſtolike See: meaning the Primate or Metropolitan. By your Popes teſtimony everie Primate is Apoſtolicall.

1 Cor.9.5.

Bellarm. 2. The Pope is comprehended in theſe words, one body, one ſpirit: for as the body is knit in one obedience to the head, ſo the Church to the Pope.

Contra. Firſt,by this reaſon the Church ſhall be the Popes body,which the Jeſuite denyed before. Secondly, he hath uttered a great blaſphemy: for that which the Apoſtle attributeth onely to Chriſt, *by whom all the body being coupled,&c. Epheſ.*4.16. he giveth to the Pope.

[a] Great outcries are here made by a Popiſh caviller, becauſe we read ſo, rather than a ſiſter a woman, which were ſuperfluous, for a ſiſter implyeth a woman: ſo ſaith Retect.p.216.

We may adjoyne unto this that hath beene alleaged, certaine reaſons out of Biſhop Longlands Sermon,which he preached before the King: who although in his time he were a great perſecutor of the flocke of Chriſt, yet herein he held the truth: that there can be no other head or Monarch of the univerſall Church, but Chriſt: thus he ſheweth it: Chriſt onely is the great Prophet: ſo the Angell declared unto Mary, Magnus vocabitur, he ſhall be called great, Luk. 1. And againe, Propheta magnus ſurrexit inter nos, a great Prophet is riſen amongſt us, *Luk.*7. Sin maketh a man ſmall and little, vertue and holineſſe maketh him great. No man was ever without ſin but Chriſt: Ergo, he onely was the great Prophet. The Pope nor yet any mortall man cannot forgive ſin, as this Biſhop doth; nor juſtifie as he doth: neither enter into Sancta Sanctorum with his owne bloud, as he did: therefore no mortall man can be this great Biſhop, Hac ille Fox, pag.1100. col.1.

Let us ſee what antiquitie ſaith, Tharaſius Patriarch of Conſtantinople, Preſident of the ſeventh generall Councell,thus writeth, Epiſtol. ad Adrianum Papam. Nos accipientes venerandos viros legatos veſtros ad ipſam Metropolim venimus: & omnibus nobis ſedentibus, eligere nobis caput,nempe ipſum Chriſtum, viſum eſt. Wee together with your reverend Legates came to the Metropolis or chiefe Citie of Nice, and ſitting all together, it ſeemed good to chuſe us an head, even Chriſt, &c. Hee acknowledgeth no head of the univerſall Church but Chriſt.

Laſtly, in defence of this article Iohn Huſſe gave his life: Non eſt ſcintilla apparentia, quod oporteat eſſe unum caput in ſpiritualibus regens Eccleſiam: There is no appearance or likelyhood of truth,that there ought to be one head in ſpirituall things to governe the Church. Chriſtus ſine talibus capitibus monſtroſis per ſuos veraces Diſcipulos ſparſos per orbem terrarum, melius ſuam Eccleſiam regulavit: Chriſt without ſuch monſtrous heads did better governe his Church by his true Diſciples diſperſed over the world, *Articul.*27. object. Conſtantienſ. Concil,

I will adde the teſtimonies of other Churches. 1 That one Monarch ought not to bee over the whole Church: The Greeke Church to this day is of opinion: as Nilus the Archbiſhop ſheweth out of the Canons of the fourth generall Councell, where it was decreed, Can. 9. that if any Biſhop had any controverſie with his Metropolitan, he ſhould goe to the Governour of the Dioceſſe, or to the See of the princely Citie of Conſtantinople, and there be judged: This Synod maketh the Patriarchall See of Conſtantinople the laſt refuge of all controverſies of thoſe parts, and ſendeth them not to the Romane Eccleſiaſticall Monarch that would be.

Nilus lib.2. de primat.p.71.

2 The ſame is the judgement and practice of the Æthiopike Church, which to this day doe elect and chuſe their great Patriarke, whom they call Abuna, from the Church of Alexandria, as Zaga Zabo ſheweth in the confeſſion of the faith of their Church: which is agreeable to the ſixth Canon of the πάντων τούτων ἔχειν ἐξουσίαν.

the firſt Nicene Councell, that in Egypt, Lybia, Pentapolis, the Biſhop of Alexandria ſhould exerciſe juriſdiction over all theſe: The ſame Canon giveth the like power unto the Patriarches of Rome and Antioch, and to other chiefe Churches in their Provinces.

3 The reformed Churches thus deliver their opinion. Wittemberg: If the Biſhop of Rome were a godly man, and did teach the Goſpell of Chriſt, then he had a miniſterie of high authoritie on earth, to wit, a miniſterie of remitting and retaining ſinnes. But hee alone ſhould not have this miniſterie, but hee hath it in common with all thoſe, who by a lawfull calling doe preach the Goſpell of Chriſt, &c. French confeſſion, artic. 31. We beleeve that all true Paſtors, in what place ſoever they be placed, have the ſame and equall authoritie among themſelves given unto them under Ieſus Chriſt the only head, and the chiefe, and alone univerſall Biſhop, and that therefore it is not lawfull for any Church to challenge unto it ſelfe dominion or ſoveraigntie over any other Church.

Quod qui te- net, [illegible] precur- ſor [illegible]chriſti,

Lib. 6. epiſt. 24.

4 Gregorie the firſt miſliketh that any ſhould be called Univerſall Biſhop, which title Iohn Patriarch of Conſtantinople arrogated to himſelfe: hee ſaith, He that holdeth it is the forerunner of Antichriſt, Epiſt. 34. and thus he writeth to Iohn Patriarch of Conſtantinople: Quid tu Chriſto univerſalis Eccleſiæ capiti, &c. What wilt thou anſwer unto Chriſt, the head of the univerſall Church, in the examination of the laſt day, qui cuncta ejus membra tibi conaris univerſalis appellatione ſupponere, which doeſt ſeeke to bring under to thy ſelfe all his members under the title of Univerſalitie, &c. This Biſhop of Rome was of opinion, that there could not, neither ought to be one univerſall Paſtor in earth of the whole Church.

The ſecond Queſtion, Whether Peter were the chiefe and Prince of the Apoſtles, and aſſigned by Chriſt to be head of the Church.

The Papiſts.

38. Error.

THis our adverſaries doe ſtiffely maintaine, that he was not onely head of the Church, but of the Apoſtles alſo, Bellarm. lib. 1. de Pontif. cap. 11. And the Rhemiſts doubt not to call him the chiefe and Prince of the Apoſtles, 1 Cor. 9. verſ. 5.

Argum. 1. We will omit many of their waightie arguments, as out of theſe and ſuch like places: I have prayed for thee Peter, that thy faith ſhould not faile: Caſt forth thy net into the deepe, I will make thee a Fiſher of men: Peter payed toll for Chriſt and himſelfe: Peter drew the net to the land full of great fiſh: Peter only drew out his ſword in the defence of Chriſt. Ergo, Peter was the Prince of the Apoſtles and head of the Church, ex Concil. Baſilien. Fox, pag. 673. col. 1.

Pag. 616. 2. 90.

Acts 2. 4.

Such other goodly arguments our Rhemiſts doe make: Peter did excommunicate Ananias and Sapphira: he healed the ſicke by his ſhadow. Ergo, he was the head of the Church, Annot. 5. Acts ſect. 5. 8. Againe, Peters perſon was guarded with foure quaternions of Souldiours, Acts 12. 4. the Church prayed for him, Ibid. ſect. 4. Paul nameth him Cephas, 1 Cor. 9. 5. Ergo, he was chiefe of the Apoſtles. Are not here goodly arguments thinke you? To theſe reaſons I need make no other anſwer, than that which our learned Countrey-man doth in his Annotations. You muſt, ſaith he, bring better arguments, or elſe children will laugh you to ſcorne, Fulke, Annot. Act. 5. ſect. 5. Let us ſee therefore if they have any better.

Matth. 16. 18.

Argum. 2. They take that to be a maine invincible place for them, Matth. 16. 18. Thou art Peter and upon this rocke will I build my Church: Ergo, the Church is built upon Peter.

Epheſ. 2. 20.

To make this argument the more ſtrong, they ſet under it divers props: Firſt, why did Chriſt give Peter this name more than to any other of the Apoſtles, to call him Peter, of Petra a Rocke, but to ſhew that he was appointed to be the foundation of the Church? Bellar. cap. 17. We anſwer, Chriſt hereby ſignified that Peter ſhould bee a principall pillar of his Church, as the reſt of the Apoſtles, Epheſ. 2. 20. He changed alſo the names of ſome other Apoſtles, as Iames and Iohn were called Bonarges, the ſonnes of thunder, Mark. 3. Therefore this was no ſuch preeminence to Peter: neither is it true that Peter was almoſt called by no other name, for he is often in the Goſpell after this called by his old name Simon, Matth. 16. 17. and 17. 25. Fulke, Annot. in Ioh. 1. ſect. 7. Secondly, againe (ſaith Bellarmine) the text is ædificabo, I will build my Church: but if Chriſt bee here taken for the rocke, his Church was built already, for many beleeved in him. But Peter was not made the foundation of his Church, till afterward after his reſurrection, and therefore he ſaith, I will build.

Wee anſwer. Firſt, it is a corrupt gloſſe, to ſay the Church of Chriſt was not builded till after the reſurrection: for ſeeing that many beleeved before in Chriſt, and made a Church, either they muſt grant, that the Church was without a foundation, or elſe that the foundation was changed from Chriſt to Peter. Secondly, it is taken therefore for the enlarging and increaſing of the Church of God, It followeth not, becauſe Chriſt ſaith, I will build, and his Church was begun to bee built already, that therefore another kinde of building muſt be excogitate: no more then, becauſe Chriſt gave his Spirit to the Apoſtles, Matth. 10. 1. and againe, Ioh. 20. 22. and yet biddeth them ſtay at Jeruſalem till they ſhould receive the Holy Ghoſt, Acts 1. 7. that therefore they ſhould looke for another Holy Ghoſt, or as though they had not received the Holy Ghoſt before. But as the ſending of the Holy Ghoſt is meant, for the increaſe and more plentifull meaſure thereof, ſo is the building of the Church here taken for the increaſe of the building.

We yet further anſwer with Auguſtine : Super hanc petram, quam confeſſus es, edificabo Ecleeſiam: Tract.ult.in Iohan. upon this rocke which thou haſt confeſſed, will I build my Church : So that in this place is meant not Peter to be the rocke : but either Chriſt whom he confeſſed, or his faith, whereby he confeſſed him ; which commeth all to one effect. There is no great difference, whether we ſay the Church is builded upon Chriſt, or faith is the foundation of the Church, for faith is an apprehenſion of Chriſt : but of the perſon of Peter it can no more bee underſtood than of the reſt of the Apoſtles, who in ſome ſenſe are called the foundation of the Church, namely in reſpect of their holy Apoſtolike doctrine, upon the which the Church is built, Epheſ.2.20.

Bellarmine and the Jeſuites deny not, but here is relation alſo to the faith of Peter, but faith conſidered in his perſon. We anſwer : if they meane Peters particular faith, which was a proper adjunct to himſelfe, the univerſall Church cannot be built upon that faith, ſeeing when Peter died, his faith alſo, as a proper accident to his perſon, ceaſed : if they underſtand that generall faith, whereby Peter in the name of all the reſt made this confeſſion : then they all are as well made pillars and foundations of the Church, as he, becauſe it was their generall confeſſion, Fulke, Annot. in 16. *Matth. ſect.*8.

Let us now ſee how the holy Martyrs have underſtood this place, Thou art Peter, &c. Firſt, Iohn Huſſe thus interpreteth this place: that Chriſt in ſaying, upon this rocke, &c. did not purpoſe to build the Church upon Peter, but upon himſelfe who is the true Rocke : for as much as Jeſus Chriſt is the onely head and foundation of everie Church, and not Peter, Fox pag. 610. reſp. ad articul. 9. Pag.561.1.50.

Sir Iohn Bortwike Knight, condemned for the truth in Scotland, anno 1540. thus declareth his mind: As Abraham tooke his name of the multitude, which ſhould come of his ſeed, ſo Peter was named of the rocke ; but Abraham was not the multitude it ſelfe, no more was Peter the rocke: for the Church ſhould be ſtaied upon a weake foundation if Peter were the ground thereof, who being amazed and overcome with the words of a little wench, did ſo conſtantly deny Chriſt, Fox p.1260. col.2. Pag.1148.2.50.

Biſhop Ridley Martyr agreeth in the ſame expoſition : Chriſt ſaid unto Peter, upon this rocke of thy confeſſion will I build my Church : for this beleefe that Chriſt is the ſonne of God, is the foundation of Chriſtianitie, and the foundation of the Church : Chriſts Church is not built then upon the frailtie of man, but upon the ſtable and infallible word of God, Fox, pag.1758. col. 2. Pag.1596.1.70.

See the conſent alſo of antiquitie : Fabianus B. of Rome, *Epiſtol.*3. In Eccleſia ſuper petram ſtatur, dum confeſſionis ſoliditas humiliter teneatur : In the Church we then ſtand upon the rocke, while we hold the ſound confeſſion of faith with humilitie.

Fabianus Epiſtol. ad Zenonem Imperator. upon theſe words : Tu es Petrus, thus writeth : Super iſta confeſſione adificabo Eccleſiam meam : I will build my Church upon this confeſſion, and the gates of hell, &c.

Concil. Baſilienſ. oration. ad Bohemos in appendice. Super hanc petram, ſcilicet fidei, adificabo Eccleſiam : I will build my Church upon this rocke (that is to ſay) of faith, &c. Thus we ſee that thoſe ancient Biſhops of Rome and former Councels have expounded this text no otherwiſe than we doe now.

S. Ambroſe is a notable witneſſe in this caſe : Petrus primatum confeſſionis accepit, non honoris, &c. Peter received the primacie of confeſſion, not of honour, the primacie of faith, not of order, hee anſwered before the other, nay for the other Apoſtles : *De incarnat.cap.*4. And againe, *cap.*5. Fides eſt Eccleſia fundamentum. Faith is the foundation of the Church : for it was not ſpoken of Peters fleſh, but of his faith, that the gates of hell ſhould not prevaile againſt him, &c.

And Origen hath an excellent place to this purpoſe : Tract. 1. in Matth. Petra eſt quiſquis, &c. Everie Diſciple of Chriſt that drinketh of the ſpirituall rocke, is this Peter or rocke : for if we thinke that the Church is built upon Peter alone, what ſhall we ſay of Iohn the ſonne of thunder, and of the reſt of the Apoſtles? ſhall we dare to ſay that the gates of hell ſhall not prevaile againſt Peter onely? &c. Thus theſe Fathers expound this place, not of Peters perſon, but of his faith.

Argum. 3. Another place which our adverſaries mightily urge, are thoſe words which follow *verſ.*19. I will give unto thee the keyes of the Kingdome of Heaven ; whatſoever thou ſhalt binde Math.16.19. in earth, ſhall be bound in Heaven : Ergo, Peter had eſpeciall juriſdiction given him more than any of the reſt, Bellarmine cap. 12.

We anſwer. Firſt, as Peter confeſſeth in the name of all the reſt, ſo this power is given him not only for the reſt (as the Rhemiſts falſly charge us, that we make Peter a Proctor for others) but together with the reſt. Peters perſon muſt bee excluded : for immediately after he deſerved for a certaine ſlip of his perſon to be called Satan : it were an unfit match the ſame perſon at the ſame time to be honoured with the glorious title of the rocke of Chriſt, and to ſuſtaine ſo great a rebuke as to be called Satan. Secondly, here is no more promiſed to Peter than unto all the reſt of the Apoſtles, *Matth.*18.18. They likewiſe have authoritie given them to binde and looſe ; and it is performed to Matth.18.18. them all alike, Iohn 20, 23. Iohn 20.23.

2 By the keyes here cannot bee underſtood that large juriſdiction which the Papiſts dreame of, as not onely the authoritie and chaire of doctrine, judgement, knowledge, diſcretion betweene true and falſe doctrine, all which wee grant together with Peter to have beene given to all the Apoſtles beſides : But, ſay they, hereby is ſignified the height of government, the power of making lawes, of calling Councels and confirming them, of ordaining Biſhops and Paſtors, finally to diſpenſe the goods of the Church ſpirituall and temporall: All this is added without ground, neither had either Peter or any of the Apoſtles this ample authoritie, no nor the Biſhops of Rome for many hundred yeeres after Chriſt. For this plenarie power of the keyes, when they ſignifie a ſoveraigne and chiefe, and ſurpaſſing power, are ſo only given unto Chriſt, and to no mortall creature: Hee is ſaid to have the key of David, who openeth and no man ſhutteth, who ſhutteth and no man openeth, Apocalyps 3.7. Fulke, Annot. 16. Matth. ſect. 13.

Laſtly, I will oppoſe the judgement of the Fathers of Baſil, who alleage it out of Auguſtine, that Peter received the keyes for the whole Church; and out of Ambroſe, that when Chriſt ſaid to Peter, Paſce oves, the bleſſed Apoſtle tooke not charge of them alone, ſaith he, but together with us, and we together with him, Fox pag.675. col.1.

It ſhall not be amiſſe alſo to adjoyne the opinion of the holy Martyrs, concerning the true ſenſe of this place: I will give unto thee the keyes, &c.

Firſt, Thomas Benet Martyr, he ſaid that as well to the reſt, as to Peter: for Peter had no more authoritie given him than the other Apoſtles: or elſe the Churches planted in everie Kingdome by their preaching, are no Churches. S. Paul alſo ſaith, upon the foundation of the Prophets and Apoſtles, Epheſ. 2.20. that is, indifferently upon them all, Fox pag. 1039. col.1.

Pag.948.1.50.

Sir Iohn Bortwike confeſſor of the truth in Scotland, and condemned for the ſame; he alleageth out of Auguſtine, that Peter when he received the keyes did figurate the whole Church: for as Peter, all being demanded, anſwered for them all, thou art Chriſt; ſo he received this power for them all, and in the name of the reſt, Fox pag.1260. col.2. So anſwereth alſo Maſter Lambert Martyr, alleaging to that purpoſe the authoritie of Cyprian: Reſponſ. ad articul. 23. pag.1119. col.1.

Pag.1148.2.30.
Pag.1022.1.90.

Maſter Philpot Martyr ſaith, that Peter received the keyes in the name of the reſt, citing a place out of Auguſtine to that end: Si hoc Petro ſolùm dictum eſt, non habet Eccleſia; ſi autem Eccleſia habet, quando claves accepit, totam Eccleſiam deſignavit: If it were ſaid only to Peter, then the Church hath not this power: but if the whole Church have this power, namely to binde and looſe; then Peter, when he received the keyes, repreſented the whole Church, 10. tract. in Iohan. Philpot, pag. 1804. col. 2.

Pag.1938.1.70.

For the meaning of this Text alſo, we have the conſent of ſome Councels, Concil. Aquiſgranenſ. cap.9. ex Iſidor. Cæteri Apoſtoli cum Petro par conſortium honoris & poteſtatis acceperunt: The reſt of the Apoſtles together with Peter received the like fellowſhip of dignitie and authoritie.

*Synod. Colonienſ. ſub Adulpho: Medium 6. cap.*1. vpon theſe words, Tibi dabo claves, &c. do comment thus: Quam promiſſionem non ad unum Petrum pertinere ſed in omnes Apoſtolos tranſmiſſam alio loco dicit Chriſtus ubi inſinuat, Amen dico vobis, &c. Matth. 18.18. Chriſt in ſaying to Peter, I will give thee the keyes, &c. did not make that promiſe only to Peter, but that it belongeth alſo to the reſt of the Apoſtles, Chriſt doth ſhew, Mat, 18. Verily I ſay unto you, whatſoever you binde in earth ſhall bee bound in heaven, &c. Thus alſo S. Hierome expoundeth this place, *lib.*1. adverſ. Iovinian. But thou wilt ſay, Super Petrum fundatur Eccleſia, &c. The Church is founded upon Peter: yet in another place the ſame thing is done to all the Apoſtles, and all received the keyes of the kingdome of Heaven: & ex æquo ſuper eos, and equally upon them all the ſtrength of the Church is eſtabliſhed. So Origen alſo long before him interpreteth, *Tract.*1. in Matth. An verò ſoli Petro, &c. Are the keyes of the Kingdome given only to Peter, and none of the bleſſed beſide ſhall receive them? &c. Wherefore if this be common to the reſt, how not the other ſayings alſo, &c.

Matth, 18.18.

Argum. 4. Other arguments they alleage for the primacie and preeminence of Peter, as *Matth.*10. he is named in the firſt place, *Bellarm. cap.*18. We anſwer, this might be becauſe Peter was the moſt ancient in yeeres, or one of the firſt that was called: and ſo S. Hierome ſaith, asking the queſtion why Peter was preferred before Iohn: Ætati delatum eſt, quia ſenior erat: His age was preferred becauſe he was the elder. But howſoever it was, it is no great matter: for this order is not alway kept, as *Galath.*2. Paul nameth Iames firſt; Iames, Cephas, Iohn, ſaith he, *verſ.*9. the Jeſuites beſt ſhift is here to deny the text, ſaying; it ſhould be read, Cephas, Iames, Iohn: unleſſe Iames be named firſt, becauſe he was Biſhop of Jeruſalem. Marke, I pray you: Ergo, at Jeruſalem Peter was not before Iames, but next unto him: therefore not Prince of the Apoſtles.

Lib.1. adverſ. Iovinian.

But for a more full anſwer as touching this objection of the firſt naming of Peter: firſt I deny that hee is alwayes named firſt, as in the place alleaged. And againe it is evident, that the Scripture doth not perpetually obſerve the ſame order in ſuch rehearſals, as *Apocal.*21.19. The twelve Apoſtles are compared to twelve precious ſtones, whereof the Jaſper is the firſt, but *Exod.*28.20. where the twelve precious ſtones are named, which ſhould bee ſet in Aarons breſt-plate, the Jaſper ſtone is the laſt. If the Jaſper for the dignitie thereof doe ſignifie Peter in the Apocalypſe, how is it placed laſt in Exodus? So then wee may here ſay with Origen who thus writeth of the order of the twelve Patriarkes: Sciendum eſt, quod in ſingulis locis, &c. It is to bee marked, that every where where the Scripture maketh mention of the Patriarkes, there is great diverſitie in the order: there is one order obſerved in their [a] nativitie, another in their [b] going downe into Egypt; another when they are [c] bleſſed of Iacob; another when they are [d] numbred to do any thing in the wildernes; another when the land of [e] Canaan was divided, &c. after the ſame manner when the twelve Apoſtles are named, they are not alway ſet downe in the ſame order. Bellarmine objecteth that Peter every where is named med firſt, though the reſt be not ſet downe alwayes in one order, cap. 18. Cont. So Ruben is the firſt named of all the Patriarkes in thoſe five ſeverall places noted by Origen. He is firſt borne, firſt entreth into Egypt, firſt bleſſed, firſt numbred, firſt divided: yet Ruben for all this was not the chiefe among the Patriarkes: neither by this reaſon ſhall Peter be the greateſt among the Apoſtles.

Againe, ſay they, Peter ſtandeth up in the election of Matthias, Acts 1. preacheth the firſt Sermon, Acts 2. Acts 15. Peter ſpeaketh firſt. We anſwer to the firſt: We deny not a primacie of order to have beene in Peter: but it followeth not, that hee which ſpeaketh firſt, or giveth the firſt voice, ſhould bee the head and commander of the reſt. To the ſecond, wee alſo grant that Peter in zeale, promptnes and forwardnes, was not behinde any of the Apoſtles, but even with the firſt: for in him was that ſaying of Chriſt verified upon the woman: She loved much, becauſe much was forgiven her, Luke 7: ſo was it with Peter, to whom Chriſt forgave much, and therefore he loved much. Luke 7.47. To the third we anſwer, that by the Jeſuites owne confeſſion, Iames who was (as they ſay) Biſhop of Jeruſalem, had the primacie there: how then can they now give it to Peter? That Iames was the Biſhop of the Apoſtles at Jeruſalem, it is affirmed alſo by Stephen Gardiner in his booke De vera obedientia, by the teſtimony of Euſebius; and by Biſhop Stokeſly and Biſhop Tonſtall, out of Clemens Alexandrinus, who thus writeth: Petrus, Iacobus, Iohannes, poſt aſſumptionem Salvatoris, quamvis ab ipſo fuerant omnibus pene prælati, tamen non ſibi vendicarunt gloriam, ſed Iacobum Apoſtolorum Epiſcopum ſtatuunt: Peter, Iames and Iohn, after Chriſts aſcenſion into Heaven, although they were by him preferred almoſt before all other, yet they challenged not that glorie to themſelves, but decreed Iames to be the chiefe of the Apoſtles, Epiſtol. ad Reginald. Polum. Fox pag. 1066. col. 1. Pag.973.1.10.

There is another place beſide theſe already alleaged, which our adverſaries commonly object for the primacie of Peter: for that Chriſt ſhould ſay unto him thrice, Paſce oves meas, Feed my ſheepe, that is, rule and governe them.

To this anſwereth firſt Walter Brute, an ancient confeſſor of the truth, that Chriſt ſaid unto him thrice, Feed my ſheepe: becauſe he preached chiefly unto three Churches, and inſtructed them in the faith: namely, the Jewes, Grecians, and Romanes.

Doctor Tonſtall out of Cyrillus thus alleageth: that becauſe Peter had thrice denied Chriſt, whereby hee thought hee had loſt his Apoſtleſhip, Chriſt by thrice asking if he loved him, reſtored him to his office againe, pag. 1062. col. 1. So in your decrees, p.2.c.6.quaſt.1.c.10. Peter becauſe he denied Pag 969.1.80. Chriſt thrice, doth alſo confeſſe him thrice.

Againe, Sir Iohn Borthwike Knight condemned for the truth, ſaith, that to feed the flock of Chriſt ſignifieth not to beare rule or dominion over them: for in the ſame words hee exhorteth all other Paſtors to feed their flocke, 1. Epiſt. 5. Whereby it appeareth that either our Saviour Chriſt gave no ſuch authoritie to Peter more than to others, or that Peter did equally communicate that right to others, pag. 1261. col. 1. Reſponſ. ad articul. 1. See the anſwer alſo of Maſter Bradford to the ſame Pag.1148.2.7. effect, Epiſt. ad Domin. Vanam, pag. 1647. Pag.1496.1.20.

The Proteſtants.

THat Peter had no ſuch juriſdiction over the Apoſtles, as to bee called the head and Prince of them: but that to them all indifferently were the keyes committed, and did all faithfully execute their Apoſtleſhip without any ſubjection of each to other, but joyned the right hands of fellowſhip together: wee thus confirme it out of the holy Scripture, and neceſſarie arguments derived out of the ſame.

Argum. 1. Epheſ. 2.20. Apocalyp. 21.14. The Church is ſaid to bee built upon the foundation of Epheſ.2.20. the Prophets and Apoſtles: Ergo, no primacie of power amongſt the Apoſtles, they all founded the Revel.21.14. Church.

Bellarmine confeſſeth that in reſpect of their doctrine, there was no difference betweene Peter and the reſt, for they all were firſt planters of Churches, they all preached the Goſpell by revelation: but in reſpect of government they were not equall: they had chiefe authoritie committed to them, as Apoſtles and Embaſſadors of Chriſt: but Peter as ordinarie Paſtor, Bellarm. cap. 11.

We anſwer: Firſt, by his owne confeſſion the Apoſtles had chiefe authoritie as Apoſtles, but there was no higher authoritie or power than of the Apoſtleſhip. But as they were Apoſtles they were equall (ſaith the Jeſuite:) Ergo, there could be no ſuperioritie; for the calling of the Apoſtles was the higheſt in the Church. See alſo your owne decrees where that ſentence of S. Cyprian is allowed, Decret. part. 2. cauſ. 24. qu. 1. c. 18. Hoc erant utique cæteri Apoſtoli, &c. The reſt of the Apoſtles were the ſame that Peter was, having the like fellowſhip of honour and power.

Argum. 2. To preach the Goſpell, and to have juriſdiction of government, doe both belong to the power of the keyes: but the keyes were equally committed to all: Ergo, they had all equall power both to preach and to governe. That they all had the power of the keyes equally granted unto them, we have proved before out of Matth. 18.18.

Bellarmine himſelfe confeſſeth that Iames was Biſhop and ordinarie Paſtor at Jeruſalem, and ſaith with Anſelme and Thomas Aquinas, that therefore he is named firſt by S. Paul, Gal. 2. Bellarm. cap. 19. Therefore at Jeruſalem Peter was to give primacie to the ordinarie Paſtor there.

If they anſwer, that Rome was then the chiefe Citie, and therefore Peter being Biſhop of Rome was to have the preeminence: To this we reply, that Jeruſalem was rather to be preferred in reſpect of place, which was choſen by the Lord himſelfe, to be the chiefe Citie of his Church: but Rome through the tyranny and uſurpation of the Romanes over other countries was advanced to that dignitie, not by the election of God.

But Bellarmine anſwereth, that Peter was Biſhop of the whole Church, and ſo of Jeruſalem too. We anſwer, he now ſaith leſſe for Peter, than if hee called him, as hee was, the Apoſtle of the whole world: for it was more to bee an Apoſtle than a Biſhop. Divers were called in the Apoſtles times, Epiſcopi, Overſeers, or Biſhops, that were not Apoſtles, as the Paſtors of Epheſus, Acts 20. 28. Wherefore now hee hath ſaid juſt nothing: in ſeeking to advance Peter, hee hath diſgraced him, in pulling him downe from his high Apoſtleſhip to the chaire of a Biſhop. See alſo your owne decrees, part.2.cauſ.24.qu.1.c.4. in gloſſ. Unde cum omnibus Diſcipulis, &c. Seeing that Chriſt gave to all his Diſciples the like power of binding and looſing, &c. Yea, your owne Maſter alloweth that ſaying of S. Hierome, Habent eandem judiciariam poteſtatem alii, &c. The other Apoſtles had the ſame judiciarie power, lib.4.diſt.19.c.

Argum. 3. Peter had no ſuperioritie over Paul, for they joyned right hands of fellowſhip: and Galath.2.9. this allotment was made betweene them, that Paul ſhould be the chiefe of the Gentiles, and Peter of the circumciſion, Galath. 2. 9. Ergo.

Bellarmine anſwereth: Firſt, they were joyned as fellow-labourers in the preaching of the Goſpell; but Peter might for all this be greater in the office and power of governing. We anſwer: yea, but the Text ſaith, that Paul only was not appointed to preach to the Gentiles, but he had the chiefe Apoſtleſhip. Now to the Apoſtleſhip belongeth not only the function of preaching, but the whole uſe of the keyes, and power of juriſdiction. Ergo, in all reſpects S. Paul over the Gentiles had the chiefe Apoſtleſhip.

But leſt any man ſay that this was an humane compact amongſt themſelves, and Paul had his lot at Peters aſſignement: the text ſheweth that the Lord himſelfe had made this diſtribution. For when they ſaw, ſaith S. Paul, that the Goſpell over the uncircumciſion was committed to mee, verſ. 7. So then the Apoſtles did but confirme by their conſent that diſtribution, which they ſaw the Lord himſelfe had appointed.

Further, ſaith the Jeſuite, the diviſion was not ſo made, but that it was lawfull for Peter alſo to preach to the Gentiles. We anſwer, we grant it; and for Paul to preach to the Jewes; yet that diſtinction remained ſtill, that Peter was chiefe of the circumciſion, Paul of the uncircumciſion.

Againe, ſaith hee: but Peter had the more excellent lot, for Chriſt himſelfe firſt preached to the Jewes. Wee anſwer, wee deny not but that hee had the firſt lot in order; for to the Jewes was the Goſpell firſt offered: but Paul had the larger and more glorious lot; the Church of the Jewes now decaying, and the Gentiles beginning to bee planted in their roome. But howſoever it was, it cannot be denied, but that Paul was chiefe towards the Gentiles: And therefore the Church of Rome might with better right have derived their authoritie from S. Paul, than from S. Peter: both of them they cannot make Patrons of their See: ſeeing by their owne rules the Pope cannot be Succeſſor to them both.

Heare alſo how notably to our purpoſe S. Ambroſe expoundeth this place, writing upon this verſe, Galath.2.9. Galath.2.9. Petrum ſolum nominat, &c. He nameth only Peter, and compareth him with himſelfe; becauſe hee had received the primacie to found the Church, and himſelfe was likewiſe elected to have the primacie in founding the Churches of the Gentiles: yet ſo that both Peter might preach to the Gentiles, and Paul to the Jewes, if there were cauſe: for both of them are found to have done both: and yet it is knowne that full authoritie was given to Peter in preaching to the Jewes, and full authoritie to Paul in preaching to the Gentiles.

Further, out of the ſame place, Galath. 2. 11. another thing commeth to be obſerved, that Peter was rebuked of Paul, and in ſuch ſort, that it appeareth there was no great inequalitie betweene them; for he doth it to his face openly, before all men, and at Antioch, in Peters owne Biſhopricke, as they ſay: Can it be now thought that Paul was any thing inferiour to Peter?

Cap.15. Bellarmine and the Jeſuites anſwer, that the Pope may be rebuked of an inferiour, and ought to take it patiently, if it be done in zeale and love, Bellarm.c.15.

Anſw. Firſt, we doe not ſimply thus conclude, becauſe Paul reprehended Peter, therefore he was not his ſuperiour, but becauſe of the manner, as wee ſhewed: it was done in ſuch ſort, ſo plainly, ſo openly, without any ſubmiſſion or craving of pardon, that there can appeare no inequalitie at all betweene them. Secondly, although they ſeeme here to grant, that the Pope may be rebuked, yet is it otherwiſe in their Canon Law, which ſaith, that though the Pope doe lead innumerable ſoules to hell, no mortall man may preſume to reprove his faults, part.1.diſt.40.c.Si Papa. And howſoever the Jeſuite counteth this a light argument, both Hierome and Ambroſe doe enforce it, and your owne decrees allow it, part.2.cauſ.2.qu.7.c.33. Hierome ſaith: Paul doth reprehend Peter, becauſe hee knew himſelfe not to bee unequall, &c. And in the gloſſe S. Ambroſe is thus alleaged: Which of them durſt reſiſt Peter, to whom the Lord gave the keyes of the Kingdome of Heaven, niſi alius talis, but ſuch another that knew himſelfe, by the confidence of his election, not to be unequall.

This place in the ſecond to the Galathians is much urged by ſome of the Papiſts themſelves againſt Peters ſupremacie: for S. Paul ſaying, that as the Apoſtleſhip of the Circumciſion was committed to Peter, ſo the Apoſtleſhip of the Gentiles was given to him: hereby ſheweth, that he knew no primacie of Peter over the Apoſtles, or the whole world, but onely among the Jewes. This alſo manifeſtly appeareth, for that Peter being ſent for by Cornelius a Gentile, durſt not goe to him without a ſpeciall viſion from God, Act. 10. thereby declaring, that hee had no ſuch primacie given him over the Gentiles: Hæc Tonſtall. in Concion. p. 1062. col. 1. Pag. 969. 1. 30.

Maſter Lambert Martyr groundeth divers arguments out of this chapter 2. to the Galathians, that Peter was not ſuperiour to S. Paul: firſt, they joyned with him the right hand of fellowſhip: Ergo, he was their equall and fellow. Secondly, Iames is named before Peter, which Saint Paul would not have done, who loved order, if there had beene any ſuch preeminence in Peter. Thirdly, S. Paul reproved S. Peter to his face, which he would not have done, except he had knowne himſelfe equall to Peter. And as Peter was here reproved by his fellow Apoſtle, ſo was he blamed generally of them of the Circumciſion, who contended againſt him, Act. 11. 2. And yet Peter did not alleage any preeminence or authoritie, or charge them with diſobedience, for rebuking him: Lambert pag. 1120. col. 1. Act. 11. 2. Pag. 1021. 2. 80.

Maſter Tindal holy Martyr goeth further, and ſheweth, that if there were any odds or inequalitie at all, S. Paul rather was of higher authoritie than Saint Peter; becauſe hee laboured and preached, more than the [a] reſt, and ſuffered [b] more for the teſtimony of Chriſt.

Maſter Bradford holy Martyr, diſproveth the ſupremacie of Peter over the Apoſtles by this argument: The Apoſtles at Jeruſalem [c] ſent Peter and Iohn to Samaria, to confirme them in the Goſpell. Ergo, he was not their chiefe or head: for it had beene an unmannerly part for the members, to ſend their head in Embaſſage: Brad. in Epiſtol. ad Domin. Vanam p. 1647. Pag. 1496. 2. 30.

Iohannes Patriarch of Antioch, opuſcul. in appendice Concil. Balienſ. enforceth the ſame argument: Apoſtoli miſerunt ad Samaritanos Petrum & Iohannem; at major eſt qui mittit, minor, qui mittitur: The Apoſtles ſent Peter and Iohn to the Samaritans: but he that ſendeth is the greater, hee that is ſent the leſſe. Ergo, It may be objected, Petrus miſſus eſt conſilio, non authoritate: Peter was ſent by their counſell and advice, not commandement or authoritie: he anſwereth, that not Peter alone was ſent, but Iohn alſo. So then, as Iohn was ſent, in like manner was Peter: the one had no greater preeminence than the other in this Embaſſage.

Argum. 4. Laſtly, what reaſon was there, why Chriſt ſhould give the ſupremacie to Peter over the reſt? Chriſt was no accepter of perſons: if he had beene, Iohn ſhould have beene preferred, whom he loved moſt. If deſerts be weighed, I thinke Peter deſerved no more than the reſt of his fellowes: Nay, I thinke the wiſdome of the Spirit, fore-ſeeing the queſtions that ſhould afterward ariſe in the Church about Peter, hath ſo diſpoſed, that this Apoſtles infirmities both in number more and weight greater than any of the reſt, ſhould be evidently ſet forth in Scripture. We will briefly run them over, not to derogate from the bleſſed memorie of ſo excellent an Apoſtle; but a little to ſtay and bridle the prepoſterous zeale of our adverſaries, who doe aſcribe more unto him, than ever he would have challenged to himſelfe.

To let paſſe the ſmaller ſlips and ſcapes of this Apoſtle, as his raſhneſſe in adventuring beyond his ſtrength, to walke upon the Sea, Matth. 14. Secondly, his unadviſed ſpeech in the mountaine, Matth. 17. Let us make three Tabernacles. Thirdly, his ignorance, Matth. 19. in ſaying to Chriſt, How often ſhall I forgive my brother? till ſeven times? Fourthly, his impatiencie, as in drawing out his ſword and cutting off Malchus eare. Fifthly, his timorouſneſſe in flying from Chriſt at his apprehenſion. Sixthly, his curioſitie, Iohn 21. in asking concerning Iohn, What ſhall this man doe? To let paſſe theſe as common infirmities: there are foure great faults which Peter fell into, much amplified and ſtood upon by the Fathers.

1 He dehorted our Saviour from his paſſion with theſe words, [d] Maſter, favour thy ſelfe, and was therefore called Satan, an adverſarie to the death of Chriſt, and ſo to the redemption of man. Auguſtine chargeth him with great forgetfulneſſe, having made ſo notable a confeſſion of Chriſt before, and noteth him for ſome ſparkes of diſtruſt and infidelitie: Ille Petrus, qui jam eum confeſſus fuerat filium Dei, timuit, ne ſicut filius hominis moreretur, in Pſal. 138. The ſame Peter (ſaith hee) which a little before had confeſſed him to be the Sonne of God, feared leſt hee ſhould dye and periſh as a man.

2 In promiſing raſhly not to deny Chriſt, yea unto death, whereas Chriſt had fore-told him of his fall before, Auguſtine noteth great preſumption: Petrus ex egregio præſumptore creber negator effectus, Epiſt. 120. cap. 14. Peter of a great preſumer is become a deſperate denier. And hereof thus your owne decrees, par. 2. cauſ. 6. quæſt. 1. cap. 10. Petrus lapſus eſt, &c. Peter did fall, becauſe he preſumed of himſelfe, ſaying, Though other be offended in thee, yet not I. But Origen goeth further, Non ſolum inconſideratè, ſed pene etiam impiè, &c. Peter ſaid not only unadviſedly, but almoſt impiouſly, Though all men be offended, &c. tract. 25. in Matth.

3 The third great ſinne was committed by Peter, in denying of Chriſt, and that thrice, yea with an oath, at the inſtance of a Maiden, and in a verie ſhort while, before the Cocke crew twice. The Jeſuite anſwereth, that this was no hindrance to Peters primacie, but a furtherance and a confirmation of it. But whether it were a let to his primacie or not, let all men judge, ſeeing it had beene ſufficient to have hindred his ſalvation, and deſtroyed his faith, without the great mercie of GOD. Let us heare Auguſtines judgement of Peters fall. Some man may excuſe Peter, and ſay, that he did nothing, but as Chriſt fore-warned him. What then (ſaith he) if Peter therefore did not amiſſe, becauſe his fall was fore-told by Chriſt: Rectè etiam fecit Iudas, qui tradidit Dominum, quia & prædixerat Dominum: Then Iudas did well too (ſaith he) in betraying of Chriſt, for this alſo Chriſt ſhewed afore. But ſome againe may ſay: he denied not Chriſt, for he ſaid he knew not the man: Quaſi vero (ſaith hee) qui hominem Chriſtum negat, non Chriſtum negat: As though hee that denieth the man Chriſt, doth not flatly deny Chriſt. Chriſt alſo taketh away all doubts (ſaith he) when hee thus ſaid to Peter, The Cocke ſhall not crow till thou haſt denied me thrice: He ſaith not, till thou haſt denied the man, but me. Againe, Ipſe potius redarguit defenſores ſuos: Peter himſelfe doth confute his maintainers and defenders; Agnovit planè peccatum ſuum infirmitas Petri: Peters owne conſcience gave him that he ſinned, for hee went out and wept bitterly, &c. But if by this meanes his primacie was confirmed, he had occaſion to rejoyce, and not to weepe. Yea, he wept bitterly, his ſinne was verie great: how then dare one of your ſect ſay with a blaſphemous mouth, Petrus non fidem Chriſti, ſed Chriſtum ſalva fide negavit: Peter denied not the faith of Chriſt, but his faith remaining ſafe & ſound, he denied Chriſt. The ancient writers durſt not ſo extenuate Peters fall, no nor Peter himſelfe that wept ſore, as theſe men preſume to doe. For firſt Origen thus amplifieth Peters fall, Non ad modicum derelictus, &c. Peter was not a little forſaken to deny once, but he was abundantly forſaken to deny thrice: firſt he denied him before all; and againe he denyed him not ſimply, but with an oath: thirdly, not only with an oath, but with a ſpeciall denotation, I know not the man, Tract. 53. in Matth.

S. Ambroſe goeth further, Hexemer. lib. 5. c. 24. Peter before the cocke crew falleth; yea the third time he falleth, that you may know that it was not a ſlip only of his ſpeech, but that he was troubled in minde.

S. Hierome alſo thus writeth, De Vincul. Petri ad Euſtoch. What ſhall I doe? I have denied my Lord and Maſter: neither, as ſome thinke, have I only denied the man; I have denied him to whom I ſaid, thou art Chriſt the ſonne of the living God: I have denied him whom I ſaw walking upon the waters; whom I heard with his call raiſing up the dead; whom I ſaw with Moſes and Elias, &c.

And your owne decrees: Decret. part. 2. cauſ. 11. quæſt. 3. cap. 85. The Lord ſaid not to Peter, thou ſhalt deny thee to be my Diſciple, but thou ſhalt deny me: wherefore he denied him, when he denied himſelfe to be his Diſciple: and what did he elſe but denie himſelfe to be a Chriſtian? Such then and of this nature and qualitie was the fall and deniall of Peter, howſoever our adverſaries goe about to ſeeke colours and defence for it.

Galath. 6. 1. Bellar. cap. 28.

4 The laſt fault noted in Peter was that, for the which he is reproved of Paul, Gal. 2. Tuſh (ſaith Bellarmine) it was a verie ſmall and light offence. Yea, was it ſo ſmall a fault to conſtraine the Gentiles to doe like the Jewes? for this was the point, as S. Paul writeth, Galath. 2. 14. And Auguſtine ſaith, Petrus non abjurgatus à Paulo fuit, quod ſervabat conſuetudinem Iudæorũ in qua natus & educatus fuit, ſed quòd eam gentibus imponere volebat, Expoſit. ad Galat. Peter was not rebuked of Paul, becauſe he kept the cuſtome of the Jewes, wherein he was brought up, but becauſe he would lay it upon the Gentiles, &c. Was this leviſſimum peccatum, a ſmall tranſgreſſion? S. Paul ſhould greatly have beene to blame, for rebuking Peter openly, and ſo plainly for ſo ſmall an offence, and ſhould have done againſt his owne rule, Galath. 6. 1. But Peter did it of a good minde (ſaith Bellarmine.) Yea did? then hee was worthy to be excuſed, not worthy of blame, as S. Paul writeth. He might alſo doe it ignorantly and unwittingly (ſaith he.) How can that be, ſeeing he was one that made the decree, Act. 15. That no yoke ſhould be laid upon the Gentiles, other than there expreſſed; and now contrarie to that decree, he conſtraineth the Gentiles, Iudaizare, to play the Jewes. Theſe things doe not hang together.

The Rhemiſts ſay, that it was not an error in doctrine or judgement here reproved in Peter, but a default onely in converſation, Annot. Galat. 2. verſ. 11. ſect. 9.

Contra. 1. One of your owne Biſhops Gelaſius, tom. de Anathemat. Vinculo, is of a contrarie opinion, Sanctus Petrus primus, &c. Holy Peter, the firſt of the Apoſtles, thinking that the grace of the new teſtament ſhould be ſo preached, that he depart not from the inſtitutions of the old Law, did ſomething diſſemblingly, &c. and therefore his fellow Apoſtle doth worthily rebuke him, &c. It was then an error in Peters thought and judgement.

S. Ambroſe in 2. ad Galat. If Peter had diſſembled only, it had been no error, &c. But this was the cauſe of the reprehenſion: Peter did not only ſeparate himſelfe from thoſe with whom he had lived Gentile like, but he compelled them to play the Jewes alſo; ſo that the Gentiles were ignorant which was the trueſt way. And your owne Gloſſe ſaith, Decr. p. 2. cauſ. 2. quæſt. 7. c. 39. Par eſt à fide exorbitare, &c. It is all one to goe aſide from the faith, and by example or word to turne others from the faith: Ergo, this in Peter was an errour in faith.

I will now conclude out of Auguſtine, as he alleageth out of Cyprian: Nec Petrus, &c. cum ſecum Paulus de circumciſione diſceptaret, poſtmodum vendicavit ſibi aliquid inſolenter, ut diceret ſe primatum tenere, de Baptiſ. 2. 2 Howſoever it was, Peter, &c. when Paul reaſoned thus with him, did not ſtand upon his pantofles, and challenge any primacie to himſelfe, &c. But it is verie like, if there had been any ſuch primacie in Peter of power and juriſdiction (a primacie of order we grant, as Cyprian in that place calleth Peter, primum, the firſt) that this ſharp reprehenſion of Paul ſhould either have beene ſpared, or elſe not done in that vehement manner.

It ſhall not be out of the way in this place, to ſee the judgement of certaine Papiſts of great account in their time, contrarie to the opinion now received in the Popes Church.

Thus the Biſhop of Winchester reaſoneth in his booke De vera obedientia: The ſcholler ought not to be above the maſter: how could then Peter take that upon him to be chiefe, which Chriſt his maſter did ſo conſtantly refuſe?

That Peter was primus, that is, firſt and chiefe in number of them which confeſſed Chriſt, it cannot be denied: for firſt he confeſſed, firſt he taught the Jewes: firſt he ſtood in defence of the veritie, and was the firſt prolocutor among them. A primacie of order we grant, but not a primacie of rule and dominion: he was firſt in order, but it followeth not therefore that he was the chiefe in dignitie: As it is no good reaſon, Paris is nominate the firſt of all Univerſities: Ergo, they are ſubject to it.

Biſhop Tonſtall alſo in a certaine Sermon uſeth theſe and ſuch like arguments againſt the ſupremacie of Peter. Peters perſon (ſaith he) could not be the rocke of the Church: for then we ſhould put another foundation of the Church than Chriſt; which were contrarie to S. Paul: No man may put any other foundation than that which is put already, which is Chriſt Ieſus, 1 Cor.3.

1 Cor.3.11.

So ſaith he in the one and twentieth chapter of the Apocalyps, the new Citie and heavenly Jeruſalem, is deſcribed by the Holy Ghoſt, not with one foundation of Peter, but with twelve foundations after the number of the Apoſtles, plur. Fox p. 1062.

Pag.969.1.50.

Let us ſee the conſent of other Churches, that Peter was not the Prince and Superior of the other Apoſtles. 1 Of the Greeke Church, Ieremie their Patriarke ſhall ſpeake, Cœli ipſius claves Apoſtolis, illiſque omnib. &c. Chriſt credited the keyes of Heaven to the Apoſtles, and to all thoſe which are to ſucceed in their place. This authoritie was committed no more to Peter than to the reſt. And whereas that place is urged for Peters ſupremacie, upon this rocke will I build my Church, Nilus ſaith, that Chriſt built his Church (upon Peters confeſſion of God) and upon all thoſe which ſhall hold the ſame profeſſion. Barlaam ſaith, that everie one of the twelve Apoſtles received the keyes of Heaven, (as well as Peter.) And againe, how could Peter be the Prince of the Apoſtles, ſeeing (he did not ordaine them:) yet a primacie of order Peter had to ſpeake in the firſt place, as in the election of Matthias, and at the comming downe of the Holy Ghoſt: this was his prerogative, that others gave him the honour to ſpeake firſt. Baſil ſaith upon theſe words, Peter loveſt thou me, feed my ſheepe, &c. conſequenter omnib. Paſtorib. & Doctorib. eandem poteſtatem tribuit, cujus ſignum eſt, quod omnes ex æquo ligant & abſolvunt, quemadmodum ille, &c. And conſequently he gave the ſame power to all Paſtors and Doctors, a ſigne whereof is, that all doe equally binde and looſe as well as he, &c.

Chriſt ſaith, I will build my Church upon this rocke which thou haſt confeſſed, &c. The Æthiopike and South Church at this day maketh Peter and Paul equall, as the Emperour David in an Epiſtle to the Biſhop of Rome, ſpeaking of thoſe two Apoſtles, ſaith, Hi ſunt Domini regni cœlorum, & totius mundi judices: Theſe are the Lords of the Kingdome of Heaven, and Judges of the whole world: he meaneth, that the keyes of the Kingdome of Heaven were committed to the one as well as to the other.

39. Error.

Argum. 1. Out of that place of S. Peter 1.5.13. The Church that is at Babylon ſaluteth you:

1 Pet.5.13.

Babylon here (ſay they) is taken for Rome, from whence Peter wrote his Epiſtle, Bellar. lib. 2. cap. 2. de pontif. Rhemenſ. argum. in 1. Epiſt. Petri.

We anſwer: Firſt, it is a ſilly argument for them hereby to prove Peters being at Rome: for thus much they have gained by it, that Rome is Babylon, and ſo the ſeat of Antichriſt, Revel. 18. Secondly, there were two Babylons, one in Syria, the other in Egypt, from either of which Saint Peter might date his Epiſtle: and it is moſt like that he would keepe the common and knowne name of the place, that it might be out of doubt what Church he meant. As for the name of Babylon to bee aſcribed to Rome, though it were ſo myſtically, yet was it not ſo called: for why might not Paul as well have written his Epiſtle to the Romans under that name, the Church of Babylon, as Peter wrote from thence?

Argum. 2. Againe, they alleage that ſtorie, how Peter overcame Simon Magus at Rome, when he would have taken his flight into the aire, having made himſelfe wings, and by the prayer of Peter was brought downe againe and brake his legs, and ſo died: whereupon Nero being offended with Peter, would have apprehended him; who being counſelled by the Church, would have fled from Rome: but meeting Chriſt at one of the gates, and ſaying unto him, Whither goeſt thou Lord? And he anſwered, I come againe to be crucified. Peter upon thoſe words returned backe againe, and was crucified for the teſtimony of Jeſus, Bellarm. cap. 2. 3.

Epiſtol. 80.

Wee anſwer: Though we ſhould not deny that Peter was at Rome, yet it were enough to ſhew the inſufficiencie of their arguments: And againe, we move ſuch doubts, as by them are yet unanſwered, as afterward ſhall be ſhewed. Secondly, concerning this ſtorie of the victorie over Simon Magus, they that doubt of Peters being at Rome, may alſo doubt of this, neither of them being neceſſarie to be beleeved as articles of faith, but probable and conjecturall, as matters of ſtorie. For ſome part of the ſtorie is denyed by Auguſtine, as how Peter faſted upon the Saturday, the combat betweene him and Simon Magus, following upon the Lords day after: and thereupon roſe the cuſtome of the Saturday faſt among the Romans: Eſt quidem (ſaith he) hac opinio plurimorum, quamvis eam perhibeant eſſe falſam plerique Romani: This is (ſaith he) a probable opinion of many (concerning Peters faſt) yet the Romans themſelves thinke it to be falſe.

2 That concerning Chriſts apparition to Peter, ſeemeth to be moſt unlike of all, and ſavoureth ſomewhat of the Popiſh Legends. Like unto this are the tales of S. Chriſtopher, how hee carried Chriſt, and how S. Gregorie entertained him for one of his gueſts at his table of hoſpitalitie: Such viſions and apparitions of Chriſt are contrarie to the Scriptures, which ſay, that the heavens muſt containe him till his comming againe. Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt, by this meanes we doe compedes Chriſto injicere, we fetter Chriſt in Heaven. We anſwer, belike then Heaven is a priſon with the Jeſuite: God ſend all that are his ſuch a priſon at the length. Againe, Chriſt is no otherwiſe concluded and ſhut up in Heaven, than as it pleaſeth himſelfe, and as he hath appointed ſo to be.

Act. 9. 7.

2 He objecteth, that Chriſt appeared neere unto the earth to Paul. We anſwer: Firſt, there is no ſuch thing proved out of the Text, but rather the contrarie, that the voice was heard from Heaven; not neere the earth, but above Acts 22. 6. Secondly, Paul heard a voice onely, he ſaw no man, neither he nor the company with him, Act. 9. 7, 8. but onely a great light they ſaw ſhining from Heaven, Act. 22. 6, 9. Therefore out of this place they cannot prove any ſuch apparition of Chriſt neere unto the earth.

Your owne decrees alſo here are againſt you: Decr. p. 3. diſt. 2. cap. 44. Corpus Domini in quo reſurrexit uno loco eſſe oportet: The body of our Lord, wherein he roſe, muſt be in one place. And againe, Donec ſeculum finiatur ſurſum eſt Dominus: As long as the world endureth, our Lord is above; that is, in the Heaven: Ergo, not beneath in the earth.

Argum. 3. Peter died at Rome, his ſepulchre is to be ſeen there to this day; Ergo, he was at Rome, Bellarm. cap. 3.

We anſwer: Firſt, it followeth not if Peter were buried at Rome, that therefore he died there: for the tranſlation of the bones & bodies of Martyrs is no unuſuall thing in your Church: As it followeth not, becauſe Iohn Baptiſts head, as you ſay, is to be ſeene at S. Sylveſters at Rome, that therefore be died there; ſo neither doth it follow of S. Peter.

2 Againe, how ſhall we beleeve you that it is S. Peters ſepulchre, which is ſhewed at Rome; ſeeing you have made ſo many mockeries already, making the world beleeve that Peters body is ſometime in one place, ſometime in another? Halfe his body (you ſay) is at S. Peters in Rome, halfe at Saint Pauls, his head at S. Iohn Laterane, his nether jaw with the beard at Poicters in France, many of his bones at Triers, at Geneva part of his braine. You ſee that wee may as well doubt whether Peters body be at Rome, as in any of theſe places. And ſuch as you ſee are our adverſaries arguments for Peters being at Rome.

The Proteſtants.

Concerning Peters being at Rome: firſt, wee doe not utterly deny it, but only affirme that hee could not come thither ſo ſoone, as in the ſecond yeere of Claudius, and ſit there ſo long, namely, five and twentie yeeres, as they hold. Secondly, it may be granted that he was there, as a matter of ſtorie, not an article of faith, Thirdly, we have certaine doubts and arguments, about ſome circumſtances of his being there, which our adverſaries are not able to anſwer.

Argum. 1. There is great diſagreeing amongſt the writers, concerning the time of Peters comming to Rome: Oroſius ſaith, he came thither in the beginning of Claudius reigne: Hierome ſaith, the ſecond yeere of his reigne: other ſay, the fourth yeere: other, the thirteenth yeere: Damaſcus would have him come thither in Nero his reigne. This diſſention of writers ſheweth that the matter may be juſtly doubted of, Fulke, in Rom. 16. ſect. 4.

Bellarmine and the Jeſuites anſwer: No more doe all agree concerning the time when the world was created, nor for the ſtorie of Chriſts life, in what time everie thing was done when hee ſuffered, and ſuch like: yet it followeth not, that thoſe things were not true, becauſe there is ſome diverſitie about the time, Rhemiſt. 1 *Pet.*5.13.

We reply: Firſt, moſt of theſe things concerning the chronologie of Scripture, though it bee not neceſſarie to ſalvation, yet by diligent ſearch may bee found in Scripture. Secondly, if they can ſhew any Scripture for Peters being at Rome, as we have for the other ſtories, wee will beleeve it, though the time perfectly be not knowne. But ſeeing the Scripture maketh no mention at all of his being there, and the time is uncertaine, we may worthily doubt of it, much leſſe are bound neceſſarily to beleeve it.

Argum. 2. The ſtorie of Peters comming to Rome in the ſecond yeere of Claudius, his abiding at Rome five and twentie yeeres, his death and martyrdome in the 14. yeere of Nero, and the 37. yeere after Chriſts aſcenſion: we prove out of the Scriptures to be falſe. For Peter was at Jeruſalem and in thoſe quarters round about till 18. yeeres after Chriſt: for Paul ſaw him there three yeares after his calling, and againe 14. yeares after that, Galath. 2. there is 17. yeeres, and one yeere was paſt before Pauls converſion: in all 18. yeeres: adde unto theſe the 25. yeeres of Peters being at Rome, that maketh 43. yeeres: and ſo Peter ſhould ſuffer in Veſpaſians reigne, and not in the time of Nero.

Bellarmine and the Jeſuites anſwer: that Peter was at Rome ſeven yeeres before the Councell held at Jeruſalem, Act. 15. which was in the 18. yeere after Chriſt: and that being expelled the Citie by Claudius, with the reſt of the Jewes, he returned to Jeruſalem, and there ſpake with Paul, and after that went to Rome againe, and there ended his life.

This anſwer wee ſhew to bee verie inſufficient. Firſt, *Act.*15.2. it appeareth that there was, as it were, a ſtanding and ſet Councell of the Apoſtles at Jeruſalem, of the which Peter was one: for the Church thought good to ſend up to the Apoſtles and Elders which were at Jeruſalem. Secondly, till the 18. yeere when this Councell was held, it ſeemeth that Peter had laboured onely or eſpecially amongſt the Jewes, of whom there were then but few at Rome: For (ſaith the Apoſtle) he that was mightie in Peter in the Apoſtleſhip over the circumciſion, was alſo mightie in me, Galath. 2.8. Therefore Peter was not knowne to have laboured untill this time but in the circumciſion. Thirdly, afterward it is more like he went to Antioch than to Rome: for after this Paul rebuked Peter at Antioch, *Gal.*2. Fourthly, theſe are but bare conjectures of our adverſaries, and craftie evaſions without Scripture: but ſeeing wee appoſe them out of Scripture, it is great reaſon they ſhould likewiſe anſwer us out of Scripture.

Laſtly, it is but Bellarmines conjecture, and a verie fable that Peter went from Rome to Jeruſalem to ſpeake with Paul, like to that tale which Chriſtianus Maſſaus hath, *Chronicor.lib.*8. of one Trophimus converted by Marie Magdalene, who going to Rome to ſee Peter, as he ſailed, his wife being great with child died in travell, and was buried with her child in a rocke: whom S. Peter carried to Jeruſelem, and ſhewed him the holy places, and after two yeeres returning to Rome, found his child playing at his mothers breaſt, who being raiſed as it were out of ſleepe, told her husband how that Marie Magdalene had ſhewed her the ſame holy places which he had ſeene. I marvell the Jeſuite did not ground his conceit of Peters going to Jeruſalem from Rome upon this fable: which of the better ſort amongſt them is rejected, as Eſpenc. in 2 *Tim.c.*4.*p.*183.a.

Argum. 3. We have divers other objections alſo out of the Scriptures: as firſt, that if Peter were at Rome, it is not like that Paul would leave him out in his ſalutation in the end of his Epiſtle, *Rom.*16. ſent to the brethren. Our adverſaries anſwer but verie ſimply, that at that time when S. Paul wrote his Epiſtle, either Peter was not at Rome, or elſe Paul might write ſome eſpeciall letters to him by himſelfe, and this Epiſtle encloſed in them: ſuch goodly conjectures they have. But I pray you what needed S. Paul to have written unto the Romans, if Saint Peter, ſo faithfull and vigilant a Paſtor, were continually amongſt them?

S. Ambroſe hereof thus writeth in his Commentaries upon the 16. to the Romans, Ad confirmationem Romanorum, &c. For the confirmation of the Romans, all theſe whom he ſaluteth are underſtood to have been there: but it would have made more for their confirmation, if Peter had been ſaluted amongſt them, if he had been there. Againe, Ariſtobulus iſte congregator, &c. This Ariſtobulus whom the Apoſtle maketh mention of, is underſtood to have beene a gatherer together of the brethren: but Peter was a more principall congregator of them; therefore it is like the Apoſtle would have remembred him, as well as Ariſtobulus.

Other places alſo of Scripture we have: as *Philip.*2.20. ſpeaking of Timothy he ſaith, I have none like minded to him, that will faithfully care for your matters, Coloſſ. 4.11. Theſe only are my worke-fellowes, 2 Tim. 4.11. onely Luke is with mee: Ergo, Peter all this while was not at Rome, for Paul would not have left him out of the number of his fellow-helpers: at the leaſt he would not have commended Timothy, though he were a worthy young man,before him. That which Bellarmine anſwereth is juſt nothing: that Saint Paul ſpeaketh in thoſe places onely of his domeſticall helpers, which did miniſter unto him: when Saint Paul ſpeaketh plainly of his fellow-labourers; *Theſe only are my worke-fellowes to the Kingdome of God, Coloſſ.*4.11.

1 Tim.4.16.

Another argument doth ariſe out of S.Pauls words, 2 Tim.4.16. At my firſt anſwering no man aſſiſted me: Ergo,it is like that Peter was not then at Rome, for he would not have forſaken Paul. Bellarmine anſwereth,that he ſpeaketh only of ſuch favourers as he had in Cæſars Court,that they would not make ſuit for him to the Emperour. But this is a weake ſolution.Firſt,it appeareth by that which followeth, that they left him without help in his open Apologie or Defence: they did not aſſiſt me (ſaith he) but the Lord aſſiſted me: that is,gave me ſtrength to defend my cauſe: So that the word, aſſiſting, muſt bee taken in the ſame ſenſe before, that they failed him in that wherein God aſſiſted him, that is, in ſpeaking boldly in the defence of the truth. Secondly, it is proved by the divers ſucceſſe that he had at his firſt and ſecond anſwering: at the firſt all left him,but at the next many were imboldened through his bonds: What to doe? More frankly to ſpeake the word,Philip.1.14.Ergo, at the firſt they forſooke him, becauſe they were afraid to ſpeake the word.

Philip.1.14.

I will for the ſenſe of this place be tried by your owne Interpreters: as Eſpenc. thus writeth; No man aſſiſted me, that is, as an helper both to defend me before the Prince, and to help the Chriſtian cauſe. And againe he complaineth, that he was forſaken of thoſe which might have helped: as there was a great number at that time at Rome of Chriſtians converted from among the Jewes,that might have helped him. And againe, it was occaſion of great heavineſſe to the Apoſtle, to be oppugned of ſtrangers, and not propugned by his domeſticals, but to bee bereft of all comfort, yea betrayed: in 2 Timoth.cap.4.pag.180. So then the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of the domeſticals of Cæſars family, but the domeſticals of the ſame faith; neither of not ſuing for him in Court, but the forſaking of the defence of the faith.

Theſe arguments which we have here oppoſed, are much urged by Maſter Bradford holy Martyr, againſt Peters being at Rome: As becauſe, while Paul was priſoner at Rome, there is no mention made, that Peter all that while viſited him, who at that time they ſay was at Rome. Againe, Saint Paul in his Epiſtle to the Romans ſaluteth many meaner perſons than Peter was: and therefore it is not like that Peter was then at Rome; for hee among the reſt ſhould not have beene omitted, but eſpecially remembred. Theſe and other ſuch places are urged by that holy Martyr, Epiſt. ad Dom. Vanam,pag. 1648.

Pag.1496.1.70.

Now herein we want not ſome evidence of other Churches. 1 Firſt,of the Greeke Church,Chryſoſtome thus writeth,expounding that place Matth.23.34. Behold I ſend unto you Prophets,Wiſe-men, and Scribes, of them you ſhall kill and crucifie, &c. Intelligit Apoſtolos, & qui cum Apoſtolis fuerint: He underſtandeth the Apoſtles, and thoſe which were with the Apoſtles: His opinion is, that ſome of the Apoſtles ſhould be crucified at Jeruſalem: But they can ſhew none elſe to have been crucified there, unleſſe it were Peter or Andrew: But Bellarmine confeſſeth that Andrew was put to death in Achaia. And whereas he telleth us of Simeon, the ſucceſſor of Iames, that he was crucified in Jeruſalem: and of Matthias he ſaith, probabiliter exiſtimant, ſome probably thinke that he was crucified in Judea: it is not certaine that that Simeon was one of the Apoſtles; for it is not like that one Apoſtle ſucceeded another; he is thought rather to have beene one of the 70. Diſciples: and of the other there is leſſe certaintie, nor ſo much as any probable conjecture.

Lib. 2. de Pontif.cap.19.
Centur.1.lib.2. cap.10.

Alvares deſcrip.Æthiop. cap.29.

2 For the South and Æthiopike Church, although they deny not Peter to have beene at Rome, yet they hold it of more certaintie, that hee was at Antioch: which made the great Emperour there aske Alvares, Why they divided the Churches of Antioch and Rome, ſeeing the Church of Antioch was in a manner the chiefeſt, untill the Councell of Pope Leo, &c. and indeed of Peters being at Antioch there is evidence in Scripture, Galat.2.11. but of his being at Rome none at all.

3 Other Divines of the reformed Churches have likewiſe objected againſt Peters being and dying at Rome: as Vldaricus Velenus, who hath written a Treatiſe of this argument: and Illyricus, lib. cont. primat. pap. Calvin lib.4. Inſtitution.c.6.ſect.15. Magdeburgenſ. Centur.1.lib.2.c.10. col.561.

See more hereof Hexapl. upon the Rom. c.16.contr.8.

4 Neither doth this want evidence from ſome of their owne ſide: as Lyranus upon that place, Matth.23.34. thus writeth, Some of them you ſhall kill, as Iames the brother of Iohn, &c. ſome you ſhall crucifie, as Peter and Andrew his brother: hee thinketh that Peter was crucified at Jeruſalem, and therefore Bellarmine here, having nothing elſe to anſwer, rejecteth him.

The ſecond Part, Whether Peter were Biſhop of Rome.

OUr adverſaries would gladly bring it about that Peter was Biſhop of Rome, there enthronized, and ſate in the Biſhoplike chaire many yeeres, and after left it to his ſucceſſors.

Argum. 1. Peter firſt preached to the Gentiles, Act.15.7. Yee know that a good while agoe God choſe out me, that by my mouth the Gentiles ſhould heare the word of God and beleeve, Rhemiſt. Annot. upon this place.And ſeeing there were many Chriſtians in Rome before Saint Paul came thither, it is like then that Peter firſt preached to the Romanes, and was the firſt founder of the faith there, Bellar. lib. 2. de Roman. pontif. c. 2. Hence is inferred, that Peter was the firſt Biſhop of Rome.

Anſw. Firſt, that S. Peter preached before S. Paul to the Gentiles, is not agreeable to the hiſtorie of the Acts: for before S. Peter had received that viſion from heaven, Act. 10. he made queſtion, whether it were lawfull to preach to the Gentiles: but before that S. Paul was converted, & immediatly upon his converſion he preached to the Gentiles, Act. 26. 17. and went into Arabia, Gal. 2. 17. Neither doth S. Peter ſay, that firſt by his mouth the Gentiles heard the word. Indeed S. Iames ſaith, Simeon hath declared how God firſt did viſit the Gentiles: which word (firſt) is to be referred not to the time of the converſion of the Gentiles, but to the order of Saint Peters ſpeech, which was firſt of Gods viſitation of the Gentiles: or if we refer it to the time of their converſion, it ſheweth only the beginning in generall of Gods viſitation of the Gentiles, as the Syrian Interpreter giveth the ſenſe, Simeon hath ſhewed how God began to chuſe out of the Gentiles, &c. it maketh no compariſon or difference of prioritie in the beginners. The meaning then is this, that then was the time, whether by Saint Peter or others, when it pleaſed God firſt to call the Gentiles: and to this purpoſe Saint Iames alleageth Scripture, not to ſhew a prioritie of Peters preaching, but of the calling of the Gentiles.

Galath. 2. 17.

Secondly, that Peter firſt preached not at Rome, it is thus gathered: becauſe it is not like that the Chriſtian faith being ſpread far abroad, could be kept from Rome the ſpace of twelve yeeres: for ſo long it was by their account, before Peter came to Rome. Againe, there were divers that dwelled at Rome, which heard the Apoſtles ſpeake divers tongues, Acts 2. being ſtrangers then and ſojourners at Jeruſalem: and Rom. 16. 7. he maketh mention of Andronicus and Iunia, which were in Chriſt before him. By ſome of theſe it is moſt like that the Chriſtian faith was firſt ſowed at Rome. Thirdly, it is more like that Paul preached at Rome before Peter: for when he came to Rome, he called the Jewes together, who ſaid unto him, that they had heard nothing concerning him by letters, or from the brethren out of Judea, Acts 28. 22. But if Peter had been there, Paul no doubt ſhould have beene knowne at the leaſt by name. The Jewes alſo ſay unto him, We will heare of thee what thou thinkeſt: and ſome of them were perſwaded by Paul, ſome beleeved not. It ſeemeth by this place that the Jewes in Rome had not heard of the Goſpell before. But if Peter had been amongſt them, who had an eſpeciall charge of the Circumciſion, hee would have had the greateſt care of the Jewes to win them to Chriſt. Fourthly, though Peter had firſt preached to the Romanes, it would not follow that therefore he was Biſhop there: for Paul firſt founded the Church of Epheſus, yet they ſay Iohn was firſt Biſhop there: wherefore they ſhould gaine nothing by this argument, if it were true that Peter was the firſt Preacher, and Converter of the Romanes to the faith. Saint Ambroſe ſaith, Quia Paulus magiſter, &c. Becauſe Paul was appointed the Maſter of the Gentiles, it became him to take care, to teach there where Chriſt had not beene preached, in 15. ad Rom. Ergo, S. Paul preached firſt to the Romanes rather than S. Peter.

Acts 2. 10.
Rom. 16. 7.
Acts 28. 22.
See more hereof Hexapl. upon the Rom. cap. 1. qu. 29.

Argum. 2. Rome was alwayes called and counted the chiefe of all Churches; what other reaſon can be yeelded thereof, than becauſe Peter the Prince of the Apoſtles was their proper and peculiar Paſtor? And ſeeing Peter continued not at Antioch, let them ſhew where elſe Peter died Biſhop than at Rome, unleſſe they will ſay hee was Biſhop of the univerſall Church, and not of any particular place, which they will not willingly grant, Bellarm. lib. 2. de Rom. pontif. c. 4.

Anſw. 1. Neither was Peter the Prince or chiefe of the Apoſtles, but had onely a prioritie of ſpeaking, and it may be a prioritie of ſitting for order ſake, as Barlaam ſaith: neither had the Church of Rome her precedence by ſucceſſion from S. Peter, but afterward by the decrees of the fathers, becauſe it was * the chiefe and imperiall Citie, as the ſame Barlaam ſheweth.

2 Neither was Peter Biſhop of any particular place, but Paſtor of the univerſall Church, as were alſo all the Apoſtles beſide: and therefore it is not neceſſarie to aſſigne him any certaine ſeat, after he left Antioch: though in other places he had alſo his ſucceſſors, as Marke was as well appointed by him in Alexandria, as Evodias at Antioch.

The Proteſtants.

IF we take the name of Biſhop generally for that office which hath the publike cure and charge of ſoules: in that ſenſe we deny not but Peter and the reſt of the Apoſtles may be called Epiſcopi, Biſhops, as Chriſt is called the Shepherd and Biſhop of our ſoules, 1 Pet. 2. 23. But taking it ſtrictly for a Biſhop of this or that place, which is called Epiſcopus intitulatus, a Biſhop intituled, wee deny that either Peter or Paul were Biſhops, Fox pag. 15.

1 Pet. 2. 23.

Argum. 1. Paul was Apoſtolus Gentium, the Apoſtle of the Gentiles, and Peter of the Circumciſion: therefore it is more like that Paul was chiefe Paſtor of the Romanes, becauſe they were of the Gentiles, and part of his charge: and unleſſe they can prove that Paul reſigned over his lot unto Peter, that hee alſo ſhould be the chiefe Apoſtle of the Gentiles, as he was of the Jewes; Peter ſhould have intruded himſelfe into Pauls charge, not in preaching to the Gentiles, (for both Paul might preach to the Jewes, and Peter to the Gentiles) but in taking upon him to bee the chiefe Apoſtle of the Gentiles, which was given before to S. Paul.

Argum. 2. The Rhemiſts themſelves grant, that the Church of Rome was founded both by Peter and Paul, Annot. in 2. Galat. ſect. 6. Biſhop Tonſtall a ſtrong champion of theirs, but varying from them in this opinion, ſhewed in a letter of his to Cardinall Poole, how in times paſt both Peter and Paul were counted Patrons of the Church of Rome, and principes Apoſtolorum, the chiefe of the Apoſtles. Euſebius ſaith, that Clement was the third Biſhop after Peter and Paul : Alexander ſucceeded in the fifth place after Peter and Paul.

Cornelius Biſhop of Rome, Epiſtol. 1. thus writeth: Romanam Eccleſiam beatiſſimi Petrus & Paulus ſuo Martyrio coronarunt: The bleſſed Apoſtles Peter and Paul did crowne the Romane Church by their Martyrdome. Gelaſius alſo, Decret. de Scripturis. Petro data eſt ſocietas beatiſſimi Pauli, & pariter ſanctam Romanam Eccleſiam Deo conſecrarunt: Unto Peter bleſſed Paul was joyned in ſocietie, and they together did conſecrate unto God the Romane Church. If therefore the Biſhops of Rome challenge any preeminence of authoritie from Peter, they may doe it as well from Paul: for they both founded that Church, preached there, and both there ſuffered, Fox pag. 1066.

Epheſ. 4. 11. Argum. 3. No Apoſtles were Biſhops. for they were divers offices, Epheſ. 4. 11. hee gave ſome to be Apoſtles, ſome to be Paſtors and Doctors: Ergo, they were divers offices, and the ſame were not Apoſtles and Paſtors, or Biſhops, for both are all one. The offices were much different: Apoſtles were immediatly called of God, Biſhops and Paſtors were ordained by the Apoſtles: the Apoſtles calling was generall over the whole world, the Paſtors were obliged to their Dioceſſe and Pariſhes and particular Churches: the office of the Apoſtles was extraordinarie, and but for a time; the calling of Paſtors was to endure ever in the Church. Wherefore it can in no wiſe be, that the Apoſtles were Biſhops of any certaine places. Irenaus ſaith, that Fundata Eccleſia beati Apoſtoli Lino officium Epiſcopatus injungunt: The Church of Rome once founded, the holy Apoſtles laid the charge of the Biſhopricke upon Linus. Whereby it appeareth, that they only retained their Apoſtleſhip enjoyned them of Chriſt, Tonſtal. ex Fox pag. 1066. It had therefore beene contrarie to the commandement of Chriſt, who ſaid, Ite in univerſum mundum, Goe into all the world: if they ſhould have left their calling, and bound themſelves to any peculiar Church: Ergo, wee conclude that neither Peter nor Paul were Biſhops of Rome.

Eſpenc. in 1. c. 1. ad Timoth. One of their owne writers hereunto beareth witneſſe, and ſheweth out of S. Chryſoſtome a treble difference betweene an Apoſtle and a Biſhop: Hic ſcilicet Epiſcopus per homines vocatur, &c. A Biſhop is called by men, is ſet over a certaine place, he is not alway certaine that hee hath the ſpirit, &c. Hom. 19. in Matth. But an Apoſtle is immediatly called of God, Gal. 1. 1. Galath. 1. 1. he is ſent to preach, not to any one place, but to all Churches, 1 Tim. 2. 7. as 1 Timoth. 2. 7. Saint Paul ſaith, he was ordained an Apoſtle, that is, a Teacher of the Gentiles. Thirdly, hee is ſure he hath the ſpirit, not to erre: as in the ſame 1 Cor. 7. 40. place, I ſpeake the truth in Chriſt, I lye not. And 1 Cor. 7. 40. I thinke that I have the ſpirit of God. Wherefore it is evident, that the Apoſtles were no Biſhops properly ſo called: yet we deny not, in a larger ſignification and uſe of the word, but that many which were but Biſhops were called Apoſtles: as Theodoret witneſſeth, They which are now called Biſhops, were in times paſt named Apoſtles: ſo Epaphroditus was the Apoſtle of the Philippians, Titus of the Cretenſians, &c. Sed procedente tempore, &c. But afterward the name of Apoſtleſhip was left to thoſe which were the true Apoſtles, &c. Therefore taking the name of an Apoſtle properly, and ſo likewiſe of a Biſhop; wee muſt of neceſſitie underſtand two diſtinct offices, not coincident, or compatible together: otherwiſe, as I have ſhewed concerning the name of an Apoſtle, ſo the name of a Biſhop was diverſly taken: for in Tract. 24. in Matth. one ſenſe Chriſt only is called our Biſhop, 1 Pet. 2. 23. As Origen alſo noteth, Proprie Epiſcopus Dominus Ieſus, Our Lord Chriſt is properly our Biſhop. So the Apoſtles in a larger uſe of this name may be called Biſhops: but as it is taken commonly for the ruler or overſeer of ſome particular Church, it can no way agree to the Apoſtles.

Fox pag. 910. col. 2. Let us ſee the judgement of the holy Martyrs: Iulianus Leville Martyr at Sanſerre in France, anno 1554 denyeth that Peter was ever Pope of Rome.

Pag. 831. 1. 20. Maſter Bradford holy Martyr ſaith, It doth no more follow Peter died at Rome, or Peters chaire was at Rome: Ergo, he was Biſhop there, and the ſeat of the primacie muſt needs therefore bee at Rome; then this followeth, Moſes and Aaron firſt exerciſed their offices unto their death in the wilderneſſe: Ergo, the wilderneſſe was the place of their Prieſthood: or therefore the principalleſt Pag 1496. 2. 60. place of the Jewiſh Church ſhould be in the wilderneſſe, Epiſt. ad Dom. Here alſo we have the conſent of other Churches profeſſing Chriſtianitie: 1 The Muſcovites deny S. Peter, verum papam, & verum Romana Eccleſia Antiſtitem, to have beene the true Pope, a true Biſhop of the Romane Church. Barlaam ſaith, that none of the Apoſtles was called Biſhop of this or that place or region, but [a] had the ſame authoritie everie where. And againe, all the Diſciples of the word (Chriſt) [b] were the paſtors and teachers of the whole world. And a little after: Who ever (ſaith he) called Peter Biſhop of Rome, or Clement the chiefe.

The fourth Queſtion, Whether the Biſhop of Rome be the true Succeſſor of S. Peter.

The Papiſts.

THey doe generally hold that the Biſhops of Rome being lineally deſcended by ſucceſſion from Peter, have the ſame primacie, Apoſtolike authoritie, and juriſdiction over the whole Church, which Peter had, Bellarm. lib. 2. de pontif. cap. 12. 41. Error.

They are verie barren and ſcant of arguments in this place to maintaine and uphold this ſucceſſion by, and in the end the Jeſuite runneth to tradition: and at the length he thus concludeth, that it is not de jure divino, it is not neceſſarie by the Law of God, that the Roman Biſhop ſhould be Peters ſucceſſor: but it dependeth only upon the ordinance of Peter, and is proved by tradition, not deduced out of Scripture. Bellarm.c.12. That it was neceſſarie for Peter to have a ſucceſſor, they ſay, it is proved out of Scripture: which wee alſo grant, that all faithfull Paſtors and Miniſters are the Apoſtles ſucceſſors, though they have not their plenarie and Apoſtolike power: but that the Pope ought to bee and is his ſucceſſor, it ſtandeth upon tradition.

Wee ſee then the grounds of their opinion; Scripture they have none but blinde tradition: unleſſe therefore they could bring better ſtuffe for the Papall ſucceſſion, we will not ſpend any time in confuting nothing.

Yet Bellarmine ſeemeth thus to reaſon: A ſucceſſion in the Church is now neceſſarie in the new Teſtament, as Aaron had his ſucceſſion in the old Teſtament: but there can be no certaine ſucceſſion now ſhewed, but in the chaire of Peter at Rome: Ergo, the Biſhops of Rome are the true ſucceſſors of Peter. For either at Antioch muſt the ſucceſſion of Peter be, or at Rome: but not at Antioch, becauſe S. Peter removed from thence to Rome, and there died, Bellarm. cap. 12.

Anſw. Firſt, a locall, perſonall, and lineall ſucceſſion is not now needfull, as before under the Law: the true worſhip of God is not now tied to perſon or place, as our Saviour ſheweth, Ioh. 4. 21. God will bee worſhipped, neither in this mountaine, nor at Ieruſalem: and by the ſame reaſon, neither at Rome, &c. John 4.21. Secondly, yet a ſucceſſion of doctrine, and of faithfull Paſtors wee grant, and the Church was never without: ſuch as the Prophet ſpeaketh of, Eſay 59. 21. My ſpirit that is upon thee, ſhall not depart out of thy mouth, nor the mouth of thy ſeed, &c. Eſay 59.21. and in this ſenſe all faithfull Biſhops do ſucceed the Apoſtles, *Concil. Aquiſgr. c.*10. Iſidor. Apoſtolis decedentibus, &c. The Apoſtles deceaſing, Biſhops have ſucceeded, being appointed thorow the world in the ſeats of the Apoſtles. Yea S. Hierome doubteth not to ſay, that not only Biſhops, but all other faithfull Miniſters are the Apoſtles ſucceſſors, ad Heliodor. Abſit ut de his, &c. God forbid I ſhould judge ſiniſterly of them, qui Apoſtolico gradui ſuccedentes, which ſucceeding the degree of the Apoſtles, doe conſecrate the body of Chriſt, &c. Thirdly, there may be ſhewed a ſucceſſion to this day in Conſtantinople, Alexandria, Antioch, Epheſus, as afterward ſhall appeare, and not onely at Rome. Fourthly, the death of Chriſt the chiefe Biſhop is more forcible to privilege Jeruſalem for the chiefe ſeat, than the death of Peter at Rome maketh for the preeminence of that See before Antioch.

The Proteſtants.

THat the Pope or Biſhop of Rome neither can, is, or ought to bee S. Peters ſucceſſor, in the high and Apoſtolike authoritie, primacie, and juriſdiction over the whole Church: thus we declare it.

Argum. 1. The Pope, though hee were Peters ſucceſſor, yet can hee not receive that from him, which he never had: but Peter had never any ſuch primacie of power, as wee have ſhewed before, Queſt. 1, 2. Ergo, he is not herein his ſucceſſor.

Argum. 2. That primacie which Peter had, could not be conveyed to any other; namely his primacie of confeſſion, which he firſt of all the Apoſtles did utter concerning Chriſt, proceeding from faith, did adhere ſo to his perſon, that it could not be derived to any ſucceſſor of his: for Peters faith was a proper adjunct to himſelfe, Argument. Tonſtalli, Fox p.1067. col.1. Pag.974. 1.30.

Againe, how can hee have the Apoſtolike authoritie being not an Apoſtle? but an Apoſtle hee is not; for Chriſt only made Apoſtles, the Apoſtles did not ordaine other Apoſtles, Argum. Nili.

To this Bellarmine anſwereth, firſt by a diſtinction, that whereas three things are to be conſidered in an Apoſtle; firſt, that he be immediatly called of God, and inſpired to write Scripture: the ſecond, to bee a founder of the Churches where none were before: thirdly, that hee have authoritie over the whole Church. The firſt (ſaith he) agreeth not to the Pope, but the two other doe: for by the Pope many Churches have beene planted, and he hath authoritie over the whole Church, as Peters ſucceſſor, &c. Bellarm. cap. 12. reſp. ad object. 2. Nili.

Anſw. Firſt, there be other properties required in an Apoſtle beſide theſe, as I ſhewed before out of Chryſoſtome, whereof none agree to the Pope. Secondly, to admit theſe three conditions named by the Jeſuite, if they bee all neceſſarie to make an Apoſtle, then the Pope wanting one of them, by his confeſſion can bee no Apoſtle. Thirdly, wee deny that either the Pope hath founded any Churches ſince the Apoſtles times, he hath perverted many nations, converted none; neither are the Popes much given to preaching, whereby nations are begotten unto the faith: either that he hath ſuch univerſall authoritie over the whole Church, which is the thing in queſtion. For hee calling himſelfe Biſhop of Rome, and ſo fixing his chaire in a certaine place, can be no Apoſtle: for the Apoſtles were no Biſhops of one place more than another, as I have ſhewed, but were ſent to preach to all the world.

• Secondly he anſwereth, that not the Apoſtles, but Chriſt did conſtitute the Biſhop of Rome, to be the Apoſtolike and univerſall Biſhop of the whole Church.

Contra. Firſt, the Apoſtles were immediatly called of Chriſt; then if the Pope bee of Chriſts making an Apoſtle, he muſt ſhew his immediate calling in Scripture. Secondly, Bellarmine forgetteth himſelfe; for a little before he ſaid that the Biſhop of Rome is Peters ſucceſſor; by Peters fact, not by the inſtitution of Chriſt.

3 He ſucceedeth not Peter rightly in place: for ſeeing Peter ſate at Antioch, why may not that Church challenge ſucceſſion, as well as Rome? Why might not alſo other Churches have Apoſtolike ſucceſſion, as Alexandria from Peter and Marke, Jeruſalem from James, Conſtantinople from Andrew?

Further, they have no certaine ſucceſſion from Peter: Tertullian maketh Clement the next ſucceſſor to Peter. Optatus firſt nameth Linus, then Clement: Irenæus after Peter placed Linus, and Cletus, and Clement the fourth. What certaintie therefore can they have of ſo uncertaine ſucceſſion? Fulke, Annot. in Rom. 16. ſect. 4.

4 It ſkilleth not who commeth in the place and roome of the Apoſtles: They that will be their true ſucceſſors muſt follow their example, and walke in their ſteps, teaching their doctrine and embracing their holy vertues. Wherefore the Pope is not Peters right ſucceſſour, ſwerving both from his doctrine and example. Non ſanctorum filii ſunt, qui tenent loca ſanctorum, ſed qui exercent opera eorum: They are not the children of the Saints which occupie the ſame places, but they which doe their workes, Lambert. So Bernard writing to Eugenius, chargeth him, that in the reſpect of his pomp and pride, he did rather ſucceed Conſtantine than Peter, Iohan. Huſſ. pag. 610.

Fox pag. 1120.

5 All good Biſhops and Paſtors are as well the Apoſtles ſucceſſors as the Pope; nay rather then, he being a wicked man, Iohn Huſſ. articul. 4. Fox pag. 590. Lambert pag. 1120. Nay, they have greater and more excellent titles, than to be called the Apoſtles ſucceſſors: for thoſe that walke in obedience unto Gods Commandements, our Saviour calleth them his ſiſters, kinsfolkes and brethren, Matth. 12.50. Ergo, the Pope is not the right ſucceſſor of Peter.

Cont. liter. Petil. lib. 2. cap. 51.

Laſtly, of this matter Auguſtine thus writeth: Cathedra tibi quid fecit Eccleſia Romana, in qua Petrus ſedit; & in qua hodie Anaſtaſius ſedet: vel Eccleſia Hieroſolymitana, in qua Iacobus ſedit, & in qua hodie Iohannes ſedet? What hath the See of Rome done unto thee, wherein ſometime Peter ſate, and where Anaſtaſius now ſitteth? or what hath the Church or chaire of Jeruſalem committed, where ſometime James ſate, and John now ſitteth? In thoſe words Auguſtine aſcribeth as much to the ſucceſſion of other Apoſtolicall Churches, as he doth to the ſucceſſion of the Biſhops of Rome.

Cap. de præcept. Eccleſ. artic. 9. B.

And therefore Caniſius craftily leaveth out the one halfe of the ſentence, concerning the Church of Jeruſalem. Neither is it true which our adverſaries ſay, that Peters See remaineth ſtill at Rome, when all other Apoſtolicall Sees are gone: for even to this day the See of Antioch ſtandeth and hath a Patriarke: likewiſe the See of Alexandria. The See of Conſtantinople never wanted ſucceſſors to this day: nor the Church of Epheſus. In India and Æthiopia there hath beene alwayes a ſucceſſion in thoſe Churches planted by the Apoſtles, and is at this day, Fulke, 2 Theſſ. 2. ſect. 7. Wherefore they have no cauſe to brag of their ſucceſſion, which is found in other places as well as at Rome.

Let us ſee the conſent of antiquitie: Clemen. Epiſtol. 1. Peter is brought in ſpeaking thus: Hunc Epiſcopum vobis ordino, cui ſoli mea prædicationis & doctrinæ cathedram trado: I ordaine this man (namely Clement) to be your Biſhop, to whom only I deliver my chaire of preaching and doctrine. Alſo in the ſame Epiſtle, Poſt me non imperitus aliquis aut indoctus, aut ignorans verbi divini myſterium ſuſcipiat cathedram meam: After mee let no unskilfull or unlearned man, or ignorant in the myſterie of the divine word take my chaire. In this Clementine Epiſtle (which though it force not us, becauſe we hold it forged, yet it preſſeth our adverſaries being of them received) we ſee that hee only is Peters ſucceſſor, who ſucceedeth him in doctrine.

Pope Felix alſo thus writeth ad Petrum Antiochen. Qui participes Apoſtoli eſſe volunt, ducuntur & doctrina ipſius: They that will be partakers of the Apoſtleſhip, muſt follow the Apoſtles doctrine. But the Pope doth not embrace the Apoſtles doctrine: Ergo, he is not Apoſtolike. So alſo Symmachus, as he is alleaged in the decrees, Decret. p. 1. diſt. 40. cap. 1. Petrus hæreditatem innocentiæ miſit ad poſteros: Peter did leave the inheritance of innocencie to his poſteritie: the Biſhops of Rome then having loſt Peters innocencie, are not the rightfull heires of Peter.

John Huſſe died for this article with others, for ſaying, Papa non eſt verus Petri ſucceſſor, ſi vivit moribus contrariis Petro: The Pope is not the true ſucceſſor of Peter, if he be of contrarie manners in his life to Peter; Articul. 14. object. Concil. Conſtantienſ.

And for further evidence: 1 Nilus the Archbiſhop ſhall ſpeake for the Greeke Church: Is not the Pope then the ſucceſſor of Peter? Yes he is: (but as hee is [a] a Biſhop) which everie of thoſe Biſhops may challenge which were ordained by him, as many received this benefit by his hands: nay everie Prieſt is by this reaſon a [b] ſucceſſor of the Apoſtles, of whom by tradition they have received the Prieſthood, &c. And in the ſame place, Peter was an Apoſtle, and the chiefe of the Apoſtles, the Pope is no Apoſtle, &c. Peter was the Teacher of the whole world, but the Pope is Biſhop of Rome and ſo called. So then his opinion is, that the Pope ſucceedeth not S. Peter in his Apoſtolike preeminence. Nay he is not his ſucceſſor at all, if he depart [c] from the truth: for then he ſhall be no more the ſucceſſor of Peter, than [d] a diſeaſe of health, darkneſſe of light, &c.

2. The Æthiopike Church holding Peter and Paul to have beene equally the founders of the Romane Church, as is ſhewed in the former queſtion, muſt conſequently hold, that the ſucceſſion there is derived from both.

3 That the Pope ſucceedeth not Peter in any ſuch univerſall juriſdiction, it is the judgement of other reformed Churches: Confeſſion of Belgia, artic. 30. In what place of the world ſoever the Miniſters of the word of God doe keepe, they have all of them the ſame and equall power and authoritie, being all of them equally the Miniſters of Chriſt, the only univerſall Biſhop and head of the Church.

Barlaam c. 13. lib. de princip.
Harm. ſer. 11. pag. 364.

4 Let Gregorie ſpeake for the Latine Church: Petrus univerſalis Epiſcopus non vocatur: Peter is not called univerſall Biſhop. And againe of Paul he ſaith: being converted to the Chriſtian faith, Caput effectus eſt nationum, & obtinuit Eccleſia totius principatum, he was made the head of the Nations, and obtained the principalitie of the whole Church. The Pope then ſucceedeth not Peter in his univerſall Biſhopricke which he never had, or no more than Paul and other of the Apoſtles.

Lib. 4. Epiſt. 32.
In 1 Reg. lib. 4. cap 4.

The fifth Queſtion, Concerning the primacie of the See of Rome.

THis queſtion hath divers parts, which muſt be handled in their order. Firſt, whether the Biſhop of Rome have authoritie over other Biſhops. Secondly, whether appeales ought to be made to Rome from other countries. Thirdly, whether the Pope be ſubject to the judgement of any. Fourthly, whether he may be depoſed. Fifthly, what primacie he hath over other Churches, and how it began. Sixthly, of the titles and names given to the Biſhops of Rome.

The firſt Part, Whether the Biſhop of Rome hath authoritie over other Biſhops.

The Papiſts.

THey doubt not to ſay, that the Biſhop of Rome hath authoritie and ought ſo to have, to ordaine and conſtitute Biſhops, to deprive and depoſe them, to reſtore them likewiſe to their former dignities, and this power he exerciſeth over the univerſall Church.

42. Error.

Argum. 1. The Jeſuites principall argument is drawne from certaine examples: how the Biſhops of Rome have in times paſt conſtituted, depoſed, and reſtored ſome Biſhops in the Greeke Church, as in the Patriarchall Sees of Conſtantinople, Alexandria, Antioch: Ergo, he hath power over all Biſhops.

Bellarm. lib. 2. de Rom. Pont, cap. 18.

We anſwer. Firſt, It was not done by the abſolute authoritie of the Romane Biſhops, any ſuch conſtitution, or depoſition, though perhaps their conſent and allowance were required, as Leo writeth thus to Martianus the Emperour, about the ordaining of Anatolius Biſhop of Conſtantinople: Satis ſit, quod veſtra pietatis auxilio & mei favoris aſſenſu Epiſcopatum tanta urbis obtinuit: It is ſufficient, that by your godly help and my favourable aſſent, hee hath obtained ſo famous a Biſhopricke. Whether was greater now, the help and furtherance of the Emperour, or the bare aſſent of Leo? Secondly, we deny not but that the Pope ſometimes, what by ſufferance of others, what by his owne intruſion, hath uſurped this power over other Biſhops: but this ought not to make a law: that which is once or twice done by a falſe title, cannot prove the juſtneſſe of the title. Thirdly, that the Biſhop of Rome hath no ſuch authoritie, it appeareth by this, that hee doth not, neither of many yeeres hath conſtituted or ordained the Patriarchs of the Greeke Church: they came not up to Rome, nor yet ſent thither for their pals, as other Archbiſhops here in the Weſt parts have done, and payed full dearely for them, being made ſlaves to the Beaſt of Rome.

Epiſtol. 54.

This appeareth notably in the Councell of Florence, Seſſ. 25. for it ſo falling out, that Ioſephus Patriarch of Conſtantinople, who was there perſonally preſent, being an aged man, and wearied with long travell, ſuddenly died: whereupon the Pope Eugenius the fourth, dealt with the Grecians verie earneſtly, Ut nunc in Synodo Patriarcham eligerent: That they would chuſe them a Patriarch now in the Synod: ut quem ſuffeceritis, nos confirmemus: that whom you appoint, we may confirme, ſaith the Pope. The Grecians made him this anſwer: Se hîc Patriarcham eligere non poſſe, cum Græcis mos ſemper fuerit, in ſua eccleſia Patriarcham ſufficere, ſimulq́; conſecrare: They could not chuſe their Patriarch here, ſeeing it alwaies hath been the Grecians manner to chuſe the Patriarch in his own Church, and there to conſecrate him, &c. See then, it was denied to the Popes face, that he had any thing to doe with electing, conſecrating, or confirming the Patriarch of Conſtantinople.

The Pope indeed doth take upon him to this day, to make Patriarches: aſſigning to one the title of Conſtantinople; to another the Patriarchſhip of Antioch, and ſo of the reſt; but they have only the bare names, without either the dignitie or juriſdiction of thoſe places: not much unlike to a certaine cuſtome in the Emperours Court at Conſtantinople; the wanton Courtiers to make themſelves ſport upon ſolemne dayes were accuſtomed, aliquem è laicis inſignibus epiſcopalibus componere, qui perſonalem Patriarcham ageret: To take ſome Lay-man, and attire him like a Biſhop, who ſhould counterfeit the Patriarch: which abuſe was reformed, Synod. 8. Conſtantin. can. 16. The like diſorder was corrected in the Councell of Baſil, Seſſ. 21. Turpem illum abuſum removendum cenſemus, quo certis anni celebritatibus nonnulli cum mitra, baculo, ac veſtibus pontificalibus more Epiſcoporum benedicunt: We thinke good that abuſe be removed, that ſome at certaine ſolemnities of the yeere, doe take upon them with a Miter, a Staffe, and other pontificall veſtures, as Biſhops to give bleſſing, &c. Much like to theſe counterfeit Patriarches and Biſhops, are the Popes Patriarches, who have nothing beſide the name and habit of Patriarches.

Argum. 2. The Jeſuite with the reſt doe verie much urge a certaine place of Cyprian. Epiſtol. 3. ad Cornelium: Non aliunde oborta ſunt hareſes, aut nata ſchiſmata, quàm inde, quod ſacerdoti Dei non obtemperatur, nec unus in Eccleſia ad tempus ſacerdos Chriſti vice cogitatur: From hence ſpring hereſies and ſchiſmes, that Gods Prieſt is not obeyed, and that one Prieſt or Paſtor at once in the Church in Chriſts ſtead is not acknowledged, &c. Whereupon they would conclude, that the Pope ought to be this one chiefe Prieſt and Paſtor in the Church: for Cyprian thus ſpeaking writeth to Cornelius Biſhop of Rome.

Anſw. We muſt underſtand that Cyprian at this time had to deale with the Novatians, who both at Rome where Cornelius was, and at Carthage where Cyprian was Biſhop, dividing themſelves from the Church, erected ſchiſmaticall Biſhops of their owne againſt the Catholike Biſhops: Upon this occaſion Cyprian ſheweth, that there ought to be but one Biſhop, not over the whole univerſall, but in everie particular Church: for he complaineth, that this unitie of the Prieſthood was not kept at Carthage, as well as at Rome: for thus he writeth in the ſame Epiſtle, Epiſtol. 3. Caterùm dico, dico dolens, dico provocatus, quando Epiſcopus in locum defuncti ſubſtituitur, &c. plebi ſua in Epiſcopatu quadriennio jam probatus, toties ad leonem petitus, &c. iis ipſis diebus quibus ad te has literas feci, ad leonem denuo poſtulatus, cum talis frater à quibuſdam deſperatis & perditis extra Eccleſiam conſtitutis impugnari videtur: But I ſpeake it with griefe, I ſpeake it being provoked, when a Biſhop is ſubſtitute in the place of the dead, &c. for the ſpace of foure yeeres knowne and approved to his people, ſo often ſought for to be throwne to the Lyons, yea and that inſtant when I wrote theſe letters to you, againe called for to the Lyons: when ſuch a brother ſhall bee impugned of certaine deſperate and damnable perſons, runnagates from the Church, &c. Who ſeeth not, that Cyprian here ſpeaketh of himſelfe, and not of Cornelius, who was Biſhop of Rome but two yeeres and an halfe: and complaineth that even in Carthage the right Paſtor and Biſhop was not obeyed? This place therefore ſerveth not at all for the primacie of the Biſhop of Rome.

The Proteſtants.

THat the Pope neither hath, nor yet ought to have any ſuch authoritie over other Biſhops: but that everie one in his owne precinct and juriſdiction hath the chiefe charge: It is thus proved.

Fox pag. 1062. Pag. 969. 1. 50. Edition ult. Pag. 472. 1. 70. Æneas Sylvius Epiſt. 301.

Argum. 1. Peter was not chiefe, neither did exerciſe juriſdiction over the twelve: Ergo, neither the Pope ought to doe over other Biſhops. The antecedent or firſt part is thus confirmed. The heavenly Jeruſalem, which is the Church of God, is deſcribed Apocal. 21. not with one foundation only of Peter, but with twelve foundations after the number of the Apoſtles: argument. Tunſtalli. To this purpoſe alſo hee alleageth a ſaying out of Hierome contra Iovinian. All the Apoſtles received the keyes of the Kingdome of Heaven: and upon them all indifferently and equally, is the ſtrength of the Church grounded and eſtabliſhed, Fox, pag. 1066. col. 1.

Argum. 2. Before the Councell of Nice, for the ſpace of 300. yeeres, there was ſmall reſpect had to the Church of Rome; but everie Church was ruled by their owne government: afterward followed the Councell of Nice, wherein was decreed, that the whole Church ſhould bee divided into foure circuits or precincts; over the which there were foure Metropolitans or Patriarches ſet: firſt the Biſhop of Rome: next the Biſhop of Alexandria: the third was the Biſhop of Antioch; the fourth the Biſhop of Jeruſalem; and not long after came in the Biſhop of Conſtantinople in the roome of the Biſhop of Antioch. All theſe had equall authoritie in their Provinces, and one was not to deale within anothers charge: Ergo, the Biſhop of Rome had not then the juriſdiction over the whole Church, argument. Nili plura Fox, pag. 9. col. 1.

Pag. 8. col. 2.

Argum. 3. Wee will adjoyne the teſtimony of the fathers of Baſil, which were all of the Popiſh ſect; what have the Biſhops been in our daies, ſay they, but only ſhadowes? might they not have been called Shepherds without ſheepe? what had they more than their Miters and their ſtaffe, when they could determine nothing over their ſubjects? Verily in the Primitive Church, the Biſhops had the greateſt power and authoritie: but now it was come to that point, that they exceeded the common ment of Chriſt, &c. See then in this place Auguſtine ſetteth Biſhops in the higheſt Roome in the Church, and ſaith, they have no Judge above them but Chriſt.

Of this judgement alſo were the holy Martyrs: that the Biſhop of Rome had no ſuch ſoveraigntie over other Biſhops, Thomas Benet Martyr affirmed, that the Pope of Rome was but Biſhop over his owne Dioceſſe, and that he had no further power, Fox pag. 1039 col. 2.

M. Philpot telleth Boner, that by the word of God, the Pope hath no more authoritie, than the Biſhop of London hath, Fox pag. 1811. col. 1. And he ſheweth further, how that Cyprian called the Biſhop of Rome his fellow Biſhop, p. 1804. col. 2.

Pag. 1644. 1. 50. Pag. 1638. 1. 30.

The ſentence of theſe holy Martyrs ſealed with their blood, is of greater waight than many arguments: and by thoſe that love the truth, ought much to be reverenced, and had in great regard.

Now laſtly we will object againſt them the Emperiall conſtitutions, together with their owne Canons: for the firſt, Cod. lib. 1 tit. 5. l. 6. Honor. Theodoſ. Urbs Conſtantinopolitan. veteris Roma prarogativa latatur: The Citie of Conſtantinople hath the prerogative of old Rome. And leg. 15. Leo, Anthem. Conſtantinop. Eccleſia mater noſtra pietatis, &c. The Church of Conſtantinople the mother of our faith, and of all right beleeving Chriſtians, &c. And in the ſame place, the privilege of that Church, ante alios reſidendi, to have the firſt ſeat, is ratified and confirmed. And whereas Bellarmine urgeth the Epiſtle of Iuſtinian written to Iohannes Biſhop of Rome, where he acknowlegeth Rome to be the head of all Churches: Cod. lib. 1. tit. 4. leg. 4. the ſame juſtinian tit. 20. l. 1. thus expoundeth himſelfe, having given the ſame title of headſhip unto Rome, Romam intelligimus, non ſolum veterem, ſed hanc regiam noſtram: By Rome we underſtand, not onely old Rome, but this princely Citie alſo, Qua melioribus condita eſt auguris: Which was firſt founded and built with more happie and proſperous beginnings, &c. Thus wee ſee that the Imperiall Citie of Conſtantinople by the lawes Imperiall was made equall to Rome. And their owne decrees alſo doe ratifie that Canon of the Chalcedon Councell, that Conſtantinople ſhould have ſimilia privilegia, like privileges to the Citie of Rome, Decr. p. 1. diſt. 22. cap. 6.

Here alſo we have the conſent of other Churches. 1 Nilus of the Greeke Church thus teſtifieth: The primacie, which the Biſhop of Rome hath over other univerſall Biſhops, is not like unto that, which a Biſhop of a province hath over thoſe which are under him: For there the primacie is (for [a] order ſake, and rather in words, than in deeds) but in the other there is an equalitie in words, and a primacie in deed. And againe, if becauſe thou [b] art the firſt in number, thou wilt chalenge a dominion, grant this alſo to the Patriarke of Conſtantinople, for he alſo is ſet before him of Alexandria. And afterward, if becauſe Peter died at Rome, thou count the Roman Sea great, Ieruſalem ſhall be farre greater, ſeeing our Saviour Ieſus Chriſt there undertooke [c] his lively death.

Epiſt. 75. apud Cyprian.

2 The South Church hath not in times paſt acknowleged any ſuch ſuperioritie of the Biſhop of Rome over other Biſhops: as it may appeare by the oppoſition of the Biſhops of Africa againſt Pope Celeſtine, about a certaine Canon of the Nicen Councell, and before that betweene Cyprian and Stephen Biſhop of Rome in the queſtion of rebaptizing: with Cyprian tooke part one Firmilianus, who thus reproveth the inſolencie of the Biſhop of Rome. What can be more baſe or vaine, than to hold contention, with ſo many Biſhops through the world, breaking peace, &c. ſometime with the Eaſterne people, ſometime with you of the South. The ſame is the practice of the South, and the Aethiopike Church at this day: their great primate whom they call Abuna, being elected by the Aethiopian Monkes at Jeruſalem, is conſecrated by the Patriark of Alexandria, who hath his ſeat at Cayro in Egypt: not expecting the confirmation of the Biſhop of Rome, to whom yet they yeeld a primacie (of order) among other Biſhops, as Zaga Zabo and Aethiopian Biſhop in his confeſſion of their faith.

3 The reformed Churches agree. French confeſſion, art. 25. Wee beleeve that all true Paſtors, in what place ſoever they bee placed, have the ſame and equall authoritie among themſelves, given unto them under Jeſus Chriſt, the onely head and the chiefe, and alone univerſall Biſhop: and therefore it is not lawfull for any Church, to chalenge unto it ſelfe, dominion or ſoveraigntie over any other Church, &c. Hereunto agreeth our Engliſh confeſſion, artic. 5. That the Biſhop of Rome hath no more juriſdiction over the Church of God, than the reſt of the Patriarks either of Alexandria, or Antioch have, &c.

4 And that this claime of the Popes, to overtop and overrule other Biſhops, hath beene contradicted in times paſt, and oppoſed againſt, ſome of the Popiſh writers themſelves acknowlege: as Cardinall Cuſanus ſaith: That the Councell of Afrike withſtood Celeſtine, in that he would do againſt the Councell of Nice, and Celeſtine replied not that he might doe it, but alleaged for himſelfe the Councell though corrupted. Surius maketh mention of an Epiſtle of the Emperour Theodoſius, directed to Dioſcorus Patriark of Alexandria, in the Epheſine Councell the third generall: wherein hee yeeldeth the primacie unto him. See alſo their owne decrees before alleaged, for the equalizing of the Sea of Conſtantinople unto Rome, as was decreed in the Chalcedon Councell.

ſort of Prieſts onely in their habit and revenewes. What plainer teſtimonie can wee have, than from the Papiſts themſelves?

We have alſo the conſent of antiquitie, the decrees of the eight generall Councels, that the Biſhop of Rome hath no ſuch preeminence or predominate power over his fellow Biſhops.

*Concil. Nicen.*1.*can.*6.Honos ſuus cuique ſervetur eccleſiæ,&c. To every Church be reſerved the honour and dignitie thereof, let the old cuſtome in Lybia, Egypt, Pentapolis, take place, Ita ut Alexandrinus Epiſcopus horum omnium habeat poteſtatem, quia & urbis Romæ Epiſcopo parilis mos eſt: So that the Biſhop of Alexandria have the juriſdiction over all theſe Provinces, becauſe the like uſe or manner remaineth to the Biſhop of Rome; that is, the Biſhop of Alexandria ſhall have authoritie over his confines, as the Biſhop of Rome over his: not as Bellarmine doth odly expound it, let the Biſhop of Alexandria rule his Province, becauſe the Biſhop of Rome hath the like cuſtome over the ſame Province of Egypt, Lybia,&c. for this were, idem per idem, to prove the ſame by the ſame: and the Canon ſaith, parilis mos, the like uſe: Ergo, Alexandria hath the like authoritie. But if Rome were above the Sea of Alexandria, their juriſdiction ſhould not be like, but unlike. And againe, let every Church have it owne honour. But if Rome were the commander of the reſt, the honour ſhould be onely reſerved to it, and to no Church beſide.

*Conſtantinopol.*1. the 2 generall Can.2. the former Canon of Nice is ratified.

*Epheſin.*3 generall, Can.8. it was decreed, after that Zenon Biſhop of Cyprus had complained of the uſurpation of the Patriarch of Antioch, affirming, that they within the Iland did alwaies chuſe their owne Metropolitane, and that neither the Biſhop of Antioch, nec alius quiſpiam, nor any other did ever ordaine there: it was decreed, that Cyprus ſhould be exempt from the juriſdiction of Antioch, or of any other Sea; and ſhould chuſe their Metropolitane themſelves: Ergo, much leſſe was Cyprus ſubject to the Sea of Rome.

Chalcedonenſ. the 4 generall, action.16. they determine, the Archbiſhop of Conſtantinople, Eiſdem primatibus honoris dignum, To be worthie of the ſame primacie of honour, which the Biſhop of Rome hath: This was decreed, though Paſchaſinus, and Lucinus the Popes Legates earneſtly withſtood it. And further in the ſame place, the matter was thus in that Councell diſcuſſed: Sedi ſenioris Romæ, propter imperium civitatis illius,&c. Unto the Sea of the elder Rome, becauſe it was the imperiall Citie, the Fathers did give privileges: And by the ſame reaſon the 150. Fathers aſſembled in Conſtantinople being moved, Æqua ſanctiſſima ſedi novæ Romæ,&c. Did aſcribe equall privileges to the moſt holy Sea of new Rome; thinking it reaſonable, that the Citie, which was adorned both with the imperiall ſeat, and Senate, ſhould enjoy equall privileges with old Rome, and in Eccleſiaſticall affaires to have majeſtie as well as the other, and to be ſecond after the other,&c. Out of the acts of this Councell three things may be gathered: Firſt, that both in this Synod, and in the ſecond generall Councell of Conſtantinople equall privileges were given to the Sea of Conſtantinople, with Rome. Secondly, that notwithſtanding, Rome for antiquitie ſake had the firſt place. Thirdly, that theſe two Patriarchall Seas had thoſe privileges by reaſon of the imperiall dignitie; contrarie to that which Bellarmine beareth us in hand, that Rome had the primacie over other Churches from Chriſt, and not from *Cæſar, c.*17. And yet beſide the authoritie of this Councell, in the Trullane the ſixth generall, Can.38. it was thus decreed, Si qua civitas à regia poteſtate innovata,&c. If any Citie in reſpect of the civill ſtate be innovated and exalted by the princely power, that the order alſo of Eccleſiaſticall matters ſhould follow, that is, it ſhould be chiefe alſo in Eccleſiaſticall affaires, as in civill,&c. wherefore it is evident, that old Rome enjoyed her privileges by the benefit of the Empire.

*Conſtantinop.*2. the 5. generall, action.1. the Synod ſpeaking of Leo Biſhop of Rome, and Cyrillus of Alexandria, ſaith thus; Qui æqualiter, ab hac ſynodo, pro ſtatu orthodoxæ fidei honorati ſunt: Whom this Synod honoureth alike, becauſe of the right faith,&c. The Synod giveth like honour to the Biſhops of Rome and Alexandria.

*Conſtantinop.*3. the 6 generall, which is alſo the Trullane, *Can.*36. Decernimus ut thronus Conſtantinopol. æqualia privilegia cum antiqua Romæ throno obtineat: We decree that the Sea of Conſtantinople enjoy equall privileges with the ancient Sea of Rome.

Concil. the 7 generall, action.2. Adrianus the Biſhop of Rome writeth to Tharaſius Biſhop of Conſtantinople, giving him this ſtile, Dilecto fratri Tharaſio, univerſali Patriarchæ: To my beloved brother Tharaſius, univerſall Patriarch,&c. We ſee then that the Biſhop of Conſtantinople had both the like ſtile and authoritie, which the Biſhop of Rome had.

*Conſtantinop.*4. the 8. generall, *Can.*21. Definimus, qui Patriarchalibus ſedibus præſunt, omni honore dignos judicandos: We define, that the preſidents of the patriarchall Seas are worthie all honor,&c. and then are reckoned up, firſt Rome, then Conſtantinople; after theſe Alexandria, Antioch, Jeruſalem: ſo that the Sea of Rome is but patriarchall, as the reſt: a primacie onely of order it hath, to be named before the reſt.

Thus we have the conſent of the 8. generall Councels, to the which Auguſtine agreeth, Habet omnis Epiſcopus, ſaith hee, pro licentia libertatis ſuæ arbitrium proprium, tanquam judicari ab alio non poſſit, quomodo nec ipſe poteſt alium judicare. ſed expectemus univerſi judicium domini noſtri Ieſu Chriſti: Every Biſhop is privileged by his owne authoritie to follow his owne judgement, neither is ſubject to the judgement of other Biſhops, as hee is not to judge them, but they all muſt bee referred to the judgment De Babtiſ.lib.2.cap.2.

The Second Part Concerning Appeales to be made to Rome.

The Papiſts.

SUch, ſay they, is the preeminent authoritie of the Biſhop of Rome, that appeales may be made unto him from all Churches in the world, and that all ought to ſtand to his ſentence and determination. For the proofe hereof they bring no Scripture, nor any ſound argument, but ſtand chiefly upon certaine odde examples of ſome that have appealed to Rome: which we denie not to have beene done: but our anſwer more at large is this, *Bellar.lib.*2.*de pontif.cap.*21. 43.Error.

1 One cauſe of theſe appeales, was both for that they which were juſtly condemned of other Churches found greater libertie and favour at Rome, as Apiarius did, who being condemned in the ſixth Aphricane Councell for his deteſtable conditions, found favour with Zozimus Biſhop of Rome, who wrote for him to the Councell to be received againe. No marvell then, if licentious fellowes, hoping to finde more favour at Rome, did appeale thither: As alſo the ambition of the Biſhops of Rome did ſomewhat helpe forward this matter, who were as readie to receive ſuch appeales, as others were to make them.

2 Biſhop Tunſtall doth anſwer very fully to this point, that, although appeales were made to Rome, yet was it not for any juriſdiction that the Sea had: but this was the cauſe, partly for that there were many diviſions and part-takings in the Orientall Churches, as alſo becauſe many were infected with hereſies, from the which the Weſt and Occidentall Churches were more free; they were content to referre the cauſe many times to the Biſhop of Rome, as being a more indifferent Judge, and not like to be partiall, being no partie in the cauſe. Neither was their ſuit to the Biſhop of Rome ſingularly, but to the whole congregation of the Biſhops of Italy and France, or of the whole Weſt, as it appeareth by the Epiſtles of *Baſile, Tunſtal.apud Fol.*1067.*col.*1.

The Jeſuit alleageth the fourth & ſeventh Canons of the Councell of Sardis, which he ſaith was a generall Councell conſiſting of 300. Biſhops: which ſaid Canons doe allow & authoriſe appeales made to the Sea of Rome, and there the cauſes to be determined, or by direction from the Biſhop of Rome. Pag.473.2.&c.

*Anſw.*1. That ſuch Canons are to be found in the Councell which beareth the name of Sardis, wee grant: but that ſmall credit is to be given unto thoſe Canons, which goe under the name of this Councell; we are led by theſe conjectures and likelihoods ſo to thinke. 1 Hoſius Biſhop of Corduba in Spaine, was the author of theſe two Canons, who both might be partiall in behalfe of the Occidentall Patriarch of Rome: neither is much to be attributed to him, for his inconſtancie, becauſe he ſubſcribed to the Arimine Councell of the Arrians. 2 Whereas it is affirmed that there were preſent 300. Biſhops of the Weſt, and 76. of the Eaſt, Can.21. we find that there were of this number but 121. that ſubſcribed: for the Greekes went apart by themſelves, and it ſhould ſeeme that many Biſhops of the Latine Church departed alſo: this Canon therefore had not the conſent of the Greeke Church: ſo it ſeemeth to have beene a tumultuarie and diſordered Councell, for otherwiſe it ſhould have beene counted the ſecond generall Councell, as being next in time unto the firſt Nicen Synod. 3 That there are divers Canons forged under the name of this Councell, of the which it is like thoſe are, it appeareth by the preface to this Councell, where we read thus: Sunt alia 40. regulæ, quæ per Oſium Epiſcopum Cordubenſem currunt, quæ titulantur tanquam Epiſcoporum apud Sardicam,&c. There be beſide theſe 40. other rules, which paſſe under the name of Oſius Cordubenſ. which are intituled, as decreed by the Biſhops in Sardis which the Grecians have not, but are found onely among the Latines. 4 One of their owne Cardinals ſaith, It may be doubted, an Sardicenſis concilii conſtitutio extat, whether any ſuch conſtitution of the Councell of Sardis be extant, becauſe the fathers of the 6. African Councell write, that they found no ſuch conſtitution in any Synod of the fathers. Cuſan.lib.2.Concord.ca.5. 5 And that Canon being admitted, yet the Popes authoritie of receiving appeales, is much cenſured and reſtrained thereby: for thus ſaith the Canon, when any appealeth to the Biſhop of Rome, he may ſend if he thinke good, Qui præſentes cum Epiſcopis judicent, which preſent together with the Biſhop of the Province, ſhall judge the cauſe,&c. the ſole power is not left unto him, but together with other Biſhops, which examined and judged the cauſe before.

*Anſw.*2 We have many decrees and Canons of better Councels, to oppoſe againſt this tumultuous conventicle of Sardis.

Fabian Biſhop of Rome, *Epiſtol.*3. Semper ibi cauſa agatur, ubi crimen admittitur: Let alwaies the cauſe be heard there, where the crime is committed.

*Concil. Conſtantinopol.*1. *Can.*4. Manifeſtum eſt, quod per ſingulas provincias, provincialis ſynodus adminiſtrare & gubernare omnia debeat: It is manifeſt, that in every Province, a provinciall Synod ought to rule and determine every matter. Then what need appeales to be made to Rome?

*Carthaginenſ.*3. *Can.*28. Placuit ut Epiſcopi trans mare non proficiſcantur: We thinke it good, that Biſhops ſhould not travell over the Sea: that is, to make or proſecute appeales.

*Milevitan. Concil. can.*22. Ad transmarina qui putaverit appellandum, à nullo intra Africam in communione ſuſcipiatur: He that thinketh to appeale beyond the Sea, let him not be received to the communion within any part of Africa.

Leo, Epiſtol. 82. ad Anaſtaſium, Biſhop of Theſſalonica: he reproveth the ſaid Biſhop, for citing peremptorily one Atticus a Biſhop to come before him, and compelling him, iter aſperum & periculis plenum per invias nives agere, to take a bitter journey, and dangerous, through ſnow, and unknowne wayes, in ſo much that ſome of his companie periſhed by the way, &c. As this was a fault in him; ſo hath it beene in divers Popes, that have cauſed many in the depth of Winter, with perill, yea loſſe of life to obey their citations.

Conſtantinopol. general. 8. can. 26. Liceat Epiſcopis provocare ad Patriarcham, ſi crediderint ſe injuſtitiam pati à Metropolitano, à quo litibus finis imponatur: It ſhall bee lawfull for the Biſhops to appeale to their Patriarch, if they be wronged by their Metropolitane, and the Patriarch ſhall end the ſtrife. There need not then any further appeale to Rome.

The Proteſtants.

That appeales ought not to be made to Rome, but that all matters and controverſies may beſt be ended and determined at home, where they doe ariſe: It is thus confirmed.

1 This matter was notably handled, anno 420. in the ſixth Councell of Carthage, where Auguſtine was preſent, with Proſper and Oroſius: To this Councell Pope Zozimus ſent his Legate with certaine requeſts, of the which this was one, that it might bee lawfull for Biſhops and Prieſts to appeale from the ſentence of their Metropolitanes, and alſo of the Councell, to Rome: alleaging for himſelfe a decree of the Nicen Councell. The Councell of Carthage ſent forthwith to the Patriarchs of Conſtantinople, Antioch and Alexandria, for a copie of the Councell of Nice, wherein no ſuch Canon was found, that appeales ſhould bee made to Rome: but the contrarie; for in the ſixth Canon of that Councell, it was found how all matters, and all perſons Eccleſiaſticall, both Biſhops and others were committed to their Metropolitanes. Upon this decree the Councell of Carthage drew out certaine reaſons why appeales ſhould not be made to Rome: Firſt, it is not otherwiſe to be thought, but that the grace of God is as readie at hand in one province as in another. Secondly, there is no need to ſeeke any outlandiſh helpe: for the partie grieved may appeale to a provinciall or generall Councell. Thirdly, it were not equall nor right to appeale from the Councell to the Biſhop of Rome: for it is not like that God will inſpire his truth unto the Biſhop, and denie it to a multitude congregated in his name.

Fourthly, no forraine or outlandiſh judgement can bee ſo upright or juſt: becauſe the witneſſes cannot be preſent, being hindred by infirmitie of ſex, age, ſickneſſe, by whom the truth ſhould bee diſcuſſed.

Upon theſe reaſons the Councell concluded, that neither any appeales ſhould bee made to Rome: neither that Legates ſhould be ſent from Rome for deciding of matters: And this anſwer they made to Zozimus firſt, then to Bonifacius and Coleſtinus, that in ſhort time one ſucceeded another. And for all the Biſhop of Rome his abſolution, Apiarius was againe called coram, and brought to confeſſe his fault.

Now out of the acts of this Councell, and their reaſons alleaged, we conclude, that it is not fit, convenient nor reaſonable, that appeales ſhould be made to Rome.

The Jeſuite anſwereth, that appeales were forbidden to bee made by Prieſts to Rome, not by Biſhops. This is but a vaine ſhift, for the reaſons of the Councell are generall againſt all appeales. And one of Pope Zozimus his requeſts, which the Councell judged to bee unreaſonable, and therefore would not yeeld to it, was generall, that it might be lawfull for Biſhops and Prieſts to appeale from the ſentence of their Metropolitanes, and alſo from the Councell to the Sea of Rome: the Jeſuites ſurmiſe therefore is falſe, that the Councell onely provided againſt the appellation of Prieſts to Rome, and not of Biſhops, Concilior. tom. 1. Concil. Carth. 6.

But whereas Pope Zozimus is charged with forgerie, for corrupting of the Canons of the Nicen Councell: Bellarmine doth buſily beſtirre himſelf to preſerve the credit of his great maſter, and ſo the reſt of that ſide, but all to little purpoſe.

Firſt, in the 20. Seſſion of the Florentine Councell, where the Biſhops of the Greeke Church were preſent with their Emperor, Marcus Biſhop of Epheſus affirmed that Zozimus had corrupted the Nicen Councell; for the copies ſent from Cyrillus of Alexandria, and Proclus Patriarch of Conſtantinople contained no ſuch thing, as was alleaged by Zozimus, that the Biſhop of Rome ſhould be called univerſall, or Oecumenicall Biſhop; and ſo concludeth that the Biſhop of Rome did ſend falſum decretum, a falſe decree unto the Synod. Againſt him roſe up Iohannes the Provinciall, affirming that to be falſe that was reported of Zozimus, and that the Greeke copies were corrupted rather, for Athanaſius did write to Marcus Biſhop of Rome for the true copie of the Nicen Councell, which the Arrians had burned at Alexandria. But Bellarmine himſelfe rejecteth this anſwer, as untrue, for that Marcus was not then living, when the Arrians (Athanaſius being expulſed) burned the bookes: and therefore Athanaſius could not write to a dead man. And againe, if Marcus (ſaith he) had ſent the true copies to Athanaſius, then the copies kept at Alexandria, would not have varied from that which Zozimus ſent afterward. Thus Bellarmine confuteth the allegation of the Provinciall, cap. 25. therefore he hath deviſed two other eſpeciall anſwers beſide. Firſt, he ſaith, that many Canons of the Nicen Councell are wanting, and theſe cited by Zozimus might be ſome of them. Contra. It is verie like, that more Canons, than are now extant, were agreed upon in the Nicen Councell, as Gre- gorie 10.ſent to the King of Armenia for a true copie of the Nicene Councell, which was thought to be all extant in that tongue : yet the Church of Rome never received but 20. Canons, amongſt the which, that of Zozimus cannot be found, ſo ſaith Stephanus one of your Popes, diſtinct. 16. *can.*13. Or we may anſwer with their Jeſuite Piſanus, who obſerveth out of a certaine Greeke author, that there were two kind of decrees in the Nicen Councell, the one called diatypoſes conſtitutions, the other ὅροι, Canons, concerning Eccleſiaſticall diſcipline,&c. though the number of their conſtitutions be not knowne, yet the number of the Canons may be certaine.

Alphonſ.Piſan.init io.3. lib.de Concil. Nicen.

Secondly, theſe Canons cited by Zozimus were not extant in the Councell of Nice, but of Sardis, which were both taken for one Councell, and of like authoritie ; and therefore the Canons of the one might be taken for the other.

Contra. Firſt, theſe two Councels could not be taken for one, there being at the leaſt twentie yeeres betweene ; nor of like authoritie, the Councell of Sardis not having the conſent of the Greeke Church, as I have ſhewed. Secondly, the Canons of the Nicen which are wanting, are thought to have been inſerted into the Councell of Antioch, not this of Sardis, as Stephanus thinketh, *diſt.*16. *cap.*13. And therefore they had better reaſon to miſtake that Councell, rather than the other for the Nicen. Thirdly, all that the Jeſuite hath ſaid, if it were as he affirmeth, doth but excuſe the Pope from wilfull corruption of the Councell, and imputeth it to his ignorance : but I will ſpend no longer time about this matter.

Thirdly, their conjecture is as vaine, which imagine, that the Greeke copies of the Nicen Councell were corrupted by the Arians : Baron. tom. 5.*annot.*419.*numer.*80. For both Cyrillus of Alexandria, and Atticus of Conſtantinople were profeſſed enemies to the Arians, who affirme, that they ſent the true and uncorrupted copies of the Councell. Cyrillus calleth them fideliſſima exemplaria, moſt faithfull copies which he ſent : and Atticus ſaith, Canones in integro direxi, I have directed unto you the entire Canons, as they were ordained in the Nicen Synod.

Surius tom. 1. reſcipt. Cyril. epiſt. Attic. ibid. pag. 590.

*Argum.*2. We can bring the decrees of a latter Councell, than this of Carthage : for in the Councell of Baſil it was decreed, that no actions or controverſies ſhould be brought from other Countries to be pleaded at Rome, which were more than foure daies journey diſtant from the ſaid court of Rome, a few principall matters onely excepted, *apud Fox.pag.*697.

Lateranenſ. Concil.ſub Innocent. 3.cap. 37. Statuimus, ne quis ultra duas diatas extra ſuam dioiceſim per literas apoſtolicas ad judicium trahi poſſit : Wee ordaine, that no man ſhould bee drawne by letters Apoſtolicall (he meaneth Citations from Rome) above two daies journey out of his owne dioceſſe.

*Argum.*3. This alſo is flatly contrarie to the rule of the Apoſtle, that appellations ſhould bee made out of the Church afarre off. Is it ſo, ſaith he, that there is not a wiſe man amongſt you, no not one that can judge amongſt his brethren ? 1 Cor. 6.5. Ergo, every Church hath wiſe men ſufficient in it, whereby their controverſies may be ended.

1 Cor.6.5.

4 Auguſtine alſo thus writeth concerning this matter, (Miltiades Epiſcopus Romanus,) non ſibi uſurpavit (judicium de cauſa Ceciliani) ſed rogatus imperator judices miſit Epiſcopos, qui cum eo ſederent, *epiſt.*162. Miltiades Biſhop of Rome did not uſurpe or take upon himſelfe to judge the cauſe of Cecilian, but the Emperour being requeſted, ſent other Biſhops, that ſhould ſit and determine the cauſe together with him. Out of theſe words firſt we note, that it had been uſurpation and preſumption for the Biſhop of Rome to have taken upon him the judgement of this matter, not belonging unto him, unleſſe the Emperour had committed it. Secondly, that Miltiades did not ſuffer other Biſhops to ſit with him, as Bellarmine imagineth : but he could not otherwiſe chuſe, for they were ioyned in commiſſion by the Emperour to be judges as well as he. Thus we ſee what ſmall ſhew or colour of title the Pope hath, to heare or receive appeales from other countries.

Laſtly, concerning the unlawfulneſſe of appeales to Rome, we have the full conſent and determination of the Clergie of England, in King Henrie the 8. his daies, aſſembled then in the Convocation houſe : in the which number of them which conſented and ſubſcribed, were Stephen Gardener, Tonſtal, Stokeſly, Boner, Heth, and other, which were Archpapiſts in thoſe daies, with many other : In a certaine inſtrument therefore, whereunto they ſubſcribe, they proteſt againſt the Pope, for receiving of forraine appellations in this manner : The Popes, ſay they, doe tranſgreſſe their owne profeſſion made in their creation : for they in their creation doe make a ſolemne vow and promiſe, inviolably to obſerve and keepe all the ordinances made in the firſt eight generall Councels : among the which it is eſpecially provided and enacted, that all cauſes ſhall be determined in the ſame province where they began, *vid. plur. Fox p.*1064.*col.*1.

Let us ſee both the Imperiall and Pontificall conſtitutions concerning the inhibiting of appeales to be made afarre off.

*Cod.lib.*3.*tit.*23.*leg.*3.Diocletian : Actor debet ſequi forum rei, That the plaintiſe muſt ſue in the court of the defendant, that is, where he dwelleth. And lib. 2.*tit.*47.*l.*2. the ſame Dioclet. Quamcunque cauſam agendam,&c. What cauſe ſoever a man hath in hand, he muſt goe to the Preſident of that province, where they have their dwelling, whom hee impleadeth, &c. Thus even by the light of nature, this Heathen Emperour could ſee what was right and reaſonable in this caſe.

The Chriſtian Emperours alſo have decreed the ſame, as *Conſtantin. Cod.lib.*3.*tit.*14.*leg.*1.Ter- minos provinciarum non cogantur excedere: That widowes, pupils, impotent, and ſicke perſons ſhould not be called out of their owne province, no not by warrant from the Emperour. And concerning Eccleſiaſticall perſons, Leo and Anthemius enacted thus: Cod lib.1.tit.6.leg.31. Ut ſacerdotes cujuſcunque gradus, &c. That Prieſts, of what degree ſoever, ſhould not be called to forren Courts. Which law is generall for all Clergie men, of what degree ſoever, which taketh away the Jeſuites cavillous anſwer, that it was forbidden inferiour prieſts, but not Biſhops, to appeale to the Court of Rome.

Their owne Canons herein are agreeable to the Civill law: Decret. part.2. cauſ.3.quaeſt.6.c.1. Fabianus. Ibi cauſa agatur, ubi crimen admittitur: The cauſe muſt be handled where the crime was committed. And cap.2. Accuſatum non oportet alibi quàm in foro ſuo audiri: That he which is accuſed ſhould not elſewhere be judged but in his owne Court. Can. 17. Sixtus. Si quis Clericus, &c. If any Clergie man bee accuſed of what crime ſoever, in the ſame province where the partie accuſed remaineth, the action muſt be followed, &c. Here is no exception made of Biſhops, nor any reſervation for the Sea of Rome, as in ſome other Canons may be found. Thus we ſee that the Biſhop of Rome in arrogating to himſelfe this authoritie to receive appeals from all the parts of the world, doth therein contrarie to the Imperiall, and Pontificiall lawes.

Let the conſtant judgement and practice of the holy Martyrs alſo bee ſeene: Iohn Huſſe being wrongfully condemned in the Councell of Conſtance, appealeth not from them to the Pope, but to the tribunall ſeat of Chriſt, Fox p.611.

Pag.562.2.19. Pag.1708. 1.74. Biſhop Cranmer appealeth from the ſentence of the Pope to a generall Councell: thereby ſhewing what he thought of appeales made to Rome.

Maſter Philpot, when one Curtop objected, how that Irenaus went up to Rome unto Victor then Biſhop there, to aske his advice about the excommunication of certaine heretikes, and thereby would prove the Popes ſupremacie, and prerogative in receiving of appeales: he anſwereth, This fact (ſaith he) of Irenaus, maketh no more for the ſupremacie of the Pope, than mine hath done, which was at Rome, as well as he, and might have ſpoken with the Pope, if I had liſt, and yet I would none in Englang did favour his ſupremacie more than I, &c. pag.1803.col.2.

Pag.1637. 1.60. Now concerning appeales to be made to the Biſhop of Rome. 1. The Eaſt Church denieth it: as both Nilus, lib.2.de primat. and Barlaam de princip. pap. c.9. doe alleage the 9. and 17. Canons of the Councell of Chalcedon, where the right of appeale is given unto the Sea of Conſtantinople: if any Biſhop be wronged by his Metropolitane, he ſhould bee judged by the Preſident of the dioceſſe, or province, or by the Sea of Conſtantinople.

ἢ παρὰ τῷ Κωνσταντινουπόλεως θρόνῳ.

2 The judgement and practice of the South Church in times paſt, we have ſeene before in the ſixth Africane Councell: and the ſame is the opinion of the Aethiopike Church, as Zaga Zabo confeſſeth, that he was not ſent by his great Lord the Emperour of Aethiopia to the Biſhop of Rome, either to increaſe or diminiſh humane traditions, but to contract friendſhip; and concerning the hereſie of Arius, to know whether the Chriſtians of Europe agreed with them. They will not make the Pope a Judge, to preſcribe rules unto them, but onely to know how he accordeth and conſenteth with them.

Damianus a Goes de morib. Æthiop.

3 The judgement of the reformed Churches is: That it is not lawfull for any Church to challenge unto it ſelfe dominion over another. French confeſſion artic.25. That no mortall creature is able rightlie to governe and put in order the univerſall Church, that is, all parts of the world. Engliſh confeſſion artic.5.

4 We have ſeene the decrees of the Roman Church before, reſtraining appeales from one countrie to another. And Æneas Sylvius one of their owne Popes confeſſeth, that before the Nicen Councel, every one lived to himſelfe, and ſmall reſpect was had to the Church of Rome: till that time then appeales were not made to Rome, and in the Councell of Nice, the like authoritie was given to the other Patriarchs, as to the Biſhop of Rome, can.6.

Epiſt.301.

The third Part, whether the Pope be ſubject to the judgement of any.

The Papiſts.

44. Error.

THe Pope neither can nor ought to be judged either of the Emperour, or any other Secular or Eccleſiaſticall Magiſtrate, no not of any generall Councell, Bellar. cap. 26. Nay, he ſhould doe injurie unto God, to ſubmit himſelfe to the judgement of any, Iacobat. ex Tilhemann. de pontif. Rom. err.34.

Beſide certaine blind Canons and conſtitutions, and a few examples grounded upon the inſolent practices of Popes, they have no other arguments either out of Scripture, or drawne from reaſon, to confirme this their unreaſonable opinion withall.

Argum.1. Bellarmine reaſoneth thus: The Prince is not to be judged by the common-wealth, but is greater than his kingdome: the Pope is the Prince of the Church, Ergo.

We anſwer: Firſt, concerning the Princes high and ſoveraigne authoritie, we will not now diſpute: we make it not infinite, the word of God muſt bee a rule and ſquare both of Civill and Eccleſiaſticall judgement. Secondly, it is ſufficient for us here to anſwer, that the Jeſuite hath ſaid nothing for this which he aſſumeth for a reaſon, is the greateſt matter in queſtion betweene us; and ſo great an untruth he hath uttered, that he is conſtrained to leave Scripture, and ſeeke helpe elſewhere. But he ſhall never by any good reaſon, or ſufficient authoritie prove, that the Pope hath any ſuch Princedome in the Church, as he would beare us in hand, or as the Prince hath in the common wealth.

Argum.2. Bellarmine alleageth a decree of the Sinueſſane Councell: Nemo unquam judicavit pontificem: prima ſedes non judicabitur à quopiam: Never any man judged the Pope: the firſt ſeat ſhall not be judged of any.

Anſw.1. By this decree the Biſhop of Rome is no more exempted from judgement, than all Biſhops are by that decretall of Pope Pius 1.*Epiſt.*1. decretal. Epiſcopi a Deo ſunt judicandi, ipſo Domino exemplum dante, quando per ſeipſum non per alium ſacerdotes ementes & vendentes ejecit è templo. The Biſhops muſt be judged of God: whereof the Lord himſelfe giveth us an example, when by himſelfe and not another, he caſt out the Prieſts that bought and ſold out of the temple. But Bellarmine here hath found out an anſwer for us: Epiſcopum non poſſe judicari niſi a Deo, dico intelligi debere, in rebus dubiis & occultis: That a Biſhop is not to bee judged but of God, I ſay, it muſt bee underſtood, in ſecret and doubtfull matters, lib.2.de Roman.pontif. cap. 16. reſponſ. ad Cypriani locum: So wee anſwer concerning the Pope, that he is left to Gods judgement, only in ſecret matters.

2. Concerning the Councell Sinueſſane, notwithſtanding thoſe words which are thruſt in in the end of the Councell, it is certaine that Marcellinus Biſhop of Rome, for ſacrificing to Idols, was judged and condemned of the Councell, as may appeare by theſe circumſtances: Firſt, Marcellinus was brought before the Councell, and appeared foure times, twice denying his fault, and caſting it upon others, the third time he excuſeth his fault, that he did not ſacrifice, Sed tantùm grana levatis manibus ſuper prunas cumbuſſi: I did onely lifting up my hands caſt incenſe into the fire: the fourth time hee falleth flat upon the ground confeſſing his fault, and ſaying, Peccavi coram vobis: I have ſined before you all. Secondly, there were 72. witneſſes produced againſt him; for the Councell ſaith, In 72. comparentibus damnabitur praſul: A Prelate muſt be condemned by 72. witneſſes. Whereto then ſerveth this ſtreight examining, the often appearing of Marcellinus, and the producing of witneſſes, if he were not judged? Thirdly, and yet the thing is made more manifeſt; in that one Quirinus a Biſhop ſtanding up in the Councell, ſaid thus: Infudiſti cor tuum pontifex malitia: Thou haſt (O Biſhop) filled thy heart with malice: propterea ego non recedam de ſynodo, donec purpureum cor tuum manifeſtetur: therefore I will not riſe from the Synod, before thy ſtained heart be made manifeſt. And then it followeth, Ibi ergo jacentem & moram facientem damnarunt: They condemned Marcellinus lying upon the ground. How can it be denied now, but that Marcellinus was both rebuked and condemned in this Councell?

Argum.3. The Rhemiſts thus argue, out of that place of the Apoſtle, 2 *Corint.*8.5. They gave themſelves firſt to the Lord, then to us: therefore (ſay they) the principall reſpect next after God, is to be had of the Miniſters of religion in all temporall and ſpirituall duties, Annot.in hunc locum. 2 Cor.8.5.

Anſ. It is true that the Miniſters of God, teaching according to his will, as the Apoſtle here ſaith, ought of all men principally to be heard: yet this excludeth not the ſoveraigne authority of the Prince over all perſons, to whom the Apoſtle elſewhere exhorteth every ſoule to be ſubject, *Rom.*13.1. The Apoſtle then in this place ſpeaketh of ſpirituall inſtruction, not of civill adminiſtration. Rom.13.1.

The Proteſtants.

THat the Pope, as well as other Eccleſiaſticall perſons, ought to bee, and is by right ſubject to the judgement and authoritie of the Emperour, King, Prince, or other ſupreme Magiſtrate, and may alſo by generall Councels be corrected and cenſured, thus it is proved.

Argum.1. Peter was judged of Paul, Galat. 2. and of him juſtly reproved: Ergo, the doings of the Pope may be judged and cenſured.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that it was not judicialis cenſura, but fraterna correptio, it was no judiciall cenſure, but a brotherly reprehenſion.

We replie: firſt, publike cenſure and reprehenſion is a part of Eccleſiaſticall judgement and diſcipline, therefore Peter being publikely rebuked, was thereby judged alſo of Paul. Secondly, the queſtion is not onely concerning publike and open judgement, but whether it be lawfull to call the Popes doings into queſtion, and whether his decrees are abſolutely to be received without any ſcanning or diſcuſſing, or making any doubt thereof: for this we hold, that it is the dutie of all Chriſtians to examine and trie the truth of all things, which they are to receive and to beleeve, though they ſit not formally and judicially, as in Conſiſtories, to judge their ſpirituall Paſtors: ſo the Berœans judged of the Apoſtles doctrine: ſo may the Popes decrees bee examined and judged. Thirdly, the Jeſuite granteth that the Pope may be rebuked and brotherly reproved: but the Extravagant denieth it, Non eſt, qui audeat dicere, domine cur facis ſic? None dare ſay unto him, ſir why doe you ſo?

Argum.2. Every ſoule muſt be ſubject to the higher powers: Ergo, the Pope, *Rom.*13.1. Bellarmine anſwereth, that the Apoſtle here ſpeaketh of all ſuperiours both ſpirituall and temporall: and therefore it cannot be concluded, that the Pope ought to obey, but he muſt be obeyed, becauſe he is alſo a ſpirituall power. Rom.13.1.

We replie: Saint Paul in this place ſpeaketh onely of the Civill Magiſtrate. Firſt, he calleth them ἄρχοντας, Princes, which is not meant of Eccleſiaſticall or Church governours, nor ſo taken in any place of Scripture. Secondly, they are ſaid to beare the ſword. Thirdly, tribute is paid to them: theſe things agree not to Eccleſiaſticall governours: ſo the Jeſuit is anſwered.

Thus Maſter Bradford holy Martyr ſometime anſwered to this place: Let every ſoule (ſaith the Apoſtle) be ſubject to the ſuperiour power: and he ſheweth what power, quæ gladium geſtet, which beareth the ſword: which is not the ſpirituall, but the temporall power. And in the ſame place he declareth out of Chryſoſtome, how that Biſhops, Prophets, Apoſtles, ought to be obedient to temporall Magiſtrates, *Fox pag.*1608.*col.*1.

Pag.1460. 2.80.

Saint Chryſoſtome out of this place inferreth, that all men both Prieſts and Monkes, as well as temporall men, Whether thou be an Apoſtle, ſaith he, an Evangeliſt, or Prophet, &c. ought to be ſubject to the higheſt power.

Their owne Maſter of the Sentences expoundeth this place of the ſecular power, Sciendum eſt Apoſtolum loqui de ſeculari poteſtate, &c. lib.2.diſt.44.c.

Argum.3. S.Peter alſo exhorteth, as the Apoſtle doth here, that they ſhould be ſubject to every human creature, 1 *Pet.*2.13. that is, to the temporall governour.

To this place, Innocentius 3. firſt thus anſwereth, as he is alleaged *Decret.Greg.lib.*1.*tit.*33.*cap.*6. that ſpirituall perſons are not here underſtood; for by the ſame reaſon (the Apoſtle naming everie humane creature, to whom they ſhould be ſubject) they ſhould ſubmit themſelves to every ſervant.

Contra. Who ſeeth not how wilfully blind this Pope is? for the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of everie man ſimplie, but of men in authoritie: as Bellarmine confeſſeth, Humana creaturæ poteſtatem habenti: For by that reaſon, not onely ſpirituall perſons, but temporall ſhould be ſubject to every meane perſon.

Secondly, Bellarmine underſtandeth by every human creatue, as well the power ſpirituall, as temporall, though a ſpeciall inſtance be given of the King, *cap.*29.*reſp.ad argum.*3.

Contra. I will here oppoſe againſt Bellarmine the contrarie judgement of the Rhemiſts, who upon that place *Rom.*13.1. thus write: S.Paul here (as S.Peter doth 1 *chap.*2.) expreſly chargeth everie man to be ſubject to his temporall Prince. (And againe, by human creature, 1 *Pet.*2.13. they underſtand the temporall Magiſtrate elected by the people, in their Annotations upon that place.

Thirdly, our Rhemiſts yeelding this place to be underſtood onely of the temporall Magiſtrate, yet denie that this commandement is given to ſpirituall men, but affirme that the King is called moſt excelling in reſpect of other his inferiour miniſters and officers, not in reſpect of Popes, Biſhops, Prieſts, &c.

Contra. Firſt, the Rhemiſts affirme S. Paul, Rom.13. and S. Peter in this place to have both one meaning: but there by every ſoule, all perſons as well ſpirituall as temporall are underſtood: Ergo, it muſt be ſo taken here. Secondly, S.Peter would have all them to be ſubject, to whom he writeth: to ſpirituall Paſtors and Elders, *chap.*5. Ergo, they alſo muſt be ſubject, and in reſpect of them alſo is the King moſt excelling. Thirdly, they have power over all evill doers to puniſh them, verſ.15. but there are ſuch in the Clergie. Ergo.

See alſo the conſent of antiquitie. Marcellinus, as we heard before, was condemned in the Sinueſſane Councell. Sixtus 3. being accuſed of one Baſſus, a Councell thereupon being aſſembled at the commandement of Valentinianus the Emperour, Cum magna examinatione per judicium ſynodicum à 56.Epiſcopis purgatur: After great examination, is purged by 56. Biſhops, by the judgement of the Synod: ex libr.pontifical.

Symmachus being accuſed of Feſtus and Probinus, two Senators of Rome, aſſembled 115. Biſhops, Et facta Synodo purgatur à crimine: And by the Synod is purged of the crime, ex pontificial.

Concil.Ilerdenſ.decret.3.ex Gratiano: Mention is made, how Leo Biſhop of Rome in the Church of Saint Peter, in the preſence of the Emperour Charles, the Clergie and the people, did purge himſelfe by his oath.

Pelagius being accuſed that he was acceſſarie to the death of Vigilius the Pope, did purge himſelfe upon his oath, ex pontifical. So Leo 3.Paſchalis 1.Leo 4. were alſo purged by their oath.

The Councell of Conſtance judged and depoſed Pope Iohn 23. The Councell of Baſil Eugenius the 4. If Popes then have been examined in Councels, accuſed, and brought to their purgation, and condemned: then is there no queſtion, but that they are ſubject to judgement.

See alſo your owne decrees, part. 2.cauſ.2.quæſt.7,cap.41. Leo 4. doth ſubmit himſelfe in theſe words to the Emperour Lodovicus: If we have done any thing incompetently, &c. Veſtro & miſſorum, &c. we will amend it according to your judgement, and of thoſe whom you ſend.

πῶς ἀνεύθυνον ἕξει τὸν βίον. Nilus lib.2. de primat.
ὥστε κρατεῖν καὶ ἐπὶ τῆ Ῥωμαίων ἐκκλησίᾳ. Barlaam c.10.

Now for further teſtimonie herein, 1 For the Eaſt Church, Nilus urgeth the example of Peter, who ſuffered himſelfe to be rebuked of Paul: how then will the Pope of Rome as a tyrant, admit none to cenſure his life, ſeeing he boaſteth to be the ſucceſſor of Peter. The ſame Nilus and likewiſe Barlaam urge the third Canon of the ſixth generall Synod, and the 55. Canon, which reformeth two abuſes of the Roman Church, the firſt in the reſtraint of the marriage of Miniſters, the other touching the Saturdaies faſt; they impoſe a law upon the Roman Church: for thus they decree, that this Canon ſhould hold even in the Roman Church.

2 For the South Church, the Emperour of Aethiopia proteſted unto Alvares, that if the Pope ſhould uſurpe ſo great prerogative, as to uſe toward them any unlawfull commandement, they would not make any reckoning of it. Alvar.deſcr.Æthiop, cap.29.

3 The reformed Churches doe take upon them, and that moſt juſtly, to examine and cenſure the corrupt doctrine of the Church of Rome: as the confeſſion of Belgia, the latter, chap. 17. We doe not allow of the doctrine of the Romiſh prelates, who will make the Pope the generall Paſtor, &c. And a little after: By taking away the Romiſh head, we doe not bring in any confuſion into the Church: for wee teach that the government of the Church, which the Apoſtles ſet downe, is ſufficient to keepe the Church in due order &c. The ſame is the practice of other reformed Churches. Harm.ſect.10. pag.309.

4 Of the Latine Church, Cardinall Cuſanus confeſſeth, that Pope Leo ſpeaking of the Canons of the Nicen Councell, ſaith, Neceſſe eſt me perſeverantem exhibere famulatum: I muſt of neceſſity yeeld my perpetuall obedience. Franciſcus de Victoria ſaith, that the celebrating of Councels is profitable, ad refranandum exorbitantias quorundam pontificum, &c. to refraine the exorbitant courſes of ſome Biſhops, &c. and hee giveth inſtance of a Councell called at Rome by the Emperour againſt Pope Iohn 12. an incorrigible man: which fact, the ſame author ſaith, Turrecremata commendeth. By the ſentence then of theſe Romaniſts, the Pope may be cenſured, and lawes may be preſcribed unto him. Lib.2.Concord.Cathol. c.10. Tract.de pontif.Rom reloc. 4 prop.23.

The Fourth Part, whether the Pope may be depoſed from his Papacie.

The Papiſts.

SOme of them hold that the Pope ought not, neither can be depoſed for hereſie; becauſe it is not poſſible for the Pope to fall into hereſie: Sic Pighius. The Jeſuite confeſſeth this to be a probable opinion: but himſelfe defendeth it not. He alleageth alſo the opinion of Cajetanus, that the Pope may be depoſed for manifeſt and apparant hereſie. Bellarmines opinion is this: that the Pope cannot bee depoſed for any cauſe but hereſie: and not for all hereſie, but that which is manifeſt and apparant: neither is he then depoſed by any act of the Church, but is of himſelfe depoſed, and ceaſeth any more to be Pope: So the Church may afterward puniſh him, but he is then no Pope, for as ſoone as hee is become an heretike, his Popedome in the very act is gone from him, *Bellarm.cap.*30. 45.Error.

He reaſoneth thus: A manifeſt heretike is not ſo much as a member of the Church, much leſſe can he be Pope, who, they ſay, is the head of the Church: and therefore in ſuch a caſe the Pope is depoſed without any ſentence: and if afterward the Church proceed againſt him, they doe not judge the Pope; for he had loſt his Papacie before.

We anſwer: Firſt, if a manifeſt heretike be actually depoſed, it is by the ſecret judgement and ſentence of God: for by no other authoritie can he be depoſed, as they hold: but before God manifeſt hereſie, and cloſe and ſecret hereſie is all one: therfore the Pope is alſo actually depoſed for ſecret hereſie, and not onely for manifeſt: And ſo ſome of the Papiſts thinke, as Iohann.de Turrecremata. Secondly, what call you manifeſt hereſie? or how is he knowne to be a manifeſt heretike? Can he be an heretike before he be convinced? ſhall judgement paſſe againſt him uncondemned? A murtherer is a dead man by law, yet he liveth till judgement paſſe upon him: ſo is the Pope being an heretike, yet Pope, till he be judicially proceeded againſt: as a murtherer dead by right is in act yet living, till by law he is deprived of his life. An heretike, ſaith S. Paul, after two or three admonitions avoid: that is, ſaith the Jeſuit, he is now ipſo facto excommunicate, before the ſentence of the Judge. Be it ſo, but he muſt firſt be admoniſhed, and if he ſtill continue obſtinate, then hee is a manifeſt heretike: ſo before the Pope can be knowne to be a manifeſt heretike, he muſt be found obſtinate; he cannot bee obſtinate, unleſſe he refuſe to be admoniſhed; if he be admoniſhed, then is he judged. Thirdly, an heretike ceaſeth not to be a prieſt, (as they ſpeake) no not after hereſie is knowne, for manifeſt heretikes may baptiſe. The Donatiſts in Auguſtines time were manifeſt heretikes, and yet the Church did not baptiſe againe after them: If a manifeſt heretike ceaſe not to be a prieſt, neither ceaſeth hee to be Pope; there is like reaſon of both: for if an heretike, becauſe he is not a member of the Church, cannot be a Pope, neither alſo can he retaine the prieſthood. Tit.3.10.

Laſtly, who ſeeth not what bare and frivolous ſhifts theſe are? one ſaith, the Church may judge the Pope, not as he is Pope, but in reſpect of his perſon: another ſaith, that they may judge the man which was Pope, but he is then no Pope, becauſe his hereſie tooke from him the Papacie. Why maſters what jugling is here? is the Pope one thing, and the Popes perſon another? By the ſame reaſon you may ſay, that the Pope neither eateth, nor drinketh, nor ſleepeth, nor dieth, and ſo make a God of him, becauſe it is the Popes perſon that doth all this, and not the Pope. And by this ſhift you make no difference betweene an heretike Biſhop, or heretike Prieſt, and heretike Pope: for by the ſame reaſon, none of them all ſhall be ſubject to the judgement of the Church: for we may ſay, that a manifeſt heretike, whether Biſhop or Prieſt, hath loſt by that very act of falling into hereſie, his Prieſthood and Biſhopricke, and then is neither Biſhop nor Prieſt. And ſo you may conclude altogether, that neither Pope, Biſhop, nor Prieſt can be depoſed for hereſie. Cajetan.

The Proteſtants.

WE doubt not to ſay, that the Pope both lawfully hath been deprived ſometime by the Emperour, ſometime by generall Councels, not onely for hereſie, but for other notable crimes, and may ſtill bee proceeded againſt by the ſame right, as well as any other Biſhop or Prelat.

1 Divers examples wee are able to bring forth, how the Pope hath been depoſed for other crimes, beſide hereſie. Pope Iohn the 13. was depoſedin a generall Councell by the conſent of Otho the Emperour, for other matters beſide hereſie: as that hee ordained Deacons in a ſtable, that hee committed inceſt with two of his ſiſters, that playing at dice, he called to the Devill for helpe, that hee defloured virgins, that hee lay with Stephana his fathers concubine, likewiſe with Raiнera and Anna, and her Neece: for theſe beaſtly parts and ſuchlike, hee was depoſed: there was no hereſie objected againſt him. And thinke you not he was worthily unpoped? yet the Papiſts thinke no: for they admit no cauſe of deprivation but hereſie. This devilliſh Pope, through the harlots of Rome (for hee was well beloved [illegible] them) recovered his Popedome againe; but at the length the Lord himſelfe diſplaced him: for in the tenth yeere of his Popedome, being found without the citie with another mans wife, he was ſo wounded of her husband, that within eight daies after he died, Fox pag. 159.

Fox pag. 160.

Boniface the 7. tooke Pope Iohn the 15. who was made Pope a little before, and he expelled, yet recovering the Papacie by force he tooke him, put out his eyes, and threw him in priſon where he was famiſhed. Likewiſe was Iohn the 18. ſerved by Gregorie the 5. his eyes were thruſt out firſt, and he afterward ſlaine. I marvell how our Catholikes can excuſe theſe furious outrages of their ghoſtly fathers of Rome.

In the Councell of Brixia, Gregorie the 7. was depoſed, not for hereſie, but for other abominable vices: as maintaining of perjurie and murthers: for following Divinations and Dreames, Sorcerie and Necromancie, Fox pag. 181. Pope Iohn the 23. depoſed in the Councell of Conſtance: Eugenius in the Councell of Baſil: yet neither of them for hereſie. And yet our adverſaries would ſtill make us beleeve, that Popes cannot be depoſed for any crime but hereſie.

2 Wee can have no better argument, than from our adverſaries themſelves. It is a ſport to ſee what divers opinions they hold, and doe run as it were in a maze, not knowing which way to get out. Pighius thinketh, that the Pope cannot poſſibly fall into hereſie, and therefore for no cauſe may be depoſed. Some other thinke, that the Pope for ſecret and cloſe hereſie is actually depoſed of God, and may alſo be depoſed and judged of the Church: thus holdeth Iohan. de Turrecremat. Cajetanus is of opinion, that for manifeſt and open hereſie the Pope is both alreadie by right depoſed, and may alſo actually be depoſed of the Church. But Bellarmine confuteth all theſe. There is a fourth opinion moſt groſſe: that the Pope neither for ſecret nor open hereſie, is either alreadie of right depoſed, or may bee actually deprived of the Church. Laſtly commeth in the nice and daintie Jeſuite with his quirks and quiddities, who ſaith, that the Pope in caſe of manifeſt hereſie, ceaſeth to be Pope, and is even now depoſed: and if after the Church proceed againſt him, they judge not the Pope, for now he is no Pope. Which opinion how abſurd it is, I have declared before.

That the Pope may be depoſed for other crimes than hereſie, beſide the practice of former times, as we have ſhewed before, wee have alſo the decrees of Councels. The fathers of Baſil alleaged theſe places of Scripture: If thy eye, hand or foot offend thee, cut it off. Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is caſt downe, &c. Alſo our Saviour ſaith, Every branch that bringeth not forth good fruit, my father will cut off, Ioh. 15. Unprofitable ſalt is good for nothing, but to be caſt forth, &c. Hence they conclude, that an offenſive and wicked Pope may bee depoſed and caſt forth as an unprofitable branch: ex Ænea Sylvio.

Againe, the ſame Councell ſaith, Epiſtol. ſynodal. Concilium Conſtantienſe Benedictum propter ſchiſma: Iohannem 23. propter deformitatem vita depoſuit: The Councell of Conſtance depoſed Benedictus for ſchiſme: Iohn 23. for the deformitie of life.

But if they anſwer as they doe, that this Councell of Baſil was ſchiſmaticall: (which I marvell how they can ſay, ſeeing it was congregate by the Popes authoritie) what will they ſay to the Councell of Lateran. ſub Iulio. 2. ſeſſ. 5. where it was decreed, that if the Pope were choſen by Simonie, ut hujuſmodi electio nulla exiſtat, that his election ſhould ſtand void as none at all, and he holden for no Pope: and that it ſhould be lawfull for his ſubjects, ab obedientia ejus diſcedere, to caſt off all obedience.

So then, the Pope may be depoſed for Simonie, which though it be there termed ſimoniaca hæreſis, the ſimoniacall hereſie, yet it is not ſo properly, but rather a fault in manners, than an error in faith.

They have alſo this rule in their owne law, Extrav. commun. lib. 5. tit. 8. cap. 1. The Pope thus writeth againſt a certaine Biſhop whom he depoſed for his enormous life; Illud ſolum æſtimamus ſalubre remedium, &c. We count that an holeſome remedie, that where wee cannot take away, velle, a mans evill will, we ſhould take away his, poſſe, his power to doe evill, &c. Why ſhould not this rule as well take place in a wicked Pope, as in an Impious Biſhop?

Lib. 1. de primat.

Wee have alſo further teſtimonie from other Churches: 1 Nilus ſheweth how Honorius Biſhop of Rome was condemned and anathematized for an heretike in the ſixth generall Synod, Decret. 16. 2 And of the South Church there was preſent one Petrus a Presbyter ſupplying the place of the Patriark of Alexandria, as it appeareth in the firſt action: and gave conſent to the decrees of the Councell.

3 Confeſſion of Auſburg. artic. 5. It belongeth ſpecially to the Emperour, to aboliſh idolatrie with might and maine. Confeſſ. of Helvetia, the latter, *c.*30. they make it the civill magiſtrates dutie to root out lies, and all ſuperſtition with all impietie and idolatrie: then is it conſequently in their power to depoſe hereticall and Idolatrous Popes and Biſhops. Harm. ſect. 18. p. 554.

The Fiſth Part, Concerning the originall and beginning of the primacie of Rome.

The Papiſts.

THey doe boldly affirme without any ground, that the primacie of that Sea hath his beginning from no other but Chriſt: they are the Jeſuites owne words, Romani pontificis eccleſiaſticum principatum, authore Chriſto, principium accepiſſe: That the princely dignitie of the Biſhop of Rome, acknowledgeth no other author or beginner thereof, but Chriſt, Bellar. cap. 17. lib. 2. 46. Error.

Argument. They would build the primacie of the Roman Church upon certaine places of Scripture: as Matth. 16. Thou art Peter, and upon this rocke will I build my Church. Luk. 22. I have prayed for thee Peter, that thy faith ſhould not faile. Ioh. 21. Chriſt ſaid to Peter, Feede my ſheepe: Ergo, Peter and Peters ſucceſſors have their primacie from Chriſt, Bellarm. Matth. 6.18. Luk 22.32. John 21.16.

To theſe places Tunſtal and Stokeſly, two Popiſh Biſhops, yet in this point holding the truth, did pithily make anſwer in their Epiſtle ſent to Cardinall Poole.

To the firſt: They affirme out of the ancient expoſitors, that it is meant of the faith which was then firſt confeſſed by the mouth of Peter, and not of Peters perſon. Further, confirming out of S. Paul, that neither Peter, nor no creature beſide, could be the foundation of the Church: for no other foundation can any man lay (ſaith the Apoſtle) beſides that which is laid, Jeſus Chriſt, 1 Cor. 3.

To the ſecond they anſwer: That Chriſt ſpeaketh onely of the fall of Peter, which he knew in his godly preſcience, giving an inkling unto him, that after his fall he ſhould be converted and ſtrengthen his brethren: for it it were meant alſo of Peters ſucceſſors, they muſt firſt faile in faith, and after confirme their brethren.

To the third: The whole flocke of Chriſt was not committed to Peter to feed: for he himſelfe teſtifieth the contrarie, exhorting all Paſtors to feed the flock of Chriſt, which was given them in charge by Chriſt, as it followeth in that place: when the chiefe ſhepheard ſhall appeare, ye ſhall receive the incorruptible Crowne of eternall glory. He calleth not himſelfe the chiefe ſhepheard, but only Chriſt. It is evident therefore (ſay they) that your 3. Scriptures meant nothing leſſe, than ſuch a primacie over all, Fox pag. 1067. 1 Pet. 5. Pag. 973.

Argum. 2. There can be no time aſſigned ſince Chriſt (ſay they) when this primacie ſhould begin, nor no author named that brought it in: Ergo, it muſt needes be attributed to Chriſt, hee muſt of neceſſitie be found the author thereof.

We anſwer: the time may be aſſigned, the authors named, when, and by whom this pretenſed and uſurped authoritie was brought in, as even now we will ſhew.

The Proteſtants.

THat the uſurped juriſdiction of Rome tooke not the beginning from Chriſt, nor his Apoſtles, neither was heard of for many yeeres after: we thus are able to proove it.

1 Before the Nicen Councell, which firſt devided the regiment of the Church into foure Patriarchall ſeats: Rome had ſmall or no preeminence. So Æneas Syvius witneſſeth, who afterward was Pope of Rome, and called Pius the ſecond: Ante Nicenum concilium ſibi quiſque vivebat, & ad Romanam eccleſiam parvus habebatur reſpectus, Epiſt. 301. Before the Nicen Councell, every Biſhop lived to himſelfe; there was no great reſpect had to the Church of Rome. What more evident teſtimonie can we have than of a Pope himſelfe? Yet the Jeſuit ſaith, that it is falſe in part, which he writeth. He is ſomewhat mannerly, in making him but halfe a lyer; yet I wonder that he will confeſſe any untruh at all in his ghoſtly fathers words, Bellarm. cap. 17. lib. 2.

Secondly, in the Councell of Nice there was no primacie of power given to Rome over the whole Church: but the other Patriarchs of Alexandria, Antioch, Jeruſalem, were privileged in like manner in their confines, as the Biſhop of Rome was in his: They had all equall authoritie given them in their owne Provinces: Sic Tonſtall. Stokeſl. ad Poolum. Pag. 973. 2. 10

Thirdly, afterward there was a certaine primacie of order granted unto the Patriarch of Rome above other Patriarchs; as to have the firſt place, to ſit firſt, to give his ſentence firſt. One cauſe hereof was, for that Rome was then the Emperiall and chiefe Citie in all the world: this reaſon was rendered in the Councell of Chalcedon, Can. 28. Another cauſe thereof was, the ample priviledges and immunities, which the Emperours endowed it withall, as Conſtantine the great, and Gratianus the Emperour made a law,that all men ſhould retaine that religion which Damaſus of Rome and Peter Biſhop of Alexandria did hold.

A third cauſe was, the unquiet eſtate of the Greeke Church, who often voluntarily referred their matters to the Biſhop of Rome, as being leſſe partiall and a more indifferent Judge, they themſelves being divided and rent into ſects. And hereupon,and other like cauſes it came about, that the Biſhop Fox.pag.18. of Rome a little ſtepped above his fellow Patriarchs; but yet had no ſuch preeminent authoritie, as to command them.

Fourthly, the Popes of Rome being thus tickled with vaine glorie, becauſe they were reverenced of other Churches,many matters were committed unto them,and their conſent required unto the decrees of Councels, when they were abſent. Hereupon they laboured every day more and more to advance that Sea, taking every ſmall occaſion that might helpe forward their ambitious deſire, till Anno 606.or ſomewhat after, Boniface the third obtained of wicked Phocas the Emperour (who murthered his Maſter the Emperour Mauritius and his children, to come to the Empire, and was after ſlaine himſelfe of Heraclius that ſucceeded him)of him,I ſay,Boniface for himſelfe and his ſucceſ- Fox.pag.120. ſors, obtained to be called univerſall Biſhops over the whole Church : and the Sea of Rome to have the preeminence above all other Churches in the world.

Afterward in Pope Zacharie his time, the proud and inſolent juriſdiction of Rome was eſtabliſhed by Pipinus King of France,who aſpired to the Crowne, and obtained it by the ſaid Popes meanes,firſt depoſing Childericus the rightfull King, and diſpenſing with the oath which the French men had made before to Childericus, Calvin, Inſtitut.4.cap.7.ſect.17.

Thus then it ſufficiently appeareth, that the primacie of Rome,which it now unjuſtly challengeth over other Churches,is not of any ſuch antiquitie,as they would beare the world in hand,neither that it had the beginning from Chriſt : but both the time when,and the authors by whom it began, may be eaſily aſſigned.

Argum.2. We need no better argument, to prove that the primacie of Rome hath not his originall from Chriſt,than the Jeſuites owne confeſſion. Firſt he ſaith,that it doth not depend of Chriſts inſtitution, but ex Petri facto, of Peters fact, that the Biſhop of Rome ſhould be rather Peters ſucceſſor, than the Biſhop of Antioch,or any other; It is not jure divino, ſaith he, by Gods law : neither is it, ex prima inſtitutione pontificatus, quæ in Evangelio legitur, of the firſt inſtitution whereof wee read in the Goſpell. And againe, Romanum pontificem ſuccedere Petro, non habetur expreſſe in ſcripturis : It is not expreſly ſet downe in Scripture,that the Biſhop of Rome ſhould ſucceed Peter : but it is grounded onely upon that tradition of Peter. Nay he ſaith further, that Peter needed not to have choſen any particular place for ſucceſſion, and he might as well have choſen Antioch as Rome : Ergo, neither is the ſucceſſion of Rome grounded upon Scripture, neither any commandement of Chriſt : for then Peter could not have had free choice to appoint his ſucceſſor where he would himſelfe,as the Jeſuite ſaith, if he had had any eſpeciall direction or commandement from Chriſt. So then, marke I pray you, they cannot prove out of Scripture,that the Biſhop of Rome ought to ſucceed Peter in the chiefe Biſhopricke, but onely that Peter had the chiefe Biſhopricke committed to him and his ſucceſſors in generall, whoſoever they ſhould appoint : Ergo, the Biſhops of Rome by their owne confeſſion can alleage no Scripture, inſtitution, or commandement of Chriſt, for the primacie of the Church to be annexed to the Sea of Rome : and yet againſt their knowledge they will alleage Scripture to colour the matter withall, Bellarm.lib.2.de pontif.cap.17.

That the juriſdiction and primacie of Rome is not grounded upon Scripture, but rather upon cuſtome and continuance of time, it is thus proved by conſent of antiquitie, Nicen.1.can.6. Quia epiſcopo Romanæ urbis parilis mos eſt : Let the Patriarch of Alexandria be chiefe in his provinces,&c. becauſe the Biſhop of Rome hath the like cuſtome or manner, &c. And it is not to be thought, that thoſe two generall Councels of Conſtantinople, and Chalcedon, would have made the Sea of Conſtantinople equall in authoritie to Rome, if the primacie of Rome had beene grounded upon Scripture.

Againe, what the cauſe is that ſome Cities have had ſpirituall juriſdiction over others, wee finde Trullan.ſynod.can. 38. Si qua civitas à regia poteſtate innovata eſt, quoad civilem & publicam formam, eccleſiaſticarum quoque rerum ordo conſequatur : If any Citie be changed or advanced in reſpect of the civill eſtate,the eccleſiaſticall order or government muſt follow : that is, be advanced together with it. This reaſon was rendred, Concil. Chalcedonenſ.action.16. why they advanced the Sea of Conſtantinople, Rationabiliter judicantes, imperio & Senatu urbem ornatam, æquis ſenioris regiæ Romæ privilegiis frui, & in eccleſiaſticis, ſicut illa, majeſtatem habere negotiis : Wee thinke it reaſonable, that the Citie which is adorned with the Senate and Empire, ſhould have the like privileges to the elder princely Citie Rome, and of the like majeſtie in eccleſiaſticall buſineſſe,&c. By the ſame reaſon alſo was Rome advanced at the firſt, becauſe it was the ſeat of the Empire : the beginning then of the primacie therefore was not from any commandement of Chriſt, but by the conſtitution of men.

Epiſt.19.ad Hieronym. Auguſtine ſaith : Secundum honorum vocabula, quæ jam eccleſia uſus obtinuit, epiſcopatus presbyterio major eſt : The office of a Biſhop is above the office of a Prieſt, according to the names of honour, which the Church by cuſtome hath obtained, &c. If then the difference of thoſe two offices, both named in Scripture, did ariſe rather,and ſpring of the cuſtome of the Church, which thought it good to diſtinguiſh them for avoyding of ſchiſme, and is not grounded upon the authoritie of Scripture: much leſſe can the Pope (whoſe neither name, nor office is expreſſed in Scripture) fetch from thence any ſhew of proofe for his uſurped primacie.

* M. Tindal holy Martyr, condemned for this and ſuch other articles, for ſaying that the Pope had no other authoritie from Chriſt but to preach onely, articul.22. Fox, pag.1251. col.1. Sir Iohn Bortwicke Knight, condemned for the Goſpell, thus witneſſeth: Peter could not give that which he had not, as any lordly dominion, or ſuch like; but he gave unto his ſucceſſors that which he had, that is, carefulneſſe over the congregation, Fox, pag.1263. articul.6.

Pag.1139.2.90.

Pag.1150.2.60.

The Popes lordly ſupremacie then hath not the beginning from Chriſt, neither is warranted by Scripture.

And here will I put them in minde of their owne rule, as Innocentius the third hath ſet it downe, Decret.Gregor.lib 5.*tit.*7.*cap.*12. Oſtendat pro vocatione operationem miraculi, &c. Let him ſhew for his calling the operation of a miracle, or ſome ſpeciall teſtimony of Scripture, &c. So then, if the Pope can ſhew any miracle, or ſpeciall warrant out of Scripture, for his primacie and ſuperioritie, we will beleeve him.

And for further evidence. 1 Nilus of the Greeke Church directly affirmeth, that the Pope received not of Peter to be the chiefe or firſt of all Biſhops: For whereas there are two things to be conſidered about the Pope, that he is Biſhop of Rome, and the prime or firſt of other Biſhops, the firſt he received from Peter: the other from the holy Fathers & godly Kings: and for the proofe hereof, he alleageth the 28. Canon of the Chalcedon Councel, which according to the decree of the firſt Councell of Conſtantinople, giveth the like privileges to new Rome, namely Conſtantinople, which old Rome had, to the ſame purpoſe he alſo citeth *Novel.*100. of Iuſtinian, who according to the decrees of the ſacred Synods, giveth the firſt place to the Biſhop of Rome, the ſecond to the Patriarke of Conſtantinople. By theſe allegations it is evident, that the primacie of the Pope is founded upon the Canons and conſtitutions of Councels, and munificence of Kings, not upon the inſtitution of Chriſt.

κατὰ τοὺς τῶν ἁγίων συνόδων ὅρους.

2 Concerning the judgement of the South Church: Alexander Patriarke of Alexandria was preſent in the firſt Nicene, where Canon 6. the ancient cuſtome is preſerved to the Patriarke of Alexandria, to have the chiefe authoritie in Ægypt and Lybia, becauſe the Biſhop of Rome hath the like cuſtome. The like was decreed alſo in the Councell of Conſtantinople, c.6. where Timotheus Patriarke of Alexandria was preſent: where Conſtantinople is made the next to Rome: wee ſee their opinion was, that this primacie was grounded upon cuſtome.

3 So alſo the reformed Churches hold, That all Paſtors, whereſoever they be placed, are of equall authoritie given unto them under Ieſu Chriſt, &c. And therefore one Church not to have dominion over another. French Confeſſ. artic. 30. the ſame is the judgement of the reſt.

4 Gregorie the firſt calleth the title of Univerſall Biſhop, Nomen novum contra Petrum Apoſtolum, contra ſenſum Evangelii, a new name againſt Peter the Apoſtle, againſt the meaning of the Goſpell: how is then the Popes primacie and univerſalitie grounded upon Chriſts inſtitution? Platina and Balbus write, that Boniface the third obtained of Phocas the Emperour, magna tamen contentione, yet with much adoe, that the ſeat of the Apoſtle Peter ſhould be called and counted the head of all Churches: They had it not then from Chriſt or Peter.

Platin. in vita Bonif.3. Balbus ad Carol.5. Imperator.

The ſixth Part of this Queſtion, Concerning the proud names, and vaine-glorious titles of the Pope.

The Papiſts.

BEllarmine ſetteth downe to the number of fifteene glorious names which have been of old given (as hee ſaith) to the Biſhop of Rome, whereby his primacie over other Biſhops is notoriouſly knowne, but the principall are theſe: He is called the Pope and chiefe Father, the Prince of Prieſts, or high Biſhop, the Vicar of Chriſt, the Head of the Church, the Prelate of the Apoſtolike See, univerſall Biſhop. Theſe ſix names or titles they doe appropriate to the See of Rome, *Bellarm. de Roman. Pontif. lib.2.cap.*31.

The Proteſtants.

WE will ſhew by Gods grace, that theſe ſix ſeverall titles and names aforeſaid, are either ſuch, as ought not in their ſenſe to be attributed to any Biſhop, nor any mortall man; or elſe were common in ancient times as well to other Biſhops as to him of Rome.

1 For the firſt name of Pope, it is derived from the Greeke word πάππας, which in the Syracuſane language, is as much as Father: which name was indifferently given to other Biſhops, which were famous in the Church for their vertue and learning: As Cyprian, Epiphanius, Athanaſius, were called Papa, Popes: Auguſtine ſaluteth Aurelius, Preſident of the ſixth Councell of Carthage, by the name of Pope, *Epiſtol.*77.

47. Error.

Fox, pag. 8.

Sophronius Biſhop of Jeruſalem writing to Sergius Patriark of Conſtantinople, calleth him, Papam beatiſſimum, & Papam Deo honorabilem, Moſt bleſſed and honourable Pope, Conſtantinop. 6. action. 11. So in the ſixth Councell of Carthage, *chap.*4. the Synod calleth Aurelius Biſhop of Carthage, Sanctum Papam, holy Pope. Eutiches, who was but a Prieſt and an Abbot, is called Pappas, Pope, Synod. Conſtantinop. ſub Flaviano.

Bellarmine cannot deny, neither dare he for ſhame, that this name Pope hath beene given to other Biſhops; but he hath deviſed three ſhifts to help him at a pinch: firſt, ſaith he, the Biſhop of Rome onely hath uſed to be called the Pope abſolutely, and without any addition, but others with adding of their name.

Contra. The abſolute title of Pope hath beene given alſo to others, and therefore Bellarmines ſurmiſe is falſe: as Hierome writing to Theophilus Biſhop of Alexandria ſaith thus, Adnitere Papa amantiſſime & beatiſſime: Doe your endevour, moſt bleſſed Pope, &c. hee ſaith not Pope Theophilus, but abſolutely moſt bleſſed Pope, tom.3.

Secondly, the Biſhop of Rome onely hath beene called univerſall Pope, and no other Biſhop, Bellarmine.

Contra. Firſt, neither hath this proud name in the better times, and purer ages of the Church, been attributed to the Biſhops of Rome, but rather by them condemned: as Gregorie calleth it a proud title to be named univerſall Pope, and reproveth Eulogius Biſhop of Alexandria, for ſo writing unto him, diſt.99.cap.5. Secondly, yet it may be ſhewed, that after ambition ſet foot into the Church, other Patriarchs have beene called by this name: as Concil. Conſtantin.6. act.13. Cyrus Patriarch of Alexandria calleth Sergius Patriarch of Conſtantinople, thrice bleſſed Paſtor of Paſtors, and Father of Fathers, the univerſall Patriarch: and yet Bellarmine ſaith, that this title of Pater Patrum, Father of Fathers, was never given to any but the Pope.

Thirdly, ſaith he, the Biſhop of Rome hath beene alwayes called Pope of others; but he himſelfe never called any other by that name.

Contra. Firſt, therein appeareth the pride of that See, that diſdained to give unto other Biſhops thoſe titles which others thought them worthy of, becauſe they would appropriate them to themſelves. Secondly, yet I finde, though not the Pope, yet the Church of Rome, which is the Popes See, hath given this title to other Biſhops: as after the death of Fabianus, the Presbyterie of Rome thus write to Cyprian, calling him moſt bleſſed and glorious Pope, as may be ſeene in their Epiſtle.

Likewiſe, thoſe two Epithetes of the Pope, as to be called, Beatiſſimus & ſanctiſſimus pater, Moſt holy and bleſſed father, were uſed in the ſtile of other Biſhops: Proſper in his Epiſtle to Auguſtine, twice calleth him, Dominum beatiſſimum Papam, Lord, moſt bleſſed Pope, Tom.7. Hierome calleth Epiphanius, Beatum Papam, Bleſſed Pope, Ad Euſtach. Fabiol.

This alſo was the ſtile of the Patriarch of Conſtantinople, Sanctiſſimo atque beatiſſimo Oecomenico Patriarcha Iohanni Conſtantinopol. &c. To the moſt holy & bleſſed univerſall Patriarch, Iohn of Conſtantinople: Conſtantinop.5. action.1. Cornelius Biſhop of Rome, writing to one Rufus a Biſhop, Epiſt.2. ſaith thus, Hac & alia qua neceſſaria fore cognovimus, tua ſanctitati nolumus denegare: Theſe and other things which we knew to be neceſſarie, we would not deny to your holineſſe: at this time it is a cleere caſe, that the Biſhop of Rome did not appropriate to himſelfe this title of holineſſe.

De origine anim.2.1. Auguſtine writing to Petrus a Presbyter, or Prieſt, being no Biſhop, yet thus ſaluteth him: Ad ſanctitatem tuam ſcripſit: He hath written to your holineſſe. Nay, in his booke dedicated to Renatus a Lay-man, neither Prieſt nor Biſhop, thus he writeth, Hinc angor, quod ſanctitati tua minus quàm vellem cognitus ſum: This grieveth me, that I am not ſo well knowne to your holineſſe as I deſire, &c. If then theſe titles of holineſſe and bleſſedneſſe were not onely given to Biſhops, but Prieſts alſo, yea unto Lay-men of vertuous and holy life; what colour or ſhew of reaſon can our adverſaries have, to make them proper to the Biſhop of Rome? De origine anim.lib.1. cap.2.

But if the Biſhop of Rome will have this title of holineſſe truly given unto him, let him follow that wholſome ſaying aſcribed to Clement. Epiſtol. 1. Nemo velit dici ſanctus, antequam ſit, ſed prius ſit ut verius dicatur: Let no man deſire to be called holy, before hee be indeed, but let him firſt bee holy, that he may more truly ſo be called, &c. the ſame ſentence alſo is found, Conſtantinop.6.cap.6.

See alſo the judgement of Iohn Huſſe holy Martyr, articul.23. Papa non debet dici ſanctiſſimus ſecundum officium quia ſic & Rex diceretur ſanctiſſimus, &c. The Pope ought no more to be called moſt holy becauſe of his office, than the King in reſpect of his office.

48. Error. 1 Pet.5.4. 2 The ſecond name is Prince of Prieſts, or high and chiefe Biſhop: which title if it be taken for a chiefe power, dominion, and ſoveraigntie, is proper onely to Chriſt the chiefe Shepherd, 1 *Pet.*5.4. and cannot in that ſenſe agree to any man.

It was alſo decreed Carthaginenſ. 3. can, 26. in this manner, Prima ſedis Epiſcopus non appelletur princeps ſacerdotum aut ſummus ſacerdos, ſed tantum prima ſedis Epiſcopus: Let not the Biſhop of the firſt See be called the Prince of Prieſts, or chiefe Prieſt, but onely Biſhop of the firſt See.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that this Canon did onely binde the Biſhops of Africa, it doth not extend to the Biſhop of Rome.

Anſwer. It appeareth Can. 47. that the Canons of this Councell were confirmed by Boniface Biſhop of Rome. For to that end the Councell determineth to write unto him, and the reſt of the Biſhops of the Weſt Church; but it is certaine, that this Councell was received and authorized in the ſixth generall Trullane Synod, Can. 12. how then can the Biſhop of Rome bee exempted from the decrees of generall Councels, which binde the whole Church, and everie part thereof? And againe, this Canon is approved in their owne decrees, diſt.99.c.3. how then can they refuſe it?

But if this name be uſed onely as a title of excellencie and commendation, ſo was it in times paſt aſcribed to other excellent and famous Biſhops, as Ruffinus lib.2.cap.26. calleth Athanaſius, Pontificem maximum, chiefe Biſhop: yea it was in common given to all Biſhops; as Anacletus Biſhop of Rome in his ſecond Epiſtle writeth thus: Summi Sacerdotes id eſt, Epiſcopi, à Deo judicandi ſunt: The high Prieſts, that is, Biſhops (ſaith he) are to be judged of God. If it be taken further for the excellencie of the miniſterie of the Goſpell, and the worthy calling of Chriſtians, in this ſenſe the title of ſummum Sacerdotium, of the high Prieſthood, is attributed to all Miniſters Eccleſiaſticall, both Biſhops and others: ſo Fabianus Biſhop of Rome uſeth this name. Yea, the holy Apoſtle calleth all the people of Fox,p.11.col.1.
God, βασίλειον ἱεράτευμα, a princely, royall, or chiefe Prieſthood: Ergo, the Biſhop of Rome hath no eſpeciall or proper intereſt in this name.

3 The third name is to be called the Vicar of Chriſt upon earth. Where we are to underſtand, that 49. Error.
in reſpect of the ſpirituall regiment and Kingdome of Chriſt, he needeth no Vicegerent upon earth:
for I am with you (ſaith he) to the end of the world: he himſelfe is alway preſent in power, and needeth not in that reſpect, that any man ſhould ſupply his roome. Petrus ſcriba Martyr. Fox, pag.906.
If we doe take it for a word of office and publike adminiſtration, ſo the Magiſtrate may be called the Vicar of Chriſt, in governing the people according to the word of God: In which ſenſe Eleutherius Biſhop of Rome, writing to Lucius King of the Britaines, calleth him the Vicar of Chriſt; and therefore Fox,pag 107.
in his owne Kingdome had power out of the word of God to eſtabliſh lawes for the government of the people.

Thus alſo writeth Anaſtaſius Biſhop of Rome, to Anaſtaſius the Emperor, titul.7. Præſtantiam veſtram

Chriſt. So Auguſtine ſaith, or whoſe worke elſe it is, that Omnis antiſtes eſt Chriſti vicarius: Everie Paſtor and Prelate (and not the Pope onely) is the Vicar of Chriſt.

Euſebius Biſhop of Rome teſtifieth the ſame, Epiſtol. 3. Caput Eccleſiæ Chriſtus eſt; Chriſti autem vicarii ſacerdotes ſunt, qui vice Chriſti legatione funguntur in Eccleſia: The head of the Church is Chriſt, and the Prieſts or Miniſters are Chriſts Vicars, who in Chriſts ſtead doe performe his embaſſage in the Church. This is alſo confeſſed by our Rhemiſts, *Annot.in 2 Cor.*5.18 that the Biſhops and Prieſts of the Church are for Chriſt, and as his Miniſters, that is, his Vicars. Nay, Auguſtine maketh yet a more generall uſe of this word: he ſaith that, Homo imperium Dei habens, quaſi vicarius ejus eſt: Quæſt. 106.
That man by creation being made Lord of the creatures, doth therein repreſent God, and is as his Vicar upon earth, &c. So then all Miniſters are the Vicars of Chriſt; the civill Magiſtrate likewiſe, in ſome good ſenſe, may bee ſo called: yea in reſpect of the creatures, man generally is upon earth in Gods ſtead: Ergo, this name cannot be appropriate to the Pope of Rome.

Iohn Huſſe holy Martyr ſaith, artic.12. Nemo gerit vicem Petri vel Chriſti niſi ſequatur eum in moribus:
No man can be Peters or Chriſts Vicar, unleſſe he follow him in life and manners. The Pope therefore is not Chriſts Vicar, unleſſe hee imitate Chriſts holy life, which I would he did. One of your owne Popes alſo ſaith, Iohann.22. Extrav.lib.3.tit.2.c.5. Vicarius Chriſti ipſius actibus ſe tenetur conformare: Chriſts Vicar muſt conforme himſelfe to Chriſts acts and example. Which ſeeing the Pope doth not, he cannot be Chriſts Vicar, or Vicegerent.

univerſall Church: this is a name onely due unto Chriſt, neither doe the Scriptures acknowledge any other head but him, Epheſ.1.22 4.15. But (ſay they) wee doe not make the Pope ſuch an head as Epheſ.1.22.
Chriſt is, but onely a miniſteriall head over the militant Church upon earth, Rhemiſt.1.Eph.22. cap.4.15.

Wee anſwer: Firſt, Ergo, the Pope by your owne confeſſion is not head of the univerſall Church, 1 whereof the triumphant Church in Heaven is a part; nor yet of Purgatorie, but onely of that part which is in the earth. Secondly, the Rhemiſts confeſſe that the Church in no ſenſe can be called the 2 body of the Pope: Ergo, the Pope cannot be any wayes the head of the univerſall Church, Annot. in
1. Epheſ.22. Thirdly, the Fathers of Baſil uſed this argument: The head of the body being dead, 3 the whole body alſo dieth; but the whole Church doth not periſh with the Pope: Ergo, hee is not properly the head of the Church, Fox, pag.675.

Further, in the ſame Councell, Iohannes Patriarch. Antiochen. in appendic. concil. thus reaſoneth: 4
Nec dici poteſt caput miniſteriale univerſalis Eccleſiæ, nam caput eſſe denotat præeminentiam, quam miniſter non habet ſupra dominam: Neither can the Pope be ſaid to be the miniſteriall head of the univerſall Church: for to bee an head argueth a preeminence, which the Miniſter hath not over his Miſtreſſe.

Concil. Aquiſgranenſ. lib.2.cap.9. Eccleſiam cum capite ſuo Chriſto unam conſtat eſſe perſonam: The Church and Chriſt the head thereof make but one perſon. But ſo doe not the Pope and the Church: 5 therefore he cannot be the head thereof.

Adde unto theſe the witneſſe of the holy Martyrs, Iohn Huſſe, articul.20. The Pope if he be a wicked man, cannot be the head of the Church, ſeeing he is not ſo much as a member thereof: the ſame reaſon uſeth that bleſſed Biſhop and Martyr, M. Hooper, Examination 3. Fox, pag.1507.

6 Maſter Rogers holy Martyr: Chriſt onely doth all in us all, which is the true propertie of the head, which is a thing that all the Biſhops of Rome ſhall never doe, pag. 1486.

Upon theſe reaſons which I have produced, being ſix in number, it may bee ſtrongly concluded, that the Pope in no ſenſe can be the head of Chriſts Church: which proud title ſeemeth to have miſliked ſome of your Popes: as Clemens the fifth in the Councell of Vienna thus writeth, Clement in lib.2.tit.9.c.1. Sacroſancta Romana Eccleſia caput Chriſtus redemptor, &c. Chriſt our Redeemer is the head of the ſacred Roman Church, and the Roman Biſhop our Redeemers Vicar. So then he is onely the head of the Church that redeemed it; the Pope is but the heads Vicar, not the head it ſelfe.

If it ſhall be further objected, that the Biſhop of Rome hath beene called in times paſt, Caput Epiſcoporum, the head of all other Biſhops: wee anſwer, that it was but a title of excellencie and commendation, not of dominion and power: as London is called the head or chiefe Citie of England, yet are not other Cities of the land ſubject unto it, or under the juriſdiction thereof. But wee ſhall have occaſion more fully to diſcuſſe this matter afterward.

51. Error. 5 They would have the Pope called the Prelate of the Apoſtolike See: the Rhemiſts ſay further, that the papall dignitie is a continuall Apoſtleſhip, Annot.4. Epheſ.ſect.4.

We anſwer: Firſt, if they call thoſe Churches Apoſtolicall, whoſe firſt founders were the Apoſtles, then the See of Antioch, Alexandria, Conſtantinople, are as well Apoſtolicall as Rome.

Concil. Nicen. 2.action. 1. Retinentes locum Apoſtolicorum thronorum Orientalis dioiceſeos: They which occupie the roome of the Apoſtolike thrones of the Eaſt Dioceſſe.

And this the Jeſuite denieth not, lib.2.de pontifice, cap.31. But he maketh this difference: firſt, ſaith he, when we ſay the Apoſtolike See abſolutely, not adding either of Epheſus, or Antioch, the See of Rome is underſtood: but the other Apoſtolike Sees are ſo called with reſtraint to the place. Anſwer. That this is falſe which the Jeſuite ſaith, it is proved thus: Siricius Biſhop of Rome, Epiſtol.4.can.1. decreeth thus, Extra conſcientiam ſedis Apoſtolicæ, hoc eſt, primatis, nemo audeat ordinare: Let no man ordaine (Biſhops he meaneth) without the knowledge of the Apoſtolike See, that is, ſaith hee, expounding himſelfe of the Primate of the Province, &c. not underſtanding thereby the Biſhop of Rome, but the Primate or Metropolitan.

Concil. Aurelianenſ.cap.1. Clodovæus the King writeth thus to the Biſhops, which were 33. in number there aſſembled, Dominis ſanctis & Apoſtolica ſede digniſſimis: To my holy Lords moſt worthy of the Apoſtolike See. He calleth all their Sees Apoſtolicall according to the decree, Concil. Aquiſgranenſ.cap.9.ex Iſidor: Apoſtolis decedentibus ſucceſſerunt Epiſcopi, &c. The Biſhops ſucceed the Apoſtles, and are placed thorow the world, in ſedibus Apoſtolorum, in the Apoſtles Sees. In theſe places which I have cited, the Apoſtolike See is named abſolutely, and yet the See of Rome not underſtood thereby. Bellarmines ſecond exception is this, that the Pope is not only called Prelate of the Apoſtolike See, Sed munus ejus Apoſtolatus, but his office an Apoſtleſhip: ſo are not other. Anſw. This is one of Bellarmines toyes, for ſeeing Apoſtolicus, and Apoſtolatus, are conjugata, and where the one is there muſt be the other; if other Biſhops bee as well Apoſtolicall as hee, they have alſo an Apoſtleſhip as well as he.

Secondly, thoſe Churches are Apoſtolicall which hold the Apoſtolike faith: ſo is not the See of Rome Apoſtolicall, being departed and gone backe from the ancient Catholike faith: but thoſe Churches where the Goſpell of Jeſus Chriſt is truly preached, are indeed Apoſtolike.

Biſhop Ridley holy Martyr thus witneſſeth: it was neither for the privilege of the See or perſon, that the See and Biſhop of Rome were called Apoſtolike, but for the true trade of Chriſts religion taught and maintained in that See, Fox.p.1775. Thus alſo writeth Agatho Biſhop of Rome to Conſtantine the Emperour, Væ mihi eſt, ſi veritatem Domini mei, quam Apoſtoli prædicarunt, prædicare neglexero: Woe is unto me, if I neglect to preach the truth of my Lord, which the Apoſtles preached.

Thirdly, how can the Pope be an Apoſtle, or have Apoſtolike authoritie, ſeeing he preacheth not at all, much leſſe to the whole world, wherein conſiſted the office of an Apoſtle? Neither can he ſhew his immediate calling from Chriſt, as all the Apoſtles could: for ſeeing hee challengeth the Apoſtolike office by tradition from S. Peter, and not by commandement from Chriſt; he can in no wiſe be counted an Apoſtle, or his office an Apoſtleſhip: for the Apoſtles ordained only Evangeliſts and Paſtors, they had not authoritie to conſecrate and conſtitute new Apoſtles. Our adverſaries for this their Apoſtleſhip can finde nothing in Scripture, not for a thouſand yeeres after Chriſt in the ancient writers, Fulke, Annot. in Epheſ.4. ſect.4.

52. Error. Diſtinct.99. 6 Concerning the title of univerſall Biſhop, it was thus decreed in the ſixth Councell of Carthage, as it is alleaged by Gratian: Univerſalis autem nec Romanus Pontifex appelletur: No not the Biſhop of Rome is to be called univerſall. In Gregorie the firſt his time, Iohn Patriarch of Conſtantinople obtained of the Emperour Mauritius to be called univerſall Patriarch: but Gregorie would not agree thereunto, calling him the fore-runner of Antichriſt, that would challenge ſo proud a name, Gregor. lib.4. Epiſtol.32.

Lib.2. de Pont. cap.31. Bellarmine and other of that Sect doe anſwer, that Gregorie found fault with this title, becauſe Iohn of Conſtantinople would have beene Biſhop alone, and none other to be beſide him, but all other only to be his Deputies and Vicars.

To this we reply : Firſt, Iohn did only challenge a ſuperioritie over other Biſhops, not to be Biſhop alone ; for this had been a thing impoſſible. Secondly, if Iohn had ſought any ſuch thing, it is not like that the Greeke Biſhops, which gave their conſent unto this title, would have yeelded to ſo unreaſonable a matter as they did. Thirdly, Eulogius Patriarch of Alexandria doth call the ſaid Gregorie univerſall Pope, which name hee utterly refuſeth: and yet Eulogius had no ſuch meaning to make him Biſhop or Patriarch alone, but onely to give him a preeminence above the reſt.

Fourthly, this may appeare to be ſo by that which Leo writeth, *Epiſtol.*53. concerning Anatolius Patriarch of Conſtantinople: to whom this preeminence was granted in the Chalcedon Councel. Nimium ſuperbum eſt, ut unius creſcat dignitas, tot metropolitanorum impugnare primatus : It is too proud an enterpriſe, to impugne the primacie of ſo many Metropolitans, to increaſe the dignitie of one. Pelagius the ſecond thus writeth alſo againſt Iohn of Conſtantinople, who challenged to be called univerſall Biſhop : Si ſummus Patriarcha univerſalis dicitur, Patriarcharum nomen cæteris derogatur, Epiſt. 1. decretal. If the chiefe Patriarch be called univerſal, then the title of Patiarchſhip is taken from the reſt, &c. By theſe teſtimonies it appeareth, that theſe ambitious Prelates had no meaning to ſpoile the reſt of their Epiſcopal dignity, but only to have the primacie & preeminence before them. For the title of univerſalitie doth only derogate to the dignitie of Patriarches, & primacie of Metropolitans.

This modeſt and humble Biſhop of Rome Gregorie, of whom we ſpake before, in ſtead of the title, Univerſall, brought it into the Popes ſtile to be called Servus ſervorum Dei. Sevant to Gods ſervants: Ergo, we conclude with Gregorie, that this title, Univerſall, is an Antichriſtian name, and that it hath miſliked the ancient Biſhops of Rome themſelves ; and how other Patriarches & Biſhops have challenged that ambitious name and title, as well as the Popes of Rome. And it hath been acknowledged and yeelded unto them, as Conſtantinop. general. 5. action. 1. Iohn Biſhop of Conſtantinople is called Oecomenicus Patriarcha, Oecomenicall, or univerſall Patriarch. *Conſtantinop. general.*6. action. 13. Cyrus Biſhop of Alexandria writeth thus to Sergius Biſhop of Conſtantinople, Ter beatiſſimo, benigno paſtori paſtorum, patri patrum, univerſali patriarchæ Sergio : To the thrice bleſſed Paſtor of Paſtors, & Father of Fathers, the univerſall Patriarch Sergius. And leſt it might be ſaid that theſe Patriarches doe but dally and gloze one with another, we finde that Pope Adrian writeth thus to Tharaſius Biſhop of Conſtantinople, Dilecto fratri univerſali Patriarchæ : To my beloved brother the univerſall Patriarch, &c. *Nicen.*2 *action.*2.

We conclude therefore, that this title to be called univerſall Biſhop or Patriarch, neither was in times paſt, nor is now properly or of right belonging to the See of Rome.

Laſtly, ſee the judgement of ſome Papiſts themſelves of this point : Eckius a ſtout popiſh champion ſaith thus diſputing againſt Luther, that the Biſhop of Rome ought not to be called univerſall Biſhop, but Biſhop of the univerſall Church : Fox, pag.8.58.

Concil. Baſilienſ. epiſtol. ſynodal. 8. Romanus pontifex eſt univerſalis Eccleſiæ miniſter non dominus : The Biſhop of Rome is a ſervant or Miniſter of the univerſall Church, not a Lord or Biſhop. They grant not ſo much as Eckius doth. Biſhop Longland cutteth him yet ſhorter, ſaying, There is no univerſall Biſhop but Chriſt : the Biſhop of Rome, and all other Biſhops, are but underlings and unworthy Suffragans to this Biſhop Chriſt. Fox, pag. 1100.

Concerning theſe glorious titles which they would have appropriated to the Biſhop of Rome, I will ſet downe at once the judgement of other Chriſtian Churches. 1 For the Greeke Church Nilus confeſſeth, that the B. of Rome had a primacie yeelded unto him, but as a preſerver of order, and not otherwiſe. And whereas they challenge, that the B. of Rome was called & ſtiled ſimply Biſhop without addition of any place : he ſheweth that others alſo were ſo called: as Theodoſius writeth, Cyrillo Epiſcopo, to Cyrillus the Biſhop, without expeſſe mention of the place. Concerning the title of chiefe Biſhop, the Church of the Muſcovites[a] deny the Church of Rome to be Principem & magiſtram, the Princeſſe and Miſtreſſe of other Churches : and Ieremie Patriarch of Conſtantinople challengeth this title to that See : [b] Cum hæc quæ apud nos eſt Eccleſia, Princeps ſit aliarum Eccleſiarum: Seeing this Church of God which is with us, is the chiefe of other Churches, &c. As for the title of vicarſhip, the ſaid Ieremy alſo challengeth it to that See : [c] Mediocritas noſtra Chriſti Domini miſeratione ſucceſſione quadam hic terris in ejus locum tenens: Our mediocrity is in the roome or ſtead of Chriſt our Lord, by a certain ſucceſſion here in earth. The Muſcovite Church following the Greeks, deny the Church of Rome, [d] caput eſſe Eccleſiarũ, to be the head of other Churches. Nilus acknowledgeth the Pope to be the head, that is the firſt of the Churches, but with two limitations, as long as he keep order, and ſtandeth for the truth, and not otherwiſe: both which ſeeing he hath tranſgreſſed, he hath alſo loſt his headſhip. For the title Apoſtle and Apoſtolicall, the ſame Nilus denieth the Pope to be an Apoſtle, for the Apoſtles did not ordaine Apoſtles, but Paſtors and Doctors : if he be not an Apoſtle, then he hath not Apoſtolatum, an Apoſtleſhip, as Bellarmine urgeth : he further ſheweth out of the ſubſcription of the 6. and 7. generall Councels, that the other patriachal Sees of Alexandria, Hieruſalem, Antioch, were called Apoſtolical, as well as Rome : and he alleageth Chryſoſtome, who ſaith, that everie Biſhop doth ſit in the chaire of Chriſt, as the Prieſts of the Law did ſit in Moſes chaire. And univerſall Biſhops, Barlaam denieth any to have been, ſave the Apoſtles : particular Paſtors they appointed over Cities, as Dionyſius of Athens, Timotheus of Epheſus, Titus of Creet, and Clement was conſtituted Biſhop of Rome by S. Peter.

2 Concerning the South Church, we have ſeene before the decree of the ſixth Councell of Carthage, that the Biſhop of Rome ſhould not be called univerſall Biſhop: The Æthiopike Emperour though he acknowledge in his Epiſtles the Biſhop to be the firſt, and in that ſenſe head of other Biſhops, yet in his letters written to Emmanuel King of Portugall; he giveth that title unto Chriſt, qui eſt caput mundi, which is the head of the world: and in his Epiſtle to Ioannes the 3. King of Portugall, he ſtileth himſelfe Columna fidei, the Pillar of the faith: hee then dependeth not upon the Pope, as the chiefe Paſtor for his faith. Yea, as Alvares reporteth, when being asked of the Emperour, whether they did obey all which the Pope commanded, he anſwered, We doe, being thereto obliged by the article of our faith, which confeſſeth one holy Catholike Church: The Emperour replyed, that if the Pope would uſe toward them any unlawfull commandement, they would not make any reckoning of it. They doe not then yeeld obedience in all things to the Pope, as the chiefe Paſtor.

The Papiſts.

53. Error.

THey deny not but that both the Pope by himſelfe, and together with a whole Councell, may bee deceived in matters of fact, that is, in hiſtoricall points, and the truth of things that are done, becauſe it dependeth of the teſtimony and information of men; but in matters of faith & doctrine, the Pope determining with the Councell, is not ſubject to error: yea, the Pope by himſelfe alone decreeing any thing concerning faith cannot be deceived, Bellarm. lib. 4. de Pontif. cap 13. No nor yet in precepts of manners preſcribed to the Church by the Pope, is there any feare or danger of error, cap. 5. Yea, it is probable (ſaith he) that the Pope, not onely as Pope, cannot erre, but not as a private perſon, is it like he ſhould fall into hereſie, or hold any obſtinate opinion contrarie to the faith? cap. 6.

Luk. 22. 31.

Argum. 1. Luk. 22. 31. Simon, I have prayed for thee that thy faith faile not. Chriſt here prayeth for Peter and his ſucceſſors, that they might not at any time erre, or be deceived in matters of faith, Bellarm. cap. 3. Rhem. Annot. in Luk. 22 ſect. 11.

We anſwer: Firſt, this was a particular prayer for Peter, that his faith ſhould not faile in that great and dangerous tentation, into the which our Saviour foreſaw he ſhould fall: For if it were to bee underſtood of Peters ſucceſſors, they alſo muſt bee firſt ſifted by Satan as Peter was, and deny Chriſt, and ſo being converted ſtrengthen their brethren: if they will underſtand one part of Peters ſucceſſors, I pray you, why not all? Secondly, our Saviour prayeth likewiſe for all his Apoſtles, that they might be ſanctified in the truth; yea for all, that ſhould beleeve by their preaching: yet is not everie Chriſtian privileged from all error of faith. Thirdly, after this Peter himſelfe erred, and was reprehended of S. Paul.

John 11. 51.

Argum. 2. The high Prieſts that ſate in Moſes chaire were privileged not to erre: as Caiphas though a wicked man, and in ſome ſort an uſurper, had ſome aſſiſtance of God for utterance of the truth, Ioh. 11. 51. Ergo, much more now are the chiefe Paſtors of the Church free from error, Bellarm. cap. 3. Rhem. Luc. 22. ſect. 11.

2 King. 16. 11.

Nehem. 13. 4.

We anſwer: The high Prieſts had no ſuch privilege, for ſome of them fell into ſtrange errors: Uriah the high Prieſt ſet up an idolatrous Altar at the Kings commandement, 2 Kin. 16. Eliaſhib was joyned in affinitie with Tobiah the Ammonite, contrarie to the Law of God, Neh. 13. 4. And concerning Caiphas, though at this time he ignorantly ſpake the truth, yet was he a Sadduce, & condemned Chriſt. And if Caiphas example prove any thing, being (as you ſay) but an uſurper of the Prieſthood, it maketh as well for uſurpers of the Papall See, that they alſo ſhould be privileged from error.

Bellarmine and the reſt doe much urge that place of Cyprian, Epiſtol. 1. ad Cornelium: Non cogitant eos eſſe Romanos, quorum fides Apoſtolo prædicante laudata eſt, ad quos perfidia habere non poſſit acceſſum: They remember not that they are Romans, whoſe faith is ſo commended even by the Apoſtle himſelfe, unto whom falſhood or untruth can have no acceſſe. Alſo Euſebius B. of Rome ſaith, In Eccleſia Catholica extra maculam ſemper eſt Catholica ſervata religio: In the Catholike Church the Catholike Religion hath alwayes beene kept without ſpot.

Lucius B. of Rome alſo thus writeth, Ut in exordio normam fidei Apoſtolicæ ab authoribus ſuis percepit, cepit, illibata ſine tenus manet : As in the beginning it received the Apoſtolike faith from the authors thereof, ſo it remaineth uncorrupted to the end, Epiſtol. decretal.

Anſw. First, as for the teſtimonies of the Biſhops of Rome, they doe not greatly move us: for who ſeeth not that they might be partial, in judging of their own Church? Cyprians teſtimony, a welwiller of the Roman Church, though not of that Church, carrieth greater weight with it. Secondly, they all here alleaged, have ſpeciall relation to former times, and commend the conſtancie of the Roman faith: for untill Cyprian & Lucius time, & ſomewhat after, the Biſhops of Rome were faithfull men, impugners of hereſies, holy Martyrs: for as yet Marcellinus had not fallen: and therefore they could doe no leſſe, than commend their continuance in the Apoſtolike faith, during ſo many yeeres of perſecution. And for the time to come, they ſpeake not definitely as Prophets, but judge charitably as brethren, that they hope well, that the Church of Rome which had held out ſo long, would have held out to the end. Thirdly, Euſebius ſaith, that in the Catholike Church the Catholike faith ſhall alwaies remaine: ſo then as long as the Church of Rome was Catholike, not departing from the doctrine of the Apoſtles, they were ſure to have the Apoſtolike faith: and thus Cyprian alſo and Lucius, with the reſt that ſo ſpeake, muſt bee underſtood. So a Popiſh champion himſelfe teacheth us to underſtand them: Quod dicitur, Eccleſia Romana ſemper immaculata permanſit, & permanebit, intelligi debet verum, quamdiu ligabit & ſolvet juſtè, clave non errante: Where it is ſaid, the Church of Rome hath remained and ſhall continue unſpotted, to make it true, we muſt underſtand, ſo long as it bindeth and looſeth juſtly, the key not erring: Iohan. Patriarch. Antiochen. opuſcul. in appendic. Concil. Baſilienſ.

The Proteſtants.

THat the Popes and Biſhops of Rome have not onely erred in manners, but even in faith; and not onely privately and perſonally as men, but publikely and judicially as Popes; that they have by their publike and open preaching, defence, allowance, and conſent, approved and eſtabliſhed erroneous, and ſome hereticall opinions: thus we truſt to make it plaine and evident to all men.

1 Peter erred: Ergo, the Pope may, though he were Peters ſucceſſor. First, Peter erred in denying of Chriſt. The Jeſuite anſwereth: firſt, he began not yet to be the chiefe Biſhop, which hee entred not into till after the reſurrection, when Chriſt ſaid unto him, Feed my ſheepe, Ioh. 21. therefore all this while hee might erre. A goodly anſwer: I pray you tell me, was not the Church before Chriſts paſſion, and after, built upon the ſame rocke? I trow they cannot deny it: but Peter was not the rocke before, therefore not after.

If he were therefore called a rocke becauſe of his confeſſion of Chriſt, why ſhould hee not then rather, ſtraight after his confeſſion take poſſeſſion of his office, than immediately after his deniall of Chriſt? Surely this is but a ſilly ſhift. Secondly, ſaith the Jeſuite, Peter failed in charitie when he denied Chriſt, not in faith, cap. 3. and if he failed in faith, he loſt the confeſſion of faith, & not faith it ſelfe.

We anſwer: First, can a true faith then be ſeparated from love by your doctrine? The Apoſtles knew no ſuch faith: Saint Iames ſaith, it is a dead faith that is without the works of love, and the faith of Devils, that is, no faith, Iames 2.17,19. If then Peters love failed, his faith alſo failed. Secondly, wee doe not ſay that Peters faith was loſt and utterly extinguiſhed, for Chriſt prayed for him, but whether it were an error in faith which Peter fell into: for it is not all one to erre in faith, or cleane to loſe faith. [a] Thirdly, he loſt the confeſſion of faith, he denyed Chriſt in word: Ergo, he denied the faith, howſoever hee thought in heart: for theſe two are the principall fruits of faith, to Beleeve with the heart, and Confeſſe with the mouth, Rom. 10. and where either of theſe is wanting, there cannot be a right faith: for [b] he that putteth away a good conſcience, maketh ſhipwracke alſo of faith, 1 Tim. 1.19. But the Jeſuite I ſee hath a queazie ſtomacke, let him cough up luſtily, and ſay with one of his fellowes, Petrus non fidem Chriſti, ſed Chriſtum ſalva fide negavit: Peter denied not the faith of Chriſt, but his faith remaining ſound and whole, he onely denied Chriſt. Loe, here is new popiſh divinitie, that a man may deny Chriſt, and yet not deny the faith.

Secondly, Peter erred in conſtraining the Gentiles to doe as the Jewes. Bellarmine ſaith, it was an error in example and converſation, not in faith or doctrine, cap. 7.

We anſwer: First, in this example of Peter there was alſo included an error in faith: for how ſhould the Gentiles better know Peters judgement, than by his example, by the which they fell into an error of faith, and were conſtrained to conforme themſelves like to the Jewes: thinking that the Jewiſh ceremonies were neceſſarie to be retained? Secondly, S. Paul himſelfe ſaith, they went not the right way to the truth of the Goſpell. Ergo, they erred from the truth of the Goſpell, and ſo in faith. Thirdly, the Divines of Paris doe attribute to Peter an error in faith, Fulke, Annot. 4 Galat. 9.

Thus teſtifieth alſo Gelaſius, Tom. de anathematis vinculo. S. Petrus ſic exiſtimans novi teſtamenti gratiam prædicandam, ut à legis veteris non recederet inſtitutis, quadam per ſimulationem legitur geſſiſſe: S. Peter thinking that the grace of the new Teſtament was ſo to be preached, that hee ſhould not notwithſtanding leave the inſtitution of the old Law, is read to have committed ſomewhat by diſſimulation. It was therefore an error in opinion, which afterward the ſame Gelaſius calleth, imbecillis inſcitia, his impotent unſkilfulneſſe: Saint Peter therefore failed not only in his examples, but in his knowledge and judgement.

2 We can produce many examples of the Popes, which have erred judicially, namely, openly have maintained errors. To let paſſe Marcellinus, who ſacrificed to Idols, as a ſlip of his perſon, and hee afterward

[a] At this time hee failed and loſt his confeſſion, and was weake in faith, but neither of them were utterly loſt. See the further anſwer to this objection: Recept. pag. 30. Alan. Cop.

[b] Though in that place the Apoſtle ſpeake onely of certaine, yet the rule is generall, that he which putteth away a good conſcience, doth alſo violate the right ſaving faith, which is never ſevered from a good conſcience. See the exception to this place further anſwered. Recept. pag. 110.

afterward repented him of his fall: yet by the way the Jeſuite is deceived, that thinketh it probable that the Popes particular perſon cannot fall into hereſie: here you ſee Marcellinus fell into Idolatrie.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that Marcellinus was no heretike, Niſi actu externo ob metum mortis: But onely in an externall act for feare of death.

Contra. That Marcellinus failed not onely in committing of an unlawfull act, but erred in judgement, it appeareth in the proceſſe againſt him in the Sinueſſane Councell: for thus Marcellinus at the firſt excuſed himſelfe, Non Diis ſacrificavi, ſed tantum grana levatis manibus ſuper prunas combuſſi: I did not ſacrifice (ſaith he) to the gods, but only lifting up my hands, burnt incenſe over the coales. But what is this elſe, I pray you, than to offer ſacrifice to Idols?

Liberius ſubſcribed to the Arrians, conſented to the condemnation of Athanaſius: as teſtifieth Hierome, confeſſed by Nicholaus Cuſanus, and Alphonſus de Caſtro, both Papiſts, Iuel, pag. 164. defenſ. Apolog.

Lib. 6. de loc. cap. 8.

Honorius 1. conſented to the hereſie of Sergius Biſhop of Conſtantinople, who was a Monothelite, and held that there were not two wils or operations in Chriſt, and ſo deſtroyed the two natures. That Honorius was a Monothelite, Melchior Canus a Papiſt confeſſeth, hee was condemned for an heretike in the 6. 7. and 8. generall Synods. Bellarmine anſwereth, that the Councels are corrupted, or they might be deceived in judgement, as in a matter of fact: or that Honorius onely miſliked the ſpeech, to ſay there were two wils in Chriſt, and not the thing. See what poore ſhifts here bee to make Honorius no heretike, and yet all will not bee: for one of your owne Popes Leo 2. writing to Conſtantinus the Emperour, accurſed Honorius amongſt other Monothelite heretikes: Wee accurſe (ſaith he) the inventors of this new error, Thodorus, Cyrus, &c. and Honorius, which did not lighten the Apoſtolike Church, with the doctrine of Apoſtolike tradition, but by prophane treaſon endevoured to ſubvert the immaculate faith, &c. Thus Honorius in a principall article of the faith erred, not in his private opinion onely, but in his publike defence.

Adrianus 2. Biſhop of Rome, whatſoever the Jeſuite ſaith to the contrarie, putteth all out of doubt: as it may appeare Conſtantinop. general. 8. action. 7. for he writeth thus; Licèt Honorio ab Orientalibus poſt mortem anathema ſit dictum, ſciendum tamen eſt, quia ſuper hereſi fuerat accuſatus, propter quam ſolum licitum eſt junioribus majorum ſuorum motibus reſiſtere: Although Honorius were accurſed or condemned of the Eaſt Church after his death, you muſt underſtand that he was accuſed of hereſie, for the which onely it is lawfull for the inferiors to reſiſt the doings of their ſuperiors, &c. Here a Pope himſelfe plainely confeſſeth, that Honorius his predeceſſor was an heretike.

Pope Stephen the 6. tooke up Formoſus body, and cut off two fingers of his right hand, and buried him againe in a Lay-mans ſepulchre. Then followed Romanus the 1. Theodorus the 2. Iohannes the 9. and reſtored Formoſus with his decrees, judging him to be a lawfull Biſhop. After them commeth Sergius the 3. who tooke up the body againe, cut off the head, and caſt it into Tyber. The Jeſuite anſwereth, that Stephanus and Sergius erred onely in a matter of fact. A goodly cloake to cover the filthineſſe of their ghoſtly fathers withall.

But by your leave a little: doe you not hold it to be an article of faith to beleeve the Pope to bee the head of Chriſts Church? Then was it an article of faith to hold that Formoſus was right Pope, for at that time there was no other: Ergo, Stephanus and Sergius erred in faith, defining the contrarie.

All that you can ſay is this: that it was not yet determined and decreed for an article of faith, ſo to beleeve: ſee, I pray you, theſe mens faith is pinned upon Popes ſleeves. Why maſters, the rule of faith is certaine, you cannot make new articles of faith now, but only declare and explane thoſe that are: as one of your owne Popes well ſaith; Articuli fidei habent probari ex Scripturis: The articles of faith muſt be proved out of Scripture, and are contained in the Symbole, Ioan. 22. Extra. tit. 14. cap. 5. But doe you not thinke that theſe jolly Popes, that would rake the dead out of their graves, for their holineſſe, might deſerve at Gods hand to have a privilege not to erre in faith?

Gregorius 3. Epiſtol. ad Bonifacium thus determineth, Virum uxore infirmitate correpta, & non valente ei debitum reddere, aliam ducere, &c. The husband if his wife be taken with any infirmitie, ſo that ſhe cannot performe her due unto him, may marrie another. Pope Nicholas 1. de matrimon. can. 6. decreed cleane contrarie: They that were ſound when they married, and afterward fall into any infirmitie: ob hanc infirmitatem conjugia talium diſſolvi non poſſunt: becauſe of this infirmitie their marriage muſt not be diſſolved. One of theſe muſt needs be in error: for one ſaith, that becauſe of the infirmitie of the wife, marriage may be diſſolved: the other ſaith contrarie. Neither doth Bellarmine help the matter in ſaying, that Gregorie ſpeaketh of a continuall impotencie and weakneſſe of nature, and ſo the marriage was, ex errore contractum, contracted of error and ignorance: and ſuch kinde of marriages may lawfully bee looſed, being indeed no marriages: Hæc ille. Contra. But it is plaine that Gregorie ſpeaketh of infirmitie or ſickneſſe, that the wife is taken withall, correpta, not that was continually upon her: and howſoever it is, both of theſe Popes uſing the ſame word, Infirmitie, and ſo meaning the ſame thing, cannot be excuſed from contrarietie.

Nicholaus 1. de baptiſmo decret. 1. alloweth baptiſme made onely in the name of Chriſt, without expreſſe mention of the Trinitie: which is a manifeſt error, and contrarie to the Scripture, Matth. 28. 19. Bellarmines anſwer is, Eum non definiendo ſic dixiſſe, ſed ut particularem doctorem: That he ſpake this not definitively, but as a particular Doctor. Contra. A weake defence: for where elſe is the Popes definitive ſentence to be found, but in his decrees publiſhed to the whole world, as this is? and it is placed amongſt your owne Canons, Decret. part. 3. diſt. 4. cap. 24.

Alexander 3. Lateranenſ. concil. part. 6. cap 8. forbiddeth marriage to be made, cum ſorore ſponſa defuncta, with her ſiſter that was eſpouſed and betrothed, and is now dead.

Benedictus part. 6. cap. 27. determineth cleane contrarie: Qui unam ſororem deſponſaverit, ſi eam non cognoverit, poteſt aliam ſororem ſibi matrimonio copulare: Hee that hath eſpouſed to himſelfe one ſiſter, if he have not knowne her, may marrie the other ſiſter.

Alexand. ibid. cap 8. Matrimonium contractum per verba de præſenti cum alio initum diſſolvendum judicat: He judgeth matrimony contracted with one by words of the preſent tenſe, and yet made with another to be void. Benedictus determineth contrarie, cap. 28. for the caſe is put of one R. that was contracted with one Marie, by words of the preſent tence, and nothing wanted but ſolemnization of the marriage: afterward the ſaid R. marrieth another: If there be no other let (ſaith he) beſide this mutuall conſent and contract, ſecunda matrimonia inviolabiliter obſervanda judicamus; we give ſentence that the ſecond marriage hold. Now one of theſe Popes, the one being ſo contrarie to the other, muſt needs be in an error.

Sylveſter the ſecond was a Necromancer and a Conjurer, and therefore fallen from the faith. Bellarmine ſaith, he was a good man, and all are fables and lies that are told of him: and becauſe he was cunning in Geometrie, that ignorant age ſtraightwayes judged him to he given to Necromancie.

Thus we may take the Jeſuites word, if wee will. But the ſtorie is reported by authors of better credit than Bellarmine: as Iohannes Stella, Platina, Petrus Premonſtratenſ. Nauclerus, Antoninus. Fox, pag 167.

Anaſtaſius was a Neſtorian heretike, whoſe hereſie was this, that there are, as two natures, ſo alſo two perſons in Chriſt, Alphonſ. de caſtro lib. 1. de hæreſib. cap. 4.

Celeſtinus is reported by Laurentius Valla a Canon of Rome, to have beene a Neſtorian heretike, De donation. Conſtantin.

Now commeth in Pope Hildebrand, or rather Heldebrand, for hee was a verie brand of hell fire, called Gregorie the ſeventh: of whom Benno writeth thus: that he poiſoned ſix Popes his predeceſſors to make himſelfe a way to the Popedome: that he was a Conjurer, a raiſer of Devils, and in his rage he caſt the Sacrament into the fire. But ſaith Harding our countroy-man, though unworthily, Benno was his enemie, and wrote of diſpleaſure: and Bellarmine thinketh that ſome Lutherane was the author of the booke, which goeth under the name of Benno, who was Cardinall in this Hildebrands time. But Benno only doth not thus report of him: he was openly twice for the ſame crimes condemned in Councell: firſt at Wormes, then after depoſed in the Councell at Brixia in Italy, and Pope Clement the third elected to ſucceed him. And the ſaid Gregorie died in exile, of whom Antonius reporteth, that before his death he repented him of his inſolencie ſhewed toward the Emperour Henry the fourth; whom with his wife and young child, bare foot & bare legged, he had cauſed three dayes together, in extreme froſt and cold, to wait at his palace gates at Canuſium, before hee could ſpeake with him. Yet this Hildebrand for all theſe inſolent, cruell, and diſhoneſt parts, is commended by our Papiſts, Harding, Bellarmine & other, for a devout Catholike man, who did all things of a zeale to the Church. By this you may judge whom our adverſaries count a Catholike man.

Defenſ. Apol.

Pope Iohn the 22. affirmed, that the ſoules lie in a trance till the day of judgement, and feele neither paine nor joy. Harding, and likewiſe Bellarmine anſwer, that this was an error, but no hereſie. Yet in the Univerſitie of Paris it was condemned for hereſie, as Gerſon writeth. Againe ſaith Harding, he held it onely as a private opinion. But Maſſæus ſaith, that Pope Iohn preached this hereſie, and ſent out Preachers to maintaine it. He was condemned (ſaith he) with his error by the Divines of Paris in the preſence of Philip the French King, before he was Pope, when hee was yet but a private Doctor. But the contrarie is proved by Biſhop Iewel, that he was Pope thirteene yeeres before Philip was King, Iewel, Defenſ. Apolog. pag. 667.

Pope Iohn the 23. denied the life to come, and the reſurrection of the body: and this hereſie was openly objected againſt him in the Councell of Conſtance. Bellarmine and Harding before him, anſwer, that hee was not the rightfull Pope, for there were three at that time, and therefore might erre. But Platina ſaith, that he was choſen at Bononia, by the conſent of all the Cardinals: ex Iuel, pag. 671.

Laſtly, Pope Eugenius the 4. was condemned and depoſed as an heretike in the Councell of Baſil. Where the Jeſuite hath no other anſwer, than by condemning the Councell as ſchiſmaticall, to acquite the Pope, lib. 3. de pontif. cap. 14.

By theſe examples it may appeare to the indifferent reader, that it is no rare nor impoſſible thing for the Popes of Rome to erre, yea become plaine heretikes. And as for that ſhift of the Jeſuite, that they are no longer Popes when they openly begin to teach hereſie, this is as Alphonſus ſaith, in re ſeria verbis velle jocari, to dally with words in a ſerious and earneſt matter, &c. And ſo everie Biſhop ſhall be as well privileged as the Pope, and cannot fall into hereſie: for why may wee not ſay that a Biſhop, when he is knowne to be an heretike, ceaſeth to be Biſhop any longer, as the Pope is no longer Pope; and ſo as long as he remaineth Biſhop, cannot poſſibly bee an heretike? Surely this is but weake ſtuffe.

De hæreſib. lib. 1. cap. 4.

Neither have we named all the Popes that are found to have erred publikely & judicially: as Lucius doth allow marriages made without conſent of parents, de raptorib.c.cum cauſa. Evariſtus before him defineth ſuch not to be lawfull marriages, but rather ſtupra & adulteria, whoredomes and adulteries, *Epiſt.*1. One of theſe two decreeing thus contrarie each to other, muſt needs bee in an error: Oldendorpius & Duarenus do thinke that Lucius is in an error, and they thinke right: but Antonius Delphinus to juſtifie the practice herein of the popiſh Church, doe impute the error to Evariſtus.

Innocentius the firſt did definitively hold, that it was neceſſarie for infants to receive the Communion, which is a manifeſt error: Auguſtine ſo writeth of him, who was in the ſame error himſelfe, *Cont.Iulian.lib.*1.*cap.*2.

Innocentius againe writing to Decentius, affirming that none of the Apoſtles did preach in Italy, France, Spaine, Africa, but Peter, and whom he ſent, *decret.p.*1.*diſt.*11.*c.*11. which one of your owne writers ſaith is contrarie to Saint Pauls Epiſtles, and the ſtorie of the Acts, Eſpencaus in 2 *Timoth.p.*177.

Nicholas the fourth did define publikely, that neither Chriſt nor his Apoſtles had any thing in propertie, *Sext.decret.lib.*5.*tit.*12.*c.*3.

Iohn the 22. defineth this aſſertion to be hereſie, for any man to ſay that Chriſt and his Apoſtles had nothing, *Extrav. tit.*14.*cap.*4.

And to conclude, it is a rule in their owne Law: Error cui non reſiſtitur approbari videtur: Error that is not reſiſted is approved, *Extrav.Iohan.tit.*5.*c.*3. And by theſe reaſons, few of the Popes ſhall be free from error, who have ſuffered through their idle and voluptuous life, many errors and hereſies to grow up under their noſe without checke.

Let us ſee what a generall Councell hath determined of this matter: Concil.Baſilienſ.Epiſt.Synod. 8. This privilege, ſay they, not to erre, hath not beene granted, communi lege, by a common or perpetuall law to any, not to the Angels, for many of them fell; not to our firſt parents, for they were deceived: Non ſummis Pontificibus, quorum nonnulli in hereſes & errores lapſi eſſe dicuntur, & leguntur: Not unto the chiefe Biſhops, for many of them are read to have fallen into error and hereſie.

The teſtimony of the glorious Martyrs is this: Maſter Bilney holy Martyr accuſed and condemned for this article with others, that he ſhould ſay, That theſe five hundred yeeres there hath beene no good Pope, nor in all the time paſt we can finde but fiftie: for they have neither preached, nor lived well, &c. But till now have borne the keyes of Simon, &c. Fox, pag.1001.col.1.

Pag 9‧3.1.70.

Maſter Tindall holy Martyr: I thinke verily that ſo long as the ſucceſſors of the Apoſtles were perſecuted and martyred (he meaneth the thirtie Biſhops of Rome that were put to death for Chriſt) there were good Chriſten men, and no longer, pag.1252.col.2. If the Popes have hardly been good Chriſten men this long time, much leſſe have they beene freed from error.

Pag.1141.1.60.

De Baptiſ.lib. 2.cap.3.

Laſtly, Auguſtine is not a whit afraid to ſay, Epiſcoporum literas, &c per ſermonem ſapientiorem cujuſlibet in ea re peritioris, & per aliorum Epiſcoporum graviorem authoritatem, & per concilia licere reprehendi, ſi in eis à veritate deviatum ſit: That the decrees of all Biſhops whatſoever (not excluding Popes) may be corrected either by the ſentence of wiſer men in that point, wherein they erred, or by the better adviſed ſentence of other Biſhops, or by Councels may be reverſed, where they doe erre. Ergo, it is poſſible for Popes by his judgement to erre.

And for further evidence: 1 The Greekes conſent with us that the Popes have erred, yea became heretikes. Nilus uſeth theſe arguments: firſt, Peter ſtumbled and fell, although he earneſtly profeſſed the contrarie, that he would never deny his Maſter. Againe, if the Pope cannot be free from lying, covetouſneſſe, vaine-glorie, and ſuch like, hee may alſo make ſhipwracke of faith, as the Apoſtle ſaith, having faith & a good conſcience, which ſome have put away, and concerning faith have made ſhipwrack: and the ſame Apoſtle alſo ſpeaketh of ſome, which profeſſe God in words, and deny him in deeds: and ſo may the Pope deny [a] Chriſt in works, and not in words. Thirdly, he urgeth the ſixteenth decree of the ſixth generall Synod, where Honorius Biſhop of Rome was anathematized among other heretikes: whereupon Barlaam thus inferreth: What doe you tell me that the Pope cannot erre: [b] I ſee a dead man, and yet you ſay he cannot dye.

2 The Æthiopike Church holdeth that the Pope may erre: for, as is ſhewed before, the Emperour putteth the caſe, that if the Pope ſhould uſe toward them any unlawfull commandement, they would make no reckoning of it: Ergo, he may command unlawfull things.

Harm.ſect.11. pag.366.

Ibid.p.370.

3 The reformed Churches hold it a palpable error to affirme that the Pope cannot erre. Confeſſion of Auſpurg, artic. 7. alloweth that ſaying of Auguſtine: Neither muſt we ſubſcribe to Catholike Biſhops, if they chance to erre, or hold opinions which be againſt the Scriptures. And againe, Theſe limits theſe Biſhops doe moſt malapertly remove, who proudly challenge to themſelves a triple power, whereby they eſtabliſh moſt pernicious errors, to wit, princely and ſupreme power of interpreting Scriptures: Secondly, the power of erecting a new worſhip of God: thirdly, a ſoveraigne power of making lawes, &c.

Sect 19.p.606.

Sueveland in the concluſion: You may ſee that of theſe innumerable, no leſſe holy than neceſſarie decrees of former Councels, there is not ſo much as the leaſt point obſerved of our Eccleſiaſticall men, and that they have degenerated in all things, &c. Theſe confeſſions ſpeake generally of all Biſhops, not excluding the Pope.

4 Of the Roman Church Gregorie the firſt yeeldeth this as a reaſon, why none ſhould bee called univerſall Biſhop, becauſe, Univerſa Eccleſia (quod abſit) à ſtatu ſuo corruit, cum is qui appellatur univerſalis cadit: The univerſall Church ſhould fall from her ſtate, when he that is called univerſall Biſhop falleth, &c. hee ſuppoſeth that the univerſall Biſhop may fall. [a] Turrecremata confeſſeth Liberius Biſhop of Rome to have beene an Arrian heretike: [b] Alphonſus de Caſtro granteth that Pope Anaſtaſius was a Neſtorian heretike: and [c] Canus ſaith as much of Honorius, that he was a Monothelite heretike.

A Part or Appendix of this Queſtion, VVhether the Church of Rome may erre or not.

The Papiſts.

THey doe not onely affirme that the Pope cannot erre, but that the Church of Rome alſo cannot be deceived in matters of faith, ſo long as the Apoſtolike See remaineth there, which they ſay, is like there to remaine to the end of the world, Bellarm. lib. 3. de pontif. cap. 4. Hereupon Panormitane doubteth not to ſay, that hee would preferre the judgement of the Cardinals of Rome before the judgement of the whole world: this he ſaid, ſtanding up in the Councell of Baſil, Fox. pag. 669. ex Ænea Sylvio.

54. Error.

Argum. 1. The Rhemiſts upon thoſe words of S. Paul, Rom. 1. 5. Your faith is publiſhed thorow the whole world, doe thus inferre: See (ſay they) the great providence of God in the preſervation of the Roman common faith. In times paſt the Roman faith and Catholike all one: Ergo, that See cannot erre in faith.

Rom 1. 5.

We anſwer: they muſt prove their Romiſh faith and Popiſh religion, to bee the ſame which was praiſed and commended by the Apoſtle, or elſe they gaine nothing: but that ſhall they never doe.

Argum. 2. So long as the Apoſtolike See remaineth at Rome, it ſhall be preſerved from error, but that is like there to remaine till the worlds end: for it only remaineth, when all other Apoſtolike Sees are gone: and it is verie probable, that if this See could have beene overthrown, it ſhould have beene done by the incurſion and invaſion of the Goths, Vandals, Turks, the emulation of Princes, diviſions and ſchiſmes of Popes themſelves: yet for all this it ſtandeth ſtill, and hath ſo continued almoſt ſixteene hundred yeeres, and ſhall ſo continue ſtill. Ergo, the Roman Church cannot erre, Bellarm. lib. 2. cap. 4. Rhemiſt. Annot. in 2 Theſſal. 2. ſect. 7.

We anſwer: Firſt, it is a great untruth, that all other Apoſtolike Sees are gone, for there is a ſucceſſion at Antioch, Alexandria, Conſtantinople, Epheſus, even at this day. Secondly, it is falſe, that the See of Rome hath continued in that religion it now profeſſeth, which indeed is no religion, but ſuperſtition & hereſie, theſe ſixteen hundred yeeres: for firſt till Gregories time, which was ſix hundred yeeres after Chriſt, none of the Popes would be called univerſall Biſhops: and it was more than three hundred yeeres, from Gregorie the firſt to Sylveſter the ſecond, when Satan is thought fully to be let looſe: for he by the Devill was advanced to the Papacie: All theſe yeeres therefore you muſt ſtrike off in your account. Thirdly, that the See of Rome, which is the ſeat of Antichriſt, hath continued many yeeres, we grant: for it is the juſt judgement of God upon the world, becauſe they loved not the truth, that they ſhould be deluded a long time, and deceived by Antichriſt, and beleeve lies: ſo did S. Paul propheſie, 2 Theſſ. 2. 10, 11. And we grant alſo that that Antichriſtian See ſhall in ſome ſort remaine till the comming of Chriſt, whom he ſhall deſtroy with the brightnes of his appearing, as Saint Paul ſaith. You have gained therefore nothing by this, but that Rome is the ſeat of Antichriſt.

2 Theſſ. 2. 10, 11.

The Proteſtants.

IT is evident and plaine, and need not much proofe, that the Roman Church, as alſo any particular viſible Church, may not only erre in faith, but fall cleane away into hereſie and idolatrie, as we ſee it come to paſſe in the Church of Rome.

Argum. 1. The Church of Rome hath no better aſſurance of their continuance, than the Church of the Jewes had before Chriſt, no nor yet ſo great, for they were a peculiar and choſen nation. But Iudah fell and tranſgreſſed, and committed idolatrie in the reigne of Ahaz, and therfore the Prophet Eſay complaineth and ſaith, from the ſole of the foot to the head, there is nothing ſound, cap. 1. verſ. 6.

Eſay 1. 6.

Neither are they better than the Church of Epheſus was in S. Iohns time, who was able (I thinke) to keep that Church from error, as the Pope is to keep Rome; yet the Lord threatneth to remove his candleſtick from amongſt them, unles they did amend, Rev. 2. 5. Ergo, the Church of Rome may erre.

Revel. 2. 5.

Argum. 2. The Pope may erre, as we have before ſhewed: Ergo, the Church of Rome: for the Apoſtolike See, they ſay, is the cauſe that no error can approach or come neere them. Therefore (me thinketh) the Jeſuite committeth a foule abſurditie in ſaying, the Church of Rome cannot ſo much as erre perſonally, and yet they grant that the Pope may erre perſonally. So by this reaſon the body ſhould have a greater privilege than the head: the Church of Rome ſhould be freer from error than the Pope, who ſhould preſerve it from error: this ſure is a great abſurditie in popiſh divinitie, Bellarm. cap. 4.

3 It is confeſſed by our adverſaries themſelves, that the Church of Rome may erre: as the Councell at Rome under Adrian the ſecond erred, ſaith the Jeſuite, in determining Honorius to be an heretike, one of his predeceſſors, chap. 11.

Lib.20.fine.

The Councell of the Italian Biſhops at Brixia erred in condemning Gregorie the ſeventh, who was, if you will beleeve Harding, a vertuous and an holy man: Nay, Paulus Iovius a popiſh Biſhop confeſſeth, that Adrianus the ſixth was made Pope, mira & pudenda Senatorum factioſorum ſuffragatione, through the ſtrange and ſhamefull ſuffrages of factious Cardinals, becauſe they preferred a ſtranger before their owne order.

Fox,pag.669.

But our adverſaries have a tricke to ſhift off all this that hath been ſaid: They erred in a matter of fact, not in any point of faith. Yet they cannot ſo cloſely convey the matter away; for Panormitane even in ſuch queſtions alſo preferreth the judgement of the Cardinals before the whole world, ſpeaking in the defence of Eugenius, who was challenged in the Councell of Baſil, for the diſſolution of the Councell, which he did (ſaith Panormitane) with the advice of the Cardinals, whoſe judgement hee ſo much eſteemeth in this matter, which concerned not faith, namely, for the diſſolving of the Councell.

Appendix. Concil. Baſil: ex opuſc. Iohn. Patriarch. Conſtantinop. We read thus: Quod dicitur Eccleſia Romana ſemper immaculata permanſit, & permanebit, intelligi debet verum, quamdiu ligabit juſte, clave non errante: Whereas it is ſaid, the Church of Rome hath alwayes remained unſpotted, & ſhall ſo continue ſtill, it muſt be underſtood to make it true, ſo long as ſhe bindeth juſtly, the key not erring. Their ſentence is therefore, that the Church of Rome may erre in diſpenſing of the keyes, &c.

S. Hierome writing againſt Vigilantius ſaith, Galliam ſolam hereſeum monſtra non habuiſſe: That only France of all Churches was free from hereſie. In ſaying only France, the Church of Rome is not excepted: and this ſaying of S. Hierome is approved by one of your owne writers, Eſpenc. in 1. ad Timoth. pag. 383.

The ſame father alſo miſliketh a certaine cuſtome, or abuſe rather of the Roman Church, that Deacons were preferred before Prieſts, and ſaith, they did not, recte facere, doe that which was right; they were therefore in an error. And this ſentence is inſerted into their owne decrees, diſt. 93. cap. legimus.

Againe, Decret. part. 2. cauſ. 35. queſt. 9. cap. 6. Nicholaus, ſententia Romanæ ſedis, &c. The ſentence of the See of Rome may be changed into a better: Ergo, that See may erre and be deceived.

Nilus lib. 2. de primat.

And for futher evidence: 1 The Greekes make no queſtion, but that the Church of Rome may erre: as Nilus alleageth how in the ſixth generall Councell, there were two errors reformed of the Roman Church, the one of reſtraining Prieſts and Deacons from the ſocietie of their wives after their ordination, Canon 13. the other of the Saturdayes faſt, Can. 55.

2 In this ſixth Synod was preſent one Petrus a Presbyter, τοποτηρητής, occupying the roome of the Patriarke of Alexandria, who ſubſcribed to the acts of that Councell, as it appeareth in the ſubſcription to the acts of the Synod: ſo the South Church depending of Alexandria gave their conſent.

3 The judgement of the reformed Churches is ſeene before, Error. 28. 5. queſt. of the Church, part 2. where the Church of Rome is affirmed to be a falſe and Antichriſtian Church.

4 Some of the Romaniſts doe affirme the Roman Church to be a particular Church, and ſo conſequently to be ſubject to error: for they hold this poſition: Errare poſſe unamquamque particularem Eccleſiam, That everie particular Church may erre. [a] Waldenſ. [b] Turrecremat.

[b] Summ. de Eccleſ. lib. 2. cap. 91.

The ſeventh Queſtion, Of the ſpirituall juriſdiction and power of the Biſhop of Rome.

This queſtion hath two parts: the firſt, whether the Biſhop of Rome have a coactive and conſtraining power to make lawes to binde the conſcience, and to puniſh the tranſgreſſors. Secondly, whether other Paſtors and Biſhops have their juriſdiction immediately from God, or from the Pope.

Other queſtions alſo there are which belong to this matter, as whether the Pope bee the chiefe Judge in controverſies of faith, which we have already handled, entreating of the perfection and authoritie of the Scriptures: as alſo whether it be in the Pope to ſummon, diſſolve, and confirme Councels, which hath beene ſufficiently declared before, in the controverſie concerning Councels. Concerning other queſtions, as the canonizing of Saints, which they ſay appertaineth to the Pope, the election and confirmation of Biſhops, pardons and indulgences, wee ſhall have fitter occaſion to deale in them, in their ſeverall places and controverſies. At this time wee purpoſe onely to touch theſe two points aforeſaid, of the Popes Eccleſiaſticall juriſdiction.

The firſt Part, VVhether the Pope may make lawes to binde the conſcience, and puniſh tranſgreſſors thereof judicially.

The Papiſts.

55. Error.

That the Pope hath ſuch authoritie to make lawes for the whole Church, which ſhall binde under paine of damnation, as well as the Lawes of God, it is the generall opinion of the Papiſts: Fox 981. articul. 13. & pag. 1101. articul. cont. Lambert. 29. But they put in this clauſe, ſo they be not unjuſt lawes nor contrarie to the divine law, *Bellarm.cap.*15. And yet they ſay that the Pope may make lawes, having not the authoritie nor warrant of Scripture, neither is it neceſſarie for theſe lawes to be expreſſed or deduced out of Scripture. And theſe lawes are not onely of externall rites and orders of the Church, but even of things neceſſarie to ſalvation, *Bellarm.cap.*15.in reprehenſ. Calvini. Yea hee addeth further, that in matters not neceſſarie to ſalvation, he cannot be diſobeyed without deadly ſinne, and offence of conſcience, *cap.*16. *loc.*1. Bulla Leonis 10. adverſus Lutherum, Fox pag. 1289. *col.*1.

*Argum.*1. The Apoſtles preſcribed a law concerning the abſtaining from blood, things ſtrangled, and offered to Idols, concerning the which Chriſt gave them no precept. But this law did binde the people in conſcience: for every where the Apoſtles gave ſtreight charge, for the keeping of the decrees, Bellarm.

Anſwer. Firſt, the Apoſtles commanded no new thing, but the ſame which they themſelves were taught of Chriſt, that they ſhould take heed of offence: the Chriſtians therefore were not bound in conſcience any further to keep the decrees concerning ſuch things, than for avoyding of ſcandall and offence. Secondly, afterward the offence being taken away, the law alſo ceaſed: and S. Paul giveth libertie, notwithſtanding this law, to eat things offered to Idols, if it might be done without offence, asking no queſtion (ſaith he) for conſcience ſake, 1 *Cor.*10.27. which Epiſtle it is certaine was written after that decree of the Apoſtles, *Act.*15.29. Ergo, their conſciences were not hereby obliged and bound. 1 Cor.10.27. Act.15.29.

1 Bellarmine replieth to the firſt, that though the end of the Apoſtles precept was to avoid offence, yet the precept it ſelfe was as touching the not eating of things offered to Idols, ſtrangled and blood: as the end of the Morall law, as not to ſteale, not to kill, is charitie: yet the law bindeth us not onely to that end, but to abſtaine alſo from killing and ſtealing: *cap.*16.*reſponſ.ad Calvin.loc.*5.

Contra. Bellarmine here ſheweth either his wilfull ignorance, or raſh overſight, making no difference between things indifferent, and evill of their owne nature: for to kill, to ſteale, are evill in themſelves and ſimply forbidden, and not onely for offence: to eat or not to eat, this or that, are indifferent in themſelves, and not unlawfull but in reſpect of the offence, which followeth.

2 Bellarmine to the ſecond point anſwereth, that this law of the Apoſtles is now abrogated, not becauſe the offence ceaſeth, but becauſe the law univerſally is determined: as for example, the end of faſting is to tame the fleſh rebelling againſt the ſpirit, which reaſon ſhall ceaſe after the reſurrection, and then alſo the law of faſting ſhall no more be needfull.

Contra. Father Robert Bellarmine maketh here a long diſcourſe, and would ſeeme to ſay ſomewhat and yet it proveth juſt nothing: and if he ſay any thing, it maketh for us: for as the law of faſting ſhall, then ceaſe, when the reaſon and end thereof ſhall ceaſe: ſo this law of the Apoſtles is univerſally abrogate, becauſe there is no more feare or danger of offence, which was the reaſon of the making of this decree.

3 To the place alleaged out of S. Paul to the Corinthians, he hath theſe anſwers: firſt, that when S. Paul did ſo write to the Corinthians, that decree of the Apoſtles began then to be abrogate. But he himſelfe miſliketh this anſwer, and therefore it need no further confutation: and his reaſon is good, that the law did yet hold, becauſe the reaſon of the law, that is to avoid offence, was not yet removed. Secondly, it may be thought, ſaith he, that as yet the decree of the Apoſtles was not come to the Corinthians, and therefore the Apoſtle ſo writeth.

Contra. Firſt, the decree was generally preſcribed to all the Gentiles converted to God, and not to them of Antioch onely, as James determineth, *Act.*15.19. And therefore ſeeing it concerned the Corinthians as well as other Churches, he ſpeaketh without ground, to ſay, that it was not yet delivered to the Church of the Corinthians. Secondly, admit the Corinthians knew it not, Saint Paul yet did know it, and therefore he would not have written any thing contrarie to the decree which hee knew, though they knew it not. Act.15.19.

Argum 2. It is neceſſarie to have ſome lawes, beſide the divine law, for the government of the Church: for the word of God is too univerſall, neither is ſufficient to direct every particular action: therefore other eccleſiaſticall lawes muſt be added: but every good and neceſſarie law hath a coactive and conſtraining power, and bindeth the conſcience to obedience. Ergo, the conſtitutions of the Popes and Councels, which are the onely eccleſiaſticall lawes, doe binde the conſcience, *Bellarm. cap.*16.*lib.*4.

Anſwer. Firſt, the word of God containeth all neceſſarie rules to ſalvation: wherefore all lawes of the Church concerning matters of faith, are but explanations, and interpretations of the rules of faith ſet forth in Scripture, if they be godly lawes, and ſo are not the lawes of men, but of God, and doe binde the conſcience to the obſervation thereof: as the lawes of the Church, which command Chriſtians to reſort to the congregation to heare Gods word, and reverently to receive the Sacraments, are the very ordinances and commandements of Chriſt, who enjoyned his Apoſtles to preach, and baptize, and his faithfull people to heare and to bee baptized, and therefore in conſcience wee are bound to the obedience hereof. Secondly, there are other eccleſiaſticall lawes appointed for the publike order of the Church, concerning externall rites and circumſtances of perſons and place, as the houres of prayer, the forme of the Liturgie and publike ſervice, the times ſet for the celebration of the Sacraments, and ſuch like. Theſe and ſuch like conſtitutions doe not binde in conſcience abſolutely, in reſpect of the things themſelves, which are indifferent, but in regard of that contempt, and offence which might follow in the not keeping of them: contempt to our ſuperiours, whom we ought in all lawfull things to obey: offence, in grieving the conſcience of our weake brethren. So that even theſe conſtitutions alſo which are made according to the rules of the Goſpell, that is, unto edification, to the glorie of God, and for avoyding of offence, doe neceſſarily binde us in conſcience, not conſcience of the things themſelves, which are but externall, but conſcience of obedience to our Chriſtian Magiſtrates, and conſcience in taking heed of all juſt offence: *ſic Calvin. Inſtitut.lib.*4. *cap.*10.11.

Thirdly, we are not, God be thanked, driven to any ſuch ſtreight, that if there be need of any ſuch eccleſiaſticall lawes, we ſhould run for ſuccour to the Popes beggerly decretals. (And yet ſuch Canons as were in force amongſt them, agreeable to the rules of the Goſpell, we doe not refuſe.) But if there be want and penurie of good lawes, every Church hath as full authoritie, to make decrees and ordinances for the peace and order, and quiet government thereof, not as the Pope of Rome hath over the univerſall Church (for that by right is none, or if it be, it is but an uſurped power) but as the Biſhop of Rome hath in his owne Biſhoprick and dioceſſe.

The Proteſtants.

WHat our ſentence is of this matter, it doth partly appeare by that which wee have alreadie ſaid: that the Pope hath no power over the whole Church, and therefore can make no lawes to binde the conſcience, or otherwiſe for the ſame, for it belongeth not to his charge. Secondly, wee ſay, that neither he, nor any eccleſiaſticall government beſide, can make lawes of things neceſſarie to ſalvation, other than thoſe which are in Scripture contained. Thirdly, all eccleſiaſticall lawes made concerning externall rites, and publike order, doe not otherwiſe binde the conſcience, than in regard of our obedience due to Chriſtian Magiſtrates in lawfull things, and for avoyding of ſcandall and offence: But in reſpect of the things commanded, ſuch lawes doe not binde: Calvin.loc. predicto.

Iames 4.12. *Argum.*1. Saint Iames ſaith, *There is one law-giver which is able to ſave and to deſtroy, chap.*4.12. He therefore onely maketh lawes to binde the conſcience, that is able to ſave and to deſtroy: but that cannot the Pope doe: Ergo.Calvin.argum.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the lawes of men doe binde under paine of damnation, in as much as God is offended and diſpleaſed with their diſobedience, and ſo judgeth them worthie of puniſhment, *cap.*20. All this we grant, that the lawes of men being good lawes, doe binde in conſcience in reſpect of the contempt and diſobedience to higher powers, but not in reſpect of the things commanded, which in their nature are indifferent. The Jeſuite ſhould have ſaid; that God is offended not onely for their diſobedience, but ſimply for not doing the things commanded, which hee durſt not ſay: As when the Magiſtrate for ſome profitable and politike end commandeth upon ſome daies abſtinence from fleſh, it is not the eating or not eating of fleſh, that ſimply diſpleaſeth and offendeth God, but the contempt of the law, and wilfull and obſtinate diſobedience to the Magiſtrate: for otherwiſe the uſe of the creature is free and indifferent.

*Argum.*2. Wee will beate the Jeſuite with his owne ſtaffe: he ſaith not, that all lawes doe binde the conſcience, but onely juſt lawes, in the which foure conditions are required. Firſt, that they bee made for ſome profitable end: ſo are not Popiſh lawes which nouriſh ſuperſtition, and have no edifying, and ſome of them doe command plaine idolatrie, and open impietie, as the worſhipping of Images, the adoration of the Maſſe, and ſuch like. Secondly, ſaith he, they muſt not be contrarie to Gods law; but ſuch are many of their ordinances, yea the moſt of them. Thirdly, they muſt be made by him that hath authoritie: therefore none of the Popes lawes binde the univerſall Church, for it is not ſubject to him. Fourthly, the forme and manner of impoſing ſuch lawes muſt be orderly: but their lawes are moſt diſordered, impoſed upon the Church violently, without their conſent or any good proceeding. Thus you ſee, even by their owne confeſſion, their lawes cannot binde.

Cap.15.lib.4. de pontif.

One thing more I muſt needes tell them of. If they would needes have their lawes to binde men in conſcience, they ſhould have made fewer of them: now they are ſo many, that if the breach of them were an offence of conſcience, doe men what they could, they ſhould daily make ſhipwracke of their conſcience. It is a true ſaying that is reported of one Thomas Arthur, a good Chriſtian, it is an homely ſpeech, becauſe the matter was ſomewhat homely, yet he did hit the marke. Like as (ſaith he) croſſes were ſet up againſt the walles of London, that no man ſhould piſſe there; and while there were but a few, men for reverence of the croſſes, would not piſſe againſt the wall: but when in every corner they ſet up croſſes, men of neceſſitie were faine to piſſe upon the wall and croſſes too. So (ſaith he) if there had beene fewer lawes of the Church, they would have beene better kept: but now they are ſo many, that men cannot chuſe but breake them.

Fox pag.999.

*Arg.*3. The Pope hath no power to correct the tranſgreſſors of his lawes over the whole Church: Ergo he cannot make lawes to binde the whole Church. The argument followeth, for hee that hath abſolute power to make lawes, hath alſo power to command obedience to the lawes ſo made. And your owne law ſaith, Iuriſdictio nullius videretur momenti, ſi coërcitionem aliquam non haberet: That juriſdiction is nothing worth, that hath no conſtraining power, *Innocent.*3.*decret.Greg.lib.*1.*tit.*29.*c.*28.

The firſt is thus proved : the Pope indeed hath taken upon him many times to thunder out his excommunications againſt other Churches : but it was an uſurped and tyrannicall power, and many times reſiſted, and controuled.

Pope Victor, anno 200. would have excommunicate the Eaſt Churches about the keeping of Eaſter, but he was ſtaied by Irenæus. The Councell of Conſtance did ſend out excommunications againſt Pope *Benedict, ſeſſ.*36. Fox pag.41.

In the Councell of Baſil, Pope Eugenius cited Cardinall Iulian, with the reſt of the fathers there aſſembled, to come to Bononia, under great penaltie : they likewiſe cited Eugenius under the like penaltie, either to come or ſend to Baſil. *Fox pag.*668.*col.*2. Pag.614.2.86.

Pope Leo the 10. in his fumiſh Antichriſtian Bull, excommunicated and condemned Luther. Luther with better right pronounceth ſentence of excommunication againſt him, being an adverſarie to Chriſt, in theſe words : According to the power and might that the ſpirit of Chriſt and efficacie of our faith can doe in theſe our writings, if you ſhall perſiſt ſtill in your furie, wee condemne you together with this Bull and all the decretall, and give you to Sathan, to the deſtruction of the fleſh, that your ſpirit in the day of the Lord may be delivered : in the name, which you perſecute, of Jeſus Chriſt our Lord. Fox pag. 1286.

Thus you ſee what ſmall force there is of theſe Popiſh leaden Buls, and preſumptuous excommunications : for it falleth out juſtly by them, as the Wiſeman ſaith, As the Sparrow and Swallow by flying eſcape, ſo the curſe cauſeleſſe ſhall not come. Now ſeeing therefore the Pope faileth of power and ſtrength to ſee his lawes executed in the univerſall Church, it cannot be that his lawes ſhould univerſally binde. Prov.26.2.

Let Auguſtine now ſpeake : he thus defineth ſinne, Peccatum eſt dictum, factum, vel concupitum contra legem æternam Dei : Sinne is any thing done, ſaid, or coveted againſt the law of God, &c. therefore the tranſgreſſion ſimply of the law of man is not ſinne; but as thereby alſo the law of God is tranſgreſſed : Ergo, ſimply it bindeth not the conſcience : for ſinne onely bindeth and toucheth the conſcience. Contra Fauſtum lib.22. cap.27.

We have alſo a moſt cleare teſtimonie of a provinciall Councell, *ſynod. Maguntin, cap.*48. which I will ſet downe whole as it ſtandeth, as very pertinent to this place : Et ſi hoc in præceptis divinis non continetur, quod majorum noſtrorum conſtitutiones jubent, tamen ut majoribus obediamus (ſaltem in iis quæ legi divinæ non adverſantur) diſerti juris divini eſt : unde per occaſionem talium conſtitutionum tranſgreſſores grandis peccati rei ſunt, dum ex contemptu, aut cum ſcandalo charitatem violant, quorum utrunque per ſe peccatum mortale operatur : alioqui eccleſia conſtitutiones ſuas charitati, & neceſſitati libenter ſubmittit : Although it be not expreſly contained in the word of God, which the conſtitutions of our fathers doe command : yet that wee ſhould obey our Elders, eſpecially wherein they are not contrarie to the law of God, it is the expreſſe word of God : whereupon they which are tranſgreſſors of ſuch conſtitutions, are guiltie of a great ſinne, in ſo much as doing it of contempt and by giving of offence, they violate charity: for the lawes of the Church muſt ſubmit themſelves to the rules of charitie and neceſſitie, &c. This decree ſheweth, that the Church, or the governours thereof, are not to command lawes not warranted by Gods word : and that they binde us to obedience no otherwiſe than in reſpect of contempt and offence which may be given : which is all one with that which we affirmed before.

We have alſo witneſſe of both the lawes : firſt Iuſtinian the Emperour thus writeth : Leges condere ſoli imperatori conceſſum eſt, &c. It is onely lawfull for the Emperour to make lawes : *Cod.lib.*1.*tit.*17. *leg.*11. If onely for the Emperour, then the Pope hath no authoritie to make lawes.

Their owne law alſo conſenteth with us : Urban 2. in his decree as it ſtandeth *in Gratiano part.*2. *cauſ.*19.*quæſt.*2.*cap.*2. alleageth the ſame place of Scripture which we produce for this matter, Where the ſpirit of God is, there is libertie ; and if you be led by the ſpirit, you are no more under the law, &c. Ergo, we are not bound in conſcience to obey human lawes, which infringe the libertie of the ſpirit, as the ſuperſtitious pontificiall lawes doe. 2 Cor.3.17.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that we are freed from Moſes ceremoniall lawes, but not from the obedience of Prelates, *reſp.ad argum.*5.

Contr. Firſt, if we be freed from the yoke of Jewiſh ceremonies, which were inſtituted of God, and were profitable for the time, much more are we delivered from Popiſh ceremonies, which are meere human inventions, and had never any good uſe. Secondly, Urbanus in the former decree inferreth the contrarie, that the libertie of the ſpirit doth exempt men from the obedience of Prelates : for hee thus concludeth, after he had alleaged a certaine diſtinction, of publike law, and private, calling that publike, which is ordained by the governours of the Church, that private, which is written in the heart of man by the ſpirit out of the word, which is of more force than the other : and the publike (ſaith he) ought to give place to the private. Then he thus reſolveth ; Whoſoever is led by the ſpirit, though his Biſhop doe gainſay, eſt liber noſtra authoritate, is pronounced free by our authoritie.

Againe, there is another decree of *Urban.cauſ.*25.*quæſt.*1.*cap.*6.Inde novas leges condere poteſt, &c. The Biſhop of Rome may make lawes, where the Evangeliſts and Prophets have ſaid nothing : but where our Lord or the Apoſtles, &c. have defined any thing, there the Roman Biſhop cannot make a new law, &c. But now many of the Popes lawes are found to command many things directly contrarie to the Scriptures.

Let us adde the ſeale of the Martyrs, maſter Bilney Martyr: As touching the multitude of lawes S. Auguſtine in his time did much complaine: and Gerſon alſo, who marvelled that wee could by any meanes live in ſafety among ſo many ſnares of conſtitutions, when as our fore-fathers being pure before their fall, could not obſerve one onely precept. Fox. pag. 1000.

Pag.912.2.30.

Maſter Lambert Martyr: If it be true, which is written in the decrees, that lawes be never confirmed, till they be approved by the common maners of them that ſhall uſe them, then cannot the Popes lawes binde all Chriſtian men; for the Greekes and Bohemians will never admit them: pag. 1116. reſp. ad articul. 29. Whereupon we conclude, that the Pope cannot make lawes to bind the whole Church.

Adde hereunto the teſtimonie of other Churches. 1 Ieremie Patriarke of Conſtantinople giveth this advice: Siquid ex his, quæ jubentur, tale eſt, &c. If any thing commanded be ſuch, that it agree with the law of God, or helpe us to the fulfilling thereof, Huic tanquam Dei mandato, &c. Wee muſt obey it as the commandement of God: Siquid vero præcipitur quod legi divinæ adverſetur, &c. but if any thing be commanded contrarie to the law of God, then we muſt ſay, it is better to obey God than man. This is then the opinion of the Greeke Church, that the lawes of men doe not ſimply binde in conſcience.

Cenſur. Orient. c. 21.

2 So Zaga Zabo an Æthiopian Biſhop profeſſeth that among them, neither the Patriarke nor the Biſhops by themſelves, or in Councell doe thinke that they can make lawes, Quibus ad mortale peccatum obligari quis poſſet, whereby any ſhould be bound upon paine of mortall ſinne.

Damianus a Goes, de lib. morib. Æthiop.

3 The Proteſtant Churches thus hold: Confeſſ. of Auſpurg. artic. 4. All modeſt men will moſt willingly obey traditions, after they underſtand, that their conſciences are free from danger in private, and that they muſt ſo farre obey, as that the common peace be not diſtracted, nor the weake ones hurt. Sweveland, c. 8. when wee ſaw the chiefe men in the Church ſo to enjoyne faſts, as to binde mens conſciences, under paine of deadly ſinne, we did looſe theſe conſciences out of thoſe ſnares, by the Scriptures, &c. according to that ſaying of S. Paul, Let no man condemne you in meat or drinke, &c. And of the ſame judgement are other reformed Churches, as may be ſeene in their ſeverall confeſſions.

Harm. ſect. 16. P. 493. Ibid. p. 513.

4 We have ſeene the decree of Pope Urbane before: there be other beſide of the Roman Church, which have complained of the unneceſſarie rabble of their ceremonies and conſtitutions burdenſome to the conſcience. As Agrippa, Plus hodie Chriſtiani, quam olim Iudæi, &c. Chriſtians are more burdened now with the lawes of ceremonies increaſing, than the Jewes. Cajetan. Onera, quæ, &c. ſunt importabilia: The burthens, which ſome Miniſters impoſe upon mens ſhoulders, are importable, and are not the burthen of Chriſt.

De vanitat. ſcient. 1. 60.

The ſecond part of this Queſtion whether all Biſhops doe receive their eccleſiaſticall juriſdiction from the Pope.

The Papiſts.

56. Error.

THey deny not but that the power of order, as they call it, which conſiſteth in the adminiſtration of the Sacraments, is equally diſtributed to all Biſhops; and that they, as well as the Pope, doe receive it immediatly by their conſecration, of God: but the power both of externall juriſdiction, which ſtandeth upon eccleſiaſticall cenſures, conſtitutions and decrees, and internall juriſdiction, which is exerciſed in binding and looſing, is derived, ſay they, from the Pope to all other Biſhops.

Argum. 1. God tooke of the ſpirit that was in Moſes, and diſtributed it among the ſeventie Elders, that were choſen to beare the burthen of government with Moſes, and to bee his helpers: the Lord tooke of his ſpirit, not by diminiſhing it, but by deriving of his vertue to the reſt: but the Pope is now in the roome and place of Moſes in the Church: Ergo, from him to the reſt is this authoritie derived: Bellarm. lib. 4. de pontif. c. 24.

Numb. 11. 16.

Anſw. First, Moſes example was extraordinarie, hee was a figure of Chriſt, not of the Pope, Deut. 18. verſ. 15. The Pope might with better right ſtand upon Aarons example, who was high Prieſt, not lay claime to Moſes offices, who was the Prince and Captaine of the people: for the Pope, I trow, would be chiefe Biſhop, and not Emperour too. Secondly, the meaning is not that God derived Moſes ſpirit to the reſt, but beſtowed the like gift of propheſying upon them, as Moſes had: ſurely never any mortall man had the ſpirit in ſuch abundance, that it could be divided into ſeventie portions, and one Prophet to make many. The like phraſe is uſed, 2 King. 2. 15. where the Prophets ſaid, that the ſpirit of Eliah did reſt on Eliſha, that is, God endued him with an excellent ſpirit of propheſying, as Eliah had. If they will underſtand this place alſo of deriving of ſpirits; how then ſhall that be taken in the ninth verſe, where Eliſha praieth that his ſpirit might be doubled upon him? If his ſpirit were derived from Eliah, how could it be doubled upon him? how could it be multiplied and increaſed? how could hee have more than was in the fountaine or originall, ſeeing hee received all from thence?

Deut. 18. 15.

2 King. 2. 15.

3: What maketh this place, I pray you, for the power of externall juriſdiction? Here it is ſaid that God gave of his ſpirit to ſeventie Elders and rulers of the people, and enabled them for their office; endued them with wiſdome, and knowledge, and dexteritie in judging of the people: this maketh nothing for their purpoſe, unleſſe they will alſo ſay, that there is a ſecret influence of knowledge and wiſedome derived from the Pope to all other Biſhops, whereby they are made able to execute their office. But (I trow) they will not ſay ſo: for Alphonſus de caſtro truly ſaith of the Popes of Rome, Conſtat plures eorum adeo eſſe illiteratos, ut grammaticam penitus ignorent: It is certaine that many of them were ſo unlearned, that they hard and ſcant knew their grammar.

4 The argument followeth not from one particular countrey, as this was of the Jewes, to the univerſall Church, that becauſe the ſeventie Elders received juriſdiction from Moſes, (yet that cannot be proved out of this place; for they were Rulers before, and commanders of the people, they were now but inwardly furniſhed, and further enabled) yet it were no good reaſon, that therefore the Eccleſiaſticall Miniſters over the whole Church ſhould receive their power from one.

5 Neither doth it follow, that becauſe the Prince and civill Magiſtrate may beſtow civill offices, create Dukes, Earles, Lords, conſtitute Judges, Deputies, Lievtenants, by his ſole authoritie; that by the ſame reaſon Eccleſiaſticall Miniſters ſhould receive their power and office from their ſuperiours: for although the Church from ancient time hath thought it good, to make ſome inequality and difference in Eccleſiaſtical offices for the peace of the Church, yet the ſuperiours have not ſuch a ſoveraigne and commanding power over the reſt, as the Prince hath over his ſubjects.

*Argum.*2. If Biſhops and Paſtors ſhould have their juriſdiction immediatly from God, and not from man, all Biſhops ſhould have an equall juriſdiction: but now we ſee it to be otherwiſe, that one Biſhop is ſet over one towne, another over twentie: therefore it is moſt like they have their juriſdiction from men, not immediatly from God: *Bellarm, argum.*4.

*Anſw.*1. We doe not affirme, that the Biſhops, Paſtors and Miniſters of the Church have their juriſdiction, office or calling immediatly from God, as the Apoſtles, Prophets and Evangeliſts had; for ſuch callings were extraordinarie, and are now ceaſed in the Church: but that by right of their conſecration and receiving of orders, according to the godly cuſtome and practice of that Church where they live, they have it mediatly by the hands of thoſe, to whõ in the name of the whole Church that care is cõmitted: yet by the commandement of God, they are appointed to their ſeverall offices and functions.

2 It followeth not, if they all have their authoritie and power from God, that they ſhould be all of an equall degree: for we ſee that there are divers degrees in the civill ſtate, there be Emperours, Kings, Dukes, all chiefe in their owne ſeignories, and all have their calling from God; as S. Paul teacheth, *Rom.*13.7. to ſome tribute, to ſome cuſtome, to ſome feare, to ſome honor belongeth. Here are divers degrees, yet they are all ordained of God, *verſ.*1. Yea in the ſame kingdome, immediatly by the hands of the Prince, ſome are created Earles, ſome Lords, ſome knights, yet are their degrees unequall. In the naturall body the head immediatly conveyeth a ſenſitive power to the organes of the ſight, the hearing, the taſte, and of the other ſenſes; yet are they not all of the ſame excellencie. And yet to make it more plaine; the Apoſtles, Prophets, Evangeliſts were immediatly called of God, yet were the Apoſtles in degree before the reſt: the Jeſuites argument then is not well knit together. Rom.13.7.

3 One Biſhop (ſaith he) hath one towne, another hath twentie, &c. But this is nothing to the purpoſe; we ſpeake of the calling of Biſhops, and he of their Provinces and circuits: the largenes of their juriſdiction maketh not their degree higher; a Biſhop may have a larger dioces than an Archbiſhop, as the Biſhop of Lincolne hath, than the Archbiſhop of Canturburie: yet, I trow, an Archbiſhop is before a Biſhop. We muſt diſtinguiſh then betweene Epiſcopatum, & dioceſin, the office of a Biſhop, and his dioceſſe, his calling, and his title or dignitie: there may be a Biſhop without a dioceſſe, as a Miniſter without a charge; though neither of them be fit or convenient: for it is contrarie to the Canon, that any man ſhould be abſolutely ordained without a title. *Chalced. concil. can.*6. But I ſpeake of that which is practiſed, not which ought to be. S. Paul ſaith, he that deſireth Epiſcopatum, the office of a Biſhop, &c. there was then Epiſcopatus, the calling of a Biſhop, though as yet no dioceſſe aſſigned, no title or dignitie annexed. So then we conclude thus: as touching the titles, dignities, honours belonging to the calling of Biſhops, as to bee ſet over this Citie or that, this dioceſſe or another, they have it by the donation of the Prince: as that good Emperour Fredericke telleth Pope Adrian the fourth, Quicquid regalis papatus veſter habere dignoſcitur, largitione principum donatur: whatſoever princelie dignitie your papacie hath, it is given by the liberalitie of Princes.

And as for the office and juriſdiction it ſelfe, it is not derived from Rome, but in every Church the ſpirituall Paſtors thereof have as full authoritie from God to ordaine and appoint Biſhops, Paſtors, Doctors, Teachers, neceſſarie for the government thereof, as the Biſhop of Rome hath, if he were a good Biſhop in his owne dioceſſe: therefore though wee ſhould grant the Jeſuites concluſion, that the calling of Biſhops is from men, which in our meaning we denie not; yet he hath gained nothing: for it followeth not, if from men, then from the Pope, as we have ſhewed: and better arguments the Jeſuite hath none, than we have ſeene.

The Proteſtants.

THat Biſhops have not their Eccleſiaſticall juriſdiction from Rome, but doe as well enjoy it by right of their conſecration, election, inſtitution, in their owne precincts, circuits, provinces, cities, townes; yea, as the Pope doth in his Biſhopricke, and by much better right, if they be good Biſhops, and lovers of the truth: thus briefly it is proved.

*Argum.*1. The Apoſtles had not their juriſdiction from Peter, but all received it indifferently from Chriſt: this the Jeſuite doth not barely acknowledge, but proveth it by argument, againſt the judgement of other Papiſts, *cap.*23. Ergo, neither Biſhops are authoriſed from the Pope, though he were Peters ſucceſſor: for if he were (to grant it for diſputations ſake) he is no more to the Biſhops of the Church, than Peter was to the Apoſtles. If he gave not the keyes to the Apoſtles; neither doth the Pope S. Peters ſucceſſor, to the Biſhops, the Apoſtles ſucceſſors: for they may with as great right challenge to be the Apoſtes ſucceſſors, as he can to be S. Peters.

Bellarmine anſwereth, there is great difference betweene the ſucceeding of Peter by the Pope, and the ſucceſſion of the other Apoſtles in Biſhops: the Pope ſucceedeth Peter, not as Apoſtle, but as the ordinarie Paſtor of the whole Church: the other Apoſtles were not ordinarie Paſtors; and therefore the Biſhops cannot properly ſucceed them, for the Apoſtles had juriſdiction over the whole Church, they had power to found Churches, to write Canonicall bookes of Scripture, they had the gift of tongues, and of miracles, but Biſhops have none of theſe. Againe, one is ſaid ſuccedere præcedenti, to ſucceed one that goeth before: the Biſhops then cannot be the Apoſtles ſucceſſors, becauſe they were in the Apoſtles times.

Anſwer. To the firſt part concerning Peters ſucceſſion: firſt, let this be remembred, that the Jeſuite confeſſeth, that the Pope doth not ſucceed Peter, ut Apoſtolo, as an Apoſtle: then how commeth it about, that the Sea of Rome is called Apoſtolical, and the Pope challengeth to be called Apoſtolike, and ſaith his office is Apoſtolatus, a very Apoſtleſhip: from whence hath he this, ſeeing he hath nothing to doe with Peters Apoſtleſhip? Bellarmine, it may be ſuppoſed, did here forget himſelfe. Secondly, he cannot ſucceed Peter, as ordinarie Paſtor of the whole Church, for ſo was he never; and that power which he had over the whole Church, as other Apoſtles had, as the Jeſuite himſelfe confeſſeth, was Apoſtolike, not Paſtorall: for that commiſſion, *Goe teach all nations, Matth.*28.19. *And ye ſhall be witneſſes unto me, to the uttermoſt parts of the earth, Act.*1.8. was given to all the Apoſtles, and was therefore Apoſtolicall: of any other ſuch large and generall commiſſion given to Peter alone, we read not. Wherefore, if the Pope neither ſucceed Peter as Apoſtle, which Bellarmine granteth, nor as generall Paſtor, as wee have proved: it will be found, that he is not Peters right ſucceſſor at all, as in deed hee is not.

Math.28.19.

To the ſecond part we anſwer: firſt, that the Apoſtles were not properly ordinarie Paſtors, wee eaſily grant; for they had charge of the whole Church, and were not tied and limited to any one certaine place: yet Bellarmine againſt himſelfe in this place elſewhere confeſſeth it, that James was paſtor & Epiſcopus, Paſtor and Biſhop of Jeruſalem, *lib.*1.*de pontifice, cap.*26. Yet the argument followeth not, the Apoſtles calling was extraordinarie, and they had extraordinarie gifts; therefore they could have no ſucceſſors: for it is not neceſſarie that the ſucceſſor ſhould have all which his predeceſſor had: the Apoſtles ſucceeded the ancient Prophets, *Ioh.*4.38. You are entred into their labours, yet was their calling divers: yea the Apoſtles were in Chriſts ſtead, 1 *Cor.*5.20. yet was there more in Chriſt, than in his Apoſtles. Secondly, wee ſay then, that as the Apoſtles had extraordinarie gifts, as to pen Scripture, to worke miracles, and ſo had an extraordinarie calling; ſo had they ordinarie gifts, as of teaching, exhorting, admoniſhing, yet after a more excellent manner: the Biſhops then and Paſtors of the Church, though they ſucceed them not for their extraordinarie gifts, yet are properly their ſucceſſors in feeding, teaching, and inſtructing, which gifts were not ſo extraordinarie in the Apoſtles, but that they were to continue unto their poſterity, as the Lord ſaith by his Prophet, My ſpirit that is upon thee, and my words, which I have put in thy mouth, ſhall not depart out of thy mouth, nor the mouth of thy ſeed, nor of thy ſeeds ſeed, from henceforth for ever.

Iohn 4.38.
1 Cor.5.20.
Iſay 59.21.

Thirdly, to Bellarmines laſt argument we anſwer: firſt, that it cannot bee ſhewed, that there were any ſuch Biſhops, as he ſpeaketh of in the Apoſtles time, ſeeing the names of Epiſcopus and Presbyter, of Biſhop and Elder are confounded in the Apoſtles writings, as the Jeſuite elſewhere confeſſeth: Againe the ſucceſſor and predeceſſor, may be both at one time, as Valerius Biſhop of Hippo yet living, appointed Auguſtine his ſucceſſor, and Auguſtine appointed Eradius. And it were not ſo, that the ſucceſſor might be aſſigned in the predeceſſors life, the Pope were like to have a cold ſuit of it: for S. Peter, if there be any credit in thoſe records, *Clement. epiſtol.*1. ordained Clement his ſucceſſor, while he lived. Clementem hunc Epiſcopum vobis ordino, cui ſoli meæ prædicationis & doctrinæ cathedram trado: I ordaine this Clement to be your Biſhop, to whom only I leave my chaire of doctrine; Notwithſtanding then, any thing which the Jeſuit hath yet ſaid, or is able to ſay, the Biſhops and Paſtors of Chriſts Church doe as properly ſucceed the Apoſtles, as the Biſhop of Rome ſucceedeth Peter, yea with better right, unleſſe he did embrace S. Peters doctrine.

*Argum.*2. The Apoſtles gave no power or juriſdiction to the Elders and Paſtors, whom they ordained, *Act.*20.28. Take heed to the flocke, over the which the holy Ghoſt hath made you Biſhops or overſeers: and *Epheſ.*4.11. He hath given ſome to be Apoſtles, ſome Prophets, ſome Paſtors and teachers. So then the paſtors and teachers, though ordained by the Apoſtles, yet had their calling and office from God and not from the Apoſtles: much leſſe now can they receive their power from any, no not from the Pope: for he is no Apoſtle, no nor Apoſtolike man, having left the Apoſtolike faith.

Epheſ.4.11.

To theſe places Bellarmine anſwereth, that the ſpirit of God did appoint Biſhops and Paſtors, but yet immediatly by the hands of the Apoſtles: And ſo God now alſo conſtituteth and ordaineth Biſhops, but immediately from the Pope, or his aſſignes.

Contra. In the giving of orders two things are to be conſidered, the externall rite and ceremonie our-outwardly uſed in the admittance of thoſe that are conſecrated and ſet apart for the holy functions, and the office and function it ſelfe whereto they are ordained. Concerning the externall rite and outward act, it is done and performed by men; ſuch was the impoſition of hands uſed by the Apoſtles: but if we reſpect the power and efficacie of the office it ſelfe, it is not conferred by men, but God concurreth with the Churches externall act, in enabling thoſe men to their ſpirituall office, whom the Church hath ſet apart. The Apoſtles laied on their hands in the ordaining of Biſhops or Paſtors, but their office they received of God: that externall rite was onely an outward teſtimonie of the Church, that ſuch men were marked and ſealed of God, for that office, as 1 Tim.4.14. Timothy his gift was given by prophecie, that is, by the revelation of the ſpirit ſpeaking by the Prophets, but with laying on of the hands: this was the outward ſigne and teſtimonie of the Church, that the ſpirit had ſet ſuch men apart. A lively example hereof we have, Act.13.2. ſeparate me, ſaith the holy Ghoſt, Barnabas and Saul to the worke, whereunto I have called them. Here they have their office and every part thereof immediately from God: then it followeth, verſ. 3. they laid on their hands. This is the outward approbation and conſent of the Church, which giveth them not their office, but onely ſealeth and confirmeth it outwardly unto them. So ſaith S. Paul, that worthie thing, which was committed unto thee, keepe through the holy Ghoſt, &c. Hence we reaſon thus; That whereby men are kept, maintained and upheld in their Eccleſiaſticall office, is the beginner and author thereof: but by the ſpirit of God are Eccleſiaſticall officers preſcribed in their office and miniſterie. Ergo. The argument ſtill remaineth ſound and good, that if the Apoſtles gave no power or juriſdiction to Paſtors or Elders, but it was the ordinance of God, much leſſe hath the Pope right to doe it. Let us ſee what antiquitie ſaith, Auguſtine thus writeth, Solus Chriſtus habet authoritatem, & praeponendi nos in eccleſia ſua gubernatione, & de actu noſtro judicandi, de baptiſ.2.2. Onely Chriſt hath authoritie (ſaith he) to preferre us to the government of the Church, and to judge of our doings, &c. The Paſtors then of the Church have the keies of the ſpirituall regiment from Chriſt himſelfe, not from the Pope, or any other.

Concil. Aquiſgranenſ. cap. 9. ex Iſidoro: Apoſtolis decedentibus ſucceſſerunt Epiſcopi, qui ſunt conſtituti per totum mundum in ſedibus Apoſtolorum: The Apoſtles being departed, Biſhops ſucceeded them, and were placed throughout the world in the Apoſtolike Seas.

Concil. Senonenſ. decret. morum, 38. It is affirmed, Apoſtolorum ſolos Epiſcopos ſucceſſores, & ideo illis ſolam impoſitionem manuum reſervatam: That Biſhops are the onely ſucceſſors of the Apoſtles: and therefore to them onely is the impoſition of hands reſerved, &c. Hereupon we inferre, that whatſoever Biſhops have, they doe receive it not from the Pope, but by reaſon of their ſucceſſion from the Apoſtles.

We want not here the teſtimonie of their owne writers: as Franciſcus Victoria, in relect. 2. de poteſtate Eccleſiæ, quæſt. 2. Alphonſus de caſtro, lib. 2. cap. 24. Theſe Popiſh writers are of this judgement, that both the Apoſtles, and likewiſe Biſhops have their juriſdiction immediately from God.

Their owne Canons alſo for this matter are againſt them: Anacletus ſaith, that Biſhops ſucceed the Apoſtles; diſt.22.2. Urbanus, Apoſtolorum locumtenens: They are in the place of the Apoſtles, diſt.68.cap.6. Innocentius, They are the Apoſtles Vicars: decret. Gregor. lib.1.tit.15.cap.1. And Clemens the 5 ſaith, They are Chriſts Legates, Clementin. lib.5 tit. 8.*c.*1. If Biſhops then bee the ſucceſſors, and vicegerents of Chriſt and his Apoſtles; then it followeth, that from them, and not from the Pope, they have their juriſdiction.

This doctrine hath been ſealed by the blood of holy Martyrs. Maſter Philpot ſaith, by the word of God the Pope hath no more authoritie than the Biſhop of London hath; as Peter had no more authoritie than every one of the Apoſtles had, Fox pag.1811.col.1.

For the teſtimonie of other Churches: 1 Ieremie Patriarch of Conſtantinople alleageth the fourth Canon of the firſt Nicen, where it is decreed, that a Biſhop ſhould be choſen by all the Biſhops in the Province, if that cannot be by reaſon of the length of the countrie, then by three at the leaſt: ſumma autem & ultima poteſtas, & confirmatio, &c. but the laſt and chiefe power, and confirmation of all Metropolitano tribuatur, muſt be given to the Metropolitane: if the chiefe power bee in the Metropolitane, then there is no dependance here of the Pope. Nilus the Archbiſhop ſaith, that the Patriarch of Conſtantinople ordaineth the Biſhop of Cæſarea and the reſt, but the Roman Biſhop neither ordaineth the Biſhop of Conſtantinople, nor any of the generall Patriarchs. Barlaam, uſeth this reaſon, that ſeeing the Apoſtles were ordained by Chriſt himſelfe, and not by Peter, neither ſhould other Biſhops bee ordained by the Pope: though it be admitted hee was Peters ſucceſſor, hee alſo alleageth *Dionyſius epiſt.*8. who maketh Miniſters ſuperior to Monkes, Biſhops to Miniſters, and the Apoſtles and their ſucceſſors to Biſhops: hee maketh ſucceſſors to the Apoſtles in generall, and not to Peter onely, and ſo hee inferreth, that every one of the Patriarchs is deſigned of all the Biſhops in the Province, but conſecrated by one: as the Patriarch of Conſtantinople of the Metropolite of Heracleas, the Patriarch of Hieruſalem of the Metropolite of Cæſarea, &c. here is no expectation of the Popes conſecration.

So the Church of Bohemia, confeſſ. 14. We underſtand that Harm.ſec.11. pag.363. theſe keies, or this divine function of the Lords, is committed and granted to thoſe that have charge of ſoules, and to each ſeverall Eccleſiaſticall ſocieties, whether they be great or ſmall. Our Engliſh confeſſion agreeth artic. 5. We denie that the B. of Rome, &c. unleſſe he goe ſo to worke, that mens conſciences &c. *be ſubdued to the word of God, that he doth either open or ſhut, or hath the keies at all. 4 The opinion of the Romaniſts, as of Vrbanus, Innocentius, Popes, of Franciſcus de Victoria, Alphonſus, we have ſeene before.

The Eighth Queſtion, of the temporall juriſdiction and power of the Biſhop of Rome.

This queſtion hath two parts: firſt, whether the Pope in reſpect of any ſpirituall juriſdiction, have alſo the chiefe ſoveraigntie in temporall and civill matters; and ſo to be above Kings and Emperors. Secondly, whether the Pope, or any Biſhop, may be the chiefe Lord and Prince over any Countrie, Citie, or Province.

The Firſt Part, whether the Pope directly or indirectly have authoritie above Kings and Princes.

The Papiſts.

57. Error. Innocent.3. in decretal. The Papiſts of former times were not aſhamed to ſay, that the Pope is the Lord of the whole Church: as Panormitane in the Councell of Baſil, Fox pag. 670. Yea, Pope Innocentius the third ſaid, writing to the Emperour of Conſtantinople, that as the Moone received her light from the Sun, ſo the Imperiall dignitie did ſpring from the Pope: and that the Papall dignitie was ſeven and fortie times greater than the Imperiall: yea, Kings and Emperours are more inferior to the Pope, than lead is to gold, Gelaſius diſtinct. 96. And Clemens 5. likewiſe ſaith, Nos regis ordinarius judex: That hee was the ordinarie judge of the King of Sicile: Et temporalia ſua à nobis & ſub nobis tenet: And hee holdeth his temporals of us and under us, not of the Emperor, Clement. lib. 2. tit. 11. Thus in times paſt the arrogant Popes did challenge power directly and ordinarily over Kings and Emperours. But our latter Papiſts aſhamed of their forefathers arrogancie, in words ſeeme to abate ſomewhat of their proud ſentence, but in effect ſay the ſame thing: for they confeſſe that the Emperour hath his office and calling of God, and not from the Pope: neither that the Pope directly hath any temporall juriſdiction: but indirectly he may depoſe Kings and Princes, abrogate the lawes of Emperours, and eſtabliſh his owne: he may take unto himſelfe the judgement of temporall cauſes, and cite Kings to appeare before him: Yet not directly (ſaith the Jeſuit) as he is ordinarie Judge over the Biſhops and whole Clergie; yet indirectly, as he is the chiefe ſpirituall Prince, he may doe all this, if he ſee it neceſſarie for the health of mens ſoules. And ſo in effect, by their popiſh indirect meanes, they give him as great authoritie, as ever he uſurped or challenged. Bellarmine lib. 5. cap. 6.

Arg. 1. The Eccleſiaſticall and civill power doe make but one bodie and ſocietie, as the ſpirit and the fleſh in man: Now the Eccleſiaſticall power, which is as the ſoule and ſpirit, is the chiefe part, becauſe it is referred to a more principall end, namely, the ſafetie and good of the ſoule: the other is as the fleſh to the ſpirit, and reſpecteth but a temporall end, as the outward peace and proſperitie of the common-wealth: Ergo, the ſpirituall power is chiefe, and may command the other. Bellarmine cap. 7.

Anſw. Firſt, it is a very unfit and unproper ſimilitude, to compare theſe two regiments to the ſoule and the bodie: for by this meanes, as the ſpirit giveth life to the bodie, and every part thereof, ſo the civill and temporall ſtate ſhould receive their office and calling from the Eccleſiaſticall, which the Jeſuite himſelfe denieth, and ſo directly the one ſhould rule the other: for the ſoule directly, I trow, not indirectly moveth the body and governeth it. But if we will ſpeake as the Scripture doth, we make Epheſ.4.15,16. all but one bodie: and it is the ſpirit of Chriſt, who is the head, that giveth effectuall power to everie part.

2 It is falſe, that the civill magiſtracy concerneth the outward and temporall commoditie only: for unto Princes alſo is committed the chiefe care of religion and the worſhip of God: They are to ſee true religion advanced, yea to watch over Eccleſiaſticall miniſters, and to charge them to look to their offices: the Prince is Gods miniſter, for the wealth both of the ſoules and bodies of his ſubjects: And therefore S. Paul exhorteth to pray for Kings and governours, that we may live not onely a peacea- 1.Tim.2.2. ble life, but in all godlineſſe and honeſtie: Ergo, it is part of the Magiſtrates office, as to procure the peace of the people, ſo to have a care of their godly life. Wherefore it is falſe, as the Jeſuit ſuppoſeth, that the chiefe end of the civill government is onely outward and temporall: Ergo, his argument is nothing worth.

Argum. 2. Azariah the high Prieſt drove Vzziah the King out of the temple, when hee would have burned Incenſe, and cauſed him to goe out of the citie and dwell apart, 2 Chron. 26. Iehoida likewiſe depoſed Athalia, 2 *King.*11. Ergo, the Pope may depoſe wicked and ungodly Princes, *Bellarm.cap.*8.

Anſ. Firſt, we denie that there is now, or ought to be any ſuch high Prieſt in the Church of God, to have the chiefe authoritie in ſpirituall matters, as there was in the law: for he was the type and figure of Chriſt, who is our high Prieſt, and chiefe Biſhop. Secondly, theſe examples doe not excuſe the Popes tyrannie, who hath depoſed rightfull Kings and Emperours, and better than himſelfe: as Pope Zacharie depoſed Childericus the French King, and ſet up Pipinus: Gregorie the ſeventh ſet up Rodolphus againſt Henricus the fourth, the Emperour. Pope Paſchalis the ſecond ſet up the ſonne of the ſaid Henricus againſt his father. But wee will anſwer more particularly to theſe examples.

To the firſt. Firſt, it was not the ſole act of Azariah the high Prieſt, but there were 80. Prieſts that joyned with him beſide, and they all ſpake to the King: this example therefore maketh nothing for the ſole authoritie of the Pope, who ſaith, that hee may depoſe the Emperour himſelfe, without any Councell, *Innocent.*4. Secondly, they did not depoſe Uzziah: they onely withſtood him according to the law of God, becauſe he uſurped the Prieſts office: ſo ought faithfull Biſhops and Paſtors even to reprove the greateſt Magiſtrates, for the manifeſt contempt and open breach of Gods law: neither did they conſtraine the King to goe forth, before they ſaw the judgement of God upon him: for the text ſaith, they compelled him to goe forth, becauſe the Lord had ſmitten him, they ſaw the leproſie to riſe up in his face, *verſ.*20. This therefore was the extraordinarie judgement of God, and not of the high Prieſt. Thirdly, he was not depoſed from the kingdome, though he dwelt alone: his ſonne did execute the office only for him, and reigned after him: for being a leper, by the law hee was to dwelt apart, *Levit.*13.46. Here was nothing done (we ſee) by the ſole authoritie of the high Prieſt, but they had the manifeſt and direct law of God, unto the which their kings alſo were ſubject.

Levit.13.46.

To the ſecond example we anſwer: Firſt, Athaliah was a tyrant and an uſurper, and ought not to reigne, and therefore was juſtly depoſed. Secondly, Iehoiada did it not by his owne power, but aſſembled the Fathers and Princes of the land, 2.*Chron.*22. 2. He ſhewed them the young King, and they made a covenant with him. Iehoiada only gave directions (the King being now knowne unto them) unto the Captaines and governours. Thirdly, they had the flat word of God for that action, The kings ſonne muſt reigne, as the Lord hath ſaid, concerning the ſonnes of David, *verſ.*3. So when the Pope hath any ſuch warrant from God, he may doe as Iehoiada did.

*Argum.*3. I muſt not here forget the goodly arguments uſed by Boniface 8. in his decretall, for the ſuperioritie of Popes above Kings and Emperours: *extrav.commun.lib.*1.*tit.*8. Firſt, Chriſt ſaid to Peter, Paſce oves meas, Feed my ſheepe: but the Emperour is one of his ſheepe: Ergo, hee is committed to Peter.

Anſw. Firſt, here is a manifeſt begging of the thing in queſtion: for whatſoever was ſaid to Peter, belongeth not to the Pope. Secondly, here is a new expoſition of theſe words, Feed my flocke, that is, the Pope may depoſe Emperours, and excommunicate them, tread upon their necks, exempt their ſubjects from their fealtie, and all by vertue of theſe words. Thirdly, as Chriſt ſaid to Peter, Feed my ſheepe: ſo Peter ſaith to all Paſtors, Feed the flocke of Chriſt, 1 *Pet.*5. Then by the ſame reaſon all Paſtors ſhould have ſuperioritie to Kings: As Kings and Princes are ſheepe unto their Biſhops and Paſtors that doe inſtruct them; ſo againe the Paſtors themſelves are their ſheep in reſpect of civill government: as the one are ſuperiour for ſpirituall direction, ſo the other are chiefe for civill adminiſtration. But the Pope preaching not at all, is not ſo much as a ſpirituall Paſtor, and therefore hath loſt alſo his preeminence in this: and yet if hee were, hee muſt be ſubject to his ſuperiour temporall governour.

2. The Apoſtles ſaid to Chriſt, behold two ſwords, it is enough, ſaith Chriſt, not too much: Ergo, there are two ſwords in the Church, the temporall and ſpirituall, Boniſ. ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, who ſeeth not how abſurdly that place is abuſed, whereas both Chriſt anſwered, and the Apoſtles made the queſtion of two materiall ſwords, which were found in the company. Secondly, S. Peter was reproved for handling the ſword: Ergo, we may better conclude, that the Pope (his ſuppoſed ſucceſſor) hath nothing to doe with the ſword. Thirdly, if theſe two ſwords prove any thing, they make no more for the Church of Rome, than for any other Church.

3 The Apoſtle ſaith, Rom. 13.1. The powers that bee, are ordinatæ, ordained of God: but there can bee no order, unleſſe one ſword were under another: the temporall under the ſpirituall: Boniſac. ibid.

Rom.13.1.

Anſw. Firſt, he cavilleth about the word, ordained: for the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of any order, that the powers have one under another, but of the ordinance which they have from God. Secondly, but if they will enforce this expoſition, it maketh for the ſuperioritie of the Civill Magiſtrate, that beareth the temporall ſword, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh plainly, *verſ.*4.

4 The Apoſtle ſaith, The ſpirituall man judgeth all things, 1 *Cor.*2.15. Ergo, the Pope judgeth the Emperour, Boniſ.ibid.

1 Cor.2.15.

Anſw. Firſt, the Papiſts themſelves are aſhamed of this groſſe expoſition: for the Rhemiſts in their annotations dare not ſo expound the ſpirituall man: but hee is the ſpirituall man, that is led by the ſpirit of God, which the Pope is not led by: and therefore is not ſpirituall according to the Apoſtles meaning. Secondly, Kings and Emperours, that are faithfull, and beleeve in Chriſt, are as well ſpirituall men in the Apoſtles ſenſe, as beleeving Biſhops. Theſe and ſuch like arguments not worth rehearſing, much leſſe confutation, their ſtout champion Boniface uſeth in that place.

The Proteſtants.

THat the Pope, or any other perſon eccleſiaſticall, hath no manner of temporall juriſdiction either directly or indirectly over Kings, Princes, Emperours, but ought of right to be ſubject to them and their lawes, it is thus proved.

Ioh.6.15.
Luke 12.13.

*Argum.*1. By the ſame reaſon whereby the Jeſuite proveth, that the Pope directly hath no temporall juriſdiction, we will conclude, that neither indirectly can he have any, and ſo none at all. Chriſt, while he lived upon earth, tooke upon him no temporall juriſdiction, either directly or indirectly: he refuſed to be a King, Ioh.6. Nay he would not be a Judge in civill matters, as in dividing the inheritance, being thereto required, Luk. 12.13. He paied poll money, Matth. 17. he did ſubmit himſelfe to the judgement of Pilate an heathen Judge. Therefore ſeeing Chriſt uſed no ſuch temporall juriſdiction, neither can any Miniſter of Chriſt: For the ſervant is not above the maſter: onely Antichriſt dare preſume beyond the example of Chriſt.

This argument drawne from our Saviour Chriſt his example, is notably urged by that good Emperour Fredericke, writing thus to that proud Pope Adrian the 4. Cum ille noſter & veſter inſtitutor nihil ab homine rege accipiens, tamen pro ſe & Petro cenſum Cæſari perſolvit, exemplum vobis dedit, ut vos ita faciatis: Seeing Chriſt, both our founder and yours, did take nothing of the King, but paied tribute to Cæſar for himſelfe and Peter, he gave you an example to doe the like.

Bellarmines beſt anſwer in this place is, that Chriſt in refuſing to divide the inheritance, ſignified, Ne pontifices minutis & vilibus officiis occupentur: That Prelates ought not to occupie themſelves in baſe and inferiour offices.

Contra. Firſt, I pray you is it ſo baſe a place to be Judge of inheritance? I appeale to Weſtminſter Hall, what ſubject can have a more honourable place, than to be called to the ſeat of judgement? Or if this were ſomewhat baſe, Chriſt alſo refuſed to be a King, I trow the Jeſuite thinketh that to be no vile or beggerly calling. Secondly, more than this, Chriſt did not only refuſe theſe civill honours, but paied tribute, whereby he acknowledged his obedience, as man, to the Civill ſtate. We may judge the weaknes of their cauſe, by the feeblenes of their anſwers.

*Argum.*2. The fathers of Baſil doe urge that place of S. Peter, 1. Epiſt. 5.2. againſt Panormitane, who had unadviſedly ſaid, that the Pope was Lord of the Church. But the Apoſtle ſaith, Feed the flock of Chriſt; not by conſtraint, but willingly; not as Lords over the Lords inheritance, *verſ.*3. But the Pope contrariwiſe uſeth all forcible, conſtraining, and tyrannicall meanes, killing, ſlaying, impriſoning, depoſing thoſe that will not obey him: who calleth himſelfe chiefe Lord and Magiſtrate of the whole world: Surely this is Antichriſt, and not the Miniſter of Chriſt, or ſucceſſor of S. Peter, whoſe counſell he refuſeth to follow and obey.

*Argum.*3. Let but the ſtories of former times be ſearched: there wee ſhall finde how wickedly and inſolently the Popes behaved themſelves towards Kings and Emperours: Pope Alexander cauſed Henry the ſecond to doe penance for Beckets death, and to bee diſpled of the Monkes. Innocent the third cauſed King Iohn to kiſſe the feet of the Biſhop of Canturburie his owne ſubject. Alexander the third did tread upon Emperour Fredericke his necke. Pope Innocent ſpoyled Fredericke the ſecond of his Empire, cauſed him to be poyſoned, and his ſonne Conradus to be beheaded: and theſe Emperours were depoſed by the Popes in order, Henricus 4. Henricus 5. Fredericke 1. Philippus Otho the 4. *Frederick.*2. and Conradus his ſonne.

It is not good, they ſay, to put a ſword into a mad mans hand: and thinke you not, that theſe Popes uſed the temporall ſword very diſcreetly, which they thus uſurped, making fooles and ſlaves of Emperours, as Pope Adrian did, that rebuked Frederick the firſt, becauſe he held his ſtirrup on the wrong ſide, and did excommunicate him, for ſetting his name before the Popes in writing? The very inſolent, devilliſh, and Antichriſtian practice of this their temporall power, ſheweth from what originall it commeth, even from the father of pride.

Expoſit.quarund.propoſ. ex epiſt.ad Roman.

Laſtly, Auguſtine ſaith, writing upon thoſe words, Rom. 13. Let every ſoule be ſubject to the higher powers: Si quis putat, quia Chriſtianus eſt, non ſibi eſſe vectigal reddendum, aut tributum, aut non eſſe exhibendum honorem debitum eis, quæ hæc curant poteſtatibus; in magno errore eſt: If any man thinke, becauſe he is a Chriſtian, that hee is not bound to pay tribute and tax, and yeeld due honour to the temporall powers (for of ſuch Auguſtine ſpeaketh) he is in a great error, &c. If all then are ſubject to the temporall Magiſtrate that are Chriſtians, then all Biſhops and eccleſiaſticall perſons, yea the Pope himſelfe, if he be a Chriſtian: Ergo, the Emperour is not ſubject to him.

Epiſtol. Leodienſ. contra Paſchal. 2. Omnis anima poteſtatibus ſublimioribus ſubdita: qui hoc omni animæ præcipit, quem à ſubjectione terrenæ poteſtatis excepit? Let every ſoule (ſaith the Apoſtle) be ſubject to the higher powers: he that injoyneth this to every ſoule, whom doth he exempt from the ſubjection of the earthly power? Ergo, the Pope alſo is ſubject.

Synod.6. general.action.4. epiſt.Agathon.

Agatho Biſhop of Rome writeth thus to Conſtantinus the Emperour: Secundum piiſſimam juſſionem manſuetudinis veſtræ, pro obedientia, quam debuimus, dirigimus præſentes conſamulos noſtros: As your clemencie hath moſt godly commanded us, according to the obedience which wee owe, wee have ſent theſe our fellow ſervants. And againe, Omnes nos exigui eccleſiarum præſules, veſtri

Chriſtiani imperii famuli: We all the poore Prelates of Churches, ſervants of your moſt Chriſtian Empire, &c. Here the Pope himſelfe doth confeſſe himſelfe to be the Emperours ſervant, and to owe him homage: what more evident teſtimonie can we have?

Further, we have teſtimonie of their owne law: diſt. 8. cap. 1. Per jura regum, &c. Temporall poſſeſſions are enjoyed by the lawes of Princes: Ergo, the Pope holdeth his temporals of Kings, not they their kingdomes of him. Diſtinct. 10. cap. 9. Leo 4. thus writeth to Lotharius the Emperour, Preceptis veſtris imperialibus, &c. Wee promiſe and profeſſe for ever to keepe and obſerve your imperiall precepts, &c. And if any man tell you otherwiſe, ſciatis eum pro certo mendacem, hold him for a lier. Likewiſe Gelaſius ibid. c. 11. Quis autem leges principum &c. Who will ſay that the lawes of Princes ought to be contemned? &c.

Diſtinct. 97. Boneſac. 1. thus writeth to Honorius the Emperour: Augeretur pluribus, &c. The Mother Church would be much grieved, if ſhe were not ſecure and aſſured of your helpe in all her cauſes, and had not prevailed in ſuppreſſing of Idols, correcting of Heretikes by your faithfulnes, &c. This Boniface writing with a better ſpirit, than Boniface 8. whoſe goodly arguments we ſaw before, calleth for aſſiſtance of the Emperour, even for the redreſſe of Eccleſiaſticall matters. Thus we ſee, that of ancient times Popes did not command, but were commanded rather of Emperours; that they did not preſcribe lawes to them, but rather yeelded obedience to imperiall lawes. And a latter Extravagant decreeth, Ut non ſint reges amplius eccleſia Romana ſubjecti, quam antea, &c. That Kings ſhould be no otherwiſe ſubject to the Church of Rome, than they have been in times paſt: Clemens 5. Extrav. communi lib. 5. tit. 7. cap. 2. Wherefore the Pope doth contrarie to his owne law, in challenging ſuch ſuperioritie over the Emperour, which of ancient time hath not been due.

Let Biſhop Cranmer holy martyr put to his ſeale: By the Scripture the King is chiefe, and no forraine perſon in his owne realme above him: there is no ſubject but to a King: I am a ſubject, I owe my fidelitie to the Crowne; the Pope is contrarie to the Crowne: I cannot obey both, &c. Fox pag. 1874. col. 1.

Pag. 1701. a. 15.

Concerning the teſtimonie of other Churches: 1. Ieremie ſhall ſpeake for the Greeke Church: Obedire ſubjectoſque eſſe oportere nos omni poteſtati & magiſtratui, &c. et ea omnia, qua ab illis legibus ſancita ſunt, ſancte et incontaminate ſervanda: It behoveth us to obey and to be ſubject to every power and magiſtracie, &c. and all thoſe things, which are ordained by lawes, muſt be obſerved carefully, and nothing empaired. Here the great Patriarke acknowledgeth obedience to the Civill Magiſtrate. Agapetus a Deacon of Conſtantinople thus writeth to Iuſtinian the Emperour: [a] God ſtandeth in need of none, the King only of God, Numer. 63. And againe, [b] The King is Lord of all, Numer. 68. This was the Greeke faith.

[b] Κύριος πάντων ἐστὶν ὁ βασιλεύς.

2 In the Ethiopike Church at this day, the Patriarke doth not meddle with the affaires of the kingdome, or with the adminiſtration of temporall things, ſed tantum ſpiritualem curam habet, but only taketh charge of ſpirituall things. Patriarkes then containing themſelves within their limits and bounds, have no power over the temporall ſtate.

Harm ſect. 11. pag. 374.

4 Of the Latine Church, Cardinall Cuſanus writeth, that Pope Leo with his ſynod entreated of the Emperour Theodoſius, that a generall Councell might be held within Italie, but it was not granted him: Ecce univerſalem ſynodum, per ſynodum ubi Papa praſidet, ab imperatore petitam: Behold a generall ſynod was craved of the Emperour by a ſynod, where the Pope was preſident. This ſheweth the juriſdiction of the Emperours over Popes, not contrariwiſe. Eſpencaus ſaith, Gregorius magnus agnoſcebat imperatoribus conceſſum eſſe jus dominandi ſacerdotib. Gregorie the great acknowledged, that the Emperours had right to rule over and command Prieſts.

Eſpenc. digreſ. 10. in Tit. pag. 1567.

An appendex to this part, whether the Pope have power to excommunicate Emperours and Kings, &c.

The Papiſts.

WE need not ſeeke farre to know their opinion for this matter, for the continuall practice of Popes and popiſh Biſhops, in taking upon them moſt arrogantly to excommunicate Emperours and Kings, doth evidently ſhew what their judgement is. Gregorie the 3. did excommunicate Leo Iſaurus Emperour of Conſtantinople, becauſe he pulled downe Images: ſo did his predeceſſor Gregorie 2. before him. Gregorie 7. did thunder out his mercileſſe curſes againſt Henricus 4. Emperour. Adrian 4. and after him Alexander 3. moſt wicked and inſolent Popes, did perſecute the good Emperour Fredericke, with their cruell excommunications. Innocent 3. did excommunicate King Iohn, and interdict the whole Realme of England. And according to the Antichriſtian practices of their predeceſſors, the Popes that have been of late, have breathed out, as a vaine blaſt and bladder cracke, their unjuſt excommunications againſt our late renowned Soveraigne, and moſt bleſſed of God, Queene Elizabeth.

58 Error.

Yea not only the Popes have thus farre preſumed, but their inferiour Biſhops have malepertly pricked forth, by their excommunications, to buffet Princes, and pull them by the eares: As Odo Archbiſhop of Canturburie did ſuſpend Edwine the King from the Church, and Dunſtane afterward did enjoyne King Edgar ſeven yeeres penance, Fox pag. 156. *col.*2. So the Biſhops threatned to excommunicate King Henry the 3. unleſſe hee would agree with his Nobles, *Fox pag.*280.*col.*1. Let us ſee how theſe jolly ſtirring Prelates can juſtifie their doings.

Pag.141.l.40.
Pag.255.l.50.

Argum 1. Azariah is brought forth for an example, who being chiefe Prieſt, when King Uzziah offered to burne incenſe in the temple upon the Altar, conſtrained him haſtily to depart, 2 Chro. 26.20. The like power why may not the Pope-Biſhops have now to excommunicate kings?

2 Chro.26.20.

Anſw. Firſt, it was not Azariah his act only, whatſoever was done at this time, but there were 80. Prieſts joyned with him, ſufficient to make a lawfull Synod or Councell. Secondly, their intent was not by violence to thruſt Uzziah out of the temple, but only to admoniſh him, and reprove him for his preſumption, *verſ.*18. they ſaid unto him, it pertaineth not to thee Uzziah to burne incenſe, &c. And this they might lawfully doe, as Iohn Baptiſt rebuked Herod for his inceſt. And as it is the part of all faithfull Biſhops, not to ſpare, in dutie and reverence, to tell Kings and Princes their faults; ſo did Ambroſe deale with Valentinian the Emperour, Theodoret lib. 3. cap. 11. Britannio a Scythian Biſhop with the Emperour Valens who was an Arrian, Theodoret lib. 4. cap. 35. Iſaachus Monachus alſo thus ſaid to the ſame Emperour going in warfare againſt the Barbarians, Quò proficiſcere, bello ſuſcepto adverſus Deum? Whither goeſt thou, ſeeing thou haſt waged battell with God? *Theodoret. lib.*4.34. He ſaid alſo further to him, Redde Eccleſias orthodoxis: Reſtore the Churches which thou haſt taken from them of the right faith. The Emperour thereupon bid him be apprehended, dealing with him, as Ahab plaied with Micaiah the Prophet: but he anſwered, Non es reverſurus, niſi eccleſias reddideris: Thou ſhalt not returne, unleſſe thou doe reſtore them, &c. And ſo indeed it came to paſſe. This zeale and boldnes in good Biſhops is not to be miſliked, but much to be commended, and wiſhed in the Biſhops of our time.

3 Azariah conſtraineth not Uzziah to depart, before the leproſie appeared in his face, then was he thruſt out, for they had the expreſſe word of God ſo to doe, *Numb.*5.2. So if the Pope had the expreſſe commandement of God to excommunicate Kings, and if it might appeare that they are firſt excommunicate of God, as the Lord ſet a marke of leproſie in Uzziah; it might be as lawfull for him ſo to doe, as it was then for Azariah: but ſuch commandement we are ſure the Pope hath none, nor yet is he ſo acquainted with Gods ſecrets, as to know who are rejected before him.

*Argum.*2. S. Ambroſe example is much urged in this caſe, who enjoyned Theodoſius the Emperour penance, for a certaine murther and ſlaughter of the people made at his commandement, and would not admit him to receive the Lords Supper, ſaying thus unto him, Iſtaſne adhuc ſtillantes injuſtæ cædis cruore manus extendes, & ſanctiſſimi Domini corpus prehendes? Doeſt thou ſtretch out theſe thy bloudy hands, to apprehend the moſt holy body of our Lord? *Theodoret lib.*3.17.

*Anſw.*1. Ambroſe, in not admitting the Emperour without repentance of that bloudie act to the Lords Supper, and in refuſing himſelfe to miniſter to him in that caſe, did not amiſſe if he had ſtaied there, having ſo farre the word of God, *Ierem.*15.19. Separate me the precious from the vile: and 1 Timoth. 5. 22. Be not partaker of other mens ſinnes. 2 But in that hee tooke upon him by his ſole authoritie to cenſure the Emperour, and to enjoyne him penance, he ſomewhat exceeded his limits: and yet, though this act might proceed (in Ambroſe ſo holy a Biſhop) from an extraordinarie ſpirit, which I denie not; yet the Emperour is rather to be commended for his humilitie, in ſubmitting himſelfe to his order, (for it is written of him, that Lachrymas effudit coram Eccleſia, & tempus pœnitentiæ præſcriptum implevit: He ſhed teares before the Church, and fulfilled the time ſet for his penance: *Ruffin.lib.*2. *cap.*33.) Such alſo was Theodoſius modeſtie, that at another time being excommunicate, à levi homuncione, of a light cock-braine fellow, becauſe hee granted him not that thing which he requeſted, he would not enter into the Church, before he had been of the ſame partie abſolved: Theodoret lib. 5. cap. 37. Theodoſius lowlineſſe therefore, and ſubmiſſion to Ambroſe cenſure, doth not prove the lawfulneſſe thereof, no more than his modeſtie here doth allow the inſolent fact of a ſaucie malapert prieſt. 3 Though we admit Ambroſe act to be lawfull, yet doth it not authoriſe the Popes unjuſt proceedings: for that cenſure was laid upon the Emperour upon juſt cauſe, a hainous murther committed: but the Pope doth excommunicate Kings for well doing, as Gregorie the 3. did to Leo the Emperour, for pulling downe of Images, and for the moſt part of ſtomacke, for Gregorie the 7. had no other cauſe againſt Henry the 4. nor Alexander the 3. againſt Fredericke. 4 If Ambroſe example prove any thing, it doth authoriſe other Biſhops as well as him of Rome, to excommunicate Emperours of themſelves.

The Proteſtants.

ALthough wee doe not altogether exempt Princes from eccleſiaſticall cenſures, for they are, though chiefe and principall, yet parts and members of the Church: yet we thinke, that againſt all other perſons, beſide the ſupreme and ſoveraigne Magiſtrate, though of never ſo high place, the cenſures of the Church may more ſafely and with better right be extended, and applied: as Biſhop Groſthead that good Biſhop of Lincolne, having excommunicated a Prieſt for incontinencie, becauſe after fortie daies the Sheriffe refuſed to apprehend him, as it was his dutie, excommunicated him likewiſe, Fox, p.285. But as concerning excommunicating of Kings and Princes, wee thinke that neither the Pope, nor any Biſhop in the world by their ſole authoritie have power to doe it.

Argum. 1. Paulus orari vult pro regibus malis. 1 *Timoth.*2. S. Paul would have us pray for evill Kings. This is our onely remedie that we have againſt ſuch: Nec talis à nobis repellendus eſt armis contra eum ſumptis, ſed precibus ad Deum ſumptis: Neither is ſuch an one to be reſtrained by weapons taken up againſt him, but prayers made unto God for him, Epiſtol. Leodienſ. cont. Paſchal. 2. As Ambroſe ſaid well, Arma noſtra preces & lachryma: Our weapons are onely teares and prayers. Againſt the ſoveraigne power no violent meane is to be uſed: Ergo, not excommunication.

Arg. 2. The wiſe man ſaith, *Prov.*26.2. Maledictio immerita non adventura eſt: A curſe cauſeleſſe or undeſerved ſhall not come. Malach. 2. Benedictionibus veſtris maledicam: I will curſe that you bleſſe, and ſo conſequently bleſſe that which you curſe. And their owne Law ſaith, Neminem ligare debet ſententia injuſta: An unjuſt ſentence bindeth not: Et excommunicatus non poteſt excommunicare: An excommunicate perſon cannot excommunicate. Therefore we feare not the Popes curſe or excommunication, becauſe it is unjuſt: and he excommunicateth us, as the Phariſies did the Apoſtles, becauſe we ſpeake in the name of Chriſt: and he himſelfe ſtandeth as an excommunicate perſon before God, being an Apoſtata and Slidebacke from the truth.

Argum. 3. Concil. Toletan. 4. can. 74. It was decreed that the Kings of that Countrey which ſhould exerciſe crueltie againſt the people, Anathematis ſententia condemnentur: Should be anathematized, or held accurſed. Concil. Toletan. 6. can. 3. If the King ſhould violate his faith which he gave, not to ſuffer the Jewes to infringe the Catholike faith, Sit anathema in conſpectu Dei: Let him be accurſed in the ſight of God, &c. Theſe decrees of anathematizing Kings were not made by any one or two, but in the firſt were aſſembled all the Biſhops of the Provinces of Hiſpania and Galicia, the King Siſcenandus alſo himſelfe was preſent, with the chiefe of his Nobles, and gave conſent: In the ſecond there were aſſembled 52. Biſhops, the King Chintillanus and his Nobles. Hereby then may appeare what was the practice of thoſe times, that nothing ſhould be attempted by any ſingular authoritie againſt the higheſt powers, but by conſent of all the States, and in the generall Seſſion of Parliament, as it were.

Maſter Lambert holy Martyr, thus alſo giveth his opinion of this matter: The Pope ought not to denounce excommunications of his owne proper head and affection onely, but with the conſent of others gathered with him in Chriſts name: for ſo uſed S. Paul when he did excommunicate the man of Corinth, &c. And the ſame forme declareth the Goſpell, Math. 18. Dic Eccleſiæ, Tell it to the Church or congregation: ſo that ſuch excommunications ought to be done, as me thinketh, by the congregation aſſembled together with their Paſtors, whoſe advice they ought principally to eſteeme and follow, if it be vertuous and godly: Fox, pag. 1113. reſponſ. ad articul. 24. Hence we conclude, that neither Pope nor any Biſhop by their ſole authoritie can excommunicate Princes.

Laſtly, Epiſtol. Leodienſ. cont. Paſchal. 2. thus we read: Si quis vetus & novum teſtamentum, geſtaque revolverit, patenter inveniet, quod aut minimè aut difficile poſſint reges excommunicari: admoneri quidem poſſunt, increpari, argui à diſcretis viris: quia quos Chriſtus in terris rex regum vice ſuâ conſtituit, damnandos & ſalvandos ſuo judicio reliquit: If any man will take paines to looke over the old and new Teſtament, and the acts thereof, he ſhall readily finde, that Kings either hardly or not at all ought to be excommunicate: they may be admoniſhed, rebuked, adviſed diſcreetly and wiſely, and not elſe: for thoſe whom Chriſt the King of Kings hath ſet in his ſtead in the earth, to be ſaved or damned, he hath reſerved it for his owne judgement, &c. And theſe which did thus write, were of the Popiſh Church, though herein they miſliked the practice of the Popes. And one of their late writers approveth the foreſaid Epiſtle, and alleageth out of the ſame, how that Gregory 7. called Hildebrand, was the firſt, contrarie to all antiquitie, that did, ſacerdotalem lanceam contra Imperatoris diadema levare, lift up the ſpirituall launce againſt the Crowne of the Emperour, Eſpenc. 1 Timoth. pag. 275. a. The ſame author hath theſe words, Magiſtratui collo non bello; patientia, non violentia; patiendo, non agendo reſiſtendum eſt: The Magiſtrate muſt bee reſiſted not by ſtroke, but yeelding the necke; by patience, not violence; by ſuffering, not practiſing: ibid. pag. 276. f. Whereby he inſinuateth, that nothing ought to be attempted againſt Princes, no not by excommunicating of them, for that were to practiſe, not to be patient.

I thinke alſo their owne Extravagant condemneth the cruell practice of Popiſh Prelates in enterdicting of Kings and their Kingdomes, as Boniface 8. thus decreed, Extrav. commun. lib. 5. tit. 10. cap. 2. Provide attendentes, &c. We conſidering that many are too forward in denouncing of interdictions, whereupon it commeth to paſſe, that the Eccleſiaſticall Sacraments are not adminiſtred, the ſervice of God ſuſpended, &c. We doe provide by this Edict, that no Province, Citie, Caſtle, Territorie, goe under the Interdict, for any quantitie or ſumme of money, by the Lord thereof unpaied, &c. We have then their owne teſtimony againſt them.

1 Baſil ſpeaking of theſe words of our bleſſed Saviour to Peter, Loveſt thou me, feed my ſheepe: he appointed Peter after him to be Paſtor of his Church, and conſequently, omnib. paſtorib. & doctorib. eandem poteſtatem tribuit, &c. He giveth the ſame power to all Paſtors and Doctors, whereof this is a ſigne, that all we doe equally binde and looſe, as well as hee: ſo that the Pope hath no more right to excommunicate Kings than other Paſtors have.

2 The practice of the Æthiopike Church at this day, is, that none are forbidden the Sacraments of the Church, though for never ſo great an offence, Niſi tantum propter homicidia, but onely for murther, Zaga Zabo: but the Pope hath taken upon him for leſſe faults, yea upon his light diſpleaſure to excommunicate Emperours and Kings.

If they pretend their oath, let them be told, that the fealtie which they ſweare unto a Chriſtian Prince, being now an adverſarie to God and his Saints, they are bound by no authoritie to performe, &c. Azorius their Jeſuite reporteth how Gregorie the ſecond excommunicated Leo the Emperour of Grecia, & ſacramenti religione ſolvit, &c. and freed his ſubjects from their oath, whereby they had bound themſelves unto him, &c. In the ſame ſteps tread other Papiſts, as one of their late Cardinals, an Engliſh fugitive reſolveth, that by reaſon of Queene Elizabeths excommunication and hereſie, it was not only lawfull for any of her ſubjects, but they were bound in conſcience to deprive her of any ſtrength, which lay in their power to doe. And Saunders that ſeditious writer affirmeth, that a King that is an heretike ought to be removed from the Kingdome.

Lib.5. de Roman. Pontif. c.7.

Argum. 1. As the woman is free from her husband being an Infidell, that will not ſtay with her, without injurie to her faith: ſo the ſubjects are free from the yoke of an Infidell King: for the husband hath as great power over the wife, as the King hath over his ſubjects, and greater too.

1 Cor.7.14.

Contra. 1. Neither is the propoſition true: for if an Infidell will ſtill ſtay and remaine with his wife, ſhe muſt not leave him: but if there be a wilfull deſertion of his part, then is ſhe free: ſhe cannot put him away, if he be willing to abide with her, 1 Cor. 7.14. no more can the people put away their Prince though an Infidell or heretike. 2 Neither doth the argument follow, for greater inconvenience will follow in the Common-wealth, by the depoſing and caſting off a King, than in the family by the departing of the husband.

John 21.16.

Argum. 2. It was ſaid to Peter, Feed my ſheepe, but he could not feed them, unleſſe he had power to put out the unruly Rams, that puſh and hurt the ſheepe with their hornes.

1 Pet.5.2,3.

Contra. 1. This feeding conſiſteth in ſpirituall inſtruction, as Saint Peter expoundeth it, in taking care for the flocke, and being an example unto them: it cannot extend to the depoſing and cenſuring of Princes, or to any ſuch temporall juriſdiction. 2 That which Chriſt ſaid to Peter, Peter himſelfe accommodateth to all Paſtors, Feed the flocke of God which dependeth in you: therefore the Pope by this Text can challenge no more right and intereſt than other Paſtors. 3 To make ſubjects breake their oath, and deny their obedience to the Prince, which God commandeth, is to pervert the flocke, not to feed it.

Argum. 3. Whereas divers preſidents are produced, as of Gregorie the ſecond, that depoſed Leo the Emperour; of Zacharie, that put downe Childericus the King of France, and ſuch like practices: We anſwer, that theſe things were done de facto, in fact and deed, but non de jure, not of right: neither are the Popes to be witneſſes, much leſſe Judges in their owne cauſe.

The Proteſtants.

THat even wicked and hereticall Kings are to be obeyed of their ſubjects in all lawfull things, neither are to be reſiſted, though they ſhould be juſtly excommunicate, much leſſe where they are unjuſtly ſentenced as Proteſtant States have beene by the Pope: neither that under colour of any ſuch excommunication, they can be diſcharged of their oath or conſcience of obedience: thus we make it good.

Annot. in 1. Sam.c.8. p.587.

Argum. 1. Saul was depoſed by the ſentence of God from the Kingdome, and rejected, and ſo denounced by Samuel: yet David would not lift up his hand againſt him, nor reſiſt him, becauſe while he lived he was the Lords anoynted; this is confeſſed by the Doway Gloſſators: Saul notwithſtanding his depoſition remained in his dignitie till his death.

Argum. 2. S. Paul willeth obedience to be given unto the Princes, which then were, being at that time all Infidels and perſecutors of the faith, and that for conſcience ſake: hee then violateth his conſcience, who withdraweth his obedience from ſuch.

Rom. 13. 5.

Argum. 3 The Chriſtians did not depoſe the heathen nor hereticall Emperours, as Diocleſian, Iulian, Valens an Arrian: therefore ſuch are not to be reſiſted, or obedience to be yeelded unto them, in things which they command, not againſt God.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the reaſon, why Chriſtians depoſed them not, was for that deerant vires temporales, they wanted temporall ſtrength: for otherwiſe, as the Apoſtle bade them to appoint new Judges of their cauſes, that they ſhould not goe to law among the heathen, ſo they might as well have appointed new Kings, if their ſtrength had ſerved them.

Bellarm. lib. 3. c. 7. ſect. Quod ſi in.

Contra. 1. Though under the heathen Emperours it might bee ſuppoſed, that the Chriſtians wanted ſtrength; yet the whole world having received the Chriſtian faith under Iulian and Valens, was not hindred by their want of ſtrength from ſuch exploits; yea, even under the Pagan Emperours, the Chriſtians wanted not number and ſtrength to have reſiſted, if Tertullian may be credited, who thus teſtifieth, Pars pene major civitatis cujuſq; in ſilentio & modeſtia agimus; Wee being the greater part of every City, doe live modeſtly and quietly: lib. ad Scapulam. And in another place, Si tanta vis hominum, in aliquem orbis remoti ſinum abrupiſſemus a vobis, &c. If wee being ſuch a great number of men, had gone aſide from you, into ſome corner of the farre world, the loſſe of ſo many Citizens would have made you aſhamed of your condemning of us, &c. yee would have been aſtoniſhed at your ſolitude, and ſilence of all things, &c. And a little before: Cui bello non idonei, &c. For what warre had wee not been fit, though unequall in forces, that are ſo willingly killed, &c. So the Chriſtians then neither wanted number, nor valour: it was their conſcience then, not want of ſtrength, that kept them from rebelling.

Tertullian Apologet.

2 Saint Paul doth not ſimply find fault with them for going to law before heathen Judges, for then hee had gone againſt his owne rule in appealing to Cæſar: but for that they did wrong one to another, and upon ſmall occaſions called one another before heathen Judges, to the great ſcandall of their faith. As now we alſo find fault with Chriſtians frivolous and unneceſſary ſuits and contentions, and exhort them to appoint arbitrators to compound their controverſies at home: how abſurd and groſſe a collection were it to inferre, that they might as well appoint them a new King.

Let us ſee the judgement of former times. 1 Tertullian ſaith, when as yet the Emperours were Infidels, and enemies to the Chriſtian faith: Colimus imperatorem, &c. ut hominem a Deo ſecundum, &c. ſacrificamus pro ſalute imperatoris, &c. oramus pro ſalute imperatoris, &c. Wee obſerve and worſhip the Emperour, as a man next unto God, wee offer ſacrifice for the health of the Emperour, wee pray for his health.

Lib. ad Scapul.

2 Iuſtinus Martyr ſaith, We only adore the Lord, and in all other things we cheerefully performe ſervice unto you, &c. The ſame author in the end of this Apologie, ſetteth downe an Epiſtle of Marcus Aurelius the Emperour, written unto the Senate of Rome, wherein he ſheweth, how that when his Armie was in great diſtreſſe, both for want of water, and like to bee overrun with the multitude of their enemies, the Chriſtian ſouldiers falling upon the ground, prayed not only for the Emperour, but for the whole Armie, and ſo both obtained raine, which was comfortable to them, but a ſtorme of haile and lightning to the enemie, as alſo the victory, &c. Thus the Chriſtians aſſiſted this heathen Emperour what they could, both by their ſpirituall and materiall weapons: they ſought not to deprive him of that ſtrength which lay in their power, which is the ſeditious doctrine of Cardinall Allin, as is ſhewed before.

Apolog. 2.

οὐχ ὑπὲρ ἑαυτοῦ μόνον ἀλλὰ, &c.

3 To this purpoſe our Royall Apologiſt concurring with the reformed Churches of England and Scotland, alleageth that place, Ierem. 27. 12. where the Prophet commanded the people to obey the King of Babel, ſaying, Put your neckes under the King of Babel, and ſerve him and his people, that hee may live.

Ierem. 27. 12.

Apolog. p. 22.

4 We haue alſo the decree of one of their owne Popes, one of the firſt that tooke upon him to excommunicate Kings, Gregorie the ſeventh. Anathematis vincula his ſubtrahimus, &c. We doe exempt theſe from the band of our curſe, as wives, children, maids, ſervants, &c. which give their attendance upon excommunicate perſons: if thoſe are allowed to ſerve their husbands, parents, maſters ſtanding excommunicate, much more ſubjects are to yeeld obedience to their ſoveraignes. If then by their owne law, ſubjects are not to denie obedience to their Prince, though juſtly excommunicate, being excuſed by neceſſitie: much more then, where a Prince is ſentenced unjuſtly and injuriouſly for an heretike, and by an incompetent Judge, as Proteſtant Princes have been cenſured by the Pope, who neither hath power to excommunicate Kings, being out of his juriſdiction, and is an idolater himſelfe, and hereticall, and therefore a partiall Judge of hereſie in others.

Cauſ. 11. qu. 3. c. 103.

The third point, that no violence, conſpiracie or aſſault is to bee made upon the ſacred perſon of Kings and Governours howſoever cenſured by the Pope.

The Papiſts.

Error 60. THis poſition of the Judaſites (falſly calling themſelves Jeſuites) their killing of Kings, is ſo odious, that their great Sect-maſter Bellarmine flatly denieth any ſuch thing to bee maintained by them: for thus he writeth in his letter to the Archprieſt Blackwell: It was never heard of from the Churches infancie untill this day, that ever any Pope did command, that any Prince, though an heretike, though an Ethnike, though a perſecuter, ſhould bee murthered, or did approve the fact, when it was done, &c. But how untrue this is, and how boldly denied, ſhall now evidently appeare to all men.

Excitation. Reg. Apolog. p. 73. 1 In former times: Innocentius the 4. after he had excommunicated the Emperour Frederike, corrupted one in Apulia to give him poiſon, of the which the Emperour recovering, hee afterward hired his baſtard ſonne Manfredus to poiſon him, whereof he died. Alexander the 3. writ unto the Soldane, that if he would live quietly, he ſhould by ſome ſleight murther the Emperour, and to that end ſent him the Emperours picture.

Ibid. p 67. 2 Did not Sixtus 5. make an oration in praiſe and commendation of the Friers faith, that murthered Henry the third King of France, who was no Proteſtant, as the Pope ſaith, that a true Frier had killed a counterfeit Frier: yea, and if the Cardinals had been as forward as the Pope, that trayterous Frier had been canonized for a Saint.

The reply to the manifeſtation. Fol. 66. p. 2. 3 Adde hereunto the reſolution of the Popiſh Divines at Salamanca, which was hammered the 7. day of March, anno 1602. that the Catholiks in Ireland, which did fight againſt the Queene, were by no conſtruction rebels. Thus reſolved, Iohn de Sequenza, Emmanual de Royas, Iaſpar de Mena, Peter de Oſorio profeſſors of Divinity in the College of Jeſuits there.

Apolog pro Ioan. Chaſtel. part. 2. c. 1. Part. 5. c. 9. Ieſuit. catech. 3. 6. c. 18. 4 And to fill up their meaſure of iniquity: that beaſtly fellow Franciſcus de Vorone, in that his devilliſh Treatiſe, maintaineth that deteſtable fact of Iohn Chaſtell, in aſſaulting Henry the fourth late King of France, to bee juſtum & heroicum, juſt and heroicall, who notwithſtanding by the ſentence of the parliament of Paris, was juſtly put to death for it. He addeth further, that it was crueltie and ſacrilege to put to death the Jeſuite Guignard, who was condemned by the ſaid parliament of Paris, for that he had written in a certaine ſeditious booke by him made, that the late King was juſtly ſlaine by Iaques Clement: and that if the King now raigning ſhould not die in the warres, he ought to be killed. For the which curſed and wicked writing, hee was enjoyned at his death to aske God and the King forgiveneſſe.

Ieſuites Catechiſm. 3. booke. f. 204. p 2. f. 205. p. 1. Præmon. reg. p. 6. 7. Apolog. reg. p. 55. 5 And that this is a reſolved concluſion of that factious ſocietie of the Judaſites (calling themſelves falſly Jeſuites) appeareth both by the confeſſion of Iohn Chaſtel, that the argument of killing Kings was ordinary among the Jeſuites: as alſo by the aphoriſmes of Emmanuel Sa, and a booke compoſed by the principall of the Seminarie at Rhemes, maintaining, that it was lawfull in certaine caſes for the ſubject to kill the King. And by that devilliſh practice of the horrible Gunpowder treaſon, plotted by trayterous papiſts, who at their death refuſed to crave pardon for their deed, unleſſe the Romiſh Church ſhould firſt condemne it, conſented unto by the Jeſuits, Garnet, Ouldcorne, Baldwine, winked at by the Pope, who never called any of them to account for it, who fled for the ſame fact into Italie. Thus I thinke it is evident, whatſoever Bellarmine ſaith, that the popiſh doctrine alloweth of killing of Kings: let us ſee yet further ſomewhat more of the impietie of this devilliſh poſition.

The Proteſtants.

THough ſuch vile and monſtrous poſitions need no confutations: but as Tertullian ſaith of the mad opinions of the Valentinians (Illa tantum demonſtrare deſtruere eſt) it is ſufficient to have bewrayed them, and laid them open: yet that their groſſe abſurditie, or rather diabolicall iniquity, may yet be made more manifeſt to all men, we further doe thus impugne them.

The practice and precept of Scripture is againſt them: for the practice, David, though twice the opportunitie ſerved, when he cut off the lap of Sauls garment, and afterward tooke away the ſpeare, and water pot from him, yet would hee not, neither lay any violent hand himſelfe upon the Lords anointed, nor yet ſuffer any of his ſervants, though ſome of them urged and preſſed him very much to doe it: but thus hee reſolveth, 1 Sam. c. 26. 10. 11. As the Lord liveth, either the Lord ſhall ſmite him, or his day ſhall come to die, or hee ſhall deſcend into battell and periſh: the Lord keep mee from laying mine hand upon the Lords anointed.

Apolog. p. 22. Rom 13. 5. And concerning the precept of Scripture: that place is ſelected by our Royall Apologiſt, whereunto our reformed Church ſubſcribe, where the Apoſtle willeth all men, to bee ſubject to the higher powers for conſcience ſake: if conſcience of ſubjection muſt be made, much more ſhould conſcience keepe them from attempting any thing againſt the life and ſafetie of Kings.

Tertullian ſaith, Chriſtianus nullius eſt hoſtis, nedum Imperatoris quem ſciens à Deo conſtitui, &c. A Chriſtian is enemie to none, much leſſe to the Emperour, whom knowing to be appointed of God, he muſt of neceſſitie love him, reverence, honour him, ſalvum velit, wiſh his health and ſafetie, &c. but he is farre from loving the King, and wiſhing his health that practiſeth his deſtruction. Iuſtine Martyr alſo of the Greeke Church thus profeſſeth unto the Emperour Antonius Pius: We are helpers unto peace more than other men beſide, becauſe we teach that no malefactor, &c. (lier in wait, &c.) can be hid before God: They then which lie in wait to aſſault the life of Kings, are hinderers of publike peace, and ſuch cannot eſcape Gods puniſhment.

Lib. ad Scapul.

Ἐπίβουλον.

Their owne ancient Synods of Spaine have concluded contrarie unto the late Conventicles in Spaine. Toletan. 4. cap. 47. Si quis regem nece attentârit, &c. anathema, &c. If any attempt the death of the King, let him be accurſed, Toletan. 6. cap. 18. No man ſhall goe about to ſeeke the deſtruction of the King. In their generall Councell of Conſtance, Seſſ. 15. this propoſition was condemned as hereticall: that Tyrannus poteſt & debet licitè & meritoriè occidi, &c. A Tyrant may, and ought lawfully and meritoriouſly be killed by his vaſſall or ſubject, notwithſtanding his oath made, and not expecting the ſentence or mandate of any Judge whatſoever, &c.

Conſidering then that this Judas doctrine of killing Kings is ſo prodigious, that it hath miſliked the Papiſts of former times, and it being ſo dangerous to States, who can miſlike, or rather not commend the care of Chriſtian and Proteſtant Kings, in providing againſt ſuch monſters by wiſe and juſt lawes, like as a law was made by the Emperor Fredericke, that if a Biſhop were found to attempt any thing againſt the publike quiet, centum millib. ab ea civitate vitam agat, quam conturbavit: He ſhould live an hundred miles off from that Citie which he had diſturbed, &c. And it were to be wiſhed, that all ſuch diſturbers of the peace and quiet of this our Nation, were ſent not onely an hundred, but a thouſand miles off.

Cod. lib. 1. tit. 6. leg. 14.

The fourth Part, VVhether it be not lawfull for ſubjects to take the oath of allegeance, and thereby oblige themſelves to the faithfull performance of everie part and article thereof.

The Papiſts.

WHereas after the horrible and deviliſh Gunpowder Treaſon, whereby certaine traiterous Papiſts intended to have blowne up the Parliament houſe, when the King, Queene, Prince, Lords ſpirituall and temporall, and the Commons ſhould have beene there aſſembled; which ſhould have beene anno 1605. upon the 5. of November, if the Lord in his mercie had not prevented it: it pleaſed the whole State, for the further diſcoverie of ſuch like treacherous affections, to cauſe to be ſet downe a certaine forme of an oath, called the oath of alleageance, to bee miniſtred unto all the Kings ſubjects, as is further extant and enacted, anno 3. Iacobi, cap. 4. Pope Paulus the 5. by two Breves directed to his Catholikes here in England, did generally prohibit them to take the ſaid oath: the ſpeciall contents whereof, that the groſneſſe of that popiſh inhibition may further appeare, it ſhall not be amiſſe here to ſet downe.

Error 61.

1 That the Pope hath no power to depoſe his Majeſtie being the rightfull King of this Realme, or to diſpoſe of his Kingdomes, or to authorize any forraine Prince to invade or annoy him.

2 That the Pope cannot give licence to any of the Kings ſubjects to beare armes againſt him, or to offer any violence to his royall Perſon, or State, &c.

3 That notwithſtanding any ſentence of excommunication made by the Pope, everie ſubject is to beare faith and true alleageance to his Majeſtie, &c. to defend him to the uttermoſt of their power, and to make knowne to his Majeſtie all treaſons, &c.

4 That the Pope hath no power to diſcharge any ſubject of their allegeance and obedience, nor to abſolve them of their oath.

5 That everie one is to take this oath willingly, without any equivocation, or mentall reſervation.

Notwithſtanding this ſo lawfull and juſt an oath, the Pope in two ſeverall Breves hath forbidden his devoted Catholikes to take it. In his firſt Breve after he had ſet downe the oath at large, he inferreth, That ſuch an oath cannot bee taken without hurting of the Catholike faith, and the ſalvation of your ſoules, ſeeing it containes many things which are flat contrarie to faith and ſalvation: and in his ſecond Breve hee ſaith, This is our meere, pure and perfect will, being alwayes carefull of your ſalvation, &c. That is, that they ſhould not take the ſaid oath: but the Pope ſheweth not wherein this oath is contrarie to faith or ſalvation, as his Majeſtie obſerveth, he ſaith many things but proveth nothing: he muſt be beleeved of his word, and his will muſt ſtand for law: his Breves muſt be taken for oracles.

Bellarmine to help out his great maſter, doth here make a ſupply, in his letter to Blackwell the Arch-prieſt.

Theodore lib. 4. cap. 19.

Argum. 1. The very leaſt ſyllable of Gods divine truth is not to be corrupted: which he doth illuſtrate by the example of Baſil, who being ſolicited by the Arrian Emperour Valens deputie, not to reſiſt the Emperour for a ſubtiltie of a few points of doctrine, anſwered, It was not to bee endured, that the leaſt ſyllable of Gods word ſhould be corrupted, &c. Apolog. p. 43.

Contra. To this objection his Majeſtie hath made a full and ſufficient anſwer, which it ſhall be ſufficient to abridge: 1 In the next words of the author, it followeth: imperatoris amicitiam magni ſe pendere, ſed in pietate, that he did make much account of the Emperours friendſhip, but with pietie: Baſils words then will rather perſwade to take this oath, being not againſt pietie. 2 Baſil was ſolicited to become an Arrian, and to hold fellowſhip with heretiks; but this oath medleth not with any article of the faith, nor is againſt the word of God. This example then is very impertinent: ſee further Apolog. Reg. p. 85. 87.

Argum. 2. This oath is againſt one of the principall heads of our faith, the primacie of the Apoſtolike Sea, which muſt not be impugned: as Gregorie ſaith, lib. 11. epiſt. 24. Let not the reverence due to the Apoſtolike Sea be troubled by any mans preſumption, for then the ſtate of the members doth remaine entire, when the head of the faith is not bruiſed by any injurie. Apolog. p. 42.

Præmonit. pag. 9. Apolog. pag. 46. 47.

Contra. The ſumme of his Majeſties anſwer here is this: 1 That this oath of alleageance is not againſt the Popes primacie or eccleſiaſticall power: which the oath of ſupremacie cutteth off made in King Henry the eights reigne: this oath dealeth only with temporall and civill obedience: in ſo much, as when the lower Houſe had ſo framed the oath, that the Pope had no power to excommunicate the King, his Majeſtie cauſed it in that behalfe to be reformed: ſo that Bellarmine taketh quid pro quo, one thing for another, the oath of ſupremacie for the oath of alleageance. 2 It is no article of the faith, to hold the Pope to be the head of the faith, or univerſall Biſhop, no not in Gregory his opinion, who affirmeth, that whoſoever calleth himſelfe univerſall Biſhop, is the forerunner of Antichriſt. 3 Gregory in that place writeth to a Biſhop of Sicilie (which was under the Sea of Rome) concerning the uſe of the Pall, a thing indifferent: and ſo we impugne not his doctrine, that in ceremonies concerning order, and other indifferent things, the Chriſtian Magiſtrate and the Church muſt be obeyed, or elſe the members muſt needs run to confuſion. 4 We deſire no other thing to bee ſuggeſted to the Pope and his Cardinals than Saint Gregory deſired Sabinian to ſuggeſt to the Emperor: One thing there is, which I would have you ſuggeſt ſhortly to your moſt noble Lord, &c. I dread to have any hand in the blood of any man.

Lib. 6. epiſt 30.

Apolog. p. 92.

Apolog. p 94.

Apolog. p. 42.

Argum. 3. Bellarmine alſo alleageth that ſaying of Leo, writing to the Biſhops of Vienna, to prove the primacie of the Apoſtolike Sea, which hee ſuppoſeth to bee impugned by this oath of alleageance, Hee is not (ſaith hee) partaker of the divine myſterie, that dare depart from the ſoliditie of Peter.

Contra. 1. The Pope can neither prove perſonall nor doctrinall ſucceſſion from S. Peter, pag. 64. 2 The Popes are but partiall witneſſes in their owne cauſe; they advance S. Peters, that they may bee advanced with him, pag. 94. 3 Leo is too rhetoricall in ſetting forth the dignity of S. Peter: he ſaith in the ſame place; The Lord did take Peter into the fellowſhip of the indiviſible unitie: which words are much derogatory to the divine Majeſtie, pag. 95. 4 Leo did thus beſtirre himſelfe, becauſe his primacie was impugned at this time; above ſix hundred Biſhops in the Councell of Chalcedon gave equall authority to the Patriarchall Sea of Conſtantinople, pag. 96. 5 Yet Leo that gave ſo much to Peter, tooke nothing from Cæſar, but gave him both his titles and due, giving the power of calling a Councell to the Emperour: as may appeare, epiſt. 9. 17. Theodoſio. epiſt. 16. Flavian. 6 It is denied, that the oath of alleageance impugneth the primacie of the Pope, unleſſe his primacie conſiſt in depoſing of Kings, and diſſolving of ſubjects oaths, and authorizing them to rebell againſt their Soveraigne. 7 Yet if it impugne the uſurped primacie of Rome, it ought and might ſafely and lawfully be taken.

Apolog. pag. 96. 97.

The Proteſtants.

WE hold it not only lawfull, but convenient and requiſit and in a manner neceſſary that ſubjects ſhould obliege themſelves by their oath of alleageance and fidelity to their Prince and Soveraigne, that by this meanes the falſe hearts and affections of diſloyall ſubjects may bee tried out, and the Prince may have ſecurity of his life and State.

Argum. 1. Abraham tooke an oath of his ſervant for his fidelity about the buſineſſe of his ſonnes marriage, Geneſ. 24. the poore Egyptian tooke an oath of David for the ſecurity of his life, 2 Sam. 30. 15. much more may the King take an oath of his ſubjects, if the ſervant may ſweare to his maſter, and if in ſome caſes a privat man may require an oath for his life.

2 Sam. 5. 3.

2 King. 11. 4.

Argum. 2. David, when hee was received of all Iſrael for their King, made a covenant with them before the Lord, 2 Sam. 5. 3. that is, in the preſence of the Arke, calling God to witneſſe: as the King bindeth himſelfe at his Coronation by a ſolemne oath to his people, ſo the ſubjects alſo ought to bind themſelves by their oath of alleageance to the King. So Iehoiada when hee brought foorth Ioas the young King, hee tooke an oath of the people (for their obedience) and made a covenant with them: it is therefore agreeable to the word of God for Kings and Princes to require an oath of their ſubjects for their obedience.

1 If the Imperiall lawes, which did bind both the Latine and Greeke Commonwealth, allow an oath to bee taken in ſmaller matters: as pupillus poteſt tutori deferre juramentum: the Ward may put his Gardian to his oath: Cod. 4. tit. 1. leg. 5. reus tenatur jurare vel ſolvere: hee that is endebted muſt take his oath, or pay the debt, ibid. leg. 1. an oath alſo is allowed, in actione depoſiti, in the caſe, where a thing is committed to ones truſt, leg. 10. if in theſe caſes an oath may be taken of private men by private men, much more may the Prince require it of his ſubjects.

2 Tertullian, though hee allow not that oath which was made, Per genios Imperatoris, by the ſpirits, which they imagined to attend upon the Emperors: yet hee ſaith, Iuramus per ſalutem eorum, quæ eſt augustior omnibus geniis: We ſweare by their health, which is more worth than their ſpirits. And againe, Id in eis ſcimus eſſe, quod Deus voluit, & pro magno juramento habemus: Wee know that to bee in them, which God would, and this we hold for a great oath, &c. If it bee lawfull in his opinion, to ſweare by the health and life, much more for the health and life of the Prince, and for the preſervation thereof.

Tertullian apologet.

3 Concil. Toletan. 4. can. 47. which was anno 633. and Toletan. 10. can. 2. about anno 670. mention is made of the oath of fidelity, which was made for the preſervation of the King, that no man ſhould violate it. And long after this time, the Emperour uſed to require an oath of fidelity of all, both Clergie men and others, in effect the very ſame with this oath of alleageance now in queſtion, as Radevicus hath ſet it downe. The oath was this, Ego juro, quod amodo fidelis ero Domino meo Frederico, &c. I ſweare that I will henceforth be faithfull to my Lord Fredericke, Emperour of the Ro- „ mans againſt all men, as I ought of right to doe unto the Lord Emperour. I will help him to keep „ the Crowne of the Empire, and all his honour in Italie, ſpecially that Citie (meaning Rome) and „ what right ſoever hee hath therein, &c. I will not take his regalities from him, and if they bee taken „ away, I will doe my beſt, that he may recover and retaine them: neither will I bee of counſell or an „ agent, to take away life, member or honour: every mandate, which he maketh by himſelfe, or by his „ letter, or by his Embaſſadour, I will faithfully obſerve, &c. all theſe things I will obſerve with a good „ faith without any fraud, &c. „

Radevic, lib. 3. cap. 19.

4 It need not therefore ſeeme ſtrange, that the reformed Church and Kingdome of England hath preſcribed the like oath of fidelity and alleageance to be miniſtred to all ſubjects, and confirmed the ſame by publike act of Parliament, as hath been ſhewed before.

The fifth part, that the oath of alleageance cannot be diſſolved nor reverſed by the Popes diſpenſation.

The Papiſts.

WHat their opinion is, their practice ſheweth: for divers Romiſh Prieſts having taken the ſaid oath of alleageance, and, as they pretended out of their conſcience, yet have forſworne it againe for obedience to the Popes command.

Error 61. Præmonit. Reg. pag. 93.

Argum. Their uſuall argument to prove that the Pope hath power to diſpenſe with all kind of vowes and oathes, is out of that place, Matth. 16. Whatſoever thou looſeſt in earth, ſhall bee looſed in heaven.

Matth. 16. 19. Præmonit. pag. 19.

Contra. 1. This text is not underſtood of every kind of looſing and binding, as of oathes and vowes, but of the binding of ſinnes to the impenitent, and of looſing and releaſing of ſinnes: as their owne interlineary Gloſſe expoundeth, and the Scripture it ſelfe warranteth: Whoſe ſinnes yee remit, &c.

Iohn 20. 23.

2 Abſolute power is not given of binding or looſing, but according to Gods will: as Lyra expounded, Suppoſito debito uſu clavus, &c. The right uſe of the key being ſuppoſed, God approoveth it in heaven, it is not Gods will that lawfull oathes ſhould be violated, but faithfully kept: he that ſweareth, &c. and changeth not, ſhall dwell in the Lords Tabernacle. 3 This power of binding and looſing is given to all Apoſtles and their ſucceſſors, the faithfull Paſtors, Matth. 18. 18. and ſo Hieromo confeſſeth, as hee is cited by the ordinary Gloſſe. 4 Whatſoever is ſaid to S. Peter, is not ſaid to the Pope, unleſſe he would ſhew himſelfe to be the true ſucceſſor of S. Peter, both in doctrine and place, in the probation of both which he faileth.

THere is no exemption, privilege, profeſſion, power or authority, which can free ſubjects from their lawfull oath of fealty and loyalty, alleageance and obedience made unto their Prince, the Lords annointed.

Argum. 1. Ioſhua and the Congregation made an oath to the Gibeonites not to ſlay them, and they did it ignorantly, being deceived by them, as though they had dwelt a farre off, Iudges 9. yet the land was puniſhed many hundred yeeres after, becauſe Saul had broken this oath, and put them to the ſword, 2 Samuel 21. If an oath made to ſtrangers, and that ignorantly, bindeth not only the perſons that take their oath, but their poſterity alſo: much more doth an oath made with good deliberation and adviſement, not to a ſtranger, but to the naturall Prince, and their perſons that doe oblige themſelves thereunto.

Argum. 2. If Ionathan had well nie died for breaking his fathers oath, which he tooke of the people in a matter of abſtinence, and that ignorantly, for hee heard not when his father charged the people with that oath, 1 *Sam.*14.27. much more are they treſpaſſers which wittingly breake an oath, and in a more ſerious and weightier matter, not from abſtaining their mouth from meat, but from abſtaining their hands from attempting any thing againſt the ſafetie of the Prince and State.

Cod.lib.3.tit.4. cap.7. Now for further evidence hereof: 1 wee have the law of Anaſtaſius Emperor of Conſtantinople, that they, qui dignitatem aliquam prætendunt, &c. which pretend any dignitie or profeſſion, ſine aliqua fori præſcriptione judicib. &c. obedire compelli, &c. without any preſcription or exception of the Court, ſhould be compelled to obey the ordinarie Judges, both in publike & private affaires, &c. if no profeſſion can exempt from the judgement of the Magiſtrate: then it will follow, that profeſſion of obedience to the Biſhop of Rome is no colour to diſpenſe with the oath of alleageance to the Magiſtrate.

In Pſalmum 124. 2 Auguſtine alloweth of the obedience which Chriſtian ſouldiers performed to Iulian in civill matters, to whom they were bound by oath, as all ſouldiers were: When he would have them (ſaith hee) to worſhip idols, and to ſacrifice, they preferred God before him: but when hee ſaid goe forth to fight, they preſently obeyed, &c. If their obedience might have beene diſpenſed with, there was cauſe, for that they were under an Emperour, which was a profeſſed adverſarie to the Chriſtian faith.

3 Some of their owne Councels herein conſent with us: Concil. Toletan. 10. cap. 2. Aquiſgran. can.12. it was decreed that they which did violate the oath of fidelitie made for preſervation of the Kings perſon, &c. ſhould be deprived of all dignitie and honour.

4 Then is it no new or ſtrange thing, that the reformed Church and Kingdome of England hath ſo expreſſely ſet it downe in the oath of allegeance, I doe beleeve, and in my conſcience am reſolved, that neither the Pope, nor any perſon whatſoever, hath power to abſolve me of this oath, or any part thereof, &c. And therefore his Majeſtie truly ſaith, I crave nothing more of my ſubjects in this oath, which was not expreſſely and catefully commanded then, by the Councels to be obeyed, &c. Apolog.pag.52.

A ſixth Part, That it is not lawfull to equivocate either in an oath, or in ſpeech without an oath, that, is to ſpeake one thing with the mouth, meaning another.

Manuſcript. treat cap.20. excitat. D. Morton encounter. So then this is their opinion, that it is lawfull to equivocate with ſuch mentall reſervation: but yet they require theſe conditions: 1 That the ſecret reſervation agree with the minde. 2 It muſt bee uſed, when they have to deale with an incompetent Judge, or when any wrong is offered. And ſo conſequently they affirme, that it is lawfull in England for Prieſts to equivocate even in their oaths before Proteſtant Magiſtrates and Officers, &c. As a Prieſt being convicted before a Magiſtrate, and asked whether hee were a Prieſt, anſwered, no; meaning, a Prieſt of Apollo: and whether hee had been beyond the ſea, ſaid, no; meaning the Adriatique ſea: ſuch evaſions uſed Maſter Garnet in his examinations: Nay they yet goe further, that it is not onely lawfull in their oath to equivocate, but if they be required to ſweare without equivocation, then hee may ſweare he doth not equivocate by another equivocation and mentall reſervation, and thus they allow equivocation upon equivocation.

Now leſt they ſhould ſeeme to have no ground for this their ſo unreaſonable opinion, they would thus ſeeke to countenance it by ſome inſtances produced out of Scripture.

Parſons Reckoning, pa.683. Iohn 8.15. Argum. 1. Many places are urged, taken from the example of our bleſſed Saviour, 1 as *Ioh.*8.15. You judge after the fleſh, I judge no man: but ſeeing elſewhere Chriſt ſaith, that all judgement was committed to the Sonne, here muſt be a mentall reſervation: as, I judge not corruptly, as you doe, or, I come not now to judge.

Ibid. pag.684. Iohn 8.50. 2 Ioh.8.50. I ſeeke not mine owne glorie: and yet in the former verſe he ſaith, you have diſhonoured mee.

3 Verſe 51. If any man keep my word, he ſhall never ſee death: here was a mentall reſervation: for the Jewes underſtand Chriſt to ſpeake of temporall death, as appeareth by their anſwer.

Ioh. 8.51. ibid.

4 Verſe 54. If I honour my ſelfe, mine honour is nothing worth, &c. yet was it lawfull for our Saviour to ſeeke his owne glory: here was then a reſerved ſenſe.

Ioh. 8. 54. ibid.

5 Verſe 56. Abraham rejoyced to ſee my day: which the Jewes underſtood of the corporall ſeeing of Abraham, but Chriſt had another meaning.

Ioh. 8. 56. ibid. pag. 685.

6 Ioh. 1. verſ. 21. Iohn being asked if hee were a Prophet, anſwereth no, and yet hee was a Prophet.

Ioh. 1. 21. Mitigat. cap 9. ſect. 2. p. 359. Ibid. pag. 362. Iſai. 38. 1.

7 Iſai. 38. The Prophet is bid to tell Hezekiah, Thou ſhalt die, and not live: and yet hee lived fifteene yeeres after: here was then another ſecret ſenſe reſerved.

Contra. 1. Theſe inſtances are impertinent: for in none of theſe was there any intention to deceive, as a popiſh prieſt intendeth to couſin the Magiſtrate by equivocating. 2 Here is no examination upon oath, or before a Magiſtrate, which is the thing in queſtion.

3 Here is no mentall reſervation or equivocating at all: but a verball ſenſe, inferred out of the words or circumſtances of the place, or included in them, though ſometime by the hearers miſtaken: as ſhall appeare in the particular view of the ſeverall places.

1 As, by the precedent part, you judge after the fleſh, Chriſts meaning is evident, that hee judgeth not after that manner.

2 I ſeeke not (ſaith Chriſt) mine owne glorie, that is, in ſeeking mine owne revenge: this ſenſe is gathered out of the words following, there is one that ſeeketh it, and judgeth.

3 He ſhall not ſee death, that is, eternally. Here the double ſenſe is in the word, which may be underſtood either of temporall, or eternall death: there needeth not any ſecret reſervation.

4 There are two kinds of ſeeking honour, a juſt and divine; an humane and vaine, which Chriſt ſpeaketh of, and according to the Jewes owne underſtanding: but their mentall reſervation is contrary to his underſtanding with whom they equivocate.

5 Chriſt ſpeaketh of a ſpirituall and propheticall, not temporall ſight, as appeareth by his owne words following, before Abraham was, I am: here then is no doubling or equivocating at all.

6 Iohn anſwereth according to their meaning, whether he were the Prophet, that is, that great Prophet which was to come: but theſe equivocators ſpeake not according to the meaning of others.

7 God in ſuch propheticall ſpeeches alwaies includeth a ſecret condition of repentance, which neceſſarily followeth upon the ſenſe of the words, without any ſuch mentall colluſion: neither muſt men be too bold to patronize their infirmities by ſuch divine and propheticall acts.

Argum. 2. But they triumph in two places of Scripture above the reſt, which they thinke make ſtrongly for their mentall equivocating. The firſt is, Marke 13. 32. Of that day and houre knoweth no man, no not the Angels which are in heaven, neither the Sonne himſelfe, ſave the Father. This place, they ſay, is thus generally expounded by the fathers: Neſciebat ad dicendum aliis: The Sonne is ſaid not to know it, that is, to tell it unto others: and ſo they make this equivocating to be very like, I am a Prieſt, but not to tell it unto thee.

Mark. 13. 32. Parſons Reckon. p. 440.

Contra. For the more full anſwering to this objection, I will firſt produce the divers expoſitions of this place: 1 Hilarius expoundeth it of Chriſt as the Sonne of God: the Sonne and the ſpirit: quia non ſunt a ſe, neſciunt a ſe; becauſe they are not of themſelves, of themſelves they know not: but the Father onely is of himſelfe, and therefore knoweth of himſelfe, &c. But in this ſenſe there ſhould bee ſome difference in the divine works betweene the Father and the Sonne. 2 Ambroſe hath three divers interpretations: as firſt, Maluit Dominus nimio in diſcipulos amore, &c. videri ignorare, quod noverat, quàm negare: The Lord through his great love to his Diſciples had rather ſeeme ignorant of that which he knew, than deny them any thing, &c. but Chriſt ſhould then have ſeemed to diſſemble, if hee had affirmed that of himſelfe, which he knew to bee otherwiſe. 3 Againe, ſaith he, ſibi novit, mihi neſcit: he knew the time and houre to himſelfe, but he knoweth it not for me, &c. and moſt of the fathers run upon this ſenſe: yet this ſatisfieth not neither: for the Angels alſo are ſaid not to know the houre, as the Sonne is ſaid not to know it: then in this ſenſe it would follow, that the Angels know it to themſelves, but not for us. 4 Chriſt muſt bee underſtood to ſpeake as hee is the Sonne of man, quia temporum finem, non per naturam hominis, ſed per naturam Dei novit: becauſe hee knew the end of times, not by the nature of man, but by the nature of God, &c. This ſenſe cannot be much miſliked, ſaving that it implieth a contradiction in the ſpeech of Chriſt, that hee knew it, and knew it not; diſtinguiſhing betweene the thing, and the manner: hee being man knew it, but not as hee was man; which had been ſomewhat too curious for the plaine underſtanding of the Apoſtles. 5 There is then another ſenſe given by Hierome. de die & hora, &c. of the day and the houre, he anſwered, that both the Angels, and the Son himſelfe were ignorant: the infirmitie of the fleſh did rejoyce, that God did inhabit it: & tamen menſuram fragilitatis ſuæ excedere non potuit, and yet it could not goe beyond the meaſure of it fragilitie, that hee might not in opinion, but in truth bee beleeved to bee the Sonne of man: hee thinketh, that Chriſt was indeed in his humanity ignorant of the very day and houre. And leſt it might ſeeme ſtrange, that Chriſt ſhould bee ſaid to be ignorant of any thing: Calvin giveth this reaſon, it derogateth no more to his divine nature, than that hee was mortall: as his union with the divine nature tooke not away the infirmities of his body, no more did it of his ſoule. And againe, this Math. 20. 23. is like, ſaith he, unto that other place, where Chriſt ſaith, to ſit at my right hand and left hand, is not mine to give: that is, he was not ſent at that time to diſtribute the honours of the next world: but after the reſurrection, then he ſaid, all power is given to me in heaven and earth: It was no more for Chriſt in his manhood to be ignorant of the day of judgement, than not to have commiſſion then to diſpoſe of the places and ſeats of judgement. Bullenger alſo affirmeth the ſame, that Chriſt tooke upon him humanam ſcientiam & ignorantiam, humane knowledge and ignorance, (though his ignorance Luke 2. 5. was not ſuch as ours) which increaſeth by degrees, as it is ſaid, he increaſed in wiſdome, that he might Heb. 2.17. 4. 15. be like unto us in all things, ſinne only excepted.

Now then for anſwer to their argument: 1 If this laſt ſenſe be received, which is the moſt agreeable, then is there no colour at all for equivocation: for Chriſt did altogether meane as he ſpake, that he knew not the time.

2 If either of the other two ſenſes be followed, that he knew not as man; or he knew it, but not to tell it to others: it maketh not at all for their mentall reſervation. 1 Chriſts intention and theirs is farre differing: for Chriſt thus ſpeaketh, to ſtay his Diſciples curioſity: as Chryſoſtome ſaith, repreſſit Hom. 78. in 24. Matth. eos, ne diſcere vellent, quod angeli neſciunt; hee ſtayeth them, that they ſhould not deſire to learne that which the Angels knew not, &c. And in that he ſaith, nor the Sonne, non ſolum à diſcendo, ſed à quaerendo prohibuit: he forbiddeth them not only to learne, but not to enquire, &c. but their intent is to deceive and beguile. 2 Chriſt here talketh with his Diſciples, as he thought beſt for their inſtruction: but being examined before Pilate, he plainly anſwered unto the demands of the Governour, without any ſuch reſerved ſenſe: as is evident, Ioh. 18. 33. Luk. cap. 19. to verſ. 12.

3 This ſenſe which is underſtood, Chryſoſtome collecteth out of the words themſelves: That you Chryſoſt. ibid. may underſtand (ſaith he) that Chriſt refuſed not by any ignorance to tell the day, aliud ſignum proponit; he Math. 24. 38. propoundeth another ſigne, &c. As in the dayes before the flood, &c. ſo ſhall the comming of the Sonne of man be: So then they underſtood by the ſpeech of Chriſt, that he knew all things concerning his comming, &c. though he ſo ſpake for ſome reaſon beſt knowne to himſelfe. Here then need no reſervation of any ſenſe hid from the hearers, when as by the very ſpeech which is uttered they could find out his meaning.

Argum. 3. The other place, which they ſo much glory in, is Ioh. 7. 8. Chriſt ſaith, he will not go up Mitigat. p. 388. to the feaſt, and yet hee immediatly after went up, verſ. 10. there muſt then bee ſome ſecret ſenſe reſerved: for otherwiſe Chriſt ſhould be contrary to himſelfe. To this purpoſe Parſons.

Contra. 1. The true reading in the originall is οὔπω, I will not goe up yet: and ſo readeth the Syriake, I will not goe up now. This reading followeth Chryſoſtome, Euthymius: if Cyril and ſome others leave out that word, and ſo buſie themſelves to ſeeke out ſome other ſecret meaning, the reaſon is, they had not theſe authenticall Greeke copies. 2 Some of their owne writers, as Maldonate, Tolet, See D. Mortons encounter, lib. 2. c. 10. pag. 152. Ianſenius, Cajetane, Emmanuel Sa, approve the firſt reading as the beſt. 3 If that word were not expreſſed, yet that to be the meaning of Chriſt, that he would not goe up yet, is gathered out of the former words, my time is not yet come: for otherwiſe it would have been very ſcandalous unto his kinred, if he had ſimply denied to goe to the feaſt, which would have been thought to proceed of contempt: here then is no need of any mentall reſervation, the ſenſe being evident out of the words.

Argum. 4. Maſter Parſons beſide teſtimonies of Scripture, hath this politike reaſon: he putteth this caſe, that a Noble man, that maketh no conſcience to pay that hee borroweth, asketh of one to Mitigat. cap. 9. pag. 403. numer 80. borrow five hundred pounds; the other is loth to ſay him nay, for feare of his diſpleaſure, and more loth to lie for feare of incurring the divine offence: then he inferreth thus, Hath the God of nature left no lawfull manner of evaſion by reaſon and force of wit in ſuch an incumbrance? he that hath given unto the Hare and Fox ſharpnes of ſenſe, by leapes, turnings and windings, by going backe the ſame trace they came, to deceive dogs: and ſo he reſolveth, that there is no way to eſcape but by this mentall equivocating: as to ſay, I have not ſo much money, meaning, to lend to you, or that I can ſpare, &c.

Contra. 1. As he hath brought his argument from the Hare and Fox, ſo I will anſwer him with Au- In Pſal. 80. guſtines obſervation touching the fox: Vulpes habere ſolent tales foveas, ut ex una parte intrent, ex alia exeant, ſed captor vulpium ad utrumq; foramen retia poſuit, &c. Foxes uſe to have ſuch burrowes, that they goe in one way, and out another; but the cunning taker of foxes layeth his nets at each hole, &c. So Maſter Parſons fox, that would borrow money, plungeth a man two wayes, hee will either put him upon his diſpleaſure, or put him to the lie: now a Chriſtian hath one buſh to ſtop both gaps, and one net to lay at each ſtarting hole, to feare God, and ſpeake the truth from his heart.

2 As the God of nature hath provided for Foxes and Hares, in giving them ſuch naturall ſagacitie: ſo the ſame God of grace hath provided better for his children, that they ſhould rather feare God in ſpeaking the truth, than man in diſſembling it. Indeed ſuch ſtarting holes are fit for craftie Foxes, and timorous Hares: but the Lords ſheep embrace ſimplicity. Of ſuch timorous and leporine natures I may ſay with Tertullian: Novi paſtores eorum in pace leones, in praelio cervos: I have knowne their paſtors, in peace like lions, in battell as fearefull Deere.

3 If one cannot in cleanly manner put off ſuch an importune borrower, without either his offence Acts 4. 19. or Gods diſpleaſure, we know the Apoſtles reſolution, It is better to obey God, than man: and it is a greater inconvenience to lie to endanger the ſoule, than to ſpeake the truth, though to the loſſe of the life of the body. Auguſtine hath an excellent ſaying: Mentiri vis ne moriaris, & mentiris & moreris, & dum vitas unam mortem, quam differre poteris, auferre non poteris, incidis in duas, ut primo in animo, poſt cum corpore moriaris, &c. Thou wilt tell a lie, leſt thou ſhouldeſt die, and ſo thou both lieſt, and dieſt: while thou eſcapeſt death, which thou mayeſt deferre, not take away, thou falleſt into two deaths: thou dieſt firſt in thy ſoule, and after ſhalt die in thy body, &c. Theſe and ſuch other are the ſilly ſhifts and weake arguments, whereby the Judaſited (rather than Jeſuited) crew doe defend their falſe equivocating, and mad mentall reſervation.

In Pſal. 30.

The Proteſtants.

WE hold this popiſh tricke of equivocation to bee nothing elſe but a cunning colouring of a lie, and that it is both againſt Scripture, againſt the rule of equitie, an hindring of juſtice, the way unto perjurie, the Devils creature, who is the father of lying, and a principall prop and pillar of Antichriſts Kingdome.

Argum. 1. Our firſt reaſon ſhall be taken from the nature of a lie, which is alwayes joyned with an intention, or purpoſe to deceive: hee ſpeaketh falſly and ſweareth falſly, who by his ſpeech or oath goeth about to deceive: in ſo much as if one ſpeak an untruth, thinking it to be a truth, he lieth not, becauſe he had not animum fallendi, a minde to deceive: ſo the Pſalme ſaith, he that ſweareth to his neighbour and deceiveth not, as their owne tranſlation readeth that place: ſo alſo they read that place in Marke, ne fraudem feceris, deceive not: their owne Canons thus define perjurie: Perjurium eſt nequiter decipere credentem: It is perjurie to deceive lewdly him that giveth credit: Homines falſum jurant, vel cum fallunt, vel falluntur: Men ſweare that is falſe, when they either deceive, or are deceived: But equivocating popiſh Prieſts by their mentall reſervation doe deceive in their oath, therefore they ſweare falſly: Neither can they here excuſe themſelves, becauſe the reſerved part of their ſpeech is agreeable to their minde: but hee that lieth, contra id, quod ſentit, loquitur voluntate fallendi, ſpeaketh contrarie to that which he thinketh, with a minde to deceive: for in their equivocating ſpeeches, they both intend to deceive, and that part of their ſpeech which is uttered, as I am no Prieſt, is contrarie to their minde and knowledge, howſoever the reſerved part is: and Auguſtine ſaith, as it followeth in the ſame place, that words were appointed, not whereby men ſhould one deceive another, ſed per quæ quiſque in alterius notitiam cogitationes ſuas proferat: but by the which one ſhould bring forth his thoughts into another mans knowledge. Where then a ſenſe is reſerved in the minde contrarie to that which is uttered, there by our words another knoweth not our thoughts, and therefore ſuch reſervation cannot be without groſſe lying and diſſembling.

Argum. 2. Our ſecond argument is from the nature of an oath, which the Apoſtle thus defineth: An oath for confirmation among men is an end of all ſtrife: but if it were lawfull for men, being called upon their oaths to equivocate, and keepe part of their meaning to themſelves, nay to conceive in their minde ſomewhat contrarie to that which they ſpeake, there could neither any truth be confirmed, nor any ſtriſe ended: and ſo as Ambroſe ſaith, nulla cauſa ſine cauſa, there ſhould be no cauſe or queſtion without a queſtion.

Heb. 6. 15.

Argum. 3. We finde thoſe in Scripture condemned which have diſſembled, who might notwithſtanding have helped the matter with ſuch mentall reſervation, if it had been lawfull: as when Ananias and Sapphira brought but part of the money which they had ſold their poſſeſſions for, and ſhee being demanded ſaid they ſold it for ſo much: they might by a ſecret reſervation have made it good, meaning for ſo much as they purpoſed to give in common: yet are they condemned for lying againſt the Holy Ghoſt.

Acts 5. 8.

Maſter Parſons evaſion here is, that the woman was juſtly examined by her lawfull ſuperiour, and therefore no clauſe of reſervation could ſave her ſpeech from lying, &c.

Mitigat. p. 454. n. 29.

Contra. 1. Yet S. Peter was examined by a maid, an incompetent judge, when hee denied he knew Chriſt: then belike in this caſe hee being unlawfully demanded by an unlawfull perſon might have equivocated, ſaying, I know him not, that is, to tell it you, or ſuch like: but theſe trickes Saint Peter thought not of: it was not any ſuch ſhift that could have excuſed him: he found no way but by repentance to confeſſe his ſinne.

2 Their owne Aquinas thinketh it unlawfull to tell a lie, though the Judge proceed not ſecundum ordinem juris, according to law: hee is not bound hee ſaith in that caſe to anſwer, but by ſome other meanes, as by appeale or ſuch like to eſcape, mendacium dicere non licet, hee muſt not in any wiſe tell a lie.

2. 2. qu. 69. art. 1. argum. 2.

3 Well then, with a competent Judge, by their owne confeſſion it is not lawfull to equivocate: what ſay they then to one James Standiſh a Jeſuite Prieſt, who being asked of the Pope, whether the reſt of the Prieſts were conſenting to the ſetting up of the Hierarchie in England, anſwered, they were: (whereas indeed they were not) with this reſervation, as I ſuppoſe. See here, this fellow did equivocate with a Pope, no incompetent Judge of theirs.

Quodlibet pag. 66.

4 And if it be ſinne to equivocate with a competent Judge, then are they to blame ſo to dally with the Civill Magiſtrate, who is their lawfull Judge.

Argum. 4. Adde hereunto the practice of former times, which have counted this manner of deceit verie odious. Origen is charged in ſome caſes to defend lying, and holdeth it to be profitable for men, ſo that they uſe it warily, tanquam medicamento & condimento, as a medicine and as ſauce: but he is reproved of Hierome for it: that was condemned as an impious act in Arrius, who being compelled by Conſtantine to ſubſcribe to the acts of the Nicene Councell, had his owne opinion written under his left arme, and then laying his hand upon that place, ſaid, he beleeved as he had written, &c. What did he elſe but equivocate, reſerving a ſecret meaning to himſelfe, that he beleeved as hee had written in that paper, which he kept ſecret. The Priſcillianiſts thought it lawfull for them to deny their religion, and to equivocate, as thoſe which deny themſelves to be Popiſh Prieſts: againſt whom Auguſtine writeth.

Socrates lib. 1. hiſtor.

Lib contra mendac. ad Conſentium.

Argum. 5. This popiſh device of mentall reſervation tendeth to the utter overthrow of juſtice, and all judiciall proceedings, it maketh a way to perjurie, and bringeth in a confuſion of all things into Church and Common-wealth: for when ſhall any malefactor be diſcovered, any perjured perſon detected, any matter by witneſſe proved: if it ſhould be lawfull for one being examined, to finde out an evaſion and ſtarting hole, by a ſecret meaning reſerved to himſelfe, and not expreſſed: for thus a theefe ſhall be no theefe, a murtherer none ſuch: for he may ſay he did not ſteale or kill, with a ſecret meaning, to ſuch or ſuch a purpoſe, whereas he committed both.

Now further, whereas their uſuall ſhift is, that it is not lawfull to equivocate with a competent Judge, but with others they may: herein we ſee how well theſe popiſh ſectaries do imitate their forefathers the old Priſcilliane heretikes: for thus they ſaid, it was ſufficient to ſpeake the truth in the heart, and they were bound only to utter the truth to their neighbours; but true Catholike Chriſtians they hold to be none of their neighbours. The like trick Hierome ſheweth to have been taken up by heretikes: they thought they were bound onely to ſpeake the truth to their neighbours, that is, ſuch as were of their owne ſect: by the which they underſtand, nos, qui nondum initiati ſumus audire debere mendacium, that we which are not yet initiate, ought to heare nothing but lies: To this purpoſe Hierome. This fraudulent device then and deepe fetch of hypocrites, let us ſend backe together with the preſent patrons thereof, to the old ſchoole of the heretikes, as not beſeeming any good Chriſtian, nor ſafe for any well ordered Common-wealth.

Now to conclude: 1 Iuſtinus Martyr of the Greeke Church ſheweth how farre Chriſtians were in time of perſecution from ſuch equivocating, whereby they might have eſcaped: Wee being asked, deny not, becauſe wee are not guiltie to our ſelves of any evill, thinking it an impious thing, (not to ſpeake the truth in all things.)

3 The judgement of the reformed Churches is ſeene by the generall conſent of the Church, and Kingdome of England in their Act of Parliament, againſt all equivocating in taking the oath of Allegeance cited before.

4 Many of their owne authors condemne this mentall reſervation, as Thomas Aquinas, alleaged before, and Scotus: and of their late writers, Sepulveda, Azarius, Maldonate, Emmanuel Sa: whoſe teſtimonies are at large handled and juſtified againſt Parſons by a learned writer of our Church: to whoſe Treatiſe I refer the Reader, thinking it not neceſſarie to fill up this volume, with the citing at large of teſtimonies of that nature. And ſo I conclude this point with that ſaying of the woman falſly accuſed of adulterie, repeated by Hierome, who being put to great torments, would not betray her innocencie by a falſe accuſation of her ſelfe, but turned her ſelfe unto Chriſt, thus moſt conſtantly reſolving: Thou art my witneſſe Lord Ieſus, non ideo me negare velle ne peream, ſed ideo mentiri nolle, ne peccem: That I therefore will not deny, leſt I ſhould die, but leſt I ſhould ſinne, that therefore I will not lie, &c. This were a better reſolution for theſe equivocators, if they were innocent; but lying better fitteth their nocent profeſſion. Thus much touching the oath of Allegeance, and the particular queſtions incident thereunto: now I will proceed.

Hieron ad Innocent. de mulier. ſepties icta.

The ſecond part of the Queſtion, Concerning S. Peters Patrimony, whether the Pope may be a temporall Prince.

The Papiſts.

THey ſay that it is not againſt the word of God, that the Pope ſhould bee both a temporall and Eccleſiaſticall Prince, and that both the ſwords of ſpirituall and Eccleſiaſticall juriſdiction doe belong unto him: and that he is the right heire of S. Peters patrimony: to him belongeth as chiefe Lord the Imperiall citie of Rome, the palace of Laterane; Capua alſo and Apulia are his, Diſtinct. 9. Conſtantin.

64. Error. Bellarm lib. 2. cap. 9.

Fox, pag. 93.

1 Moſes (ſaith the Jeſuite) was both Prieſt and Prince: ſo was Heli, 1 Sam. 4. He judged Iſrael fortie yeeres: ſo were alſo the Macchabees, Iudas, Ionathan, Simon: yea Melchiſedech long before Moſes, was Prieſt and King: Ergo, the Pope is lawfully both chiefe Biſhop, and chiefe Prince alſo, and Lord of that which he now poſſeſſeth, Bellarm. cap. 9.

Anſw. Concerning Melchiſedech: who knoweth not, that he being King and Prieſt, was a lively figure of our Saviour Chriſts ſpirituall kingdome and prieſthood? Heb. 7. And as yet the offices of the ſpirituall and temporall government were not diſtinguiſhed: for all the Patriarkes, Abraham,

Heb. 7. 2. 3.

Iſaack, Iacob, and the reſt were Sacrificers, therefore we cannot borrow any examples from them for this matter.

Moſes alſo did offer ſacrifice to God, and was chiefe Judge both in ſpirituall and temporall affaires unto the people, untill ſuch time, as when by Gods commandement Aaron was choſen to the Prieſthood, unto whom the charge of ſacrifices and unto his ſonnes was committed: ſo Moſes remained ſtill Prince of the people, whom Ioſua ſucceeded, and Aaron was inveſted to the Prieſthood, and ſo the offices were diſtinct. This example therefore of Moſes is extraordinarie, and prooveth not. Levit.8.9.

Concerning the time when Eli judged Iſrael, which was in the dayes of the Judges, we muſt underſtand that the government of Iſrael was verie diſſolute, and men were left to themſelves to doe almoſt what themſelves liſted: as *Judg.*17. we read that Micah ſet up an Idoll in his houſe, and the reaſon is rendred, there was no King in Iſrael, but everie man did that which ſeemed good in his owne eyes. Likewiſe the Tribe of Dan offered violence to Micah, and robbed him, *Judg.*18. For there was no King in Iſrael, *verſ.*1. The Levites wife was moſt ſhamefully abuſed by the Gibeonites: for there was no King, *chap.*19.1. The men of Benjamin tooke them wives by force: for they had no King, *chap.*21.25. So you ſee that both religion was corrupted, and the manners of the people grew to be outragious; and all becauſe there was no perfect diſtinct goverment, there was no King in Iſrael. Judg.19.1.21.25.

In Eli his time the word of God was precious, 1 *Sam.*3.1. Great was the ignorance of the whole land: the licentiouſneſſe alſo of his ſons was a great offence to all Iſrael, and brought a great decay of godlineſſe with it, 1 *Sam.*2.17,23. Yea they cauſed the people through their evill example to ſin, *verſ.*24. Wherefore Eli his houſe was judged of God for his remiſneſſe in government, in not correcting his ſonnes, *chap.*3.13. And hee that cannot rule his owne houſe, how ſhould hee care for the Church, 1 *Tim.*3.5. It cannot now be proved by the example of Eli, that the civill government was annexed to the Prieſthood by the Lords appointment: but it is rather to be aſcribed to the corruption of thoſe times: for having no King nor Captaine over them, they were driven of neceſſitie to come to the high Prieſt, unto whom the judgement of many matters was committed by the Law of God, *Deut.*17.8. *Levit.*13.2. But the Prieſthood and the civill Magiſtracie were two diſtinct things alwayes from the time of the Law eſtabliſhed. 1 Sam.3.1. 1 Sam.2.17. Deut.17.8. Levit.13.2.

It is then no good argument which is drawne from the practice and example of thoſe corrupt times: And yet we ſay not that theſe offices were ſo diſtinct, but that the Lord might raiſe up ſome extraordinarie Prophet, as hee did Samuel, who to reſtore juſtice and religion decayed, might for a time both judge the people and offer ſacrifice, as we ſee he did.

As for the examples of the Macchabees, they move us not, you muſt bring better Scripture for your purpoſe: the authoritie of thoſe bookes binde us not: and againe, we ſee they did contrarie to the Law, in taking upon them both offices: for the Prieſthood was annexed to the poſteritie of Aaron for ever, *Num.*3.10. and the Scepter was not to depart from Iuda till Chriſt came, *Gen.*49.10. As the Lord alſo had promiſed to David, that the Kingdome ſhould remaine in his ſeed, 2 *Chro.*22.3. Numb.3.10. Gen.49.10. 2 Chro.22.3.

Laſtly, Gelaſius that famous Biſhop of Rome ſhall anſwer the Jeſuites argument, whoſe authoritie I truſt he will not deny. Thus he writeth, Tom. Anathematis. Ante adventum Chriſti quidam figuraliter adhuc in carnalibus actibus conſtituti, &c. Before the comming of Chriſt, ſome figuratively in carnall and earthly acts were both Kings and Prieſts: ſuch an one was Melchiſedech: which the Devill alſo imitated in his members, ſo that the Pagan Emperours would alſo be called chiefe Prieſts: But after that Chriſt was come, both the true King and Prieſt, neither was the Emperour any more called by the Prieſts name, neither did the Prieſt challenge the Kingly ſtate. So Chriſt hath diſtinguiſhed both offices by their proper acts and dignities, that both Chriſtian Emperours, as touching eternall life ſhould need the help of Prieſts, and they in temporall things ſhould uſe the benefit of Imperiall decrees.

Thus then according to this fathers ſentence, it followeth not, that becauſe before Chriſts comming, both powers were united in ſome figuratively, therefore it ſhould be ſo now: nay he ſaith, that ſince Chriſts comming, this confuſion of the Prieſtly and Kingly office is in Satans members onely to be found: an hard ſentence againſt the Biſhop of Rome, by a former Biſhop of Rome, which maketh him, challenging the uſe of both ſwords, no better than a limb of the Devill.

*Argum.*2. Conſtantine the Great gave unto the Pope the chiefe government of the Citie of Rome, and other Lordſhips in Italy, yea the ſoveraigntie over the Weſt parts: why then is it not lawfull for him to enjoy his gift? *Bellarm. lib.*5. *cap.*9.

Anſw. Firſt, the donation of Conſtantine ſeemeth to be forged: for if Conſtantine reſigned to Silveſter the politicall dominion of the Weſt parts, how could he then have diſtributed his Empire amongſt his ſonnes, as the Weſt part to one, the Eaſt to the ſecond, the middle part to the third? Againe, the Donation ſaith, that Conſtantine was baptized at Rome by Silveſter before the battell againſt Maximinus, and that then the patrimony was given: but it is certaine by ſtories that hee was baptized at Nicomedia, by Euſebius Biſhop there, in the 31. yeere of his reigne: wherefore it ſeemeth to be a forged and deviſed thing, plur. apud Fox, pag.105.

2 Æneas Silvius ſaith, that Mathilda, a noble Dutcheſſe in Italy, gave thoſe lands to the Pope, Fox, proteſtat. ad Angl.

which are called S. Peters patrimony: how then can it be true that they were given by Conſtantine? Thirdly, the Popiſh Doctors and Canoniſts confeſſe, that Conſtantines grant is not ſo much to bee counted a donation, as a reſtitution of that which tyrannouſly was taken from him: but he hath his power ſpirituall and temporall immediatly from Chriſt. You ſee then that they themſelves make no great reckoning of Conſtantines donation. Antoni. ſumma, major. 3. part.

Agathon Biſhop of Rome, long after Conſtantines time the Great, thus writeth to Conſtantine another Emperour of that name, Hanc Romanam urbem ſervilem veſtri Chriſtianiſſimi Imperii: This Roman Citie ſervile or ſubject to your moſt Chriſtian Empire, &c. Ergo, it was not exempted from ſubjection to the Empire, as Conſtantines forged donation granteth.

Fox, pag. 791. 793.

Yet if Conſtantinus that good Emperour had been ſo minded, to have beſtowed the imperiall dignitie upon the Biſhop of Rome, there remaineth a great queſtion, whether he ought to have accepted of it or not, nay he ſhould have refuſed it: for the temporall ſword belongeth not to ſpirituall governours; At the leaſt it had beene a charitable part, not to have ſuffered the Emperour to diſinherit his owne ſonnes, for to enrich the See of Rome; as Auguſtine verie well ſaith, Qui vult exhæredato filio, Eccleſiam hæredem facere, quærat alterum, qui ſuſcipiat, non Auguſtinum, immo Deo propitio nullum inveniat. Hee that would make the Church his heire, and defeat his owne children, let him ſeeke ſome body elſe to accept of his gift: ſurely Auguſtine will not, nor I truſt any honeſt man beſide.

Ad Frat. in eremo, ſer. 52.

Our Doway men doe here alſo help at a dead lift: they give this note, Iudith 4. verſ. 5. that Eliakim the Prieſt did manage the temporall affaires of the Common-wealth at this time, by conſent and commiſſion of King Manaſſes, as is moſt probable, thoſe things happening ſhortly after his repentance.

Contra. 1. We except to the authoritie of this booke, being no part of the canonicall Scripture. 2 The booke being admitted, they doe make too bold in cutting off this whole ſentence: they did as the high Prieſt Eliakim had commanded: and all the ancients of the people at Ieruſalem. This clauſe is omitted, which ſheweth that it was not the command of Eliakim only, but of all the whole Senate. 3 Eliakim could not be in Manaſſes time: for chap. 5. 18. it is ſaid, the Temple had beene caſt downe and deſtroyed, which was not done in Manaſſes time, nor many yeeres after, untill the captivitie of Babylon. 4 It is well they grant that the high Prieſt had this commiſſion from the King: the Pope then muſt ſhew his commiſſion from temporall Princes for his princely dominion: And if it be by commiſſion and grant from them, he hath it not by inheritance, and they which gave it him, may alſo take it away.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt, we willingly grant that the Church may enjoy thoſe temporall poſſeſſions, which have beene of old granted unto it for the better maintenance thereof, ſo they be not abuſed to riot and exceſſe; as the Levites beſide their tithes, had their cities and fields, Numb. 35. Secondly, the judgement of Eccleſiaſticall matters doth of right appertain to the Church, as Amariah the Prieſt was the chiefe in all matters of the Lord, 2 Chron. 19. 11. Thirdly, we doe not utterly exclude ſpirituall perſons from temporall cauſes: but as the civill Magiſtrate hath his intereſt in ordaining of Eccleſiaſticall lawes, ſo ſpirituall perſons ought not to be ſtrangers from the civill ſtate; being meet men for their knowledge and conſcience to be conſulted withall, and conferred with, and to be joyned in Councell with the Magiſtrate in difficult matters: as we read, Deut. 17. 8. how the high Prieſt and chiefe Judge did joyne in mutuall help and aſſiſtance. But that any ſpirituall perſon may bee a temporall Prince, and have the chiefe government of both ſtates, and handle both ſwords, we ſay it is contrarie to the word of God: for in theſe three points ſtandeth chiefly the office of the Prince; In making and ordaining civill lawes, in having power of life and death, in proclaiming of warre, and waging of battell: with none of theſe ought Eccleſiaſticall perſons to deale, as we will now ſhew in order.

2 Chron. 19. 11.

Argum. 1. Concerning the making of civill lawes and ſtatutes, though the Eccleſiaſticall body, according to the ancient cuſtome of this land, have their ſuffrage and voyce, and doe give conſent: yet the chiefe ſtroke in allowing, confirming, and enacting of ſuch lawes is in the Prince, and cannot agree or be matched with any ſpirituall office.

2 Cor. 2. 16.

Saint Paul ſaith, Who is ſufficient for theſe things? that is, for the worke of the Miniſterie, 2 Cor. 2. 16. If therefore ſpirituall perſons ſuffice not to execute to the full their ſpirituall charge, though they ſhould bend all their ſtudy and care that way, much more inſufficient ſhall they be, if they bee entangled in temporall affaires, for the well guiding and ordring whereof a whole man likewiſe is ſcarce ſufficient.

2 Tim. 2. 4.

Againe (ſaith he) No man that warreth, entangleth himſelfe with the affaires of this life, 2 Tim. 2. 4. By affaires ſecular here are not only underſtood (as the Jeſuite imagineth) merchandiſe, traffick, buying, ſelling, and ſuch like, but the care and charge alſo of civill government, of making lawes and orders for the civill ſtate, which muſt needs be a great let to the ſpirituall buſineſſe, and require greater ſtudy and labour, than the other baſer works which are named. To this Auguſtine agreeth: Quo jure (ſaith he) defendis villas, &c? Unde quiſque poſſidet quod habet? Iure humano, jure Imperatorum: quare? quia ipſa jura humana per imperatores & reges ſeculi Deus diſtribuit generi humano. tract. in Iohann. 6. By what law doeſt thou defend thy poſſeſſions? by the law of man, the law of the Emperours: for theſe humane lawes, by Gods ordinance are given unto men by the Emperours and Kings of the world.

world, &c. See then, civill lawes, and humane conſtitutions are given and made, not by the Pope, Prieſt, or any other Prelate, but only by Kings and Princes, and the civill magiſtrates.

So alſo ſaith the Civill Law, Cod. lib. 1. tit. 20. leg. 2. Imperatori ſolo leges condere conceſſum eſt: It is only lawfull for the Emperour to make lawes: Iuſtinian. Likewiſe their owne Canons affirme the ſame, decret. Gregor. lib. 4. tit. 17. cap. 7. Alexand. 3. ad Regem pertinet non ad Eccleſiam de talibus poſſeſſionibus iudicare: It belongeth to the King not to the Church to judge of ſuch poſſeſſions.

Argum. 2. It were a monſtrous and an unnaturall thing, that any Eccleſiaſticall governour ſhould have power of life and death: for he hath no better right to the civill ſword, than the Prince to the Eccleſiaſticall ſword: and if it bee not lawfull for the civill Magiſtrate to excommunicate, which is as the ſpirituall ſword, and the greateſt cenſure of the Church: no more is it to bee ſuffered, that by the authority or commandement of any Eccleſiaſticall perſon, any man ſhould bee put to death.

The high Prieſt was not to deale with matters of blood, which touched the life: but the offenders were brought to the gates of the Citie, where the Magiſtrates ſate, Deut. 17. 5. Not to the Temple, Deut. 17. 5.
where the Prieſt miniſtred. Nay, we ſee, that in the moſt corrupt times of the Jewiſh Commonwealth, namely, when they put our bleſſed Saviour to death, the Prieſts did not challenge any ſuch power: It is not lawfull (ſay they) for us to put any to death, Ioh. 18. 31. But that power was in the temporall Iohn 18. 31.
Magiſtrate, as Pilate ſaid to Chriſt: Knoweſt thou not, that I have power to crucifie thee, and power to looſe thee? Ioh. 19. 10. Ergo, the Pope cannot be a temporall Prince to have power of life and death. Iohn 19. 10.
And it is contrary to your owne Canons: decret. p. 2. cauſ. 23. qu. 8. c. 20. Gregor. Quia Deum timeo, in mortem cujuſlibet hominis me miſcere formido: becauſe I feare God, I dare not entermeddle with the death of any. Likewiſe cauſ. 33. q. 2. c. 6. Nicolaus, Eccleſia gladium non habet, niſi ſpiritualem; non occidit, ſed vivificat: The Church hath no ſword but the ſpirituall; it killeth not, but giveth life. Now, whereas the examples of Phinehes, that killed the adulterer and adultereſſe; and of Samuel, that hewed Agag in peeces with his owne hands, might be urged; their owne gloſſe thus anſwereth: Miracula veteris Teſtamenti ſunt admiranda: The miracles of the old Teſtament are worthy rather of admiration, than fit for our imitation; for many things were permitted then, which are prohibited now, &c. And a little before: Nathan, when he reproved the King, did execute his owne office, hee did not uſurpe the Kings office, he did admoniſh him to repent, hee did not give ſentence of death againſt him, as an adulterer, &c. Cauſ. 2. qu. 7. cap. 41. gloſſ.

But it will here be anſwered, as Boniface 8. hath decreed, Sext. decretal. lib. 3. tit. 24. c. 3. That a Clergie man having temporall juriſdiction, may without feare of Irregularitie, commit the judgement of death to his Bailiffe & Miniſter, &c. To the which we reply, that this notwithſtanding is contrary to the ancient Canons alleaged before, that a Clergie man ought not to meddle, or intermingle himſelfe with matters of blood: but now he muſt meddle, giving authority to others to doe it, for the authority of him that commandeth, is greater than of the Miniſter.

Argum. 3. If the Pope be a temporall Prince, then he may wage battell, which although the Jeſuite dare not plainly affirme, yet it followeth neceſſarily upon his aſſertion: for it is lawfull for any temporall Prince to make warre: And it hath been the common practice of Popes and popiſh prelates ſo to doe.

There were great and bitter battailes fought between Urbane the ſixth, and the Antipope Clement, in the which on the one ſide there were 5000. ſlaine. Fox pag. 434. col. 2. Henry Spenſer a luſtie young Pag. 400. l. 30.
blood, Biſhop of Norwich, was the Popes Captaine generall in France: where he ſacked the towne of Gravenidge, and put man, woman, and child to the ſword. p. 446. col. 2. Pag. 411. l. 60.

So Pope Iulius caſt his keyes into the River Tybris, and tooke himſelfe to his ſword: waged many battels, and at the laſt was encountred withall by Lewes the French King, upon Eaſter day: where there was of his armie ſlaine, to the number of 16000. But theſe warlike affaires of the Pope miſliked the papiſts themſelves: for hee was therefore condemned in the Councell of Turone in France, Anno 1510. Fox p. 798. We may ſee how well theſe furious Popes doe follow the rule of Chriſt, who Pag. 734. l. 40. commanded Peter to put up his ſword into his ſheath: if it were not lawfull for Peter to ſtrike with the ſword, how is it lawfull for the Popes, that, I am ſure, dare not challenge more to themſelves, than was lawfull for Peter? Thus wee ſee how abſurd a thing it is, that the Pope ſhould bee a temporall Prince.

Let us examine antiquity for this point, Concil. Conſtantin. 5. action. 1. Antimus the Biſhop of Trapezuntium was complained of to the Councell, that he ſhould affirme, Magnitudinem & dignitatem ſacerdotii non ſpiritualem eſſe animarum curam, ſed quendam civilem principatum: That the dignity of the Prieſthood conſiſteth not in the ſpirituall care of ſoules, but in a civill kinde of Princedome, &c. Of this judgement ſeemeth the Biſhop of Rome to bee, which then miſliked the whole generall Councell.

Concil. Toletan. 11. can. 6. His à quibus Domini Sacramenta tractanda ſunt, judicium ſanguinis agitare non licet: They by whom the Sacraments of our Lord ought to be handled, ought not to meddle with the judgement of blood: Ergo, they can be no temporall Princes, for to ſuch belongeth the judgement of death and life.

This truth have the holy Martyrs ſealed: William Swinderby condemned for Gods truth, I ſay, if the Pope hold men of armes, &c. to venge himſelfe on them that offend him, and gives remiſſion of ſins to them that fight and ſlay them that contrarie him, as men ſaid he did by the Biſhop of Norwich, not putting his ſword into his ſheath, as God commanded Peter, he is Antichriſtus: for he doth contrarie to the commandement of Ieſus, that bade Peter forgive his brother ſeventie ſithe ſeven ſithe, &c. Fox, pag. 470. Pag.432.2.90.

I thinke it not amiſſe in the laſt place to adjoyne the ſentence of a Popiſh Biſhop, Ægidius Viterbienſ. uttered in an oration which he made before Iulius the ſecond. The foreſaid warlike Pope in the Councell of Laterane, beginning thus, To the reformation of the Church as many other things, ſo eſpecially the late loſſe of our armie ought to ſtir us up: which I thinke hath fallen out by the Divine Providence, Quo armis Eccleſia alienis freti cederemus; ut ad noſtra redeuntes victores evaderemus: noſtra arma ſunt pietas, religio, ſupplicationes: To the end that while we uſe ſtrange and forreine weapons we ſhould give place, and taking our owne ſhould returne victorers: our proper armour is godlineſſe, religion, prayer: Remember, ſaith he, the warre that Moſes had with Amalech, Videbis populum armis fidentem, Deo charum, vinci ſemper; contrà ſemper vincere precibus ſupplicantem: You ſhall ſee the people even beloved of God, while they truſt to their weapons, alwayes to be overcome: but while they are in their prayers, to be themſelves overcommers, &c. Thus he is bold to reprove the Pope even to his noſe (and he doth it without checke) for his warlike humour and diſpoſition.

And indeed herein they doe contrarie to their owne Canons, as Diſt.36.3. Moſes ad bella non vadit, &c. Moſes goeth not to warre, hee fighteth not againſt the enemies: but what doth hee? hee prayeth: and the people overcome. Wherefore it is a Biſhops part to pray, &c.

Againe, cauſ.23.c.1. Ioann.8. Terram defendere, &c. To defend the Countrey, to deale with warre, belongeth to the terrene power. Ibid. c.3. Innocentius, Chriſt being taken of the Jewes, when Peter had ſtriken off ones eare, he forbiddeth him to ſmite; giving an example to all Biſhops, not to uſe carnall weapons, &c.

Ibid. cap.19. Pope Nicholas findeth fault with certaine Biſhops, which kept watch and ward upon the Sea coaſts againſt the Pirats: Militum Chriſti eſt Chriſto ſervire: It is the part of Chriſts ſouldiers to ſerve Chriſt, &c.

Thus we ſee how unjuſtly the Popes of Rome, and contrarie to their owne Canons, challenge to be temporall Princes; which their ambition hath much miſliked ſome of their owne writers: as a ſober and grave author of their ſide giveth an inſtance in the Biſhop of Wirceburge, who ever ſince Charles the Great, hath borne both the chiefe Eccleſiaſticall and temporall office there; and upon feſtivall dayes hath the ſword carried before him: and the Biſhops there lye buried with a naked ſword in the one hand, and a paſtorall ſtaffe in the other. The ſame author ſheweth the juſt judgement of God upon that See, how as they governed by the ſword contrarie to their calling, ſo divers of them periſhed by the ſword. Eſpenc. in 1 ad Tim. p.269.a.

I cannot here omit to rehearſe two merrie conceits uttered upon this occaſion, one by a Countrie fellow, of the Biſhop of Colone, bearing the perſon both of a Biſhop and a Captaine: Velim diſcere, &c. I would faine know, ſaith he, when the Devill ſhall carrie this Captaine to hell, whom you repreſent, whither then the Biſhop ſhall goe? Fulgoſus lib. 6. cap.2. The other by a ſouldier of the Cardinall Balua, ſent by Lewis the 11. to take muſter of the ſouldiers at Paris: O prudent King, ſaith he, you have ſent this Cardinall, Biſhop of Ebroike, to muſter your ſouldiers, ſend me alſo to his Dioceſſe to make Prieſts: for I can do that as well as he the other, &c. Guaguinus lib.10. Thus we ſee that this Popiſh ambition was derided even of the common and ſimple people. And thus I conclude this place with that ſaying of S. Ambroſe: Non convenit unum hominem duplicem profeſſionem habere: It is not fit for one man to have a double profeſſion or calling.

1 At this day the practice of the Muſcovites following the Greeke Church is, omnes adminiſtrationes ſeculares illis adempta ſunt: All ſecular adminiſtrations are taken from their Biſhops. Guaguin. de religion. Muſcovitar.

2 So alſo the Patriarke of Æthiopia hath nothing to doe with the affaires of the Kingdome or temporall adminiſtration, Sed tantum ſpiritualium curam habet: But hath onely the care and charge of ſpirituall things. Franciſ. Titlemann. de fid. & relig. Æthiop.

3 Confeſſ. of Saxony, artic. 11. Biſhops have not authoritie by the word of God, to puniſh the diſobedient, neither doe they poſſeſſe the Kingdomes of the world, &c. Sweveland artic. 23. Biſhops and other Eccleſiaſticall men were promoted by moſt godly Emperours and Kings, to an externall government in civill affaires, wherein though they were religious and wiſe, yet in this point they offended, becauſe they were not able to diſcharge both theſe functions ſufficiently, &c.

4 Touching the donation of Conſtantine, whereby the Pope claimeth to be a temporall Prince; Laurentius Valla holdeth it as forged, and writ a booke againſt it: ſo doth alſo Melchior Canus, becauſe Euſebius, Socrates, Ruffinus, and other Eccleſiaſticall Hiſtorians, which ſet forth the geſts of Conſtantine, make no mention of it, but deliver the contrarie rather, that he divided his whole Kingdome among his three ſonnes, Ut Italia uni eorum tota contigerit, That all Italy muſt needs fall to one of them. Æneas Sylvius, who was alſo afterward Pope, called Pius 2. did hold it to bee a baſtardly writing, as Balbus confeſſeth. Of Conſtantines donation. Canus loc. Theol. l.11. c.5. Balb. Epiſcop. lib. de coronat. p.49.

The

The ninth queſtion, of the prerogatives of the Pope.

BEſide theſe privileges and immunities of the Sea of Rome, which hitherto wee have ſpoken of both in ſpirituall and temporall matters, there are other prerogatives, which have been in times paſt given to the Biſhops of Rome, moſt blaſphemous and wicked, which the Papiſts of this age are aſhamed of, and therefore paſſe them over with ſilence: for Bellarmine ſaith nothing of them: Wee will therefore ſpare our labour in confuting of them, they are ſo groſſe and abſurd, but only bring them forth, that the godly reader may underſtand the abomination of the whore of Babylon.

There are three monſtrous and ſhamefull prerogatives, which the Canoniſts aſcribed to the Pope in times paſt: and they are theſe; his power diſpenſative, his power exemptive, his power tranſcendent; ſo we will call them at this time.

1 His prerogative in diſpenſing was wonderfull: it would offend a Chriſtian eare to heare what his groſſe Canoniſts are nothing aſhamed to ſay, Papa poteſt diſpenſare contra jus divinum: The Pope may diſpence againſt the law of God, contra jus natura, againſt the law of nature, contra Apoſtolum, againſt the Apoſtle, contra novum teſtamentum, againſt the new Teſtament: Nay, Papa poteſt diſpenſare de omnibus praceptis veteris & novi teſtamenti: The Pope may diſpence with all the Commandements both of the old and new law. What intolerable blaſphemies are here? The practices alſo of Popes are agreeable hereunto: for did not the Court of Rome diſpence with King Henry the eights marriage with his brothers wife? but that ungodly diſpenſation at the laſt was overthrowne: and it was well concluded by act of Parliament, anno 1533. That no man had authoritie to diſpence with Gods lawes. 53. Error. Iuel. pag. 79. Defenſ. Apol. Fox pag. 785.

Symmachus Biſhop of Rome hereunto agreeth, concluding thus: Roman. ſynod. 6. Non licet Imperatori vel cuipiam pietatem cuſtodienti aliquid contra mandata divina praſumere, nec quicquam quod Evangelicis propheticiſque & Apoſtolicis obviat, agere. It is not lawfull for the Emperor, or any other that holdeth the true religion, to preſume any thing againſt Gods commandements, or to doe that which doth contrary the writings of the Prophets or Apoſtles.

Likewiſe Fabiane: Hee that feareth God will not attempt any thing againſt the Goſpell, Apoſtles, or Prophets, cauſ. 11. quaſt. 3. cap. 95.

Marcellin. cauſ. 25. quaſt. 1. cap. 8. Stare non valet, &c. It cannot ſtand, which is done againſt the Evangelicall or Apoſtolicall doctrine.

Adde the judgement of Biſhop Latimer holy Martyr: If it bee of God, Quis poteſt diſſolvere; niſi qui videbitur Deo repugnare? Who can diſſolve it, unleſſe hee will ſeeme to reſiſt God? Fox pag. 1750 col. 1. P. 1588. 2. 30.

Biſhop Cranmer holy Martyr; That the Biſhop of Rome had no authority to diſpence with the word of God, and Scripture, Fox pag. 1861. col. 2. Pag. 1690. 1, 10.

2 Concerning his power exemptive: the Pope (ſay they) is not bound to any law: No man is to judge or accuſe him of any crime, either of adulterie, murther, ſimony, or ſuch like. If he fall into adulterie, or homicide, he cannot be accuſed; but rather excuſed, by the murthers of Sampſon, thefts of the Hebrewes, the adulterie of Iacob: As Oziah was ſtricken for putting his hand to the Arke inclining, no more muſt ſubjects rebuke their Prelates going awry: by the inclination of the Arke, the fall of Prelates is underſtood. This generally is the opinion of the Canoniſts: but ſome other of them do hold the contrary, that it is lawfull, even for an inferiour Prieſt to rebuke the Pope, Rhemiſt. Annot. in 2. Galath. ſect. 8. Wherefore, ſeeing they confute themſelves, they need not any other refutation. 54. Error. Fox pag. 785. artic. 188. Fox pag. 788. artic. 130.

In former times you ſhall find, that the Popes doings have been called in queſtion: When Bonifacius 1. was choſen Pope, and one Eulalius by his confederates was ſet up againſt him, Valentinianus and Honorius the Emperours, the better to have their right and title examined, commanded, ut ambo exirent civitate, that both of them ſhould void the citie. Afterward Symmachus and Laurentius contended about the Popedome, the Senators made relation to K. Theodoricus, deſiring him, Vt viſitationem daret ſedi Apoſtolica: tunc rex dedit Albma civitatis Epiſcopum, to ſend a viſitation to the Apoſtolike Sea: and the King ſent the Biſhop of Albin, as viſitor thither, &c. By thoſe and ſuch other examples it appeareth, that the Biſhops of Rome in times paſt have not been without checke and controlement.

3 Concerning the third power, which we call Tranſcendent: one ſaith, that, Non minor honor Papa debetur, quàm Angelis: That there is no leſſe honour due to the Pope, than to Angels. Another ſaith, Papatus eſt ſumma virtus creata, The Popedome is the higheſt power that was created of God, above Angels, or Archangels. Againe, thoſe words of the Pſalme, Thou haſt put all things under his feet, as ſheep and oxen, fowles of the aire, fiſhes of the ſea: they thus blaſphemouſly applie to the Pope, by ſheep and oxen, underſtanding men living upon earth; by the fowles of the aire, the Angels in heaven, whom they ſay, the Pope may command; by the fiſhes, the ſoules in purgatory; Over all theſe the Pope (ſay they) hath abſolute power, who may, if it pleaſe him, releaſe all purgatory at once. What horrible blaſphemies are here; Yet our Rhemiſts and other Jeſuites are ſomewhat more modeſt, which confeſſe that the Pope is but Chriſts Vicar in the regiment of that part which is on the earth, 55. Error. Antoninus in Sum. part. 3. John de Pariſ. Antoninus Sum. major. part. 3. diſt. 22.

Annot. 1. Epheſ. ſect. 5. Seeing then they confute themſelves, wee will not further travell herein, but proceed.

Zozimus decret. Contra ſtatuta patrum condere aliquid, vel mutare, nec hujus quidem ſedis poteſt authoritas: To make or change any thing againſt the decrees of the fathers, not this ſeat hath authoritie: Ergo, the Pope is not higher than Angels, being inferiour unto men his predeceſſors.

The like judgement the ancient Biſhops of Rome were of, that it was not lawfull to depart from the decrees of their predeceſſors: Diſt. 11. cap. 3. Iulius calleth it, Satis indignum, a very unworthy thing ſo to doe. Nicholaus, Ridiculum & abominabile dedecus, A ridiculous and abominable ſhame, diſtinct. 12. 5. Damaſus ſaith, That the violaters of the Canons, blaſphemi ſunt in ſpiritum, do commit blaſphemy againſt the ſpirit: cauſ. 25. quaſt. 1. cap. 5. Gregor. Everſor, non conſtructor, He is a deſtroyer, not a builder, cauſ. 25. quaſt. 2. cap. 4. Iulius calleth it preſumption, ibid. cap. 11. And leſt that other might ſeeme to be tied by theſe Canons to the obſervation of the ancient decrees, and the Pope to be exempted: Pelagius ſaith peremptorily, Ne pontifex ab his diſcedendi licentiam, &c. That not the Pope, though he would, ſhould be ſuffered to depart from the ſtatutes of his predeceſſors, ibid. c. 21. Now then from hence wee conclude: firſt, that ſeeing the Pope hath no power to change the former decrees, much leſſe can he diſpenſe againſt the word of God. Secondly, ſeeing he muſt obſerve the rules of his predeceſſors, he is not exempted from all judgement. Thirdly, ſeeing that he is inferiour to the ancient Biſhops, in that he muſt be ruled by their orders, he is much more inferiour to the Angels.

Ex Ioan. Fabro, de religi. Muſcovitar. Damianus a Goes.

The barbarous Muſcovites which follow the Greeke Church are herein more equall: for they allow their Biſhops to uſe no indulgences at all, ut nulla fraus fiat omnino conſtitutionibus, that there bee no fraud offered to the conſtitutions. The ſame is the practice of the Æthiopike Church, though in many other things, very defective: their Patriarch nullas indulgentias dat, giveth no indulgences: as Zaga Zabo witneſſeth, a Biſhop of that countrey: In theſe poore ignorant Churches, there is no place for indulgences, or diſpenſations againſt their received lawes and conſtitutions, much leſſe againſt the word of God: but proud Rome that boaſteth of knowledge, dare preſumptuouſly arrogate a diſpenſative power, and that without limits or bounds. But wee approve the confeſſion of Baſil, artic. 10. That no man can licenſe thoſe things which God forbiddeth. So alſo the confeſſion of Auſpurg, artic. 5. Neither mens lawes, nor any vowes, are of force, which are againſt the commandement of God, and the event it ſelfe doth teſtifie, that nature cannot be changed by mans law, &c.

Victoria Relect. 4. pa. 5.

Franciſcus de Victoria, one of their owne authors, whom they greatly magnifie, complaineth of the Popes large indulgences: Videmus quotidie a curia Romana tam largas, immo tam diſſolutas diſpenſationes profectas, &c. We ſee ſuch large, yea ſo diſſolute diſpenſations come from the Court of Rome, that the world cannot beare them, &c.

The tenth queſtion, concerning Antichriſt, and whether the Pope bee that great adverſary unto Chriſt.

THis queſtion is divided into many parts. Firſt, whether Antichriſt ſhall be ſome one ſingular man. Secondly, of the time of his comming and continuing. Thirdly, of his name. Fourthly, of what nation or kinred he ſhall come. Fifthly, where his place and ſeat ſhall bee. Sixthly, of his doctrine and manners. Seventhly, of his miracles. Eightly, of his kingdome and warres. Ninthly, whether the Pope be the very Antichriſt. This then is a moſt famous queſtion, and worthy throughly to bee diſcuſſed, every point therefore muſt be handled in order.

The Papiſts.

56. Error.

THey hold that Antichriſt, whoſe comming is foretold in the Scripture, ſhall bee one particular man, not a whole body, tyrannie, or kingdome, as the truth is, Bellarm. cap. 2. lib. 3.

Iohn 5. 43.

Argum. 1. They urge the words of our Saviour, Ioh. 5. 43. I come in my Fathers name, and yee receive me not, if another come in his owne name, him will yee receive. Here Chriſt, ſay they, ſpeaketh of another that ſhall come, namely Antichriſt: for here one is oppoſed to one, namely, Antichriſt to Chriſt, not a Kingdome to a Kingdome, or ſect unto ſect, but one perſon to another, Bellarmine cap. 2. lib. 3.

1 Cor. 3. 10.

Anſw. 1. The ſaying of our Saviour is indefinit and conditionall, if another come, but prophecies are uttered definitely, as Deut. 18. 18. The Lord thy God will raiſe up unto thee a Prophet like unto me, &c. Chriſt then here doth not propheſie of any particular man. 2 The word ὁ ἄλλος, another, doth not neceſſarily ſignifie a particular man, as 1 Cor. 3. 10. I have laid the foundation, another hath builded thereon, but let every one take heed. Here ὁ ἄλλος, another is expounded ἕκαστος, every one. 3 Our Saviour ſpeaketh directly to that generation of the Jewes, when as Antichriſt was not to be revealed. 4 Whereas Bellarmine objecteth, that this place cannot be underſtood of other falſe Prophets, which come not in their owne name, but in the name of God: our anſwer is, that although the falſe prophets pretend the name of God, yet they come in their owne name, as Ierem. 28. 21. I have not ſent theſe prophets, yet they come: and if falſe prophets come not in their owne name, and Antichriſt doth, then it would follow, that Antichriſt ſhould be no falſe prophet. See a further anſwer, error 60. argum. 2.

1 Iohn 2. 18.

Argum. 2. Another proofe is out of 1 Ioh. 2. 18. the Antichriſt ſhall come, ὁ ἀντίχριστος, the Greeke article, ὁ, expreſſeth ſome ſingular notable perſon, Bellarmine ibid.

Anſw. It is falſe. The Greeke article doth not alwayes in Scripture aſſigne ſome particular perſon: as Matth. 4. 4. Man ſhall not live by bread only: the Greeke text hath ὁ ἄνθρωπος, the man, and yet is it underſtood not of any one man, but of all in generall, ſo 2 Tim. 2. 17. The man of God, that is, every faithfull Miniſter, or good Chriſtian, yet is it expreſſed with the article, Fulke Annotat. 2. Theſ. 2. ſect. 8.

Matth. 4. 4.
2 Tim. 2. 17.

Argum. 3. Apocal. 13. 18. It is the number of a man: the proper name of Antichriſt is ſet downe: Ergo, but one man, Bellar. ibid. Rhemenſ. 2 Theſ. 2. ſect. 8.

Apocal. 13. 18.

Anſw. The name here myſtically deſcribed, which ſhall containe 666. in number, for ſo the Greeke letters χ. ξ. ς. do ſignifie being numbred, doth not expreſſe any particular name of one man, but rather of the whole ſocietie and body of Antichriſt: for it is ſaid to be the number of the beaſt. Now by the beaſt is underſtood the Roman Empire, the name whereof is λατεῖνος, Latinus, which letters doe ariſe in computation to the whole number of 666. And this name Irenæus thinketh to agree beſt to this place. Further, ſeeing the Rhemiſts themſelves by the beaſt doe underſtand the univerſall company of the wicked, Revelation 13. verſe 1. And this is the name or number of the beaſt: it muſt bee underſtood, by their owne confeſſion, of a company and congregation, and not of one ſingular perſon.

The Proteſtants.

THat Antichriſt, which is interpreted an adverſarie, or againſt Chriſt, ſhall not be one man, (as the Papiſts imagine, that the Popes might be diſburdened and diſcharged of this name, who are many) but that it is a whole body, company and ſynagogue, and a ſucceſſion of heretiks, wee doe thus prove it.

1 The myſterie of iniquitie wrought in Pauls time, then was there a way in preparing for Antichriſt. 2 Theſ. 2. But it is unpoſſible for one man to continue from Pauls time to the end of the world: Ergo, Antichriſt is not one man, but a ſucceſſion of heretiks.

Argument. Bezæ.
2 Theſſ. 2.

First, Bellarmine anſwereth, that as Chriſt is ſaid to have come ſince the beginning of the world in his forerunners the Prophets and Patriarchs, but yet came not in perſon, till hee tooke fleſh: ſo Antichriſt ſtraight after Chriſts aſcenſion began to worke in his forerunners alſo, but ſhall not come in perſon till toward the end of the world, cap. 2. reſp. ad 1. argument. Bezæ.

Cont. 1. The compariſon betweene Chriſt, and Antichriſt in this behalfe, is not good: for Chriſt is ſaid to have come in the Prophets, becauſe unto them Chriſt did communicate his ſpirit: and therefore Chriſt is ſaid in his ſpirit to have preached by Noah, 1 Pet. 3. 19. But Antichriſt being but a mortall man, cannot give of his malignant ſpirit to his forerunners: for this is not farre from the phrenſie of the Manichees, to make Antichriſt the beginning of evill, as Chriſt is the author of good; that as Chriſt the head doth give influence to his body, ſo Antichriſt another head ſhould alſo inſpire his members. Secondly, but if they will make a good compariſon, as Chriſt is the head of his Church, and the Prophets and Apoſtles his Miniſters; ſo the Devill is the ring-leader of the wicked, and the Antichriſts and falſe prophets his chiefe worke-men: and in this ſenſe Apocal. 13. 7. Michael, that is, Chriſt and his Angels are ſaid to fight againſt the Dragon, that is, the devill and his angels: and as Chriſt ſince the beginning of the world did ſpeake in his ſervants the Prophets, ſo the devill alſo from the beginning ceaſed not to worke in his miniſters; and ſo he began to worke the myſterie of iniquitie againſt the Goſpell in the Apoſtles time. But to ſay, that as he which ruled the true Prophets by his ſpirit was incarnate afterward, and came in his owne perſon; ſo he that miſled the falſe prophets, ſhall alſo come in his perſon, were to make Antichriſt a devill incarnate: for it was the devill that wrought in hereticks and falſe teachers.

1 Pet. 3. 19.

Apoc. 13. 7.

Bellarmine anſwereth againe: if the myſterie of iniquitie began in Pauls time, that is, the kingdome of Antichriſt; and you will needs make Rome the ſeat of Antichriſt: belike S. Paul and S. Peter were the Antichriſts, for there were no Biſhops of Rome beſide at that time.

Anſw. First, that Antichriſt began then to worke even in Rome, it cannot bee denied, ſeeing the Papiſts confeſſe, that Simon Magus firſt broched his hereſie there, and that Peter calleth Rome Babylon. It is not neceſſary, that the myſterie of iniquitie ſhould ſo ſoone creep into the very chaire of the Paſtors, and Biſhops: that ſhould come to paſſe in the full revelation of Antichriſt: It is ſufficient that it wrought cloſely amongſt the falſe Apoſtles: wherefore the Jeſuites objection concerning Peter and Paul, is ridiculous.

Argum. 2. S. Paul ſaith, that there muſt come a departing or Apoſtaſie and generall falling from the faith: for ſo an apoſtaſie ſignifieth, a relinquiſhing of the faith, not a departure from the Roman Empire, or Antichriſt himſelfe, as Bellarmine would have it; ſo the word is uſed by S. Paul elſewhere, 1 Tim. 4. 1 ſome, ſaith he, ἀποστήσονται, ſhall fall away, or play the apoſtataes from the faith: and ſo one of your owne writers expoundeth it, à veritate in errorem deſciſcent; they ſhall fall from the truth into error: Eſpenc. in hunc locum. Common uſe alſo of ſpeech ſo taketh it: Iulian the Emperour is knowne by the name of Apoſtata, for forſaking of the Chriſtian faith: Antiquity alſo hath ſo uſed the word. Alexander patriarch of Alexandria, thus writeth in his Epiſtle as touching the Arrians: Egreſſi ſunt viri è noſtra parochia, docentes apoſtaſiam, quam recte quilibet præcurrere ſuſpicetur Antichriſtum: There bee certaine fellowes gone forth out of our precincts, teaching apoſtaſie (that is, corrupting the right faith) which any man would thinke did forerun Antichriſt. Whereas then the the Rhemiſts affirme, that moſt of the ancient fathers do ſo underſtand Apoſtaſie for a defection from the Empire: it is certaine, that Tertullian, Chryſoſtome, Auguſtine, Primaſius with others doe expound it for a defection from the faith. Fulke annot. 5. in 2. Theſ. 2. Yea and the Rhemiſts ſo take it, ibid. annot. 6.

Now this generall falling away from the faith cannot bee accompliſhed in one man, but it ſheweth a whole body or company, whereof Antichriſt is the head, one man of ſinne ſucceeding another by ſucceſſion: and this apoſtaſie cannot be wrought at one time, but it ſhall come to paſſe in ſeverall ages: for how is it poſſible, that at once ſuch a generall Apoſtaſie ſhould be? Ergo, Antichriſt ſhall not bee one particular man, Argum. Calvini. Neither can the Jeſuite thus ſhift off the argument, to ſay, that this generall Apoſtaſie is but a preparation to the kingdome of Antichriſt, not that he ſhall then bee preſently come: for S. Paul joyneth both theſe together: There muſt come a departing firſt, that the man of ſinne be diſcloſed, verſ. 3. So that this very apoſtaſie and departing ſhall be a diſcloſing and manifeſt declaration of Antichriſt.

Iohn 3.7. Argum. 3. Iohn 3.7. The Apoſtle ſaith: Many deceivers are come into the world, which confeſſe not that Jeſus Chriſt is come in the fleſh: the ſame is the deceiver and the Antichriſt. Marke then, one
1 Iohn 2.18. deceiver is many deceivers: one Antichriſt many Antichriſts, 1 Ioh. 2. 18. Ergo, Antichriſt ſhall not be one man, but many, Argument, Ful. Annot. 2. Theſ. 2. ſect. 8.

Auguſtine ſheweth, how that in his time this place of S. Paul was not expounded of any one man,
De civitat. Dei, 20. 19. but of a whole body: Nonnulli, non ipſum principem, ſed univerſum quodammodo corpus ejus, id eſt, ad eum pertinentem hominum multitudinem ſimul cum ipſo ſuo principe hoc loco intelligi Antichriſtum volunt: Some (ſaith he) doe take Antichriſt not for the head alone, but for the whole body and multitude together with their prince, &c. And their conjecture is this: becauſe theſe words verſ. 7. Hee which withholdeth, are underſtood of the Empire and Emperors of Rome, which were many: ſo the man of ſin, which is deſcribed as in the perſon of one, may fitly be underſtood of a ſucceſſion of many.

Bernard ſaith, 2. In converſion. Paul. ſerm. 1. Iniquè agunt & cæteri contra Chriſtum, multique ſunt noſtris temporibus Antichriſti: There bee divers other that doe wickedly againſt Chriſt, and in our times there be many Antichriſts. Againe, Cantic. ſerm. 33. Miniſtri ſunt Chriſti, & ſerviunt Antichriſto; They are the Miniſters of Chriſt, and ſerve Antichriſt, &c. how could Antichriſt be in Bernards dayes, divers hundred yeeres ſince, yea many Antichriſts, if Antichriſt ſhould be one man? So alſo one of your later writers: Bruno thus witneſſeth upon the 4. of the 1. to Tim. verſ. 1. Apoſtolum de Antichriſto inſtruentem, &c. That the Apoſtle giving inſtruction concerning Antichriſt, doth inſinuate that the members a long time go before the head, &c. but if Antichriſt were one ſingular man, his head and members muſt goe together.

Fox pag. 414. l. 53. Likewiſe out of your owne Canons: diſtinct. 23. cap. 1. Nicholaus defineth him to bee Antichriſt, that is elected to the Papacie by Symonie. He noteth not any particular Pope, but any whoſoever, that ſhould be ſo elected.

Cauſ. 16. qu. 7. c. 3. Greg. 7. He that granteth tithes to lay perſons, inter maximos hæreticos, & Antichriſtos non minimus habebitur: ſhall bee counted among the greateſt Heretiks, and not the leaſt among the Antichriſts: Ergo, by your owne Canons there is not one only Antichriſt, but many Antichriſts. Yea, here I will oppoſe the judgement of the Rhemiſts, who therein are contrary to themſelves: yet thus they write, annot. 7. in 17. Apocal. that the ſeven heads are ſeven Kings, or Kingdomes, five were then paſt, the ſixth was the ſtate of the Empire then preſent, the ſeventh ſhould be Antichriſts ſtate, &c. As then they take the ſixth head not for any particular perſon, but for the State of the Emperors, who were many; ſo by their expoſition the ſeventh head muſt be taken not for a particular perſon, but for a State and Government.

Let us adde the ſeale of the holy Confeſſors and Martyrs, Iohn Wicliff, articul. 36. Eccleſia Romana, ſaith he, eſt ſynagoga Sathanæ: The Church of Rome is the ſynagogue of Sathan. Iohn Huſſe Concil. Conſt. ſeſſ. 11. Papa eſt patronus Antichriſti, non ſolum illa ſimplex perſona, ſed multitudo Paparum, &c. eſt Antichriſti perſona compoſita monſtroſa: The Pope is the patron of Antichriſt, not any one ſingle perſon, but the multitude of wicked Popes, &c. is the monſtrous compound body of Antichriſt. If it ſhould bee objected, that there have been ſome good Popes ſince the time there aſſigned, namely, from the donation or endowment of the Church: he anſwereth, Non repugnat quod Gregorius & alii Papæ finaliter pœnitebant: Notwithſtanding that Gregory, and other tolerable Popes might finally repent them.

Concerning the teſtimony of other Churches: we do here willingly confeſſe, that moſt of the ancient Fathers, which were ſo farre off from the time of Antichriſts revealing, do reconcurre herein, that he ſhould be one ſpeciall man, and that he ſhould reigne 3. yeeres and an halfe: and we further anſwer
Apolog. pag. 69. with our princely Eccleſiaſtes, that it is no wonder if they miſtake many myſteries in the Apocalypſe, for the booke thereof was ſtill ſealed in their dayes, &c. and it is a certaine rule in all darke prophecies, that they are never clearely underſtood till they be accompliſhed. So the fathers themſelves profeſſe, as Irenæus
Lib. 4. adverſ. hæreſ. c. 43. ſaith, omnis prophetia priuſquam impleatur ænigma eſt, &c. every prophecie before it is fulfilled is as a Bellar. lib. 3. de Roman. pontif. cap. 10. riddle, but being fulfilled, it is eaſily expounded, &c. Yea our adverſaries themſelves here have put an anſwer into our mouthes: that the fathers would their ſentence to be no otherwiſe accounted of, than ſuſpicionum & conjecturarum loco, than of ſuſpicions and conjectures.

Yet notwithſtanding the Fathers both of the Eaſt and South Church doe tell us here of many Antichriſts: 1 as Cyril ſaith, At this time (many Antichriſts) ſhall come out of the earth.

πολλοὶ ἀντιχριστοι. Catechiſ. 4.

2 Tertullian: Qui Antichriſti interim,& ſemper niſi Chriſto rebelles? who are the Antichriſts in the meane time, and alwayes, but the rebels to Chriſt?

De præſcrip. adverſ.hæretic.

3 The Church of England by the pen of our princely Eccleſiaſtes thus confeſſeth: By the whore of Babylon that rideth upon the beaſt, is meant a ſeat of an Empire, and a ſucceſſive number of men ſitting thereupon, and not any one man: for cap. 17.18. This woman is expounded to be the great citie that ruleth over the kingdomes of the earth; which cannot ſignifie the only perſon of one man, but a ſucceſſive number of men, &c. As alſo by the ſeven heads are meant ſeven Kings, that is, ſeven formes of government.

Apolog. Regis pag. 81.

So the Magdeburge writers of the Centuries affirme, that the Apoſtles teach that Antichriſt ſhall not be one perſon, Sed integrum regnum per falſos doctores, &c. but a whole reigne or government by falſe teachers.

Centur. 1. lib. 2. cap. 4. fol. 435.

4 That place, Iohn 5. 43. urged before by Bellarmine, to prove Antichriſt to be a particular perſon, if another come in his name, is expounded by Maldonate ſometime his fellow Jeſuite, not of Antichriſt onely, ſed de omnibus falſis prophetis, but of all falſe teachers.

Comment. in Ioan. 5. 43.

The ſecond part, Whether Antichriſt be yet come, and how long he ſhall continue.

The Papiſts.

THe Romiſh Jeſuites doe hold that Antichriſt is not yet come, neither can they tell when hee ſhall come: But this they ſay boldly, that Henoch and Elias, who live all this while in Paradiſe, ſhall come immediatly before Antichriſt; and that Antichriſt, when he is come, ſhall reigne but three yeeres and an halfe, and then ſhall the world end, Bellarm. cap. 4. lib. 3. de Pontif. Rhemiſt. 11. Apocal. ſect. 2.4.

57. Error.

Argum. 1. The Roman Empire muſt utterly be deſtroyed and laid waſte before Antichriſt come: as S. Paul ſaith, That which withholdeth muſt firſt be taken away, 2 Theſſ. 2.7. that is, the Roman Empire. But the Empire yet remaineth: for the Emperour is knowne by name, and there are alſo Princes Electors of the Empire: Ergo, Antichriſt is not yet come, Bellarm. cap. 5.

2 Theſſ. 2.7.

Anſw. It is true that the Roman Empire, while it retained and kept the ancient dignitie, majeſtie and power thereof, was an hindrance and let to the tyranny of Antichriſt; but when it began to decay, then Antichriſt ſet in his foot. Firſt, it was not neceſſarie therefore that the Empire ſhould utterly be extinguiſhed, but ſo much only taken away, namely, the ancient honour and imperiall majeſtie thereof, as hindred Antichriſt: and ſo we finde that the Roman Empire was more than halfe decayed, when Antichriſt crept into Rome.

As firſt when Conſtantine the Great, an. 312. left the citie of Rome, and fixed his imperiall ſeat at Conſtantinople in the Eaſt, the majeſtie of the Empire was much impaired, the Biſhop of Rome taking occaſion by the abſence of the Emperour to rule over the Weſt Churches. The next pull from the Empire was betweene the yeere 700. and 800. Conſtantinus 1. Biſhop of Rome firſt offered his feet to be kiſſed of the Emperour Iuſtinian, and moſt inſolently tooke upon him to excommunicate Philippicus Bardanes Emperour after Iuſtinian, becauſe he could not away with Idols, anno 715.

Gregorie the third likewiſe for the ſame cauſe did excommunicate Leo the Emperour, and tranſlated the cuſtody of the Church from the Grecians to the French nation, anno 740. Zacharias the firſt tooke upon him to depoſe and ſet up Kings: as he deprived Childericus King of France of his kingdome, and ſet Carolus Martellus in his ſtead, anno 750. Stephanus the ſecond firſt preſumed to bee carried upon mens ſhoulders: unto him Pipinus King of France yeelded the exarchate or ſoveraigntie of Ravenna, held his ſtirrop, & led his horſe by the bridle, an. 752. Afterward Carolus King Charlemaines ſonne, confirmed unto Adrian 1. the former grant of Pipinus, and beſides gave unto him the Dutchie of Forojulium, Beneventum, & Spoletum, ann. 776. Leo 3 proclaimed Charles the Great Emperour, and ſo ſpoyled the Emperour of the Weſt of the better halfe of his Kingdome, anno 800.

From this time forth the majeſtie and ancient dignitie of the Empire began daily to decreaſe: Iohn 13. made a decree that the Emperour ſhould be crowned of the Pope, anno 964. Otho the Emperour confirmed to Leo the 8. whatſoever before granted by Pipinus or Carolus, anno 966. Iohn 14. brought under his papall regiment the Kingdome of Pole, anno 973. Steven the ninth obtained Millaine: Vrbanus the ſecond ſet foot into Spaine, anno 1090. Under Innocentius the ſecond the Kingdome of Sicily was made part of S. Peters Patrimony, anno 1140. Eugenius the third ſubdued Norway to the papall profeſſion, anno 1152. Alexander the third decreed that none ſhould be King of England, unleſſe he were firſt nominated and called of the Pope, anno 1180. Sub Lucio the third the Armenians ſubmitted themſelves to the papall juriſdiction, anno 1185. Under Vrbane the third Livonia came under their yoke, anno 1187. Under Innocentius the third the Kingdome of Arragon was made tributarie to the Pope, anno 1216. Under Nicolas the third the countrey of Romandiola and Bononia was brought under the Popes ſubjection, anno 1280.

And to put the matter out of all doubt: Bonifacius the 8. did one day ſhew himſelfe in his pontificals, as a Pope; another, in his imperiall robes, as an Emperour by uſurpation, anno 1300. Clemens the 5. made a decree that the Emperor ſhould receive the name and right of the Empire from the Pope, and the Emperor being dead, till a new elect, the imperiall power to remaine in the Popes hand, anno 1314. Clement the ſixth crowned Charles the fourth upon this condition, that hee ſhould neither ſtay in Rome, nor in any part of Italy: the ſame Charles to procure the ſucceſſion of the Empire to his Sonne, did morgage to the Prince-Electors the chiefe revenewes of the Empire, and ſurrendred the free cities, which were never ſince redeemed, anno 1350. And thus by degrees was the Empire weakned: and as Antichriſt daily gathered ſtrength, ſo the imperiall dignitie failed, and was empaired.

Apoc. 13. 12.
Apoc. 13.15.

Secondly, the imperiall power muſt in ſome ſort bee reſtored by Antichriſt: for the Pope uſurped the ſame authority which the Emperors had, yea greater: for the whore is deſcribed ſitting upon the beaſt, Apocal. 17. which is the Empire: and therefore it is ſaid, verſ. 8. The beaſt that was, and is not, and yet is: for the ancient Empire both is, and is not: It is, becauſe the power thereof is tranſlated to the Pope: it is not, that is, not in that kingly manner, as it was in times paſt, Apocal. 13.12. The beaſt that roſe out of the earth with two hornes like a lambe, did all that the firſt beaſt could doe before him: that is, the power of the Empire was in the Pope. Thirdly, Apocal. 13. 15. it is ſaid, that the image of the beaſt remained, and that the other beaſt gave a ſpirit unto the image of the beaſt: So is it at this day, the name and image of the Empire remaineth, but the majeſtie and power is gone: And who giveth life to the image but the Pope? hee confirmeth and ratifieth the election of the Emperor. Wherefore, this rather is an argument that Antichriſt is already come, becauſe nothing but the image of the beaſt remaineth.

Argum. 2. Antichriſt ſhall reigne three yeeres and an halfe: but if he were already come, he muſt needs have reigned divers hundred yeeres already: Bellarm. cap. 8.

Dan. 7. 27.
Apoc. 12. 14.

They prove this reigne of Antichriſt for this ſhort ſeaſon, out of thoſe places of Daniel, 7. 27. A time, times, and halfe a time: and Apocal. 12. 14. alſo it is deſcribed by dayes 1260. dayes: and by moneths, Apoc. 11.2. two and fortie moneths: which all come to one reckoning, and make three yeeres and an halfe.

Anſw. Firſt, the time is alſo ſet downe by the name of three dayes and an halfe, Apocal. 11. 11. How then is it likely, that 1260. dayes and three dayes and an halfe, ſhould ſignifie the ſame time? And ſeeing the Rhemiſts themſelves, by the thouſand yeeres, Apocal. 20. 1. doe underſtand all the time of the new Teſtament till Antichriſts reigne, and ſo take it for an uncertaine and indefinite number, they cannot in any reaſon ſo ſtrictly expound this account of dayes. And as they take the other number indefinitely, ſo divers of the fathers expound this number of dayes; as Beda underſtandeth all the time of Chriſtianity: Rupertus, ſo long as the Church endureth perſecution: Haymo, for all the time from the aſcenſion of Chriſt, till the end of the world. Fulke annot. 12. Apoc. 2. Secondly, with much better ſenſe are theſe times applied by our learned and painfull countriman Maſter Fox, to the great perſecution under the Emperors, which continued 294. yeeres, which time is myſtically ſignified by 42. moneths, taking every moneth for a ſabbath of yeeres. And the reſt of the numbers agree hereunto: for 1260. dayes make three yeeres and an halfe, that is, moneths 42. and three dayes and an halfe make houres 42. So taking every houre in the dayes, and every moneth in the yeeres for a ſabbath of yeeres, there ariſe 294. yeeres, which was the juſt time of the perſecution from the death of Iohn Baptiſt, unto the end of Licinius the tyrant and perſecutor. This account, I ſay, better agreeth with the truth of the hiſtorie, then their imagined computation. Thirdly, if it ſhould bee taken, as they expound it, for ſo ſhort a time, then very little of the propheeie in the Apocalypſe is yet fulfilled: for the revelation, for the moſt part, conſiſteth in ſetting downe the reigne and kingdome of Antichriſt, with the circumſtances thereof: as of the time of his tyrannizing over the Church, chap. 11. 12. of his marke and miracles, chap. 13. of the plagues which ſhould be powred out upon the world under his kingdome, chap. 16. the deſcription of the whore, which is Antichriſt, chap. 17. the overthrow of Babylon, propheſied of in chap. 14. fulfilled and accompliſhed, chap. 18. So that if we take our adverſaries ſtrict expoſition, the whole prophecie of the Revelation almoſt ſhall bee brought within the compaſſe of three yeeres and an halfe, which is not to bee admitted: for ſo, little of the Apocalypſe ſhould bee yet fulfilled, ſeeing their preciſe three yeeres and an halfe are not yet come. And againe, it is certaine that the Apocalypſe is a generall prophecie of the ſtate of the Church from Chriſts leaving the earth to his comming againe: and it tooke beginning even from Iohns time: for things are ſhewed to him ſhortly to be done, chap. 1. verſ. 1. and the time is at hand, verſ. 3. So that we doubt not but the moſt part of that propheticall revelation is already accompliſhed, as it may appeare in comparing the viſions revealed in that booke together, and in applying the hiſtories done, to the prophecies there contained.

Fox pag. 200. pag. 90. col. 2. edit. 1610.

See the opiniõ of Walter Brute, how he taketh the 42. moneths and 1260. dayes for the ſame, containing ſo many yeeres. Fox p.444.2.10.

Apoc. 1. 1. 3.

And againe, there is no prophecie beſide this of 42. moneths, which can bee applied to the great perſecution in the primitive Church: wherefore it is not like that the Lord would leave his Church without ſome comfort, in forewarning them of thoſe great troubles which immediatly enſued. But if theſe prophecies, which are wreſted by the Papiſts, did not foretell of thoſe perſecutions, then are they utterly forgotten in that booke: which is not like, it being the greateſt triall that ever the Church had.

4 The 1260. dayes mentioned Apocal. 12. 16. cannot bee taken preciſely for ſo many naturall dayes, but we are to underſtand ſo many propheticall dayes, that is, a day for a yeere: for this both agreeth to the phraſe of Scripture, and the propheticall cuſtome and practice: as Numb. 14.34. After the number of fortie dayes wherein you ſearched out the land, even fortie dayes, everie day for a yeere, ſhall you beare your iniquitie. Likewiſe, Ezech. 4.5,6. Thou ſhalt beare the iniquitie of the houſe of Iuda fortie dayes, a day for a yeere I have given thee. Alſo the current of time and courſe of hiſtorie approveth the ſame; that 1260. yeeres are determined for Antichriſts reigne untill his overthrow: for whether we begin the account from the yeere 261. when Paulus Samoſatenus revived that foule hereſie, in denying Chriſt to be God, and ſo was a fore-runner of Antichriſt; adding hereunto 1260. yeeres, we come to the yeere 1521. when Luther began to impugne the Antichriſtian doctrine: Sic Baleus in vita Leon. 10. Or whether we count from the yeere 300. when Conſtantine the Great left the imperiall Citie of Rome to the Popes diſcretion, which made an open way to Antichriſt, adding here alſo 1260. yeeres, we fall into the yeere 1560. when according to the prophecie, Revel. 11.13. the tenth part of the Antichriſtian Citie, as of Abbeyes, Nunries, Monaſteries was deſtroyed, as in England, Scotland, Germany, and other countries. The Jeſuites literall wreſting then of this number of dayes, is not any way to be admitted.

Numb. 14.34.
Ezech. 4.5,6.

5 We ſay laſtly, that we are not curiouſly to ſearch into times and ſeaſons, which the Lord hath not revealed: Only this we learne, that the time of affliction being ſet downe by dayes and moneths, the faithfull ſhould hereby be comforted, knowing that the time of their trouble is limited of God, and is but ſhort in reſpect of the Kingdome of Chriſt.

Argum. 3. The Lord ſaith, Matth. 24. that thoſe dayes ſhall be ſhortned, leſt no fleſh ſhould be ſaved. But how can the time be ſhort, if it ſhould laſt ſome hundreds, or a thouſand of yeeres? Bellar. cap. 8. Rhemiſt. Annot. Matth. 24. ſect. 6.

Matth. 24.22.

Anſw. Firſt, that place verſ. 22. is properly underſtood of the calamitie of the Jewes, which if it had continued any longer, the nation of the Jewes had been utterly deſtroyed. Secondly, yet notwithſtanding the reigne of Antichriſt is ſhort, in reſpect of the eternall Kingdome of Chriſt: yea the whole time from his aſcenſion untill his comming againe, is counted but ſhort, Apocal. 22.20. I come quickly: And S. Peter ſaith, That a thouſand yeeres before God is as one day, and one day as a thouſand yeeres, 2 Pet. 3.

Apoc. 22.20.
2 Pet. 3.8.

Argum. 4. Chriſt preached but three yeeres and an halfe: therefore Antichriſt ſhall be ſuffered to preach no longer.

Anſ. Firſt, yet Chriſt was thirtie yeeres old when he began to preach, and ſhewed himſelfe before, though not ſo openly; as when he was twelve yeere old he diſputed with the Doctors in the Temple: hee was alſo acknowledged for the Meſſiah in his nativitie. If Antichriſt then muſt in this reſpect be correſpondent to Chriſt, hee muſt alſo bee knowne to bee thirtie yeeres upon earth, before he be fully manifeſted. Secondly, though Chriſt himſelfe preached no longer, yet he ſent his Apoſtles, who preached many yeeres after: we doe not therefore oppoſe the perſon of Antichriſt, whom we deny to be a ſingular man, to Chriſt: but the kingdome of the one to the other. Now by their owne reaſon it followeth, that becauſe the Kingdome of Chriſt endured many yeeres, and yet doth; that therefore Antichriſts Kingdome muſt likewiſe.

Other demonſtrations the Jeſuite hath to prove that Antichriſt is not yet come: as becauſe the Goſpell is not yet preached to all the world, cap. 4. Bellarm. Helias and Henoch are not yet come, who are certainly looked for, cap. 6. There ſhall bee a moſt grievous and terrible perſecution under Antichriſt, which is not yet paſt, cap. 7. But theſe arguments ſhall be anſwered in another place towards the end of this worke, when we come to ſpeake of the appearing of Chriſt to judgement.

The Proteſtants.

THat Antichriſt ſhall reigne but three yeeres and an halfe, we take it for a meere fable, and a verie popiſh dreame: whereas on the contrarie ſide, we are able to ſhew both that Antichriſt is already come, and hath tyrannized in the world theſe many yeeres.

Argum. 1. We will make it plaine by demonſtration, that Antichriſt hath beene in the world many yeeres agoe, by the propheticall places of Scripture. Firſt, it is ſaid the number of Antichriſt is 666. Apocal. 13.18. So anno 606. or thereabout, Boniface the 3. obtained of Phocas the Emperour to be called univerſall Biſhop. Thus Illyricus, Chytraeus.

Apoc. 13.18.

And if we take our account from that time when Pompeius the Great tooke the Scepter from the Jewes, according to Iacobs prophecie, that before the Scepter went from Iuda, the Sonne of God ſhould not come, Geneſ. 49.10. which fell out in Cicero his Conſulſhip, ſixtie yeeres before Chriſts nativitie: Then joyning to this number 606. we finde Bonifacius in the yeere 666. at which time many ſtrange and prodigious ſights appeared, divers Sea-monſters were ſeene, and a terrible blazing ſtarre was deſcried. Alſo Gregorie 1. the immediate predeceſſor of this Boniface, doubted not to call him Antichriſt, that tooke upon him to bee called univerſall Biſhop, as this Boniface did. All theſe ſignes did foreſhew that Antichriſt was even now borne into the world.

Further, if wee begin at the yeere of the Lord 97. at which time Iohn wrote the Apocalyps, and counting 666. yeeres, we ſhall come to the time of Pipinus, whom the Pope made King of France, & hee againe much inlarged the juriſdiction and authoritie of the Pope. And yet more evidently, about the yeere of the Lord 666, the Latine Service was commanded to be uſed in all countries ſubject ject to the See of Rome, by Pope Vitalianus: and about the ſame time, Conſtantius the Emperour removed the ancient monuments of the Empire to Conſtantinople, and left the Citie to the Popes pleaſure, Fulk. Annot. in 13. Revel. ſect. 10.

Revel. 20. 3. Another propheſie we have, Revel. 20. 3. that after one thouſand yeeres Satan muſt be let looſe. Even ſo, a thouſand yeeres after Chriſt, Pope Silveſter a great Conjurer, having made a compact with the Devill, obtained the Papacie: and not long after him came in Gregorie the 7. a great Sorcerer alſo and Necromancer: Sic Lutherus.

But becauſe it is not to be thought that Satan was bound during that great and long perſecution under the Roman Emperours, we muſt begin the account of the thouſand yeeres, from the end of the perſecution, which continued 294. yeeres: unto that adde a thouſand, ſo have we the yeere of our Lord 1294. about which yeere Boniface the 8. made the ſixth booke of the Decretals, confirmed the orders of Friers, and gave them great freedomes: with this number agreeth Daniel his 1290. dayes, Dan. 12. 11. Alſo ſomewhat before this time, anno 1260. the orders of Dominicke and Franciſcane Friers began firſt to be ſet up by Honorius the 3. and Gregorie the 9. And ſo have we the 1260. dayes which are ſet downe, Apocal. 12. plura apud Fox, pag. 398.

Argum. 2. If Antichriſt ſhould reigne but three yeeres and an halfe, as our adverſaries teach, and then immediately that time being expired, the world ſhould end: then it is poſſible to aſſigne the time of our Lord Chriſt his comming to judgement, ſo ſoone as Antichriſt is revealed. But the Goſpell ſaith, that of that day and houre knoweth no man, no not the Angels in heaven, Matth. 24. 36. (Matth. 24. 36.) Yet theſe good fellowes take upon them to be wiſer than the Angels: for they dare ſet downe the verie day of Chriſts comming, which ſhall be, as Bellarmine preſumptuouſly imagineth, juſt 45. dayes after the deſtruction of Antichriſt. (Dan. 12. 11.) And to this purpoſe he abuſeth that place of Dan. 12. 11. where mention is made of 1290. dayes, that is, as he fondly interpreteth, three yeeres and an halfe, the juſt time of Antichriſts reigne: But bleſſed is he that commeth (ſaith the Prophet) to 1335. dayes: that is, ſaith Bellarmine, to 45. dayes after the deſtruction of Antichriſt; and then Chriſt commeth, cap. 9. What intolerable boldneſſe and preſumption is this, contrarie to the ſaying of Chriſt, to attempt to declare the verie houre of his comming?

Againe, the prophecie of Daniel had no ſuch meaning: for he onely ſpeaketh of the afflictions of the Church, before the comming of Chriſt, as Iohn propheſieth of the troubles that came after. Daniel therefore in that place receiveth inſtructions concerning the cruell perſecution of the Jewes under Antiochus Epiphanes, the beginning and the end thereof: There are three times revealed unto him.

Dan 7. 25. The firſt is of a time, two times, and halfe a time, or rather the dividing of time; or as Tremellius more agreeable to the Hebrew, a part or parcell of times: ſo long ſhould the Temple be defiled, and the abomination ſet up in the Temple, that is, three yeeres and certaine daies: And ſo it came to paſſe, for this deſolation began in the Temple the 145. yeere of the reigne of the Greeks, the fifteenth day of the moneth Caſleu, 1 Macchab. 1. 57. when Antiochus cauſed the daily ſacrifice to ceaſe, and incenſe to bee burnt to Idols: and juſt three yeeres and ten dayes after, which is to bee reckoned for the odd parcell of times, anno 148. the 25. day of Caſleu, they began to offer ſacrifice in the Temple according to the Law, 1 Macchab. 4. 52.

The ſecond time revealed, is of 1290. dayes, Dan. 12. 11. which maketh three yeeres, ſeven moneths and odd dayes: which is the time counting from the deſolation, when as the ſacrifices ſhould be reſtored and confirmed by the Kings grant, and letters patents: which accordingly came to paſſe, anno 148. the fifteenth of the moneth Xanthicus, which was the laſt moneth but one, as it is recorded, 2 Macchab. 11. 33.

The third time is deſcribed by dayes, 1335. Dan. 12. 12. Bleſſed is hee that ſhould live to ſee that time: namely, when the Church of the Jewes ſhould fully be delivered by the death of Antiochus, which was in the beginning of the next yeere, which was 149. 1 Macchab. 6. 16. Thus we ſee theſe times were fully accompliſhed under the tyranny of Antiochus: wherefore theſe prophecies being once fulfilled, they cannot be drawne to ſignifie any other time, but by way of ſimilitude and compariſon.

2 Theſſ. 2. 8. Neither is that any thing worth, which the Jeſuite objecteth out of Saint Paul, 2 Theſſ. 2. 8. Then ſhall the wicked man be revealed, whom Chriſt ſhall conſume with the ſpirit of his mouth: As though preſently after the revelation of Antichriſt Chriſt ſhould come. And therefore Antichriſt muſt not be expected or looked for before the end of the world: for the whole time from the firſt comming of Chriſt to his ſecond, is in the Scripture called noviſſima hora, the laſt times, 1 Ioh. 2. 18. (1 Ioh. 2. 18.) And therefore Antichriſt, at what time ſoever he is revealed after the aſcenſion of Chriſt, hee commeth in the laſt times: whoſe utter ruine and deſtruction ſhall be reſerved for the glorious appearing of Chriſt, as the Apoſtle there ſpeaketh.

Argum. 3. Whereas the Scripture ſaith, that Satan muſt bee bound for a thouſand yeeres, and after let looſe againe, Apocal. 20. 2. (Apoc. 20. 2.) And it is plaine, that the thouſand yeeres ſince Chriſt, are expired more than five hundred yeeres agoe: It followeth hereupon that Antichriſt is already come: for he muſt be revealed with the looſing of Satan. Our adverſaries have nothing to anſwer but this, that by this 1000. yeeres, a certaine time is not meant, but the whole ſpace during the time of the new Teſtament till the comming of Antichriſt, Rhemiſt. Revel.20.ſect.1. To whom we anſwer, that by the ſame reaſon, neither ſhall their 42 moneths ſhew any certaine time, but the whole ſpace ſo long as Antichriſt ſhall reigne. And this number of moneths, as of daies, weekes, houres, the Scripture every where taketh myſtically in prophecies: but when thouſands or hundred yeeres are mentioned, they are alwaies taken literally: as Eſay 7.8. it is propheſied that Ephraim, that is, Iſrael, ſhould utterly ceaſe to be a people within 65. yeeres, which even ſo came to paſſe, counting from the fourth yeere of the reigne of Ahaz King of Iuda, to the 25. yeere of Manaſſes, when the remnant of Iſrael was carried away. Iſay 7.8.

Iſai 16.14. In three yeeres as the yeeres of an hireling, that is, preciſely ſo many, the glory of Moab ſhall be deſtroyed. Iſai 21. 16. Yet a yeere according to the yeeres of an hireling, and all the glorie of Kedar ſhall faile. In all theſe places hirelings yeeres are underſtood, that is, ſo many common yeeres, as ſervants doe uſe to be hired for. Iſay 16.14. Iſay 21.16.

Let us adjoyne the teſtimonie of antiquitie: Cyprian epiſtol.3. ad Cornelium: Antichriſti jam propinquantis adventum conantur imitari: They ſpeaking of the Novatian heretikes, doe imitate Antichriſt, who is now approaching and drawing neere.

Paſchal. 2. anno 1100. held a Councell at Rome againſt the Biſhop of Florence, who affirmed Antichriſt then to bee borne: Epiſtol. Leodienſ. contra Paſchal. 2. Ecce ſolutus eſt Sathanas habens iram magnam: Behold Satan is broke looſe, having great wrath. Anno 1390. Pope Urbane the 6. and Clement 7. being both Popes at once, did thunder out one againſt another, calling each other ſchiſmaticke, heretike, Antichriſt.

Whom now may we beleeve rather for this matter than the Popes? for Antichriſt may beſt judge of himſelfe.

We have alſo the judgement of one Hentenius a Papiſt, againſt their dreame of three yeeres and an halfe, who thus writeth in his preface to his tranſlation of Arethas; It is not poſſible that Antichriſt, in ſo ſhort a time of three common yeeres and an halfe, ſhould obtaine ſo many kingdomes and provinces.

Adde the ſeale of holy Martyrs: Maſter Bilney; Satan, as the Scripture witneſſeth, hath been now let looſe theſe 500. yeeres, as it is written in the Apocalypſe, *After a thouſand yeeres Satan ſhall bee let looſe, Fox pag.*1003. *col.*1. Maſter Tindall holy Martyr ſaith, That ſince the firſt 30. Biſhops of Rome that died Martyrs, there have beene 204. Popes, and hardly foure to be found among them good Chriſtian men, *pag.*1252. *col.*2. P.914.2 5. P.1141.1.70.

All theſe agree together, that Antichriſt hath beene many yeeres alreadie revealed to the world: and therefore this new device of three yeeres and an halfe is but a meere forgerie.

1. Iuſtinus Martyr ſaid in his time, about 1400. yeeres ſince, that he which ſhould utter blaſphemies againſt the moſt high, was even at the doore. ὀνὼ θύραις ὄντος, Dialog. cum Tryphon.

2. Tertullian alſo of the like antiquitie ſaid, Antichriſto jam inſtante: Antichriſt being now at hand. But ſince thoſe fathers thus ſpake, many hundred yeeres are expired: the time then of Antichriſts reigne is not to be limited to the ſpace of three yeeres and an halfe. Tertull. lib. de fug. in perſecut.

3. The confeſſion of the Engliſh Church, and the head governour thereof is, that the three yeeres and halfe, doe rather ſignifie halfe the ſpirituall week, that is, of all the time betweene Chriſts firſt and ſecond comming: for if Antichriſt ſhall reigne but three yeeres and an halfe, and there ſhall be but 45 daies after his deſtruction before the comming of Chriſt, then the very time of his comming ſhould be knowne, which is contrarie to the Scriptures. Apolog. Reg. p.61.62.

4. Gregorie the firſt, in his time, gave this as a marke and note of Antichriſt, That whoſoever calleth himſelfe univerſall Biſhop, In elatione ſua praecurrit Antichriſtum, doth in his pride forerunne Antichriſt: but the Popes ever ſince Boniface the third, for a thouſand yeeres have uſurped this title, therefore ſo long Antichriſt with his forerunners have beene in the world: ſome of the moderne Papiſts doe confeſſe, that no mortall man can certainly tell how long preciſely Antichriſt ſhall reigne, and that the three yeeres and halfe doe but ſignifie the extremitie, top, or height of his reigne: So Pererius, Acoſta. Gregor. lib. 4. indiction 13. epiſt. 30. Perer. lib. 15. in Dan. 12. Acoſta de tempor. noviſſim. lib. 2. c. 8.

The third part, concerning the name, character, and ſigne of Antichriſt.

The Papiſts.

They ſtoutly affirme, that Antichriſt ſhall be one particular man; conſequently they alſo hold, that he ſhall have a certaine name, as Chriſt is called Jeſus, ſo Antichriſt muſt alſo have a proper name: but what that name ſhall be, no man can tell, untill hee come: but it ſhall conſiſt of certaine letters, that in number make ſix hundred ſixtie ſix, Bellarm. cap. 10. Rhemiſt. annot. Apocal. 13. ſect. 10. 18. Error.

1. Apoc. 13.18. Count the number of the beaſt, for it is the number of a man, and his number is 666. Hereupon they conclude, that Antichriſt ſhall have a certaine name, which containeth that number, Bellarm. ibid. Apoc. 13.18.

Anſw. Firſt, it is the number of the beaſt, and yet of a man: Ergo, it cannot be the name of any one man; for by the beaſt, the Ieſuites themſelves underſtand a companie or multitude, Rhemiſt. Apocal. 13. ſect. 3. Wherefore it muſt be ſuch a name as agreeth to a companie or ſucceſſion of men, and ſuch is the name Latinus, as afterward we will ſhew. Secondly, it muſt be a name by number, ſhewing the time, not an idle number ſignifying nothing; the time of his comming is ſet downe to be 666. But the name of their Antichriſt cannot ſhew any ſuch time, ſeeing there are yeeres more than twice 666. gone alreadie, and yet they ſay, their Antichriſt is not yet come.

Argum. 2. Antichriſt ſhall have a name, as Chriſt had: but it is not neceſſarie to be knowne, otherwiſe than Chriſt his name was: which was deſcribed by Sibill by the number of 888. as Antichriſts is by 666. yet was not his name, Jeſus, perfectly knowne before his comming, neither is it neceſſarie that Antichriſts ſhould before that time. Jeſus, in Greeke letters thus, Ἰησοῦς, maketh as you ſee 888. Bellarm. cap. 10.

Anſw. Firſt, you muſt prove Antichriſt to be one ſingular man as Chriſt was, and then ſtrive for his name. Secondly, you doe evill to match Sibils Prophecie, and Iohns Revelation together, as though her conjecture of the name of Chriſt, by the number of 888. were of like authority with Iohns Prophecie, of 666. Thirdly, that the name of Jeſus is deſcribed by one of the Sibils by the number 888. it is evident. And Auguſtine alſo maketh mention of other verſes, which goe under the name of Sibill, the firſt letters whereof do make this title or name both in the Greek and Latine, Ἰησοῦς Χρειστὸς υἱὸς θεοῦ σωτήρ: Ieſus Chriſtus filius Dei ſalvator: Ieſus Chriſt the ſonne of God our Saviour, Auguſt. cont. Iudaeos & Pagan. cap 16. But theſe prophecies of Chriſt, which goe under the name of Sibill, may be doubted of: for it is not like that out of the Church among the Gentiles there could bee found more evident predictions of the Meſſiah, than in the Church of the Jewes in the true Prophets writings: and if the Prophets of God, ſpeaking by the ſpirit of God, did not foreſee or foretell the name of Jeſus, how could the Sibils, ſpeaking by a ſpirit of divination, be able to declare it? But becauſe the teſtimonie of the Sibils is alleaged by grave authors againſt the Jewes and Pagans, I ſpare to ſpeake of the uncertaintie of them. Fourthly, if Antichriſts name were as well knowne, as Chriſts name was before his comming, no man could be ignorant of him: for the names of Chriſt were particularly expreſſed by the Prophets, as even now ſhall be ſhewed.

The Proteſtants.

WE affirme by the warrant of Scripture, that as it is a meere fable, that Antichriſt ſhall be one ſingular man: ſo of the like truth is it, that he ſhall be knowne by ſome notorious name: neither can any ſuch thing be gathered, Apocal. 13. 18.

Argum. 1. If there ſhould come ſuch a notorious wicked perſon into the world, who only ſhould deſerve to be called Antichriſt, it is not unlike, but that the ſpirit of God ſpeaking of his name, both could and would alſo have expreſſed it: As Ioſias was deſcribed by name, 1 King. 13. 2. and Cyrus, Eſai 44. 28. 45. 1. long before either of them came into the world. And why, I pray you, might not this propheticall Evangeliſt, have named Antichriſt, as well as Sibilla foretold the name of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt?

Againe, Chriſts names were propheſied of and knowne before: One name of his is to be called a Nazarite, ſo the people call him, Matth. 21. 11. a prophet of Nazareth. This name the Prophet hath Iſai 11. 1. hee calleth him, Netſer, in Hebrew it ſingifieth a branch. Another name of his, is King of Iſrael, Ioh. 12. 13. propheſied of by Zach. 9. 9. Chriſt alſo was ſaluted by the name of the ſonne of David, Matth. 21. 9. Mark. 10. 48. for the Jewes did generally hold, that the Meſſiah ſhould be called by the name of David, according to the ſaying of the Prophets: as Ezech. 34. 24. My ſervant David ſhall be their Prince. And 37. 35. My ſervant David ſhall be their Prince for ever. And againe Ierem. 30. 9. They ſhall ſerve the Lord their God, and David their King: which place Rabbi Ionathas doth thus tranſlate, Obedient Davidi Meſſiae regi ſuo: They ſhall obey David the Meſſiah their King.

Further, hee was knowne by the name Meſſiah, or Chriſt, before he came, Ioh. 4. The woman of Samaria ſaid, I know well that Meſſiah ſhall come, which is called Chriſt, verſ. 25. This name was revealed to Daniel. 9. 25. he is called Meſſiah the Prince.

Zachar. 3. 5.
Iohn. 12. 13.
Pſal. 118. 25.
Hebr. 4. 8.
Numb. 13. 8.

But will our adverſaries ſay, his name Jeſus was not knowne before his comming? Yes, even that name alſo hath ſome evidence out of the Prophets: for Ieſus, or Iaſua, is all one, and ſignifieth a Saviour: of the which name we reade Zachar. 3. where mention is made of Ieſua the high Prieſt, who was a type of our Saviour Chriſt, and bare his name, for verſ. 5. a Diadem is ſet upon his head, which muſt needs be underſtood of Jeſus Chriſt, our high Prieſt. Againe, he is called Hoſanna, Ioh. 12. 13. which ſignifieth the ſame that Jeſus, and both are derived from the ſame root: tranſlated, Save us. Which name we find in Pſalm. 118. verſ. 25. And Auguſtine ſeemeth to gather the ſame name out of the Prophecie of Habacuck 3. 3. Sanctus veniet de monte Pharan: The holy one ſhall come from the mount Pharan: that is, ſaith he, of the ſame name whereof he was which was ſent from Pharan, Numb. 13. 1. that is, Ioſua: who alſo is called Ieſus, Heb. 4. 8. and at that time alſo was his name changed when he was ſent from Pharan, as Auguſtine in the ſame place noteth, lib. 16. cont. Fauſtum Manich. c. 19. 20. He is there alſo called Hoſhea, Numb. 13. 8. which is the very name conſiſting of the ſame letters and points in the Hebrew, which is given to Chriſt, Matth. 21. 9. according to the Prophecie, Pſalm. 118. verſ. 25. for there they ſalute him thus, Hoſhianna, Save us.

Laſtly, if the name Jeſus Chriſt were revealed to Sybilla an heathen prophetеſſe, how can it be that the Prophets of God were ignorant of it? Therefore by their owne argument, ſeeing Chriſts names were knowne before his comming, why ſhould not Antichriſts in like manner, if he ſhould be ſome one ſingular notorious man?

Argum.2. We can bring forth a name, which in all reſpects agreeth with that deſcription, Apocal. 13.18. which is a name both of a man and of the beaſt, that is, of a companie, or ſucceſſion of men; which ſheweth the time of Antichriſts birth, namely, the yeere 666. which doth fitly agree with the manners and properties of Antichriſt, which was alſo the name ſometimes of a man, and that is the name Latinus, by which name one of their firſt Kings were called, which in Greeke letters λατεινος, ſheweth in account, the number. 666. and ſo doth the name of Rome in Hebrew -- רומיית romiiith, which alſo was the name of one of their Popes called Romanus, who was Pope about the yeere 900. about which time they began to bee in their ruffe. And one of their owne writers Barthol. Caranza the Epitomizer of the Councels thus teſtifieth of thoſe times: Iam tunc cœperat pontificum virtus & integritas deficere: And even then began the vertue and integritie of the Biſhops of Rome to faile and decay. And ecclesia Italica, in Greeke letters doe make the ſame number.

We ſee then, that all things doe well agree to this name: firſt, that it ſignifieth the whole Latine Church or Empire, and ſo is the name of the beaſt. Secondly, it ſheweth the time 666. about which yeere Pope Vitalianus compoſed the Latine Service, and enjoyned all nations to uſe no other. Thirdly, it properly agreeth with the Antichriſtian practice of Rome; which is called the Latine Church. And contrarie to S. Pauls rule they have brought an unknowne tongue, which edifieth not, into the ſervice of God: yea they preferre it before the Greeke and Hebrew, making the Latine tranſlation of the Scriptures only authenticall, as it was concluded, in their Tridentine chapter. And they doe ſo much extoll their Latine text, as the ſetter forth of the Complutenſe edition is not aſhamed in his preface to write, that he hath placed the Latine text betweene the Hebrew and the Greeke, as Chriſt betweene the two theeves. What Church then in the whole world but theirs, can bee called the Latine Church? Fourthly, it alſo maketh much for us, that we have a conſent of names: for λατεινος, ἐκκλησία ἰταλικὴ, and in Hebrew romiiith, doe all make the ſame number, and doe note the Latine, Romane, or Italian Church.

But they object: Firſt, that Latinus maketh not that number with i. but Lateinus with ει. A great matter: wherein they ſhew their ignorance, as though the Greeke diphthong, ει be not uſually expreſſed by a ſingle i. in Latine, as we ſay, Ἀντιόχεια, Antiocheia, in Greeke, and Ἀλεξάνδρεια, Alexandreia, with ει diphthong: in Latine, Antiochia, Alexandria, with ſingle i. for the cities of Antioch, and Alexandria: this therefore is a ſmall quarrell. But marke, I pray, what a poore ſhift this is: If this ſmall letter ε. be but admitted, the Pope is made Antichriſt: ſo we have found out Antichriſt, ſaving one ſmall letter.

2 There are many names beſide, that make that number, as τειταν, αρνουμε, and others: nay the Rhemiſts ſay, that Luthers name, in the Hebrew: and Bellarmine that David Chytræus his name, doe expreſſe that number of 666. But what of all this? there is none of theſe names, unto the which the three properties aforeſaid doe agree, as they doe unto Latinus, as to betoken the whole bodie of Antichriſt, to ſhew the time of his birth, and deſcribe the qualities of his kingdome, as the word Latinus doth: yet this we doe not ſay, that this is the very name which is meant in that place, and that the prophecie can have no other meaning, but to ſhew how ridiculous their interpretation is, and how much neerer ours commeth to the truth. And concerning Luthers name, it cannot make that number, unleſſe they change the letters, and make it Auderus: and ſo it is an eaſie matter by chopping and changing of letters to bring any name to that number, And againe, the Rhemiſts doe cleere Luther in this behalfe that he is not Antichriſt, Apocal. 13. ſect. 10.

Railing Genebrard in his Cronologie lib. 4. hath the like conceit of Luthers name, but lib. 3. he findeth out the number 666. in the name Μαομετις, Mahomet, whom he ſuppoſeth to be the Antichriſt: which opinion Iodocus Clichtoveus, one of his owne ſide renounceth: with theſe men, that peremptorie and ſuperſtitious Muſcovite Duke, joyneth hands: hee will have Luthers name to ſignifie cruell, for ſo Lut ſignifieth in the Muſcovite language, as he ſaith: and he maketh him an adverſarie to Chriſt. In lib.4.Damaſcen c.27.

But Luther was no Muſcovite, from their then derivation of his name is not to be taken, but from the Germane tongue, of which countrie he was: in which language, Luther in the Saxon tongue, or Luther in the high Germane, ſignifieth pure: and ſo indeed Luther anſwered to his name, by whom the doctrine of the Church was purified: and before him Wickliffe here in England was the Paſtor of a towne called Lutherworth, which ſignifieth in the Saxon tongue (of the which the Engliſh is compoſed) the pure word: but to cleare Luther from theſe malicious imputations, let Eraſmus ſpeake, who being promiſed great revenewes by the Popes Legates, to write againſt Luther, made this anſwer: Major eſt Lutherus, &c. Lutherus is too great for me to write againſt, and too high for me to underſtand: and Luther is ſuch a man, that I profit more by reading one of his pages, than all Thomas Aquine. Reſponſ.Ioan. Baſil.c.1. Ex Laſcicii reſponſ. Apolog. adver. Ioan.Baſil.

Antiquitie alſo approveth this name, as Irenæus lib. 5. de hæreſib. Teſtimonium perhibentibus his, qui facie ad faciem viderunt Dominum, &c. And theſe bearing teſtimonie, that face to face have ſeene S. Iohn, and by reaſon teaching, how that the number of the beaſts name doth containe 666. after the Grecian reckoning, by the letters that are therein, &c. And though this father in that place preferreth the name Teitan, before others, as very like to be the name of Antichriſt; yet firſt hee approveth the name Latinus, ſaying, Valde veri ſimile eſt: It is very like to be this name, becauſe the Latines now doe reigne. And Irenæus might be deceived in the other name Teitan, becauſe Antichriſt was not yet revealed: but ſince the revelation of Antichriſt, it is now eaſie to diſcerne which of theſe two names doth beſt agree to the prophecie.

Auguſtines judgement is ſeene before, Error 56. who taketh Antichriſt to bee univerſum corpus, the whole body: then if Antichriſt be a whole body and ſocietie, not a particular man, hee ſhall not be knowne by a particular name.

Apol. Regis p. 94.
Lib. de temp. noviſſ. c. 30.

And as for Irenæus conjecture touching the name Latinus, the Princely Apologiſt of the Church of England, holdeth that this word, well ſutes with the Romiſh Church, Romiſh faith, and Latine ſervice: yea their owne Jeſuite Acoſta acknowledgeth, that Irenæus ſaid he received thoſe names ab iis qui Ioannis faciem viderunt, from them which had ſeene the face of Iohn himſelfe.

Adde hereunto that at the coronation of Paulus the fifth, this title was aſcribed unto him, PAVLO. V. VICE DEO: the numerall letters whereof make the ſaid number 666.

Now further for theſe two points, that the name propheſied of in the Apocalypſe, is ſo a name, as that it deciphereth alſo a certaine number of yeeres: and that it is not a ſpeciall or proper name of any one man, we have the teſtimonie of ſome of their owne writers.

For the firſt, Lyranus upon this place is a witneſſe, that although hee take not Mahomet to be Antichriſt, yet thinketh his death falling out in the yeere 666. to bee ſignified in this number. For the other, Primaſius, and many other of their ſide, thinke that ἄντεμος, that ſignifieth, contrarie, ſhall be the name of Antichriſt, which is no proper, but a generall name of oppoſition to Chriſt, as Antichriſt is. Likewiſe Rupertus thinketh, that the name of Antichriſt (that is, of that one ſingular man) is not contained in this number: who hath another myſticall interpretation of the name, which is nothing to the purpoſe: and therefore I omit it.

So alſo Iohn Wicklif. p. 414. 2.20.

The holy Martyrs thought that Antichriſt ſhould not bee ſet forth by any ſuch notorious name: *Tindall. All they that doe purſue are Antichriſts: the Popes, Biſhops, Cardinals, and their adherents doe purſue, therefore the Pope, Biſhops, and Cardinals, and their adherents are Antichriſts: artic. 12. Of the character or ſigne and badge of Antichriſt.

The Papiſts.

Apocal. 13. 16

THey doe hold that Antichriſt ſhall have a certaine outward marke or character, which hee ſhall cauſe to be printed in the right hands, and foreheads of all both ſmall and great, that doe belong to his kingdome, Apocal. 13. 16. But this marke is not yet knowne, no more than his name is: onely this they are ſure of, that the Pope hath not Antichriſts character, but rather the character of Chriſt, the ſigne of the Croſſe which he cauſeth to be ſigned in the foreheads, Bellarm. cap. 11.

Argum. 1 Antichriſt muſt in all reſpects be contrarie to Chriſt: for as he ſeeth his Image and Crucifix adored, ſo ſhall he ſet up his owne image to be worſhipped: and therefore as Chriſtians now doe beare in their foreheads the ſigne of the Croſſe which is Chriſts marke, ſo he ſhall invent another mark contrarie to Chriſts: and he will make his name and the letters thereof ſacred, as now the name of Jeſus is worſhipped among Chriſtians, Rhemiſt. Apocal. 13. ſect. 2.

Pſal. 115. 8. 9.

Philip. 2. 8.

Galath. 6. 17.

Anſwer. Firſt, where have you learned, that roods and images are to be adored and worſhipped? or doth not the word of God teach the plaine contrarie? Pſal. 115. 8. 9. O Iſrael truſt in the Lord: but they that worſhip images are like unto them: hee therefore that truſteth in an image cannot truſt in God. Againe, where learne you to make an Idoll of the letters or ſyllables of Chriſts name, to cauſe men to carrie it in their caps, and bow their knee unto it? thinke you that S. Paul, when he ſaith that all things doe bow the knee to the name of Jeſus, yea of things in heaven, Philip. 2. that he meant, that even the Angels do ſtoop and make obeiſance, when they ſee the name of Jeſus written in a glaſſe window? Or who taught you that the ſigne of the Croſſe is to be borne upon mens foreheads? and that with croſſing of the forehead, we are preſerved from danger? S. Paul, you know, hath no ſuch meaning, when he ſaith, He bare in his body the marks of the Lord Ieſus, which were nothing elſe but the ſignes and tokens of his perſecutions, as whippings, ſtoning, and ſuch like in his fleſh: Galath. 6. 17. Neither, when he ſaith, He rejoyced in nothing but the Croſſe of Chriſt, whereby hee was crucified to the world, verſ. 14. hath he any relation to the Croſſe in the forehead: for it were a miracle, that a man by croſſing his forehead, ſhould ſtraightwaies crucifie and mortifie his affections. Nor yet did our Saviour ſpeak of this marke, where he ſaith, that they which wil follow him muſt take up his croſſe, Mark. 8.34. for in that place by taking up the croſſe, he meaneth nothing elſe but the forſaking and denying of our ſelves. So it is plaine, that in the Scripture you find not this ſuperſtitious ſigne of the croſſe in your foreheads. [illegible]arke 8.34.

2 Where you ſay, that you doe honour the Character of Chriſt, as his name, and the ſigne of the Croſſe: You doe even ſo honour Chriſt, as the ſouldiers did that gave him a reed for a Scepter, and thornes for a Crowne, and bowed themſelves in mockage: So you doe leave Chriſt certaine badges and ſignes of his kingdome; but indeed you ſpoile him of it, and of his Prieſthood too, making other mediators beſide him, and other ſacrifices propitiatorie beſide his. What doe you elſe now, in bowing the knee to the name and ſyllables of Jeſus, and ſpoiling him of his honour, but with the ſouldiers in mockage to bow unto Chriſt? And I pray you, how doe you honour the name of Chriſt, when you make a jeſt of the name of Chriſtian? for in Italie it is a word of reproach, taken for an idiote or foole.

3 We are ſo farre from thinking, that the characters of Chriſts name, and the ſignes of the Croſſe ſo ſuperſtitiouſly uſed among Papiſts are the markes of Chriſt, that we take them rather to be the viſible markes of Antichriſt: for beſides the inviſible characters of Antichriſt, whereof we are to ſpeake afterward, that he ſhall uſe alſo ſome viſible markes, and what thoſe markes are we doe learne where the text ſaith, The marke of the beaſts name, Apocal. 14. 11. and the marke of the number of his name, Apocal. 15. 2. as it is in the originall: Now the number of the beaſts name is expreſſed by theſe three Greeke letters, χ·ξ·ς· Apocal. 13.18. Hence are derived the abuſed characters of Chriſts name, χ·ϛ̃·ς· for χριστὸς: the firſt letter and the laſt in the beaſts name χ·ξ·ς· and in theſe abuſed characters χ·ϛ·ς· are all one; and the middle character ϛ· with his crowne thus, ϛ̃· cannot more fitly be expreſſed by any letter, than the middle in the beaſts name, ξ· Thus we ſee that theſe characters χ·ϛ̃·ς· ſo ſuperſtitiouſly abuſed by the Papiſts, which they uſed in their rings, amulets, tablets, in their caps and garments, doe iſſue out of the beaſts name, and ſo are markes of Antichriſt. Apoc. 14.11. Apoc. 15.2.

In like manner did they abuſe the ſigne of the croſſe, attributing unto it the power, efficacy, and merit of Chriſts death, as though the very ſigne of the croſſe were able to ſanctifie thoſe that were croſſed, and to preſerve them from ſpirituall danger.

And theſe ſuperſtitious markes of the croſſe had their beginning from the beaſts name: for the firſt letter χ· is a croſſe, the middle letter ξ· in Latine X. is alſo a ſideling croſſe, the laſt letter ς· and containeth both σ· and τ· two Greeke letters, whereof the latter is called an headleſſe croſſe: and thus it appeareth plainly, that the markes whereby they ſay they honour Chriſt, are rather a diſhonour to him, and are in very deed the cogniſance of Antichriſt.

4 We anſwer, that the ſignes whereby Chriſtians are marked, are not externall, but internall: We are ſealed by the ſpirit of God, Epheſ. 4.30. The outward ſignes are none other, but the two Sacraments of baptiſme and the Lords ſupper: by the right adminiſtration whereof the congregations of the faithfull are knowne. But of this more ſhall be ſpoken in the Antitheſis, or Antidotum, in the declaration of our opinion. Epheſ. 4.30.

The Proteſtants.

BY the character or marke of Antichriſt, we doe not ſo much underſtand any viſible ſigne or badge to bee printed in the right hand or the forehead, as the Jeſuite imagineth: as though hee ſhould brand all his ſubjects in the hand or forehead: as that hereby is meant and ſignified chiefly the ſociety and communion, whereby they ſhall be joyned to Antichriſt, by giving unto him their fidelitie, oath and obedience, agreeing together in the ſame corruption of faith and doctrine. This is Antichriſts badge or cogniſance, Fulk. Apocal. 13. ſect. 7. There are alſo outward marks of their conjunction with Antichriſt: as the ſhaving of Prieſts, and greazing them with oyle: ſuch are the receiving of holy bread, the wearing of beads, the anhointing with Chriſome, the croſſing of themſelves, as wee have before ſhewed. But the proper note and character is the oath and profeſſion of fealty and obedience.

Argum. 1. Antichriſt, ſay they, ſhall bring in another contrarie character, to diſgrace the ſigne and character of Chriſt, namely the croſſe in the foreheads: But Chriſt hath appointed no ſuch viſible character, neither are true Chriſtians knowne by any ſuch: therefore alſo the character of Antichriſt is no ſuch thing: the antecedent is proved thus.

1 The people of the Jewes had no ſuch outward badge, who were more charged with outward obſervations, than Chriſtians are: Circumciſion was the only ſigne of the covenant to them, Geneſ. 17. 11. which was one of their chiefe Sacraments, in place whereof Baptiſme is enjoyned us: Ergo, much leſſe are we to be knowne by any other outward badge. Geneſ. 17.11.

2 This place Apocal, 13. is taken out of Ezech. 9. where the Angell is commanded to ſet a marke upon the foreheads of them that mourne: but that was no viſible externall marke, for it was ſhewed the Prophet in viſion: Ergo, neither is it to be taken ſo in this place.

3 We grant the Sacraments are badges and markes of our profeſſion: which markes the Pope, the onely Antichriſt hath defaced, by bringing in five other Sacraments, and cleane changing, polluting and altering, the right Sacraments which Chriſt inſtituted : for they have brought into Baptiſme, chriſme, ſalt, oyle, ſpettle, and ſuch traſh : into the Euchariſt, adoration, tranſubſtantiation, ſacrifice, with ſuch like: ſo that herein he ſheweth himſelfe Antichriſt, and hath altered the true markes of Religion.

Argum. 2. It appeareth by the effect what is the Character of Antichriſt : The text ſaith, It was not lawfull for any to buy or ſell, but he that had the marke or the name of the beaſt : No more was it lawfull for any to have trafficke amongſt the Papiſts, but hee that acknowledged the Popes croſſe keyes, or made himſelfe a member of the Romiſh Italian Church ; Nay they ſay, hee is not of the Church that acknowledgeth not the Pope to bee head of Chriſts Church, Fulk. in Apocal. 13. *ſect.*7.

The Jeſuite objecteth : Firſt, this oath of fidelitie and conjunction cannot be that character : for it muſt be in the right hand or forehead. Anſw. We have alreadie declared, that it is too childiſh to take theſe words literally, as though all Antichriſts ſubjects ſhould carrie brands in their foreheads or hands. Secondly, ſaith he, many doe both buy and ſell amongſt them, that have not made profeſſion of their fealtie to Rome, as the Jewes, *Bellarm.cap.*11. Anſw. Yea no marvell, for Antichriſt is an enemie onely to Chriſt : all other people he can brooke well enough beſide good Chriſtians : tell mee I pray you, whether our Merchants be admitted to traffick ſafely in Spaine, if their religion be knowne? The ſervants of God amongſt you, can neither enjoy houſes, lands, libertie, or life : which yoke alſo was laid a long time upon this land, till it pleaſed God to have mercie on us : for the which his name be bleſſed.

Thirdly, Againe, many yeeres agoe, even in Auguſtines and Ambroſe his time, all Churches were joyned to Rome, before Antichriſt was yet revealed. Ergo, This is not the Character of Antichriſt, Bellarm.ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, they were joyned then in common conſent of religion, not as ſubjects by compulſion, but voluntarie ; becauſe at that time, Rome in the chiefeſt points of Religion was in the right faith. Secondly, but of late daies in the Councell of Conſtance, not yet two hundred yeeres agoe, it was made an article of faith, to beleeve, that the Pope was the head of the univerſall Church : yea about the yeere 600. the title of univerſall Biſhop firſt began to bee appropriate to Rome : whereby was inſinuated, that all Churches in the world ſhould bee under the obedience thereof.

Touching the ſlaviſh obedience, and faithleſſe fidelitie, which now further ſhall be yeelded to Antichriſt, which we hold to be that marke or character.

1 Cyrill ſaith, he ſhall uſurpe or take unto himſelfe the power of the Roman Empire, &c. and ſo conſequently hee ſhall enforce and impoſe upon the world the ſame yoke of obedience.

Apologet adver.Gentes.

2 And Tertullian of the Africane Church would have them pray for the Emperours, Quod vim maximam univerſo orbi imminentem, &c. Romani imperii commeatu ſcimus retardari : Becauſe wee know, that the great ruine which hangeth over the world, is foreſlowed by the entercourſe of the Roman Empire.

Apolog.Reg. pag.93.

3 Our princelie Apologiſt herein concurreth with his Church : By the marke in the forehead, ſignifying the outward profeſſion and acknowledgement of their profeſſion unto her : and by the marke in the right hand, ſignifying their actuall implicite obedience unto her, &c.

4 Laſtly, we have the teſtimonie of one of their Popes themſelves, who ſaith plainly, that he is the forerunner of Antichriſt, which would be called Univerſall Biſhop, Gregorie 1. *lib.*4. *epiſtol.*32. and writing to Eulogius of Conſtantinople he calleth this title of Univerſalitie, ſuperbæ appellationis verbum, a proud name. And Pelagius 2. 1. decretal. contra Iohannem Conſtantinop. ſaith thus, Nullus Patriarcharum tam profano utatur vocabulo, he termeth it a prophane name, &c. See then by his teſtimony, the title of Univerſality, and exacting of obedience of other Churches, is a prophane and proud title, and in very deed the character and marke of Antichriſt.

The fourth Part, concerning the generall and originall of Antichriſt.

The Papiſts.

60. Error.

THey doe reject thoſe old fancies concerning Antichriſt, as that hee ſhould bee borne of a Virgin by helpe of the devill, that hee ſhould have the devill to his father, that hee ſhould bee a devill incarnate : or that hee ſhould be Nero raiſed from the dead. Refuſing theſe fables, they have found out one as fooliſh : Our Rhemiſts hold, that Antichriſt ſhall bee borne of the Tribe of Dan. Unto this opinion alſo our Doway men incline, in their annotations upon the Bible, *p.*150.

Bellarmine dare not ſay ſo, but he thinketh that he ſhall come of the Jewes ſtocke, and be circumciſed, and be taken of the Jewes for their Meſſiah, cap. 12.

Argum. 1. That he ſhall come of the tribe of Dan: thus they would prove it, Gen. 49. 17. Dan ſhall be a ſerpent by the way, biting the horſe heeles: Ierem. 8. 16. The neighing of his horſes is heard from Dan, And Apocal. 7. where 12. thouſand of every tribe are reckoned, onely Dan is left out, becauſe (belike) Antichriſt ſhould come of that tribe, Rhem. 2. Theſ. 2. ſect. 8.

Geneſ. 49. 17.
Ierem. 8. 16.

Anſw. Bellarmine confuteth all theſe reaſons: the firſt he ſaith with Hierome to be underſtood of Sampſon, who came of the Tribe of Dan: the ſecond place is of Nabuchadnezzars comming to deſtroy Jeruſalem, as Hierome alſo expoundeth it: to the third he ſaith, that Ephraim is left out as well as Dan, yea and ſo is Manaſſes too: becauſe the Tribe of Ioſeph is named for his two ſonnes: but Dan is left out becauſe Levi is reckoned in his place. We may ſee now, how well they agree, when one Jeſuite confuteth another, Bellarmine cap. 12.

Argum. 2. Bellarmine ſtandeth much upon that place, Iohn 5. 43. If another come in his name, him will ye receive: but ſaith he, the Jewes will receive none but of their owne kinred, and whom they looke for to be their Meſſiah. Ergo, Antichriſt muſt come of the Jewes, ibid.

Ioh. 5. 43

He alſo urgeth that place of the Apoſtle, 2 Theſ. 2. 11. God ſhall ſend them ſtrong deluſions, to beleeve lies: which he underſtandeth of the Jewes, that ſhall bee readie to receive Antichriſt for their Meſſiah: and indeed ſaith, Antichriſt ſhall come eſpecially for the Jewes, to delude and deceive them.

2 Theſ. 2. 11.

Anſw. 1. This place wee have ſhewed before, part. 1. of this queſtion, to bee underſtood of falſe prophets amongſt the Jewes, ſuch as mention is made of, Acts 5. as Theudas and Iudas, and not of any one falſe prophet: ſo Iohn 10. where Chriſt compareth himſelfe, which is the true ſhepheard, with the hireling, he underſtandeth all hirelings, though he ſpake in the ſingular number. Secondly, if it ſhould be underſtood only or ſpecially of their imagined Antichriſt, then it would follow, that the Jewes as yet have received none comming in their owne name, but have as it were, kept themſelves in ſuſpence, refuſing Chriſt, and yet hearing none other. Which were very abſurd, that this ſaying of Chriſt hath not been verified upon the Jewes theſe 16. hundred yeeres. Thirdly, and Chriſts ſpeech is eſpecially directed to that generation, that ſeeing they refuſed Chriſt, yet they followed other ringleaders, or ſectmaſters, that deceived them.

And concerning the other place, we anſwer. Firſt, that it is not ſpoken onely or ſpecially of the Jewes, but of all unbeleevers, who through the hardnes of their heart ſhould be ready to receive Antichriſt: and ſo the Rhemiſts expound it, in their annotations upon this place: and the Apoſtle doth give inſtructions as touching Antichriſt, not to the Jewes, but to the beleeving Gentiles, to whom hee writeth, ſaying in the 2. verſ. Let no man deceive you, &c. Secondly, that Antichriſt ſhall come chiefly to ſeduce the Jewes in the end of the world, is contrarie to the Apoſtle Rom. 11. which propheſieth of the generall calling of the Jewes, not of their generall ſeducing: and this aſſertion of the Papiſts, that the Jewes Meſſiah is yet to come, doth harden their hearts, and nouriſh them in their blind hope and fooliſh conceit.

The Proteſtants.

THat it is a very fable and meere device, to make men beleeve that Antichriſt ſhall come of the Tribe of Dan, or of the ſtocke of the Jewes, thus we ſhew it.

Argum. 1. It is out of doubt, that the nation of the Jewes ſhall be converted unto God, and mercy ſhall be ſhewed againe to the remnant of Iſrael, Rom. 11. 25. confeſſed alſo by the Papiſts. And hereof Origen ſo many yeeres ſince, hath written very confidently, though doubtfull and uncertaine in many things beſide. First, Homil. 6. in Numer. ſpeaking of the marriage of Moſes with a woman of Ethiopia, how Miriam his ſiſter for murmuring againſt it became leprous, and was ſhut 7. daies out of the Campe: he thus applieth the Story by the marriage with the Ethiopian, underſtanding the calling of the Gentiles: and by the excluding of Miriam, the rejection of the Jewes: Veruntamen hae lepra, &c. But this their ſpirituall leproſie ſhall not remaine ever, but when as the weeke of the world is accompliſhed, ſhee ſhall bee brought againe to the tents: that is, the Jewes ſhall returne to the Church.

Rom. 11. 25.

Againe homil. 18. upon thoſe words of Baalam, c. 24. 17. I ſhall ſee him, but not now: i. noviſſimis temporibus cum plenitudo gentium introierit: That is, in the laſt times, when the fulneſſe of the Gentiles is come in, and all Iſrael beginneth to bee ſaved, &c. Thus he writeth of the generall calling of the Jewes toward the end of the world. But if one come, which ſhall reedifie the Temple, and reſtore the ſacrifices and circumciſion, ſuch an one as the Jewes ſhall take for their Meſſiah: who ſeeth not, that by this meanes the Jewes will be more hardned, having now their owne hearts deſire, their Temple, Meſſiah, circumciſion: and their converſion would bee greatly hindred, nay quite and cleane overthrowne?

Numb. 24. 17.

Argum. 2. If Antichriſt ſhould come of the Jewes, it is like that his ſeat ſhould bee at Jeruſalem, and that the Temple ſhould be built againe by him: but that cannot be, for the Temple, as Daniel propheſieth, ſhall lie deſolate even unto the end, Dan. 9. 27. Ergo, he ſhall not come of the Jewes. More of this in the next part.

Dan. 9. 27.

Beſide the Prophecie of Daniel, wee have the warrant of our Saviour Chriſt, that the Temple of

Jeruſalem

Math.24.2.

Jeruſalem ſhall not be reedified, Math.24.2. a ſtone ſhall not be left upon a ſtone: Which Prophecie was not onely accompliſhed in the deſtruction of the old temple, but then alſo, when in Iulian the Apoſtata his time, the Jewes being by him encouraged to build the temple, what was built in the day, was caſt downe in the night; and beſide a fire fell from heaven, that conſumed the worke and workmens inſtruments: which Cyrillus Biſhop of Jeruſalem then ſeeing, applied unto that event this prediction of our Savior. ſic Socrates lib.3.c.17. The like ſucceſſe let them looke for, that ſhall attempt the like againe. Further there is an imperiall law made by Theodoſ. that the Jewes ſhould not attempt to build any Synagogue under the paine of confiſcation of all their goods and loſſe of their life, and the law beginneth thus: Hac valitura in omne ævum lege ſancimus: They make it an eternall law, to hold as long as the world ſtandeth. Cod.lib.1.tit.12.l.17. How then is it like that the temple ſhould be built, there being ſuch reſtraint againſt Synagogues? And in the ſame law it is forbidden, that the Jewes ſhould have any honour, or beare any office, or execute any place of judgement. Wherefore ſeeing the Nation of the Jewes is deſpiſed and contemptible, and by a perpetuall law kept from riſing to any honour: it is unlike, that from them ſhould ſpring ſuch a mightie Monarch, as they imagine Antichriſt to bee.

Bernard witneſſeth with us: Beſtia illa in Apocalypſi, cui datum eſt os loquens blaſphemias, & bellum gerere cum ſanctis, Petri cathedram occupat, tanquam Leo paratus ad prædam; The beaſt in the Apocalypſe, to whom a mouth was given to ſpeake blaſphemies, and to make warre with the Saints, doth occupie Peters chaire, readie as a Lyon to his prey: Epiſtol.126. But wee read not, that ever any Jew was Pope of Rome to ſit in Peters chaire. Concil. Toletan.4.can.65. The Jewes are there called, Miniſtri Antichriſti, The Miniſters and ſervants of Antichriſt: and ſo indeed the Popes have uſed them in divers ſervices: And therefore Gregorie the ninth, in deſpight of all Chriſtian Princes did give the Jewes great immunities, anno 1240. And who knoweth not that the Papiſts have begged many of the Jewiſh ceremonies: as the yeere of Jubile was inſtituted by Bonifacius the 8, anno 1300. and many other beſide.

Fox. pag. 1775. col.1. Et p.1611. 2.16 Edit.1610.

Biſhop Ridley holy Martyr ſaith, that the Sea of Rome for the contrariety of Religion and diverſity of doctrine from the Apoſtles, is the ſeat of Antichriſt, and the Biſhop of the ſame, that maintaineth the abominations thereof, is Antichriſt himſelfe indeed. But none of the Jewes were ever Biſhops of Rome.

Now whereas divers of the Fathers are objected, as Irenæus, Cyrillus, Hierome, Damaſcene, with others, who held that Antichriſt ſhould come of the Tribe of Dan, I anſwer: 1. that notwithſtanding theſe allegations, Bellarmine refuſeth this conceit, and diſſenteth herein from the Fathers. 2 Againe, if they allow their opinion in this point, why alſo doe they not receive their other fanſies, as that of Cyrillus, that Satan in his owne perſon ſhall uſe Antichriſt as his Organe, catecheſ.15. That of Hierome, that Antichriſt ſhall come out of old Babylon, in 11. chap. Daniel. That of Damaſcene, that he ſhall be borne of fornication, lib.4. de fid. cap. 27.

See before: 1. Cyril alleaged for the not reedifying of the temple of the Jewes, which is like ſhould bee built againe, if Antichriſt ſhould come of the Jewes.

2 See alſo Origens opinion for the calling of the Jewes, which ſhould bee much hindred, if Antichriſt ſhould come as their expected Meſſiah.

3 And Jeruſalem ſhould in all likelyhood bee Antichriſts ſeat, if hee were of the Jewes: but that cannot be, as our royall Apologiſt ſheweth, becauſe that Citie muſt be Antichriſts ſeat, which reigneth over the kingdomes of the earth, Apoc. 17.18.

Apolog. Reg. pag.56. Comment. in 11. Apocal. Epiſt. ad Marcellum tom.3. Comment. in 2. Theſ.2. ſect.1.

4 Ribera their owne writer ſaith, the Temple, *Apoc.*11. cannot be underſtood of the temple at Jeruſalem, which at that time was deſtroyed, when Iohn wrote: but by the Temple is ſignified the Church of God, &c. Antichriſt then ſhall not ſit in the Temple of Jeruſalem: for Hierome calleth it a Jewiſh fable, that the Temple ſhould be built againe; yea Aquinas ſaith, that ſome Jewes beleeve it ſhall never be reedified.

The fifth Part, Concerning the ſeat and place of Antichriſt.

The Papiſts.

61. Error.

BEllarmine holdeth opinion, that Antichriſt ſhall have his imperiall ſeat at Jeruſalem, and reedifie and build againe the temple, yea for a while command circumciſion to be uſed and obſerved, Bel. cap.13. lib.3. de pontif. Rhemiſt.2. Theſ.2. ſect.11.

Apoc.11.8.

Argum. 1. Apoc. 11.8. The Citie of Antichriſt is called the great Citie where our Lord was crucified. But Chriſt was crucified at Jeruſalem, Ergo.

Anſw. Firſt, it cannot be ſo underſtood, for *verſ.*2. Jeruſalem is called the holy Citie, *verſ.*8. This great Citie is called Sodome and Egypt: how can the ſame Citie be capable of ſuch contrary names? How can that be called an holy Citie, where the abomination of deſolation ſhall be, and the ſeat of Antichriſt?

Secondly, Auguſtine in Apoc. homil. 8. underſtandeth by the great Citie and the ſtreets thereof the middeſt of the Church: And by the great citie very fitly is underſtood the large juriſdiction of the Pope, who ſaith, hee is head of the great citie and Catholike Church: Whoſe ſeat we ſee is at Rome, by authoritie of which citie Chriſt was put to death: and by Antichriſt the Pope, Chriſt alſo is perſecuted in his members, Fulk. Annotat. Apocal. 11. ſect. 2. S. Hierome alſo doubteth not to call Rome, Maledicam civitatem, The curſed citie: ad Principiam: and Sodome, in his Epiſtle to Lucinus.

Argum. 2. Apocal. 17. 16. The ten hornes, that is, ten Kings, amongſt whom the Roman Empire ſhall be divided, ſhall hate the ſcarlet whore, that is, Rome, and burne it with fire: how then ſhall it be the ſeat of Antichriſt? Bellarm. Apoc.17.16.

Anſw. The text is plaine, that the ſame kingdomes, that before had given their power to the beaſt, and were ſubject to the whore of Babylon, ſhall after make her deſolate, and eat her fleſh: which thing we ſee in part to be accompliſhed alreadie, that many Princes have redeemed their necks from Antichriſt his yoke, Fulk. Apocal. 17. ſect. 3. It is not neceſſarie therefore to bee done all at one time, but one after another.

Argum. 3. 2 Theſſ. 2. He ſhall ſit in the Temple of God: but at that time the Jewes onely had a Temple, the Chriſtians yet had none, and the Apoſtle ſpeaking of the Church of God, did of purpoſe refraine this name, leſt the Church of the Chriſtians ſhould be thought like the Jewes Synagogue: Bellarm. 2 Theſſ.2.

Anſw. First the Jewiſh temple ſhall not be built againe, as Daniel propheſieth, 9. 27. And how can it be built in ſo ſhort a ſpace, ſeeing Antichriſt, as they ſay, muſt reigne but three yeeres and an halfe? and to what purpoſe, ſeeing he will aboliſh all ſacrifices? Secondly, though it ſhould be built againe, nay if it were ſtanding now, for the exerciſe of Jewiſh ſacrifices, it could not be called the temple of God. Thirdly, by the temple therefore is meant the viſible Church, that which ſometimes was a true viſible one, as the Church of Rome, and after ſhould be ſo taken, reputed and challenged, as it is at this day by the Papiſts. So ſaith Maſter Bradford holy Martyr, That wicked man ſitteth in the temple of God, that is, the Church, for it cannot be underſtood of Mahomet, or any out of the Church, but of ſuch as beare rule in the Church, pag. 1616. col. 2. Diſputat. cum Cieeſtrenſ. Neither have the Papiſts hereby any advantage, as though the Pope ſate in the very true Church: for it is not the true Church indeed, but ſo reputed and taken by them. But he is ſaid to ſit in the temple, that is, the Church of God, both becauſe there ſometime hath bin a viſible Church, and as yet they doe retaine the name and ſhadow of the Church, and becauſe he challengeth to be the head of the Church, and his office to be chiefly eccleſiaſticall and of the Church. Fourthly, though there were no materiall temples of the Chriſtians in Pauls time, what of that? Fifthly, he ſpeaketh not here of any ſuch materiall temple, but of the Church of God: neither doth Saint Paul in this ſenſe refuſe to uſe the name of temple, as 1 Corinth. 3. verſ. 16. and 6. verſ. 19. and in other places. Sixthly, the Rhemiſts doe allow the interpretation of S. Auguſtine and S. Hierome, who expound the temple ſpoken of by the Apoſtle, not for the temple of the Jewes, but for the Church of God: from the which Antichriſt (ſay they) ſhall revolt and become an Apoſtata: ſect. 12. in 2 Theſſ. 1. But whereas in the ſame place they would hereupon conclude that the Pope is not Antichriſt, becauſe he is in the Church, and ſo ſhall not Antichriſt: To this wee anſwer, that the Pope though he remaine in ſome outward ſhew of the Church, yet is departed from the true doctrine of the Church, and ſo become an Apoſtata. Dan.9 27. Pag.1468, 1.86

The Proteſtants.

THat Rome is the ſeat and place of Antichriſt, beſide that the Rhemiſts confeſſe ſo much that Antichriſt ſhall reigne there, Annot. Apocal. 17. ſect. 4. we prove it thus.

Argum. 1. Babylon is the ſeat of Antichriſt, who is called the great whore of Babylon, Apocal. 17.5. Rome is Babylon: Ergo, the ſeat of Antichriſt. Apoc 17.5.

Object. It was Babylon, while it was governed and ruled by heathen Emperours; but the Church was not then called Babylon, Bellarm.

Anſw. First, Ergo, by your owne confeſſion, Rome ſhall be the ſeat of Antichriſt, ſeeing by Saint Iohn it was called Babylon: for that citie, which then did beare rule over the earth, Apoc. 17.18. was Rome, and the ſame is Babylon, verſ. 5. and Babylon is the citie of the great whore: Ergo, Rome is the city or ſeat of Antichriſt who is that great whore. Secondly, it was not only called Babylon in the time of the Heathen, but even of Chriſtian Emperours. Auguſtine ſaith, it is Occidentalis Babylon, the Babylon in the Weſt parts, & prioris filia Babylonis, and daughter to the firſt Babylon. And S. Hierome ſaith, Dum in Babylone verſarer: While I lived in Babylon, and was a tenant to the ſcarlet whore: Præfat. ad Paulinian. He thus ſpeaketh in the time of Chriſtian Emperours, not doubting even then alſo to call Rome Babylon. Thirdly, S. Iohn doth not only propheſie of the crueltie of the terrene ſtate, but of the falſe prophet Antichriſt, he ſhould alſo uſurpe an eccleſiaſticall government there. For as the terrene ſtate of the Emperours for their crueltie is compared to a Leopard and a Lion, Apocal. 13. 2. ſo the eccleſiaſticall ſtate of the Popes is reſembled to a Lambe with two hornes ſpeaking in hypocriſie, pretending holineſſe, yet practiſing tyrannie, verſ. 11. Apoc.17.18. Apoc.13.2, 11.

Object. Secondly, they object that by the damnation of the great whore, is underſtood the finall deſtruction of all the company of the reprobate, Rhemiſt. Apocal. 17.1.

Anſw. The damnation univerſally of the wicked is deſcribed chap. 20. and therefore this place muſt be underſtood of Antichriſt, and his adherents: and very fitly doth the name of whore agree to that Sea, for once a whore indeed was Pope there, called Ioane the eighth. Which ſo wringeth the Papiſts, that they have no other ſhift but impudently to denie it.

Apoc.17.3.

*Argum.*2. That citie, which hath names of blaſphemies, and is full of abominations, is the ſeat of Antichriſt the great whore, Apocal. 17.3. but this is the citie of Rome. Ergo.

Firſt, that Rome is the citie full of names of blaſphemie, being called eternall, and yet but temporall, Hierome teſtifieth, lib.2.cont. Iovinian. Scriptam in fronte blaſphemiam: Thou haſt raſed out, by the confeſſion of faith, the blaſphemie written in thy forehead, &c. Here it is anſwered, that Rome was the place of blaſphemie, while it was heatheniſh: but ſince the profeſſion of the Chriſtian faith it is not, as Hierome here ſaith, Bellarmine.

Contra. Firſt, it is ſufficient for this matter, that Hierome affirmeth Rome to bee that citie which is full of blaſphemie. Secondly, as he here affirmeth that for that preſent Rome was cleered from blaſphemie, becauſe of the faith of Chriſt: ſo elſewhere hee ſheweth, that the damnation of the great whore, that is the citie of Rome, is yet behind, according to the prophecie, Revel. 17.1. as it followeth in the ſame place, That curſe, which our Saviour hath threatned thee in the Apocalypſe, thou maiſt eſcape by repentance. So then in his judgement, ſeeing the damnation of the whore was not then fulfilled, at that time the whore had not ſhewed her ſelfe.

Secondly, that Rome alſo is the citie of abominations, the ſame author beareth witneſſe: He calleth it the citie, in qua palma vitiorum, that may beare the bell for all kinde of vice: ad principiam. And againe, The citie of pompe, lecherie, delicacie, ubi humilem eſſe miſeria eſt: where humilitie is counted miſerie: ad Marcellam. Thus he ſpake of Rome being at that time Chriſtian: but who ſeeth not how much more it is degenerate now?

*Argum.*3. We have another argument out of the ſame chapter, verſ. 9. The ſeven heads are ſeven mountaines, on which the woman ſitteth. But there is no citie in the world notoriouſly knowne to ſtand upon ſeven hils, but Rome: Ergo, it is the ſeat of Antichriſt.

Object. The text is, They are alſo ſeven Kings: ſo the ſeven heads, or ſeven hils, ſignifie ſeven Kings: for there ſhall be ſo many chiefe Empires which ſhall perſecute the Church, there are five paſt: Egypt, Canaan, Babylon, the Perſians, Grecians, the ſixth, the Romans, which in part ſtandeth yet, the ſeventh ſhall be Antichriſt, Remiſt. Apocal. 17.*ſect.*7.

Anſw. Firſt, the ſeven heads are expounded to be both ſeven hils and ſeven Kings: the Scripture uſeth not to expound one hard and obſcure thing by an harder and more obſcure, as to ſay, ſeven heads are ſeven mountaines, that is, ſeven Kings: for wee were neerer the ſenſe before: and the terme of heads doth more fitly reſemble Kings, than mountaines. Secondly, the ſeven Kings are more fitlie taken for ſeven principall governours of the Romans, as Kings, Tribunes, Conſuls, Decemviri, Dictators, Emperours, Popes: for by theſe ſeven orders hath the common-wealth been governed firſt and laſt. Fulk. ibid.

Object. Rome is not now built upon ſeven hils, it ſtandeth in the plaine in Campo Martio: Sander. ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, you have then no right to Peters Chaire, for when he ſate at Rome, the Citie ſtood upon ſeven hils. Secondly, though the Pope now hath removed his palace to the Vaticane, on the other ſide of the river; yet he did ſit for many yeeres in Laterane, untill the time of Pope Nicholas the ſecond, who was almoſt eleven hundred yeeres after Chriſt. Thirdly, though the Pope hath removed his palace upon pleaſure beyond the river yet his Sea is not removed: for upon every one of thoſe hils there are Monaſteries, and Chappels, and ſuch like monuments to be ſeene to this day. In mount Cælius there is the Monaſterie of Gregorie the firſt, the Cathedrall Church of Laterane. In mount Aventine, the Monaſteries of Sabine and Boniface. In the mount Exquilinus the Minſter of S. Maria major, the ruines of Saint Cyriacus Church, which is yet a title of a Cardinall. The mount Viminalis hath the Church of Saint Laurence. The mount Capitoline hath an houſe of Friers, called Aracœli. The mount Palatine the Church of Saint Nicholas. The mount Quirinalis hath S. Maria de populo. Wherefore though the Popes perſon be removed a little aſide, yet the popiſh religion is exerciſed, and relickes of ſuperſtition are to be found in every one of thoſe hils. Wherefore we nothing doubt to conclude, but that Rome is that citie upon ſeven hils, and ſo the principall ſeat of Antichriſt.

Let us ſee the judgement of ſome of their owne: Epiſtol. Leodienſ. contra Paſchal. 2. anno 1107. Aiit Petrus in Epiſtola, ſalutat vos eccleſia, quæ eſt Babylone collecta, &c. Peter ſaith in his epiſtle, the Church, which is at Babylon, ſaluteth you: Hitherto I underſtood Babylon to ſignifie Rome, becauſe of the idolatrie thereof in thoſe times: but now my wofull experience teacheth me ſo to expound it, that Peter ſaying the Church at Babylon, &c. did foreſee the horrible confuſion and diſſention, which is there at this day, &c. So then Rome was not only Babylon then, but it is alſo Babylon now.

We have alſo here the evident teſtimonie of our adverſaries themſelves: It may well bee, ſay they, that as the perſecuting Emperours did principally ſit in Rome; ſo Antichriſt ſhall have his principall ſeat there, though others thinke, that Jeruſalem rather ſhall be his principall citie: Rhemiſt. annot. in 17. Apocal. ſect. 4. And againe, whereas they confeſſe that the great citie, which is the whore, is old Rome, ibid. ſect. 9. and that the ſeventh head of the beaſt, whereupon the whore rideth, is Antichriſts ſtate, *ibid. ſect.*7. it muſt of neceſſitie follow, that Antichriſt is one of the heads of the Roman ſtate. Their only evaſion here is, that even then, when Antichriſt ſhall ſit in Rome, the Church there ſhall not be Antichriſt, *Rhemiſt. ſect.*4.

Contra. Antichriſt ſtate ſhall either be the Imperiall Roman ſtate, or Eccleſiaſticall: but not the Imperiall for theſe reaſons: Firſt, they themſelves confeſſe that Antichriſt ſhall not come as long as the Roman Empire ſtandeth, *ſect.*7. Secondly, the Roman Empire is now weakened, and nothing remaineth but the name and image thereof: ſo that it is not like to be that which ſhall trouble and vex the world. Thirdly, even when Nero and Domitian and other perſecuting Emperours governed, when as the Emperours had never greater power, nor yet malice or crueltie; yet even then the Empire was an hindrance to the comming of Antichriſt: and therefore Tertullian giveth this as a reaſon, why the Chriſtians did pray for the Roman perſecuting ſtate, Quod vim maximam univerſo urbi imminentem, &c. Becauſe that we know, that the great trouble and vexation of the whole world, threatning the end thereof, and horrible miſeries, is hindred by the flouriſhing of the Roman Empire, Apolog. cap. 32. If that then the Imperiall ſtate cannot be Antichriſt, it muſt needs follow, that the Papall and Eccleſiaſticall ſtate in Rome, which hath the exerciſe of both ſwords there, and the chiefe government thereof, is the very ſtrength and head of Antichriſts kingdome.

Heare the teſtimonie of an holy Martyr: The whore is that citie, ſaith Iohn, which hath the empire of the Kings of the earth, Apocal. 17. Now what citie is there in all the world, that, when Iohn wrote, had the rule of the kingdomes of the earth, but only the citie of Rome, &c. Biſhop Ridley pag. 1779. *col.*1.

Beſide theſe former evidences: 1. Cyrilus ſaith, that Antichriſt ſhall uſurpe the power of the Romans. 2. Tertullian ſaith, that Babylon Romana urbis figuram portat, doth beare the figure of the citie of Rome.

3 And whereas they object that place, Apocal. 11. 8. the citie where our Lord was crucified: as though Jeruſalem ſhould be the ſeat and place of Antichriſt: we anſwer with our Great protector of the faith, that it is a common phraſe in Scripture to call Chriſt perſecuted and ſlaine, when his Saints are ſo uſed, &c. and beſide it may be ſaid that he was ſlaine in the great citie Babylon, ſince by the Roman authoritie he was put to death, under a Roman Iudge, and for a Roman quarrell, &c.

The ſixth part, concerning the doctrine of Antichriſt.

The Papiſts.

62.Error.

Their opinion is, that Antichriſt ſhall be an open and maniſeſt adverſarie to Chriſt, and that hee ſhall aboliſh all worſhip of God, and all religion, Rhemiſt. annot. 2. Theſſ. 2. ſect. 10. So alſo our Doway gloſſemen ſay, that Antichriſt, that ſingular man of ſinne, will confeſſe no God, but himſelfe: *pag.*1014. Bellarmine draweth all the doctrine of Antichriſt to theſe foure heads. Firſt, he ſhall denie Jeſus to be Chriſt, and aboliſh the Sacraments inſtituted by Chriſt. Secondly, hee ſhall make himſelfe Chriſt. Thirdly, he ſhall make himſelfe God, and be adored as God. Fourthly, he ſhall aboliſh all other worſhip, both true and falſe, yea the worſhip of Idols. Wherefore (ſaith hee) the Pope cannot be Antichriſt, that doth none of thoſe things, *cap.*14. Of theſe now in their order.

Argum. 1. Antichriſt ſhall utterly denie Chriſt: 1 *Ioh.*2.22. and 4.3. Every ſpirit that confeſſeth not, that Ieſus Chriſt is come in the fleſh, is not of God: this is the ſpirit of Antichriſt: Ergo, Antichriſt ſhall altogether denie Chriſt.

1 Ioh. 2.22.4.3.

Anſw. Firſt, the Rhemiſts ſay, that this is not a marke for all times, to know an heretike by, but it was only for thoſe times, to confeſſe Chriſt to be come in the fleſh. This is a ſurer note now (ſay they) that who ſo confeſſeth not Chriſt to be really preſent, and to be ſacrificed in the Maſſe, is not of God, Rhemiſt. annot. 1. *Ioh.*4. *ſect.*2. Where I will not ſtand to note the preſumption of theſe Papiſts, that will correct and amend the Apoſtles rule, to know Heretikes by, which ſerveth for all times: and ſo Auguſtine taketh it. But here firſt I oppoſe our Rhemiſts judgement againſt Bellarmine: for they denie that this place ſerveth to deſcribe Antichriſt, belonging only to the Apoſtles times: Bellarmine ſaith, it doth moſt properly decipher Antichriſt.

Serm de verbis Apoſtoli 38.

2 The great Antichriſt ſhall denie Chriſt no otherwiſe, than other Antichriſts and heretikes did in the Apoſtles time: for they are all Antichriſts, 1. *Ioh.*2.18. and he giveth one rule to know them all by, *verſ.*22. But the Antichriſts then denied not Chriſt apertly, but covertly: Ergo, ſo ſhall the great Antichriſt.

1 Ioh.2.18.

The firſt is true, that the old heretikes did not plainly denie Chriſt to be come in the fleſh: but ſome denied his humanitie, ſome his divinitie, ſome his perſon. Auguſtine ſaith, Arriani hoc negant, licet verbis fateantur: The Arrians denie that Chriſt is come in the fleſh, though they confeſſe it in words: for he that doth not confeſſe that Chriſt is equall unto God, denieth Chriſt in the fleſh: and ſo of other heretikes. The ſecond alſo is as true: that Antichriſt, who is no other but the Pope, ſhall alſo cunningly and covertly denie Chriſt: for hee that denieth the offices of Chriſt, denieth Chriſt: as Auguſtine ſaith of Peters deniall, Quicquid ejus negavit, ipſum negavit: Tract. in Iohann. 66.

When-

Whatſoever he denied of or belonging to Chriſt, he denied Chriſt. So the Pope denieth Chriſt to be our Prophet, King, and Prieſt: His propheticall office he defaceth, and in effect denieth, in diſgracing the Scriptures, ſaying, they are imperfect, and containe not all matters neceſſarie to ſalvation, that their authoritie bindeth us not without his allowance: His Kingly office, in making himſelfe Chriſts Vicar and Vicegerent upon earth, in making new lawes, Sacraments, ordinances, beſide Chriſts, as neceſſarie to ſalvation as the rules of the Goſpell: His Prieſthood, in ſetting up a new propitiatorie ſacrifice in the abominable Maſſe, beſide the onely ſacrifice of attonement upon the Croſſe, in making other mediators and interceſſors, beſide Chriſt: and ſuch like, whereof we ſhall have occaſion to intreat afterward more at large: Ergo, the Pope in denying the offices of Chriſt, denieth Chriſt, and ſo is Antichriſt.

Argum. 2. Hee ſhall make himſelfe Chriſt and Meſſiah, which the Jeſuite would prove out of Ioh.5.43. Iohn 5. verſ. 43. If another come in his owne name, him will ye receive: But the Pope commeth not in his owne name, but in the name of Chriſt, he calleth himſelfe Chriſts Vicar: Ergo, he cannot bee Antichriſt: Bellarm. lib. 3. de Antichriſto.

Anſw. Firſt, it is not neceſſarie that Antichriſt ſhould openly profeſſe himſelfe to be Chriſt, in name, but he ſhall doe it, opere, in deed, and that cloſely and covertly: for thoſe whom Chriſt calleth, pſeudochriſtos, falſe Chriſts, Matth. 24.23. Iohn calleth Antichriſtos, Antichriſts, 1 Ioh. 2.18. Falſe prophets therefore are falſe Chriſts, and Antichriſts: yet all thoſe falſe prophets and heretikes did not in name and outward profeſſion make themſelves Chriſts.

2 The Pope of Rome in effect maketh himſelfe Chriſt: for who but Chriſt is the head of the Church? who but Chriſt is ſuperiour to the Angels, and to command them? who but Chriſt can make Sacraments and articles of faith? But all this the Pope taketh upon himſelfe to doe: yea the Jeſuite is not aſhamed to ſay, that he hath the ſame office which Chriſt had being upon earth, lib. 5. de pontif. cap. 4. And whereas they ſay, the Pope commeth in the name of Chriſt: it ſhall as much profit him (it being not in truth, but in colour onely and ſhew) as it ſhall profit the falſe prophets to ſay in Matth.7.22.23. the day of the Lord, Have not we in thy name propheſied and caſt out devils? Mat. 7. 22, 23. to whom Chriſt ſhall make anſwer, Verily I know you not.

Argum. 3. Antichriſt ſhall openly name himſelfe God, and command men to worſhip him as 2 Theſ. 2.4. God, 2. Theſſal. 2.4. But this doth not the Pope: Ergo, he is not Antichriſt, Bellarm.

Anſw. Firſt, if Antichriſt ſhould be ſuch an one, you might have found amongſt the Emperours of Rome divers Antichriſts; for ſuch an one Caligula was, that commanded temples to bee erected in his name, and his images to bee ſet up to be worſhipped, yea in the temple at Jeruſalem. Secondly, S. Pauls words will not beare any ſuch ſenſe; he ſhall ſit, ὡς θεὸς, as God: and your vulgar Latine hath oſtendens ſe tanquam ſit Deus, ſhewing himſelfe as though he were God, that is, in deed and effect, not in open profeſſion: for if he ſhould ſit and be worſhipped in the temple as God; how can it be called the temple of God, being thus a temple of moſt groſſe idolatrie? Bellarmine here anſwereth, that the text is not, ὡς θεὸς, as God, but, ὅτι θεὸς, that he is God: but the text in the originall hath both, firſt it ſaith, he ſhall ſit as God, and then he ſhall ſhew himſelfe, that he is God: that is, as their owne vulgar Latine readeth, as if he were God. Thirdly, the Pope in effect maketh himſelfe a God upon earth: for he can diſpenſe againſt the law of nature, the law of God, againſt both new and old Teſtament: as we have ſhewed before, Queſt. 9. of this Controverſie: yea Bellarmine ſaith, he may by his Apoſtolike
Extravag. authoritie diſpenſe with the precepts of the Apoſtles, cap. 14. Hee is able to change the nature of things, and of nothing to make things to be, of wrong to make juſtice, &c. Pope Nicholaus diſtinct. 96. Yea it is ſaid of the Pope, that he is neither God nor man, but a middle thing betweene both: Pope Boniface. I pray you then what is he? he is no Angell, for he is above them, and commandeth them: Papa Angelis præcipit, the Pope commandeth Angels. He muſt then either be a God or a Devill, by your owne confeſſion, chuſe which you will: Nay they doe make him a plaine God: Es alter Deus in terris, another God upon earth: and they ſalute him by theſe names, Dominus Deus noſter Papa, our Lord God the Pope. Thus it is proved, that the Pope, both by his deeds, as alſo by his titles, doth make himſelfe God upon earth, Argum. 4. Antichriſt (ſay they) ſhall take away all worſhip, yea of Idols, and ſhall command nothing to be worſhipped but himſelfe, 2 Theſſ. 2.4. the word is σεβάσματα, numina, all things that are worſhipped. But ſo doth not the Pope, for he prayeth to Saints, adoreth the bodie of Chriſt on the altar. Ergo. Bellarm. cap. 14. Rhemiſt. 2. Theſſ. 2. ſect. 10.

Anſw. Firſt, the text proveth not, that he ſhall take away all Idols, or things worſhipped, but ſhall exalt himſelfe againſt them, and make ſmall account of them. The place alſo of Daniel is plaine 11. 37. He ſhall not regard the God of his fathers, nor care for any God, but ſhall magnifie himſelfe above all: and in his place ſhall he honour the God Mauzzim, and the God which his fathers knew not, ſhall he honour with gold and ſilver. Out of this place wee gather two things: firſt, that Antichriſt ſhall bring in a ſtrange God, which his fathers never knew: ſo hath the Pope invented a breaden god, which he honoureth with gold and precious ſtones, making more account of it, than of any Image or relike whatſoever. Secondly, yet he ſhall magnifie himſelfe above all ſuch Gods, Images, Roods, Shrines, and the like, yea above his owne breaden god; ſo doth the Pope: for he rideth upon mens ſhoulders, when his breaden god is carried upon an hackney: he exalteth his throne above the altar, the Croſſe is carried on the right hand of the Emperours ſwords and ſcepters, but is laid under his feet: In the yeere of Jubile he beateth upon the gates of Paradiſe with a golden hammer, Fulk, Annot. 2 *Theſſ.*2.10. So then howſoever like an hypocrite he ſeeme to adore his breaden god, yet indeed doth he magnifie himſelfe above it.

Bellarmine hath no other ſhift to foiſt off our arguments, but theſe: he ſaith, this Mauzzim is like enough to be the Devill himſelfe, whom Antichriſt ſhall worſhip: but he careth neither for ſilver nor gold: or elſe it is himſelfe. And how I pray you can a man worſhip himſelfe? or elſe, ſaith he, it is ſome ſtrong caſtle where he ſhall lay his ſilver and gold: or elſe you know not what; *Bellarm.*14.

2 That Antichriſt ſhall not aboliſh Idols of ſilver and gold, but rather command the people to worſhip them, as the Pope now doth, it is plaine, *Apocal.*9.20. Apoc.9.20.

The Rhemiſts object, that he ſpeaketh here againſt the heathen Idols, which is here called the worſhip of Devils.

Anſw. Firſt, in this place Iohn ſpeaketh of the end of the world, in the opening of the ſeventh ſeale: and the Idols of the Heathen were aboliſhed long agoe: Neither is there any knowne nation in theſe parts of the world that hath worſhipped Idols of gold, ſilver, braſſe, ſtone, or wood, but the Papiſts, for theſe many yeeres. Secondly, all worſhippers of Images doe worſhip Devils: for Idolatrie is a ſervice invented by the Devill; and that which is ſacrificed to Idols is offered to Devils, 1 *Corinth.*10.20. 1 Cor.10.20.

The Proteſtants.

THat Antichriſt ſhall not in outward ſhew be an open enemie to Chriſt, but ſecretly and cloſely, and under pretence of religion take away all religion: thus we make it plaine.

1 Theſe places alleaged before doe prove it, *Ioh.*1.2.18. the Antichriſt, and the Antichriſts ſhall be enemies all alike: but the Antichriſts in S. Iohns time were covert enemies. Ergo, ſo ſhall the great Antichriſt. And as Antichriſts fore-runners were, ſo himſelfe ſhall be: but they ſhall ſpeake lyes through hypocriſie, and give eare to the doctrine of Devils, 1 *Timoth.*4.1,2. that is, as one of your owne writers expoundeth it, Qui Chriſtianorum ſibi appellatione impoſita, contraria docent: Which taking upon them the name of Chriſtians, doe teach things contrarie, Eſpenc. in hunc locum. And this place is underſtood of the fore-runners of Antichriſt, and ſo interpreted by Lyra one of your owne authors: Ergo, alſo Antichriſt himſelfe ſhall pretend one thing, and teach another, and utter his lyes through hypocriſie. 1 Ioh.2.18. 1 Tim.4.1,2.

Argum. 2. Saint Paul calleth it the myſterie of iniquitie, 2 *Theſſ.*2.7. and he ſhall come in all deceiveableneſſe of unrighteouſneſſe, *verſ.*10. and God ſhall ſend them ſtrong deluſion to beleeve lies, *verſ.*11. All this proveth that Antichriſt ſhall worke cloſely, cunningly, myſtically, by deceiving, by deluſion, not by open enmitie and prophaneneſſe, or by violence and tyrannie onely, as the Papiſts imagine. 2 Theſſ.2.7.1[illegible]

Argum. 3. Antichriſt ſhall be the greateſt enemie to Chriſt and his Kingdome that ever was in the world, But he is a greater enemie that pretendeth friendſhip, and yet is a foe, that under the name of Chriſt perſecuteth the Chriſtian faith, than he that openly deſtroyeth it, making no ſhew of religion: as David complaineth, *Pſalm.*41.9. Yea my familiar friend whom I truſted, which did eat of my bread, hath lift up his heele againſt me. This was accompliſhed in Iudas, who betrayed Chriſt with a kiſſe, who was the greateſt enemie of Chriſt, ſinning againſt his owne knowledge and conſcience: Even ſo they now adayes are the greateſt enemies that Chriſt and the Church hath, that betray Chriſt with a kiſſe, which name themſelves the Church of God, and yet make havocke of the Church. Pſal.41.9.

Argum. 4. S. Paul alſo ſheweth, that Antichriſt under colour of religion ſhall be an enemie to religion and the Church: for he ſhall ſit in the Temple of God, that is, take upon him the name and title of the Church, and yet an adverſarie unto it. For he that publikely taketh away the exerciſe of religion, cannot bee ſaid to ſit in the Church of God; as the Heathen perſecuting Emperours did, and Iulian the Apoſtata: but this agreeth better to one, that by bearing Chriſts name ſhall wound the Chriſtian faith, and this is the Pope. Origen writeth to the ſame purpoſe: Qui ſimulat veritatem, &c. He that diſſembleth the truth, wreſting the Scripture to prove falſe doctrine, he it is that is an enemie, & ſuper Cathedram Scripturarum ſedet, and ſitteth above the chaire of the Scriptures, *Tract.*27. in Matth. And thus the Pope of Rome taketh upon him to diſpenſe contrarie to the Goſpels and Apoſtles: which firſt Bellarmine flatly denieth, that ever the Pope in word or deed tooke upon him ſo to diſpenſe: the contrarie I have proved before, *Queſt.*9. Secondly, ſaith he, if he doe diſpenſe with the poſitive precepts of the Apoſtle, he doth it, juxta Apoſtolum, according to the Apoſtle, that is, according to his Apoſtolike authoritie.

Contra. Firſt, he muſt ſhew his authoritie out of Scripture, that he hath power to diſpenſe againſt Scripture, but that ſhall he never doe: but the Apoſtle ſheweth the contrarie, that he is accurſed that taketh upon him to teach any other doctrine than the Apoſtle taught, *Galath.*1.9. Here all power and authoritie to diſpenſe againſt the Apoſtle, is cut off for ever. Galath.1.9.

Laſtly, Auguſtine ſaith as much, that Antichriſt ſhall come with deceiveable doctrine and ſhew of righteouſneſſe: Quid expaveſcimus in Antichriſto, niſi quia nomen ſuum honoraturus eſt, & Domini contempturus? Quid aliud facit, qui dicit, ego juſtifico? Quid aliud eſt Dei ignorare juſtitiam, & ſuam velle conſtituere, quam dicere, ego juſtifico, ego ſanctifico? What other thing doe we feare in Antichriſt, De verb. Domin. ſecund. Iohan. ſer.45.

but that he ſhall honour his owne name,and contemne Chriſt? And a little before: What elſe doth he,which ſaith,I doe juſtifie,I make holy? what is this but to deſtroy the righteouſneſſe of God,and to bring in his owne?

Marke now I pray you,if all this be not true of the Pope of Rome: for he taketh upon him to juſtifie, to ſanctifie, to diſpenſe with mens ſinnes for an hundred, yea a thouſand yeeres: to rid ſoules out of Purgatorie: nay, to command Angels to carrie their ſoules to Heaven that dye in their pilgrimage to Rome, as Pope Clement the 6. did: what is this elſe but to ſay, Ego juſtifico, ſanctifico? I juſtifie, I ſanctifie? And who I pray you doth ſo, if Auguſtine may be Judge, but Antichriſt? But thus the Pope doth: Ergo, he is Antichriſt. Iuel.p.595.

And to conclude, ſuch an enemie is the Pope,as Leo the firſt ſpeaketh of, *Epiſt.*81. Pro fide vos agere creditis & fidei contraitis: Eccleſiæ nomine armamini, & contra Eccleſiam dimicatis: Ye thinke ye worke for the faith,and ye goe againſt the faith: you are armed with the name of the Church,and yet fight againſt the Church.

I will adde the teſtimony of an holy confeſſor of Gods truth Walter Brute: That the Popes come in the name of Chriſt it is manifeſt,ſaying,that they are his principall Vicars upon earth: wherefore ſeeing they make themſelves the chiefe friends of Chriſt, and yet doe juſtifie many lawes contrarie to the Goſpell of Chriſt, it is plaine that they are in earth the moſt principall Antichriſts, becauſe there is no worſe plague or peſtilence than a familiar enemie, Fox, pag.482. col.2. Pag.444.2.30.

Serm.11.in Matth. Chryſoſtome ſpeaking of Antichriſt, thus ſaith: Nomen tuum Chriſtianum ſonat, ſed facta Antichriſtum monſtrant, ſub nomine nomen impugnas, &c. perſequeris fidem, quam te profiteri ſimulas, &c. Thy name ſoundeth of Chriſtianitie, but thy deeds ſhew Antichriſt: under one name thou impugneſt another, thou perſecuteſt the faith which thou faineſt thy ſelfe to profeſſe,&c. So alſo Theodoret. Chriſti Domini appellatione uſurpata, omnes decipiet, Hee ſhall deceive all by uſurping the name of Chriſt our Lord,&c. Epitom.divin. decret.

Lib.2.de Civit, Dei,c.19. 2 So alſo Auguſtine expoundeth that place, Hee ſhall ſit in the Temple of God, non in templo Dei, ſed in templum Dei ſedeat, tanquam ipſe ſit templum Dei, quod eſt, Eccleſia. He ſhall not ſit in the temple of God,but for the temple of God,as though he were the temple of God, that is,the Church,&c. And doth not now the Pope ſtand for the Church of God, when they apply, dic Eccleſia, tell the Church, to him, unto whoſe finall reſolution all things muſt be referred?

Apolog.Reg. p.53. 3 Our Royall Defender of the faith herein concurreth with the faith of the Engliſh Church: he ſhall ſit in the temple of God, that is, the boſome of the Church, yea in the verie heart thereof: now where this Apoſtolique See is, I leave it to be gheſſed, as likewiſe who it is, that ſitting there ſheweth himſelfe to be God, pardoning ſinnes, redeeming ſoules, and defining faith, controlling and judging all men, and to be judged of none.

Comment.in 2 Theſſ.2. lection.2. Comment.in Apocal.11. 4 Thomas Aquine their owne Seraphicall Doctor, thus alſo expoundeth theſe words: He ſhall ſit in the temple of God: that is, either in the Church becauſe many of the Church ſhall receive him, or as Auguſtine interpreteth, hee ſhall rule, tanquam ipſe cum ſuis ſit templum Dei, as though hee with his were the temple of God,&c. So Ribera their Jeſuite by the temple underſtandeth the Church,whereof that was a figure, &c.

The ſeventh part, Concerning the miracles of Antichriſt.

The Papiſts.

63.Error. ANtichriſt, they ſay, ſhall be a Magitian, and worke ſtrange ſignes and wonders by the power of the Devill: and theſe three miracles by name ſhall bee wrought by him: Hee ſhall cauſe fire to come from Heaven, and make the image of the beaſt to ſpeake: and thirdly, hee ſhall faine himſelfe dead and riſe againe, *Bellarm.cap.*15. Theſe three miracles alſo are obſerved by the Doway Gloſſiſts, p.176.

Apoc.13.13. 1 Hee ſhall by the help of the Devill cauſe fire to come downe from Heaven, as it is Apocalyps 13.13.

Anſw. Firſt, it is a great queſtion whether the Devill have any ſuch power to bring downe fire from Heaven: for the Jeſuite himſelfe remembreth the ſtorie, 1 King. 18. How Baal his Prieſts would have fetched downe fire from Heaven, but they could not: onely Elias did it: and hee that will doe the like muſt have Elias his ſpirit, as Chriſt ſaith, *Luk.*9.55. Luk.9.55.

*Concil.Bracarenſ.*1.*can.*8. It was decreed thus: Si quis credit, quod diabolus tonitrua, fulgura, tempeſtates, ſiccitates ſua authoritate facit, ſicut Priſcillianus docet, anathema ſit: If any man beleeve that the Devill of himſelfe can raiſe tempeſts, thunder, lightning, drought, as Priſcillianus teacheth, let him be accurſed,&c. How therefore can Antichriſt, who worketh by Satan, doe that which Satan himſelfe cannot doe?

Secondly, It is verie groſſe to underſtand this literally: for the whole chapter is myſticall, of the beaſt with ſeven heads,of another beaſt with two hornes,and all the reſt. But three wayes Antichriſt may fitly bee ſaid to bring fire from Heaven. Firſt, by fire the Holy Ghoſt may bee underſtood, as Matth. 3. and Act. 2. The ſpirit appeared in fiery tongues: ſo Antichriſt and his Miniſters make men beleeve, that they doe conferre the holy Ghoſt, as in conſecration, in abſolution of ſinners, and ſuch like. Secondly, the Popes thunderbolts of excommunication are reſembled to fire, whereby hee hath made the whole world afraid in times paſt, as though hee could cauſe the heavens to fall upon men; yea, to make the matter more likely, the Pope uſeth burning Tapers in excommunicating men, which with violence are throwne downe, as though God himſelfe did raine fire from heaven upon them. And this is the terrible manner of their excommunication: there are three candles burning ſet up; and then they begin to accurſe them whom they excommunicate, body and ſoule to the devill: and let us, ſay they, quench their ſoules in hell fire, if they be dead, as this candle is put out (and with that they put out one of the candles:) If they bee alive, let us pray, that their eyes may bee put out, as this candle is, and ſo the ſecond candle goeth out, and that all their ſenſes may faile them, as this candle loſeth his light, and ſo the third candle goeth out. Behold, here is the fire which the Pope and his Popelings doe bring from heaven. Sic Bullinger. ſerm. 60. in Apocalypſ. Adde unto theſe their fierie ceremonies, their fierie jugling tricks alſo, as Cardinall Benno reporteth of Gregory the ſeventh, that great Sorcerer: Cum vellet, manicas ſuas diſcutiebat, &c. When he liſt, hee would ſhake his ſleeves, and out flew ſparks of fire, &c. Thirdly, the Dragon is ſaid, Apocal. 12.4. with his tayle to draw many ſtarres from heaven, that is, many excellent men, as ſtarres in gifts and knowledge, ſhall bee deceived by the Pope, and be wonne unto him: yea the Pope himſelfe is a Starre fallen from heaven to the earth, from heavenly doctrine to earthly tradition, Apocal. 9. 1. Thus Antichriſt alſo may be ſaid to fetch fire from heaven.

Matth.3.11.
Act.2.2.
Fox pag.1038.

2 The ſecond miracle, he ſhall cauſe the Image of the beaſt to ſpeake, which the Jeſuite underſtandeth literally, that is, groſly.

Anſw. Firſt, Bellarmine and our Jeſuites doe not here agree: for Bellarmine ſaith that theſe two miracles ſhall be wrought by Antichriſt himſelfe, or his Miniſters, to fetch fire from heaven: and to cauſe the Image to ſpeake. But the Rhemiſts ſay, this other beaſt is another falſe Prophet, inferiour to Antichriſt, which ſhall alſo worke wonders, ſuch an one as Calvin, ſay they: where they ſhew their malice more than learning; for Calvin, they know, tooke not upon him to worke miracles, Annot. Apocal. 13. ſect. 3.

2 This cauſing the Image to ſpeake hath a better meaning: The Image of the beaſt is the ſhadow of the old ſtately Empire of Rome, which was erected by the Pope: for the Weſt parts wanted an Emperour the ſpace of three hundred yeeres from Auguſtulus time till Pope Leo the third, who made Charles the great King of France, Emperor: And at this day is there nothing in the Empire, but only a name, title and Image: for neither hath the Emperor the Imperiall authoritie, which is in the Pope, nor the Imperiall kingdomes, unleſſe he have them of his owne. And the Pope only maketh this Image to ſpeake, for unleſſe he doe confirme the election of the King of the Romans, hee is not thought worthy the name of Emperor, Bullinger ibid.

Aventin. lib. 4.

3 And yet we denie not, but that they both have and may make Images ſpeake either by the helpe of the devill, as Dunſtane cauſed a Rood to ſpeake; or by jugling, as the Rood of Grace by gimmals was made to roule the eyes, move the lips, and ſuch like, in King Henries dayes.

3 The third miracle that Antichriſt ſhall worke, is to faine himſelfe dead, and to riſe againe, Apocal. 13. 3.

Anſw. There can be no ſuch thing gathered out of the text. Firſt, the words will not beare it: the text is, that one of the heads was wounded to death, and the wound was healed: which cannot be ſo meant, as though he fained himſelfe dead: but he received a wound indeed.

2 The ſenſe is myſticall, as through the whole chapter: Firſt, it is ſaid, that the ſeventh head was wounded to death, but revived againe; that is, the ſeventh government of the Romans in the Popedome: for the Papacie had many times deadly blowes, and yet was healed againe, eſpecially when there were three Popes together, at Rome, in France, and the third in Spaine: But this wound was cunningly healed up in Pope Martin the fifth, in the Councell of Conſtance, the other three being depoſed. Sic Bullinger Serm. 59. Secondly, it is ſaid verſ. 14. that the beaſt whoſe Image remained, had the wound of a ſword, and yet lived: which is underſtood of the Roman Empire, revived and quickned by the Pope.

The Proteſtants.

It is true that Antichriſt ſhall worke ſignes and wonders by the power of Sathan, 2 Theſſ. 2. but lying ſignes, both becauſe they ſhall bee done to confirme lyes, neither ſhall they bee ſuch as the Prophets wrought, but many of them but cunning and couſoning ſleights of Juglers. And for ſuch wonders we need not to ſearch farre, the Popiſh Church is full of them: where elſe then ſhould we looke for Antichriſt?

2 Theſ. 2. 9.

1 There have been of the Popes themſelves Sorcerers and Conjurers, ſuch an one Antichriſt ſhall bee, ſaith Bellarmine. Silveſter the ſecond came up to the Papacie by the help of the devill, as wee have before ſhewed. Gregory the ſeventh was condemned in the Councell of Brixia for a Conjurer: and Benno a Cardinall in thoſe dayes thus writeth of him: that on a time hee ſending two of his ſervants for a certaine Sathanicall booke, charging them not to looke into it; they notwithſtanding looked into it, and preſently a great multitude of devilliſh ſpirits were round about them; who were inſtant upon them to know why they were called for: the ſervants being at the firſt aſtoniſhed, yet comming to themſelves, enjoined them to plucke downe certaine high walles neere to Rome: and ſo they came to their maſter, Fox pag. 176. What other Antichriſt now need we looke for? If hee muſt bee a Conjurer, we may here make our choice. Beſide theſe two, Platina and other writers make mention of 20. Popes that bound themſelves as ſlaves to the devill.

Fox pag. 1148.

2 We are not ignorant, what lyes and fables are reported by the Papiſts of the miraculous acts of their Popiſh Saints, of the which we have ſpoken before: As how Dunſtane appeared to a cripple, that came to his tombe to be helped of his lameneſſe: How Plegildus a Prieſt ſaw and handled the ſhape of a child upon the Altar, which after he had kiſſed, returned againe to the likeneſſe of bread. How a certaine Jewes boy told his father that he ſaw a child broken in peeces upon the Altar, and diſtributed among the Chriſtians: and the boy for that was caſt into a furnace of fire, and was preſerved from the fire by the Virgin Mary, which appeared to him, and ſpread her garment over him. Many ſuch either lyes and fables, or works of devils the Popiſh Church hath: what need we therefore doubt but that it is the Antichriſtian Church?

De civitat. Dei lib. 20. cap. 19.

3 Auguſtine ſaith, S. Paul calleth them lying wonders, either becauſe Antichriſt ſhall deceive men per phantaſmata, with jugling ſleights, or becauſe, ad mendacia pertrahet credituros, by his wonders he ſhall make them beleeve lyes. But in which ſenſe they are ſo called, it ſhall appeare when Antichriſt is come, ſaith he: and indeed it is new apparant; for our adverſaries have plenty of both kinds, both miracles wrought indeed by the devill, and many pretie jugling feats beſide.

2 Theſſ. 2. 9.

[a] This is reported by Platina in the life of Leo the 3. yet is it denyed by the ſhameleſſe detector: ſee Reſolt. p. 29.

Theſe lying fables and forged miracles, which the Popes worke by, are evident ſignes of their Antichriſtian profeſſion: For Antichriſt ſhall come with the power of Sathan with ſignes and lying wonders, 2 Theſſ. 2. 9. Stories ſhew this to be true: Leo the third confirmed by his decree, that the bloud which iſſued out of a woodden Crucifix at Mantua, was the very [a] bloud of Chriſt, anno 800. Anno 1470. one Alanus a drowſie dreaming Monke forged this blaſphemous tale, how the Virgin Marie came into his Cell, kiſſed him, drew out her breaſts, and eſpouſed her ſelfe to him: and theſe and ſuch like Monkiſh tales went for currant in thoſe dayes. Not much unlike to the wicked practice of Polychronius a Monothelite heretike, who affirmed before the whole Councell Conſtantinop. 6. action 15. that a certaine beautifull young man appeared unto him, & taught him to ſay that there was but one will in Chriſt: and gave him this for a ſigne, that he ſhould lay the ſchedule of his confeſſion upon a dead body, and ſo raiſe it to life: The Councell hearing him, immediatly cauſed a dead body to bee brought, but Polychronius muttering over the ſame a great while, could doe nothing, and ſo was condemned of the Councell for a lyar and an heretike.

Many ſuch fabulous miracles Popiſh books are full of: ſuch are, in the judgement of a grave writer of their ſide, Petrus Venetus his catalogue of the Saints, and the Martyrologe of Huſuardus the Monke: Multis ſcatent quiſquiliis: Theſe books (ſaith he) are ſtuffed with much paltrie ſtuffe. Yea, the lives of the fathers, unworthy of Ieromes name, are full of ſuch fabulous narrations: ſic Eſſence. in 2 Timoth. p. 151. c. Seeing then that the Popiſh Church is full of lying ſignes and miracles, where is Antichriſt more like to be found, than there?

Tharaſius well ſaid therefore Nicen. 2. Miracula non credentibus data ſunt, ſed iis qui in incredulitate verſantur: Miracles are not for thoſe that beleeve, but for incredulous perſons, &c. The incredulity then of Papiſts better appeareth not, than by their inſatiable deſire, and ſuperſtitious uſe of miracles.

Fox pag. 1025. col. 1.
Et p. 935. 1. 30. edit. 1610.

Adde unto theſe the beleefe of John Tewkesbury confeſſor of the truth: Antichriſt is not an outward thing, that is a man, that ſhould ſuddenly appeare with wonders, as your forefathers talked of him, but Antichriſt is a ſpirituall thing, &c.

In Pſalm. 9.

And for further evidence herein. 1. Auguſtine ſaith, Per nefarias artes ad illud vanum & inane culmen venturus eſt, vim habebit in imperio, dolum in miraculis, &c. Hee ſhall come by wicked arts unto that vaine height, having power in his Kingdome, and craft in his miracles, &c. This moſt fitly agreeth unto the Popes, of whom divers by confederacie with the devill, have obtained the Papacie: true miracles he ſhall worke none, but lying, and deceitfull. 2 As Damaſcene ſaith, he ſhall come with lying ſignes: true ſignes he ſhall ſhew none. 3 And what is meant by her fetching downe fire from heaven, thus our kingly interpreter conſenting with the Church of England and Scotland herein ſheweth: for this purpoſe ſhe ſhall worke great miracles, wherein ſhe greatly prides her ſelfe, deceiving men with lying wonders and efficacie of lyes, as Saint Paul ſaith: And among the reſt of her wonders, ſhee muſt bring fire out of heaven, fulmen excommunicationis, which can dethrone Princes, ſo that all, which will not worſhip the image of the beaſt, that is her unlimited ſupremacie, muſt be killed and burnt as heretiks, &c.

Apolog. 92.

Commentar. in lib. 4. de fid. c. 17. Damaſcen.

4 Iodocus Clictoveus their owne man ſaith, Nulla ſecundum veritatem faciet miracula, &c. he ſhall doe no miracles in truth, but in ſhew and apparance.

The eighth part of the queſtion, concerning the warres and kingdome of Antichriſt.

The Papiſts.

B*Ellarmine* ſaith, that Antichriſt ſhall make great battels againſt the Saints, and ſhall conquer the whole world: firſt, by craft he ſhall aſpire to the Kingdome of the Jewes: Secondly, he ſhall fight with three Kings, of Lybia, Egypt, Æthiopia. Thirdly, with a great armie he ſhall perſecute the Chriſtians throughout the world; and this ſhall bee the battell of Gog and Magog, Bellarm. cap. 16. 64. Error.

Argum. 1. That he ſhall craftily aſpire to the kingdome, he proveth it out of Dan. 11.21. where it is prophaſied of one that he ſhall obtaine the kingdome by flatteries. Dan. 11.21.

Anſw. This prophecie of Daniel, as likewiſe the whole chapter, was hiſtorically accompliſhed in Antiochus Epiphanes, who defrauded Demetrius his brothers ſonne of the kingdome, and circumvented his elder brother Seleucus: ſo that it being once fulfilled, it cannot be wreſted to any other ſenſe: of Antichriſt it cannot be meant: for here is a ſucceſſion of Kings deſcribed, verſ. 19. One is ſaid to be overthrowne, that is, Seleucus, but not in battell, for he was poyſoned, v. 18. There another is ſaid to be overthrowne and to be no more found, that is, Antiochus Magnus. But Antichriſt cannot ſucceed any in the kingdome of the Jewes: for he ſhall be their firſt King, as the Papiſts imagine.

Argum. 2. He ſhall (ſaith Bellarmine) overcome three Kings, of Lybia, Egypt, Æthiopia, Dan. 11. 43. and this horne ſhall remove three other hornes, Dan. 7. 8.

Anſw. This alſo muſt needs bee underſtood of Antiochus Epiphanes: and they are two prophecies. Firſt, he is called a little horne, becauſe he was not heire to the kingdome; he remooveth three other hornes: for by his meanes Ptolemaus Philopater was caſt out of the kingdome in his fathers time Antiochus the great: his brother Seleucus poyſoned, his ſonne Demetrius diſinherited, Iun. Dan. 7. 20. The ſecond prophecie was alſo accompliſhed by Antiochus, who overcame Egypt, and the countries adjoyning.

Of Antichriſt it cannot bee underſtood: for the firſt prophecie ſpeaketh of a beaſt with ten hornes, which muſt be underſtood of one kingdome and Monarch, and by the ten hornes ten Kings are ſignified: for ſo was Antiochus Epiphanes the tenth from Seleucus: here then is a ſucceſſion of Kings: but Antichriſt ſhall not ſucceed any.

Argum. 3. The Jeſuite ſaith, that Antichriſt with a great armie ſhall vex the whole world, and that ſhall be the battell of Gog and Magog propheſied of, Ezech. 38. 39. and Apocal. 20.

Anſw. The prophecie of Ezechiel was fulfilled in the time of the Macchabees, when as Gog and Magog, that is Antiochus, with the help of the Syrians and Scythians and other countries, moleſted the people of God: for verſ. 23. chap. 39. the Prophet ſpeaketh of the captivitie of Iſrael, from the which they ſhould at that time be delivered. And againe, the Lord would not leave his Church, which at that time endured great afflictions at the hands of the heathen, comfortleſſe: but if theſe prophecies of Ezechiel and Daniel concerned them not, then ſmall had been their comfort. Laſtly, the Jewes may with as good reaſon underſtand the prophecies concerning Chriſt, of their Meſſiah, whom they yet looke for, as you may theſe prophecies concerning the enemies of the Church, of your Antichriſt.

The other prophecie alſo is fulfilled, Apocal. 20. 8. how Gog and Magog from the foure corners of the earth, ſhall compaſſe the tents of the Saints: for by Gog and Magog, is underſtood the whole multitude of the enemies of the Church both within and without, as Turks, Papiſts, Infidels, which all have agreed together at times and in their turnes, though enemies amongſt themſelves, to afflict the people of God.

And yet more particularly Anno 1300. the Church of God began to be moleſted with the armies of Gog and Magog: when Boniface the eighth ſhewed himſelfe in his Emperiall robes, and ſo was the Gog in the Weſt; and Ottomannus was crowned Emperour of the Turks, Magog in the Eaſt.

And if you will needs alſo have the other two prophecies fulfilled againe, being once before accompliſhed: they agree fitly to the Turkiſh Empire; for Mahomet by craft and ſubtiltie aſpired to a kingdome, and in ſhort time he over ran Egypt and Lybia, with other parts of Africa.

The Proteſtants.

WE deny that there ſhall come any ſuch Antichriſt: or that it is poſſible for him to wage battell with the whole earth. Wee grant that the Antichriſt of Rome hath warred with the Church, poyſoning it with corrupt doctrine, and perſecuting the ſame by fire and ſword: which his rage is well ſlaked now, God be praiſed, in many places, and his tyrannie overpaſt; miſerable were the ſtate of the Church, if it ſhould endure ſuch a brunt againe.

Argum. 1. It is impoſſible, that Antichriſt in ſo ſhort a time as three yeeres and an halfe, ſhould conquer all nations, and be Monarch of the whole world, burne and ſacke Rome, and drive out the Pope, as the Papiſts grant themſelves, Bellarm. lib. 4. cap. 3. de pontifice. A man cannot in that ſpace travell through the whole world, much leſſe conquer it. See the judgement of one Hentenius a Papiſt of this matter before, par. 2. qu. 10.

And ſeeing Antichriſt ſhall begin at Jeruſalem, make his habitation there, and have an end there: (for, ſay they, hee ſhall be ſlaine in Mount Olivet, Gloſſ. ſup. Apocal.) It is not like that in his owne perſon he ſhould conquer the world: neither can it be thought that hee ſhall doe it by his deputies, for then they ſhould be the Antichriſts, and not he.

Argum. 2. Antichriſt is not deſcribed in Scripture as a warriour, or warlike man ſitting harneſſed in his tent; but like an hypocrite advancing himſelfe in the Temple; not comming with engins of warre, but deluding and deceiving with falſe miracles and lying ſignes, 2 Theſſ. 2. Not with Herolds of armes openly proclaiming warre: but he ſhall worke in a myſterie, Apocal. 17.5. Wherefore it is but a popiſh dreame and fancie, that Antichriſt ſhall be ſuch a mightie warriour: yet wee deny not but that divers of the Popes have beene warriours; but that was beyond the commiſſion of Peters croſſe-keyes.

Thirdly, they have no ground of this their opinion out of Scripture: for neither Ezechiel nor Daniel maketh for them, propheſying of the ſtate of the Church before Chriſt: nor yet the Apocalyps, the prophecie of Gog and Magog being accompliſhed in the greateſt part already. Wherefore away with theſe miſtie clouds of your braine-ſicke inventions: they ſhall not be able to abide the lightſome Sun-beames of the truth.

Laſtly, if Antichriſt by his warlike and bloudy diſpoſition may be diſcerned, we ſhall finde him no where ſooner than in Rome: Boniface 8. ſhewed himſelfe openly in his Emperiall robes with the ſword carried before him: Iulius the 2. threw Peters keyes into Tyberis, and drew out his ſword: and under this Pope, as Chronicles make mention, in the ſpace of ſeven yeeres were two hundred thouſand men ſlaine by continuall warre. Alexander Farneſius Cardinall, Pope Paulus the 3. his Captaine Generall againſt the Lutherans, gave out theſe threatning words, that hee would ſhed ſo much bloud of the Lutheranes, that their horſe might ſwim therein.

Such furious and Antichriſtian outrages of the Pope are contrarie to the decrees of former times: Synod. Francica. Servis Dei armaturam portare, pugnare aut in exercitum pergere prohibemus: Wee forbid the ſervants of God (he meaneth Clergie-men) to beare armour, to fight, or goe to battell.

Concil. Agathenſ. decret. ex Gratian. Non licet Epiſcopo, &c. It is not lawfull for a Biſhop to ſmite any with his hands, much leſſe with his ſword.

P.1352.286. Maſter Rogers holy Martyr, judgeth the Church of Rome Antichriſtian, becauſe of their tyrannicall lawes, and maintenance thereof by cruell perſecution, Fox, pag. 1488. col. 1.

Adverſ. Prax. Tertullian thinketh, that Antichriſt ſhall not be only a perſecutor of the Church by tyranny, but a ſeducer thereof by falſe doctrine, as he ſaith, Viderint Antichriſti, qui negant patrem & filium: Let the Antichriſts ſee to it, that deny the Father and the Sonne.

Lib. 24. de fid. orthod cap. 27. Damaſcene alſo ſaith, that hee ſhall perſecute the Church of God: but hee ſhall come alſo in lying ſignes and wonders.

Pag. 85. And ſo our Royall Apologiſt doth aptly expound the pale horſe, Apoc. 6. to be Antichriſt, which ſhall kill both with the ſword, that is, uſe great perſecution, and with ſpirituall hunger, or famine of the true word of God, &c. Antichriſt ſhall not only be a perſecutor, but a deſtroyer, and ſeducer by falſe doctrine.

Lib. 30. in Iob. cap. 3. Gregorie the firſt ſaith, In fallacia ſua Antichriſtus graditur, Antichriſt goeth on in his craft, &c. he ſhall not ſo much be an open warriour, as a cunning deceiver.

The ninth and laſt part of this Queſtion,

Whether the Pope be Antichriſt.

The Papiſts.

65. Error. THis queſtion pincheth our adverſaries verie ſore, that we ſhould touch their head ſo neere, as to make him Antichriſt: this being once knowne, we need not labour much about other matters: for Antichriſt with all his doctrine muſt not be heard, but abhorred of the Church.

They therefore craftily foreſeeing this, doe take great paines to deliver the Pope out of this danger, and have found out many ſtarting holes, but all to ſmall purpoſe: yea their forefathers ſeeing the matter ſo plaine, and almoſt put out of doubt, gave ſtraight charge in the late Councell of Laterane to all Preachers, that none ſhould dare once to ſpeake of the comming of Antichriſt. This argueth a guiltie conſcience. But yet they face out the matter, and ſay, the Pope cannot bee Antichriſt: their arguments are none other than thoſe we have heard, being eight in number.

1 Antichriſt ſhall be one ſingular man: the Popes have beene many, part. 1. of this queſtion. Secondly, hee ſhall reigne but three yeeres and an halfe; but the Pope hath continued many hundred yeeres, part. 2. Thirdly, he ſhall be knowne by his name: the Popes have ſundrie names, part. 3. Fourthly, he muſt come of the ſtocke of the Jewes: but there was never yet any Jew Pope, part. 4. Fifthly, his ſeat muſt be at Jeruſalem: the Popes is at Rome, part. 5. Sixthly, he ſhall manifeſtly deny Chriſt: ſo doth not the Pope, ſay they, part. 6. Seventhly, he ſhall doe ſtrange miracles, as bring downe fire from heaven, cauſe Images to ſpeake, part. 7. Eighthly, he ſhall wage great battels, and conquer all the world, part. 8. which cannot agree to the Pope: Ergo, he is not Antichriſt.

Anſw. To theſe eight arguments we have before anſwered ſeverally; ſhewing how fabulous, ridiculous, and impoſſible our adverſaries aſſertions are, without ground of Scripture, ſhew of reaſon, or colour of argument. Wherefore we will not trouble the Reader with needleſſe repetitions, deſiring him to have recourſe to that which hath beene already ſaid.

Argum. 9. Further the Rhemiſts doe thus reaſon: Antichriſt ſhall exalt himſelfe above all that is called God, 2 Theſſ. 2. 4. So doth not the Pope, who is ſo farre from exalting himſelfe above God, that hee prayeth to Saints, kneeleth before the Altar, adoreth the Euchariſt, Annot. 2 Theſſ. 2. 4 & ibid. ſect. 10.

2 Theſſ. 2. 4.

Anſ. Firſt, the Pope in hypocriſie maketh ſhew of a ſuperſtitious kinde of devotion, yet is in truth the Prince of pride: for as he calleth himſelfe Servum ſervorum, Servant of ſervants; yet hath made Kings his ſlaves: ſo alſo, though he ſeeme to be a worſhipper of Saints, yet he taketh upon him more than either Angell or Saint, as to forgive ſinnes, to deliver ſoules from Purgatorie, to diſpenſe with the Scriptures. Secondly, as touching the adoration of the Euchariſt, therein he ſheweth his pride, in adoring his owne invention; and beſide he honoureth his breaden god with Maſſe ſervice for his owne advantage, becauſe it is ſo gainefull unto him: and yet what account he maketh of it may appeare, when his throne is ſet higher than the Altar; and in proceſſion hee rideth on mens ſhoulders, when the Hoſt is carried upon a palfreyes backe.

Argum. 10. Satan muſt be bound a thouſand yeeres, and afterward let looſe; and then Antichriſt ſhall come, whoſe kingdome ſhall increaſe, and faith decreaſed toward the end of the world. But if the Pope be Antichriſt, who hath been theſe thouſand yeeres in the Church, then Antichriſt ſhould reigne while Satan is bound, which cannot be, and his kingdome wax weaker toward the end of the world contrarie to the Scripture, which ſaith that at Chriſts comming faith ſhall ſcarce bee found in the earth, &c. Rhemiſt. ſec. 7. 20. Apocal.

Anſw. Firſt, we ſay not that Antichriſt hath been 1000. yeeres in the Church, but began to be revealed 1000. yeeres after Chriſt in Silveſter 2. who by Necromancie obtained the Papacie, and in Boniface the 3. who did juſtifie the error of Purgatorie and Invocation of Saints. So that Satans looſing and Antichriſts reigning ſhall fall out together, that is, at the expiration of the thouſand yeeres. Secondly, it is more agreeable to the Scriptures, that the kingdome of Antichriſt ſhall be weakened toward the end of the world: God ſhall firſt conſume him with the breath of his mouth, that is, his word, as already, thanks be to God, the preaching of the Goſpell hath ſhaken the wals of Babylon: but he ſhall perfectly be deſtroyed by the brightneſſe of his comming, 2 Theſſ. 2. 8. And though faith generally ſhall decay in the end of the world, becauſe iniquitie ſhall abound: yet faith ſhall remaine in the true members of Chriſt, that are in continuall expectation of his comming.

2 Theſſ. 2. 8.

The Proteſtants.

THat the Pope of Rome is verie Antichriſt, and that all the qualities and properties which the Scripture deſcribeth Antichriſt by, doe fitly agree unto his perſon; and that wee are not therefore to expect and looke for any other Antichriſt: Thus by teſtimonie of Scripture, and ſufficient reaſons deduced out of the ſame, we truſt it ſhall appeare to all men.

Argum. 1. The firſt place of Scripture is Dan. 11. Where many notes and marks are declared proper to Antichriſt, yet eſpecially ſet forth to deſcribe Antiochus Epiphanes, who might bee verie well a type and figure of Antichriſt, who was then to come.

Dan. 11.

1 Verſ. 36. It is ſaid, He ſhall doe what him liſteth. This is moſt true of the Pope: his will muſt ſtand for reaſon, Diſtinct. 96. cap. ſatis. If the Pope ſhould draw infinite ſoules to hell, no man is to ſay unto him, Sir, why doe you ſo? Diſtinct. 40. Here Bellarmine hath but this poore ſhift to ſay, that it is meant only of publike judgement, that no man is by authoritie to call the Pope to account: but yet a brotherly admonition may be uſed. But who ſeeth not that the words are generall: Nemo debet ei dicere: No man ought to ſay unto him: neither Judge, nor other?

Dan. 11. 36.

2 He ſhall magnifie himſelfe againſt God, and ſpeake blaſphemous things againſt God: hath not the Pope done ſo? Of him it is ſaid, that God and the Pope have but one Conſiſtorie; I am able to doe almoſt all that God can doe, Fox, pag. 782. columne 1. artic. 192. I am above all and in all: Hoſtienſ. Nay, that Dominion and Lordſhip which Chriſt had in earth, but habitu, in habit, the Pope hath actu, in act and in deed. Againe, as we read, the earth is the Lords, and the fulneſſe thereof, and as Chriſt ſaith, all power is given me in heaven and in earth: ſo is it to be affirmed, that the Vicar of Chriſt hath power on things celeſtiall, terreſtriall, infernall, apud Fox, pag. 771. col. 1. Now let the diſcreet Reader judge, whether this fellow doth not magnifie himſelfe, and ſpeake blaſphemouſly againſt God.

Pag. 726. 1. 46.

Pag. 725. 2. 13.

3 He ſhall proſper till the wrath be accompliſhed: So hath the Pope had but too good ſucceſſe: he hath ſubdued Emperours, and made them his ſervants, trod upon their necks, made them ſerve at his table, crowned them with his feet, made them hold his ſtirrop, and lead his horſe by the bridle. But we doe hope that his date is out, and that he ſhall proſper no longer.

4 Verſ. 37. Hee ſhall not care for the God of his fathers: No more doth the Pope: for hee hath invented and erected a new breaden God, which hee worſhippeth, hangeth up in Churches, carrieth about in proceſſion, being but a peece of bread. This breaden God amight his forefathers never knew.

Dan. 11. 37.

5. He ſhall not care for the deſires of women: So he prohibiteth lawfull marriage, permitteth adulteries, and the unnaturall luſt of Sodomites. Bellarmine firſt denieth the text, which is faithfully tranſlated according to the Hebrew. Secondly, he ſaith, the place is meant literally and properly of Antiochus, who was given to the pleaſures of women.

Anſw. Firſt, if it be meant literally of Antiochus, then can it not bee meant literally of your Antichriſt: If Antiochus bee but a type of Antichriſt, then can you not neceſſarily conclude out of this place: for types prove not, unleſſe they be divine, that is, appointed of God to bee types, which you cannot ſhew for this place: See then the beſt arguments that you have for your Antichriſt, out of the prophecies of Daniel and Ezechiel, are found but weake. Secondly, as Antiochus was given to unlawfull deſires of women, ſo is the Pope: yet might hee be an enemie to chaſte and holy marriage, and ſo is the Pope. And by the way let it be noted, that the Jeſuite picketh quarrels with Scripture, and maketh it falſe: for the text ſaith, He, that is, Antiochus, ſhall not care for the deſires of women. Yes (ſaith the Jeſuite) hee ſhall bee given to the pleaſures of women, cleane contrary to the text, Bellarm. cap. 21.

6 Verſ. 38. He ſhall honour his god Mauzzim, that is, a god of power and riches, with gold, ſilver, precious ſtones: Both of theſe are moſt true of the popiſh religion: for their god hath brought them great riches, lands, treaſure, poſſeſſion: by their idolatrous Maſſes, they have greatly enriched themſelves, wherein their breaden god playeth the chiefe part: and therefore they doe worſhip him againe with gold, ſilver, precious ſtones: what rich Corporals, and Altar-clothes, Copes, Veſtiments of velvet, ſilke, wrought with gold, are ſeene in their Churches? what gilding of Roodes, and Roodlofts, garniſhing of Idols, what rich Crucifixes of ſilver, of gold, beſet with pearle and precious ſtones?

This deſcription therefore of Daniel, as you ſee, doth in every reſpect agree with the conditions and properties of Antichriſt of Rome, Argument. Illyrici.

2 Theſ. 2. 4.

Argum. 2. Secondly, S. Pauls deſcription in every point alſo is verified in the Pope. Firſt: Hee ſhall exalt himſelfe above God, and all that is called God, 2 Theſ. 2. 4. So the Pope challengeth the full authority of Chriſt, as we have ſhewed before, and exalteth himſelfe above Emperours, which are called gods upon earth: yea they have taken the juſt proportion of inequality betweene the Pope and Emperour: for the Pope is 47. degrees above the Emperour, as the Sunne is 47. degrees bigger than the Moone, Innocent. 3. in decretalib.

2 Hee ſhall ſit in the Temple, that is, in the Church: ſo the Pope nameth himſelfe head of the Church, and hath the keyes, as he braggeth, both of heaven and hell. Therefore the Turke cannot be that Antichriſt, becauſe he is out of the Church: and ſo in truth is the Pope, but yet he challengeth to him and his the name of the Church.

3 The myſterie wrought in Pauls time, and afterward increaſed: ſo not long after the Apoſtles time, the Biſhops of Rome began to lift up their heads above other Churches, as Zozimus falſified the Councell of Nice, and ſent to the 6. Councell of Carthage, to have it there confirmed, that it might be lawfull to ſend up appeales to Rome.

4 Antichriſt ſhall come with lying ſignes: So hath the Pope done, as experience proveth, and wee have ſhewed before.

5 Verſ. 11. God ſhall ſend ſtrong deluſions, that they ſhall beleeve lies. And in time of Poperie, men indeed were ſo ſtrongly deluded, that the father perſecuted the ſonne, the ſonnes ſet fire to their father, yea the husband was made a witneſſe againſt the wife, the wife againſt her husband, and ſervants accuſed their maſters. Theſe things are ſo well knowne in ſtories, that I need not come to particulars.

6 Antichriſt is called a wicked man, and a man of ſinne, verſ. 3. 8. And where ſhall you find more wicked men, than among the Popes? Silveſter the ſecond gave his ſoule to the devill to obtaine the Papacie. Benno reporteth of Hildebrand, that he poyſoned ſix Popes to come to the Popedome. Pope Stephen and Sergius, tooke up the bodie of Formoſus, and mangled it, cutting off his head and fingers, and ſo caſt it into Tibris, Fox pag. 146. col. 1. Much unlike to one of their predeceſſors Sixtus the third, who tooke the body of Baſſus his enemie being dead, who had accuſed him before, embawmed it, and buried the ſame with his owne hands. We have heard before, what a holy Father Pope Iohn the 13. was, he lay with his owne ſiſter, and with his fathers Concubines, playing at dice called for the devill, was ſlaine in adulterie. And was it not, I pray you, a common proverb in England? Hee that goeth to Rome once, ſeeth a wicked man; he that goeth twice, learneth to know him; he that goeth the third time, bringeth him home with him. Fox pag. 841.

1 Iohn 3. 4.

That Antichriſt that man of ſin ſitteth in Rome, it might eaſily be proved by a particular induction: for ſin being the tranſgreſſion of the law, as S. Iohn defineth it. If we ſhall ſhew how the Pope of Rome hath notoriouſly tranſgreſſed the law and every part thereof, who will doubt but that he is that man of ſin, and ſo conſequently Antichriſt?

Ex Balæi chronico de actis pontif.

The firſt Commandement: Thou ſhalt have no other gods, &c. Among other corruptions, forbiddeth all prophaneneſſe and infidelitie, all confederacie or ſocietie with the devill: for the firſt wee have divers examples of Popes: Boniface the eighth, when Porchetus Archbiſhop of Genua came to him to receive aſhes in a publike ſolemnity, he caſt aſhes into his eyes and ſaid, Memento homo, quia Gibellinus es, &c. Remember man that thou art of the faction of the Gibellines, and ſhalt returne to duſt. Was not here great devotion? Gregory the twelfth pulled a certaine preaching Carmelite Frier out of the pulpit and caſt him into priſon, becauſe he perſwaded the Popes, who were then divided, to unity. Innocentius the eighth was ſeene for the moſt part to ſleep in the time of divine ſervice. Iulius the ſecond caſt S. Peters keys into Tyberis in great diſdaine, ſaying, Seeing Peters keyes did not ſerve his turne, he will trie what Pauls ſword can doe. Leo the 10. is reported to have ſaid to Cardinall Bembus: Quantum nobis profuit fabula iſta de Chriſto: How much hath this fable or tale of Chriſt advantaged us? And ſuch hath been the piety and devotion of our holy fathers of Rome.

Concerning the ſecond point, their familiarity with the devill, the two forenamed examples of Silveſter and Gregory are able to certifie us. Benedictus the 9. about the ſame time, was accuſtomed to call upon evill ſpirits, and could by his devilliſh enchantments, cauſe any woman whom hee liked, to come unto him. Paulus the 3. was a ſorcerer and enchaunter: he gave unto a certaine noble Matrone a little hallowed braſon ball to hang about her neck, which ſhould ſhield her from certaine moleſtations: he made Dyonſius Servita a notable Necromancer, Cardinall, thereby ſhewing his affection to that profeſſion. And many other of the Popes were given to theſe devilliſh ſtudies, to the number of 22. ex Balao, Platina, & aliis.

The 2. Commandement: Thou ſhalt make to thy ſelfe no graven image, &c. How the Popes have tranſgreſſed this law, their practice to this day ſheweth, who are more given to idolatrie & worſhip of images, than any knowne nation under the Sunne. Conſtantinus the 1. decreed that images ſhould bee worſhipped in Churches. Bonifacius the 4. begged of wicked Phocas Emperour, the Church in Rome called Pantheon, and in ſtead of Cybele an Ethnicke Goddeſſe, there placed the image of the Virgin Mary to be adored. Leo the 3. judged certaine forged blood which iſſued out of a woodden Crucifix, to be the true blood of Chriſt, and ſo to be adored.

The 3. Commandement: Thou ſhalt not take the Name, &c. Here blaſphemie is forbidden. Divers of the Popes have been moſt horrible blaſphemers: Iulius the 3. is a notable example hereof: who being forbidden of his Phyſitian to eat ſwines fleſh, on a time called for it, more ſwiniſh himſelfe, with great indignation and blaſphemie, ſaying, Give me my porke, Al diſpetto de Dio, in deſpight of God. At another time, at ſupper miſſing the cold peacocke, which hee commanded to bee kept for him, hee began to curſe and ſweare, and being admoniſhed by ſome of his Cardinals, not to bee moved ſo for a trifle: hee added further, If God were angry with Adam for an apple, may not I much more for a peacocke, being his chiefe Vicar upon earth: ex Balao. Alexander the fifth being at the point of death, ſaid thus to the Cardinals, My peace I give unto you, my peace I leave with you. Thus moſt blaſphemouſly abuſing the holy ſpeech of Chriſt, & appropriating it to himſelfe. Paulus the fourth ſaid thus to his fellow Jeſuites, whoſe ſect he is ſaid to have founded, going to Rome, to be in the eye & ſight of the world, Whither I goe, you cannot come: blaſphemouſly abuſing Chriſts ſpeech to his owne purpoſe. Thus they are found grievous tranſgreſſors of this law.

The 4. Commandement: Remember thou keepe holy, &c. Yet Alexander the ſixth upon feſtivall dayes gave himſelfe to heare Plautus Comedies, and to bee preſent at other playes: his feſtivall exerciſe was, from Hadrianes Mount to behold the gay harlots, and brave bawds and ſtrumpets that paſſed by: ex Balao de actis pontific.

The 5. Honour thy father and mother, &c. Yet Paulus the third poyſoned his mother and his nephew, that the whole inheritance of the Farneſians might come unto him. And concerning the publike and common parents, Emperors and Kings and civill Magiſtrates; they were never more diſhonoured than by Popes. Alexander the third did tread on Henry the Emperors necke. Adrian made him hold his ſtirrop. Divers of them cauſed Emperors to kiſſe their feet. Paſchalis the ſecond raiſed up Henry the fifth moſt unnaturally againſt his owne father, to depoſe him from the Empire. Innocentius the third ſet up Otho againſt the Emperour Philip, by whom he was ſlaine. Innocentius the fourth hired one Manfredus to poyſon the Emperor Fredericke. Such honour have the Popes ſhewed to their earthly parents.

The 6. Thou ſhalt not kill. Iohn the 13. did thus uſe his Cardinals, ſome had their eyes pulled out, ſome their tongues, ſome their fingers cut off. Gregory the 7. poyſoned, by wicked Brazutus meanes, ſix Popes in order, to come himſelfe to the Papacie. Urbane the 6. put five of his Cardinals into ſacks, and drowned them. Alexander the 6. commanded Antonius Mancinellus his tongue, and both his hands to be cut off, becauſe he made an oration invective againſt his impure life. Paulus the third poyſoned his owne ſiſter, whom he had knowne carnally, becauſe ſhe loved other better than him: the ſame Pope alſo poyſoned Fulgoſius and Contarenus two Cardinals, that began ſomewhat to favour the Goſpell.

The 7. Thou ſhalt not commit adulterie. As for ſimple fornication, it was no rare thing in the Popes chaire. Iohn the 13. committed uncleannes with Raimera and Anna, two widowes. Iohn the 23. was accuſed, Concil. Conſtantienſ. ſeſſ. 11. for defiling of virgins. Paulus the 3. enticed a noble virgin to follie, promiſing her marriage.

The Popes many of them have been adulterers. Gregory the 7. retained Mathildis the Counteſſe, having forſaken her husband Earle Azon. Paulus the 3. was found with Nicholas Quercaeus his wife, who gave him a wound, which was ſeene till his dying day.

But what will ye ſay, if theſe holy fathers have fallen into horrible inceſt? Iohn the 23. was accuſed in the foreſaid Councell, to have knowne carnally his brothers wife. Alexander the 6. (oh moſt horrible impietie!) did lye with his owne daughter Lucretia. Paulus the 3. that filthie wretch, uſed carnally his ſiſter, daughter Conſtantia, and Neece. Neither ſtayed they here in theſe outragious luſts, which were not yet againſt the naturall uſe, but fell alſo into helliſh unnaturall filthineſſe, into that abominable ſin of Sodometrie. Iulius the ſecond did abuſe two noble youths that were ſent to Rome by the French Queene to bee inſtructed. Iulius the third had his Ganymedes, to whom, beſide the reſt of his Cardinals leave, hee gave a red Hat. Neither did they onely in their owne filthie perſons practiſe this wickedneſſe, but permitted it alſo to others. Sixtus the fourth erected a Stewes in Rome for both ſexes: hee gave licenſe to his two nephewes Cardinals, and their houſhold, in the three hot moneths of the yeere, Iune, Iuly, Auguſt, to uſe maſculine venerie. Alexander the ſixth gave leave to Pet. Mendoza Cardinall, to uſe his owne baſtard ſonne as his ſpouſe: ex Balao. Who hearing now of theſe filthie abominations of that ſtrumpet of Babylon, will not eaſily grant Antichriſts ſeat to bee there?

The 8. Thou ſhalt not ſteale. Notwithſtanding this, Boniface the 7. carried away all S. Peters treaſure at Rome, and fled to Conſtantinople. Iohn the 18. as Platina ſaith, In pontificatu fuit fur & latro, behaved himſelfe in his Papacie as a theefe and a robber. As for injuſtice and oppreſſion, which is alſo a kind of theft, nothing with the Popes was more common. Zacharias Pope put Childericus King of France from his kingdome, and gave it to Pepinus. Adrian the firſt, Charlemaine King of France being dead, diſinherited Bertha his wife with her two ſonnes, and gave the kingdome to Charles their uncle: and many ſuch other examples might be alleaged.

The 9. Thou ſhalt not beare falſe witneſſe, &c. Yet this notwithſtanding, Vigilius accuſed Silverius Biſhop of Rome falſely, that he would have delivered Rome to the Gothes: Silverius was therefore depoſed, and Vigilius ſet in his place, who was juſtly called to account by Theodora the Empreſſe, for that he had promiſed to reſtore Anthemius Biſhop of Conſtantinople, excommunicated by his predeceſſors, and afterward refuſed to doe it: ex pontifical. For this is alſo a breach of this law, not to performe the oath, or promiſe made, which with the Popes was not dainty. Paſchal the 2. confirmed by an oath to Henry the 5. the imperiall right of inveſting Biſhops: but afterward revoked it againe. And as they were thus perfidious themſelves, ſo they gave counſell to others. Eugenius the 4. perſwaded Vladiſlaus King of Hungarie to breake his league made with Amurathes the great Turke, which was to his owne ruine, and of all Chriſtendome. Alexander the 6. betrayed Gemes Bajazetes the great Turkes brother, that did flie to Rome for ſuccour, and being thereto largely hired by the great Turke, procured him to be poyſoned.

The like treacherous part played Alexander the 3. long before this with Fredericke the Emperor, who ſent his counterfeit to the Sultane, againſt whom he warred, whereby the Emperor was taken: but the Sultane his enemie dealt honorably in delivering him, whereas the Pope, his pretended friend, played a right Judas part. The Popes their predeceſſors, though bad enough, yet were aſhamed of ſuch Judaicall practices: Nicholas 1. when Michael the Emperor ſent to him, to deliver one Theognoſtus, which was fled to the Pope for releefe, made this anſwer: Nolumus, Deo volente, Iudæ proditori ſimiles eſſe, &c. We will not be like the traytor Iudas, nor be more wicked than the Pagans: for you may remember how one of your predeceſſors ſent to the King of the Agarens, to have one delivered, but it was not granted: Epiſtol. ad Michael. Thus wee ſee by the Popes owne teſtimonie, that they which betray ſuch as of truſt commit themſelves unto them, doe Excedere paganorum nequitiam, are more wicked than the heathen: but ſuch were ſome of the Popes.

The 10. Thou ſhalt not covet, &c. The covetouſnes of Popes hath been inſatiable, as it may appeare by the infinite treaſure which they heaped together. Iohn the 23. is ſaid to have gathered 205000. crownes. Calixtus the 3. left to his ſucceſſor, an hundred and fifteene thouſand duckets, which he had ſcraped together by his Indulgences. Leo the 10. ſent his Indulgences abroad with this commiſſion, that whoſoever would give ten ſhillings, ſhould deliver a ſoule from the paines of Purgatorie: the Popes chiefe factor for this merchandiſe, was one Simon a Frier Franciſcane of Millaine, who by this meanes gathered ſuch infinite ſummes of money, that hee offered in one day above 1200000. duckets for the Popedome. And no marvell if the Popes did grow ſo infinitely rich, for all things were put to ſale: as ſpirituall livings, Biſhopricks, Benefices, &c. The Archbiſhop of Canturburie was wont to pay to the Pope ten thouſand florences for his firſt fruits, and five thouſand for the uſe of his pall: ſo did the Archbiſhop of Yorke. Iohn the 23. exacted the tenths of Eccleſiaſticall livings. Urbanus the ſixth, the firſt fruits. Innocentius the ſeventh, more unreaſonable than they, would have had halfe the fruits of Benefices, ex Balao. Cardinalſhips alſo were ſold. Leo the 10. made 31. Cardinals in one day, getting thereby unreaſonable ſummes of money. The Pope offered the Empire to ſale: as Alexander the 2. tooke money of Alphonſus King of Spaine for the Empire, and afterward ſold it to another. Yea the Popedome it ſelfe hath been ſet to ſale: Benedictus the 9. ſold the Papacie to Gregory the 6. for 1500. pound. Yea honeſtie and all is ſaleable at Rome: the revenewes of the harlots in Rome amounteth yeerely to 40. thouſand pound, Conſul. Chronic. de actis Pont. 3. To conclude this place, conſidering this unſatiable thirſt of the Popes, the Greeks, anno 1330. or thereabout, made a fit anſwer to the Pope, who had ſent to them before, telling them that Chriſt had but one Church, and hee was the head thereof: their anſwer is this: Potentiam tuam ſummam erga tuos ſubditos firmiter credimus, ſuperbiam tuam ſummam tolerare non poſſumus, avaritiam ſatiare non valemus: Your tyranny toward your ſubjects we eaſily beleeve, your infinite pride we cannot beare, nor ſatiate your covetous deſire: ex actis Iohan.23. Thus have I ſhewed by the way the generall corruption that reigneth in the papall chaire of peſtilence, and the wicked uſage of that ſinfull ſeat, ſo that in no place in the world, neither amongſt the Turks or Infidels, can the man of ſinne be ſooner found than there. Let us now proceed.

Argum. 3. The third place we doe take out of the Apocalyps, chap.9. where is a plaine ſtorie ſet downe of the Pope.

1 Verſ. 1. Hee is a ſtarre fallen from Heaven: he is departed from the ancient faith of Rome to ſuperſtition and idolatrie. Apoc.9.

2 He hath the key of the bottomleſſe pit: who giveth the croſſe keyes in his armes but the Pope? Who ſaith he may evacuate all Purgatorie at once, if he will, but he? Who ſaith he may, pleno iure currus animarum plenas ſecum ad tartara detrudere, by full right carrie downe to hell with him chariots loden with ſoules? cap. ſi Papa diſtinct.42. is not this the Pope? Who then more fitly may be ſaid to have the key of the bottomleſſe pit?

3 There ariſe out of the bottomleſſe pit a great flocke of Locuſts, that is, the innumerable ſort of begging Friers: for they are in everie reſpect deſcribed: Firſt, compared to Locuſts for their number, *verſ.*3. There were an hundred divers ſorts of Friers, Fox pag.260. Secondly, they had power given them for five moneths: that is, as Walter Brute expoundeth it, taking a moneth for thirtie daies, & a day for a yeere, as it is prophetically taken, an hundred and fiftie yeeres: for ſo long it was from the beginning of the Friers under Innocent the third, anno 1212. to the time of Armachanus, who preached, diſputed, and wrote againſt the Friers, about anno 1360. Thirdly, they ſhall ſting like Scorpions, not ſlay all at once, but venome and poyſon the conſcience with the ſting of their peſtilent doctrine. Fourthly, other parts alſo of the deſcription agree, as *verſ.*7. They are as horſes prepared to battell, that is, ſtout and ambitious, their haire as the haire of women, that is, they ſhall bee effeminate, and given to the luſts of the fleſh: their teeth as the teeth of Lions: they by valiant begging ſhall devoure the portions of the poore: as it was well proved in King Henry the 8. dayes, in the Supplications of beggers, that the ſumme of the Friers almes came to a great ſumme in the yeere: for the five orders of Friers had a penny a quarter for everie one of everie houſholder thorowout England, that is, for them all twentie pence by the yeere: Suppoſe that there be twentie houſholds in everie towne, and let there bee ten thouſand pariſhes and townes in England; it will not want much of twentie thouſand pound. Thus had they Lions teeth, that is, conſuming and devouring. Laſtly, they have a King, verſ. 11. whoſe name is Abaddon, a deſtroyer; for the Pope, their chiefe Prince and Patron, hath by his Antichriſtian doctrine laid waſte the Church of God, Argument. Chytrai.

Fox, p.414.2.5.

Argum. 4. The fourth place of Scripture we will take out of the 17. of the Apocalyps, there the ſeat of Antichriſt is deſcribed. First, verſ. 5. It is called Babylon, the citie which reigneth over the Kings of the earth, *verſ.*18. This can be no other but Rome, which then had the Empire of the whole world: as Walter Brute, holy confeſſor of Gods truth, witneſſeth: In the daies of S. Iohn the whole world was ſubject to the temporall Empire of the citie of Rome, and afterward it was ſubject to the ſpirituall Empire or dominion of the ſame, Fox, pag.499. col.1. Secondly, It is the citie built upon ſeven hils or mountaines, *verſ.*9. that is, no other but Rome. Thirdly, the whore, which is Antichriſt, ſhall ſit upon the beaſt with ſeven heads and ten hornes, that is, ſhall ſucceed in the Empire, and have the authoritie thereof: ſo hath the Pope. Fourthly, the ten hornes, that is, the Kings of the earth ſhall give their authoritie to the beaſt, but afterward ſhall devoure her fleſh: Even ſo the Kings of the earth, by their ſword, maintained the authoritie of the Pope: but now being taught by the Goſpell, they are made the Lords free men, and begin to ſubdue their necks from his yoke.

Apoc.17.5.

Pag.458.2.80.

Argum. 5. The fifth place is, 1 *Ioh.*2.22. Who is a lier, but he that denieth that Jeſus is Chriſt? the ſame is Antichriſt that denieth the Father and the Sonne. 1 Ioh 2.22.

Even ſo the Pope of Rome, though not openly and apertly, yet cloſely and ſubtilly is an enemie unto the whole Trinitie: He exalteth himſelfe above God the Father; becauſe he taketh upon him to diſpenſe not onely againſt the law of nature, but againſt the Law of God, the morall law, and againſt the precepts both of the old and new Teſtament: but a Law cannot be diſpenſed withall, but by the ſame authoritie, or greater.

Againſt Jeſus Chriſt he exalteth himſelfe, and all his offices; he denieth him to be the onely Prophet, ſaying, the Scriptures are unperfect, and that their traditions are alſo neceſſarie to ſalvation. Againe, he maketh other books Scripture, than thoſe which are Canonicall. His kingly office he doth arrogate to himſelfe, in making lawes to binde the conſcience, in ordaining other Sacraments, in granting Indulgences and Pardons, and ſaying that he is the head of the Church. His Prieſthood he is an enemie unto, conſtituting another Prieſthood after the order of Melchiſedech, than that of our Saviour Chriſt, which begun upon the Croſſe, and remaineth ſtill in his perſon, being incommunicable to any other creature: yet they make everie ſacrificing Prieſt to be of the order of Melchiſedech. He impugneth the office of the holy Spirit, counting that prophane which the holy Ghoſt hath ſanctified, as marriage & meats: arrogateth in all things the Spirit of truth not to erre: applieth the merits of Chriſts paſſion after his owne pleaſure, by Pardons, Indulgences, by Ceremonies and Sacraments of his owne invention, Bell. 2 Theſſ. 2. verſ. 10. Ergo, we conclude out of S. Iohn, that ſeeing he denieth Jeſus to be Chriſt, he is Antichriſt.

Argum. 6. Sixthly, Saint Paul ſaith, that Antichriſt ſhall be an adverſarie, ἀντικείμενος, 2 Theſſ. 2. verſ. 4. An adverſarie in doctrine, teaching cleane contrarie to the Goſpell of Chriſt: ſo doth the Pope.

* Though this word only, be not expreſſed, yet muſt this bee the ſenſe of theſe Scriptures. See Retect. pag. 213.

1 The Scripture ſaith, we ought to put our truſt *(only) in God and not in man, Ierem. 17. 7. and to call upon God (onely) in the day of trouble, Pſal. 50. 15. and to worſhip him in ſpirit and truth, Ioh. 4. 24. The Papiſts ſay cleane contrarie, that we muſt call upon Saints, and beleeve they can help us, and they teach us to fall downe before Images, which are ſtocks and ſtones.

2 The Goſpell teacheth that we are freely ſaved by Jeſus Chriſt, without workes, which neither merit remiſſion of ſinnes, nor eternall life: for eternall life is the free gift of God, Rom. 6. 23. And our ſinnes are forgiven us freely, becauſe they are not imputed, Rom. 4. 6. They affirme cleane contrarie, that by our merits wee may deſerve Heaven: and that vita eterna is merces bonorum operum, that eternall life is the reward of good works. But S. Paul ſaith, it is a free gift, Bellarm. cap. 23.

2 Pet. 1. 10.
Heb. 4. 10.

3 The Goſpell teacheth us, that we ſhould grow up to an aſſurance of our election, 2 Pet. 1. 10. and with boldneſſe to call upon the name of God, Heb. 4. 10. The Papiſts ſay, we ſhould be kept alwayes in doubt, and it is preſumption to be aſſured of the favour of God.

Geneſ. 6. 5.
Rom. 7. 7.

4 The Goſpell ſaith, that not only externall acts, but even ſecret thoughts are ſinne, yea the verie concupiſcence of the fleſh to be ſinne, Geneſ. 6. 5. Rom. 7. 7. They deny that concupiſcence and evill thoughts are ſinne, unleſſe they be voluntarie, and have the conſent of the will, ibid.

Rom 8. 7.
Luke 17. 10.

5 The Goſpell teacheth, that it is impoſſible for any man to keepe and performe the Law of God, Rom. 8. 7. Luk. 17. 10. They doubt not to ſay, that a man by grace may fulfill the Law, and by fulfilling of it deſerve Heaven.

1 Cor. 11.

6 Chriſt inſtituted the Sacrament in both kindes; and Paul, 1 Cor. 11. giving a direction concerning the Sacrament, not onely to the Paſtors and Miniſters, but to the whole Church of Corinth, doth rehearſe the inſtitution in both kindes: but the Papiſts doe miniſter but in one kinde to the people.

1 Cor. 3. 11.

7 The Goſpell ſaith, that the Church is builded upon Chriſt, and he is the only foundation thereof, 1 Cor. 3. 11. The Papiſts hold that Peter firſt, and now the Pope, whom they make his ſucceſſor, is the foundation of the Church, Argument. Chytræi. And thus wee ſee the Pope in his doctrine is a plaine adverſarie to Chriſt, and therefore Antichriſt.

Apoc. 17. 1.

Argum. 7. The ſeventh argument, Apocalyps 17. 1. Antichriſt is called the great whore. And here we are to note the ſingular providence of God, who ſuffereth not one jot of his word to fall to the ground: for even ſo verily, anno 853. next after Leo the 4. there was a right whore elected Pope called Iohn, or if you will, Ioane the 8. who ſate in the Papacie two yeeres, ſix moneths, and on a time being with childe, fell in labour in the middeſt of a ſolemne proceſſion. Whereupon there was a certaine Image of a woman with a childe ſet up in the ſame place where the Pope was delivered: And ever ſince the Popes, when they goe to Laterane, doe ſhun that ſtreet, being yet the neerer way, abhorring that fact and the memorie thereof. There was alſo long after a chaire of Porphyrie ſtone kept in Laterane, with an hole in the middeſt, wherein the new elected Pope was wont to ſit to have his humanitie tried: Iuel, pag. 428. Defenſ. Apol.

Object. 1. Harding, and ſince him Bellarmine object, that there was never any ſuch Pope, becauſe ſhe is not regiſtred in the Popes Calendar.

Anſw. No, they left her out for ſhame, as Marianus Scotus writeth. Againe, Biſhops names have upon ſundrie occaſions been left out: as Chryſoſtomes name was ſtriken out upon diſpleaſure, out of the table of the Biſhops of Conſtantinople: So Pope Cyriacus is not reckoned in the Calendar of the Popes, and yet he was one of them.

Object. 2. Whereas it is ſaid, that this Pope Ioane was firſt ſtudent at Athens, and afterward profeſſed at Rome: Harding denieth that at Athens then there was any place for ſtudents, but all was barbarous, and ſo ſaith Bellarmine; neither that at Rome there was any open profeſſion of letters at that time.

Anſw. Firſt, anno 680. the Biſhop of Athens was at a Councell at Conſtantinople, called Synodus ſexta, anno 742. at the ſecond Councell of Niee there were many Biſhops of Greece preſent: and Pope Ioane followed, anno 853. and how ſhould Athens afterward become barbarous, being inhabited all this while by Chriſtians? for it was not taken of the Turks before anno 1440. Secondly, me thinkes it is a diſcredit for Rome, that there ſhould be there under the Popes noſe no profeſſion of learning, and that there ſhould bee there no Univerſitie of Students where the univerſall Biſhop ſate. But Theodoricus Niemus ſometime the Popes Secretarie ſaith, ſhee read a Lecture two yeeres at Rome.

Object. 3. It is not like that God would ſuffer Saint Peters chaire to bee polluted by a woman, Harding.

Anſw. You preſume too much of Gods providence, having no ſuch promiſe. Why might not a woman as well creepe into S. Peters chaire at Rome, as one did into S. Andrewes of Conſtantinople? as Bellarmine confeſſeth: what privilege hath one more than the other? And why might not a woman as well be Pope, as Popes made by women? as Iohn the 11. got the Popedome by Theodora that harlots meanes: Iohn the 12. was made Pope through the help of Marozia, that notorious ſtrumpet For the whore of Babylons ſeat was then, as reaſon would, governed by ſtrumpets, the like by the like: So was Victor the third elected Pope at Mathilda that noble harlots ſuit. But to put the matter out of doubt, Mantuan that elegant Poet writeth thus of Pope Ioane:

Hic pendebat adhuc ſexum mentita virilem
Fœmina, cui triplici phrigiam diademate mitram
Extollebat apex, &c. lib. 3.
Here did as yet, in ſhew a man, a woman ſit,
Whoſe head a tripled coſtly Crowne did fit.

Caranza alſo the Epitomizer of the Councels, doth aſſigne unto this whore of Babylon, 2. yeeres, one moneth, foure dayes; ſo long did ſhee occupie that chayre of peſtilence. Platina alſo reporteth the ſame ſtory, an author of their owne.

Object. 4. As for the chayre (ſaith Harding) it is a fable: but Bellarmine more modeſtly granteth there is a chayre of Porphyrie, but to another purpoſe, to ſhew the Popes humilitie, not to trie his humanitie. Againe, Harding ſaith it is a lye, that the Popes refraine to goe that way. But Bellarmine, that knoweth Rome better than hee, denieth not that the Pope ſo doth, but not for any ſuch hainous fact there committed, but becauſe it is a ſtrait way, and is not fit for his traine. And as for the Image, Harding ſaith, it repreſenteth no ſuch thing, but is rather like one of the great ragged ſtones at Stonage: Bellarmine denieth not, but there is ſuch an Image, but it ſeemeth not to be the picture of a woman, but rather of ſome heathen Prieſt going to ſacrifice. Wee ſee how handſomly they agree in their anſwers: And no marvell, for if one lyer is many times contrary to himſelfe, how ſhould two lyers agree? But theſe men goe onely by conjectures: we have their owne writers againſt them: for Theodoricus Niemus ſaith, there is ſuch an Image that reſembleth ſuch a thing, and that the Popes will not goe that way in Proceſſion to this day upon that occaſion. And as for the chaire of Marble to that uſe, to ſearch the Pope, Sabellicus reporteth it, Ænead. 9. lib. 1.

In this one example we may ſee the boldneſſe of our adverſaries, which are not aſhamed to denie ſo famous a ſtorie, being reported by Sabellicus, Leonicus Chalcondyla, Marianus Scotus, that lived about the yeere 1028. Sigebertus Gimblacenſ. anno 1100. beſide thirteene Hiſtoriographers, as they are quoted by Biſhop Iuel, and of them all not one a Lutherane. It is almoſt as foule a ſhame for them to deny ſo manifeſt and plaine a thing, as it is a great blot to their ſucceſſion, that a whore ſate ſometimes in the Papall chayre. Thus then by evident demonſtration it appeareth, that the Pope is the whore of Babylon, and ſo conſequently very Antichriſt.

Defenſ. Apolog. pag 437.

Argum. 8. Hee that was letted and hindred from comming while the Empire ſtood, and ſhall bee revealed after the diſſolution of the ſame, is Antichriſt: ſo the Apoſtle ſaith, 2 Theſſ. 2.6. You know what withholdeth, &c. So much alſo is confeſſed by the Rhemiſts, Apocal. 17. annot. 9. But this is the Pope, who was hindered from his princely ſupremacie or tyranny rather in the Church, by the flouriſhing ſtate of the Empire: and ſince the decay thereof, the Papacie hath increaſed. Firſt, by the abſence of the Emperour in the Eaſt parts, the Pope incroched in the Weſt. Secondly, the Empire was weakened by tranſlating of it from the Greekes to the French, from the French to the Germans. Thirdly, whereas Rome was ſubject to the Emperour, now hee is excluded and beareth onely a vaine title to be called, Rex Romanorum. Fourthly, whereas the Emperour bare ſtroke in the election of the Pope, now he hath nothing to doe with it. Fifthly, whereas the Imperiall ſtate went by ſucceſſion, now it is conferred by election, by the Popes device, that paſſing from one kingdome to another, by ſhifting of places it might bee weakened: So that now it is plaine that there remaineth nothing but an image and ſhadow of the Empire; ſo that the Empire being thus defaced, Antichriſt muſt needs bee revealed: And who ſhould he be, but he that hath incroched upon the Imperiall right and poſſeſſions, which is the Biſhop of Rome?

2 Theſſ. 2.6.

Argum. 9. He is Antichriſt, and ſo called, which impugneth Chriſts Kingdome in earth, that is, the ſpirituall regiment which he appointed in his Church, and the forme of government ordained therein, applying all to himſelfe by ſingular tyrannie. (For which cauſe Athanaſius calleth Conſtantius the Emperour, an Arrian, Antichriſt, for making himſelfe Principem Epiſcoporum, Prince of Prieſts, &c. which alſo impugneth Chriſts Prieſthood in earth, &c. hee is Antichriſt, Rhemiſt. totidem verbis ſect. 13. 2 Theſſ. 2. But the Pope impugneth both the Kingdome and Prieſthood of Chriſt: Ergo, hee is Antichriſt.

Firſt, he impugneth the Kingdome of Chriſt, which is either externall, or internall, that is, ſpirituall: for the externall government of the Church, which Chriſt hath appointed by making ſome Apoſtles, ſome Evangeliſts, ſome Paſtors and Doctors, &c. Epheſ. 4. the Pope hath arrogated all to himſelfe: who challengeth to be called univerſall Biſhop, prince of prieſts, which Athanaſius condemned in Conſtantius as an Antichriſtian title. And concerning the title of univerſalitie, Gregorie 1. thus writeth: Farre from all Chriſtians hearts be this name of blaſphemie, in which the honour of all Prieſts is taken away while it is challenged of one man to himſelfe, lib. 4. Epiſt. 32. So then the Pope hath taken away the externall government of the Church, by applying all to himſelfe. And concerning the ſpirituall regiment of the Church, which is more properly the Kingdome of Chriſt, hee hath incroched upon that alſo; both by preſuming to diſpence againſt the law of God, by aboliſhing the inſtitution and right uſe of the Lords Supper, in taking upon him to forgive ſinnes, and to abſolve from the paine and the fault: with ſuch like intolerable preſumptions.

Secondly, he impugneth the Prieſthood of Chriſt, both concerning his ſacrifice, in offering up Chriſt daily in the Maſſe, as though his ſacrifice upon the Croſſe were not ſufficient; as alſo as touching his mediation, in making other mediators and interceſſors beſide Chriſt, as though he were not the alone able and ſufficient Mediator. So then, ſeeing the Pope moſt notoriouſly doth impugne both the Kingdome and Prieſthood of Chriſt, he is certainly Antichriſt.

Epiſtol.125. Laſtly, in the tenth place, their owne witneſſes ſhall ſpeake: Bernard ſaith, Beſtia de Apocalypſi, cui datum eſt os, loquens blaſphemias, Petri Cathedram occupat: The beaſt in the Apocalypſe, to the which a mouth was given ſpeaking blaſphemies, doth occupie Peters chayre. (See Retect. P.142.) Here it is anſwered by a Popiſh objector, that Bernard ſpeaketh not of the right Pope, that then was Innocentius, but of the uſurper. Anſwer. It is enough that S. Peters chayre is here affirmed to be the ſeat of Antichriſt. Bernard alſo ſaith of the ambitious Prelats of thoſe times, Miniſtri ſunt Chriſti, & ſerviunt Antichriſto: (Sermon. in Cantic. 33. Epiſt.56.) They are the Miniſters of Chriſt, and yet ſerve Antichriſt: but whom elſe did they ſerve, or were ſubject unto, than to the Pope. Likewiſe he maketh mention of one Norbertus, whom he commendeth, who affirmed, that Antichriſt ſhould be revealed in that preſent generation. Ioachim Abbas ſaith, Antichriſtus jampridem natus eſt Romæ: Antichriſt a good while ſince was borne at Rome. The Biſhops in the Councell at Reynſpurge ſay thus: Hildebrandus Papa, ſub ſpecie religionis, jecit fundamenta Antichriſti: Hildebrand under colour of holineſſe, hath laid a foundation for Antichriſt. Nay, long before any of theſe, Gregorie the firſt, firſt of all the Gregories, and the beſt of all the Popes that have followed him, thus propheſied of his ſucceſſours: (Lib.6. epiſt. 30.) Ego fidenter dico, quod quiſquis ſe univerſalem ſacerdotem vocat, vel vocari deſiderat, in elatione ſua Antichriſtum præcurrit: I ſpeake it confidently, that whoſoever calleth himſelfe univerſall Prieſt, or deſireth ſo to bee called in the pride of his heart, is the fore-runner of Antichriſt, &c. But the Popes of Rome are now called univerſall Biſhops or Prieſts: Ergo, they are either Antichriſts, or the fore-runners of Antichriſt. But it is not like that Antichriſt ſhould have ſo many fore-runners, and ſo many yeeres, almoſt a thouſand ſince Boniface the third, was firſt called univerſall Biſhop: Ergo, Antichriſt is already come, and hath beene a good while: and where elſe ſhould hee bee, but there where his fore-runners were, namely, at Rome?

Wee want not here the witneſſe of their owne law in this caſe for the triall of this point, who ſhould be Antichriſt.

Firſt, Nicholaus 2. decreeth him to be Antichriſt, that was elected or made Pope by ſymonie, Decret. 23. cap. 1. but ſo was Gregorie the 6. made Pope, giving to his predeceſſor Benedict the 9. 1500. pounds: and as things goe now a dayes it was good cheape.

Secondly, Diſtinct. 79. cap. 1. Nichol. 2. Qui ſine concordi electione, &c. He that is inthronized Pope without the Canonicall and concording election of the Cardinals, is not Apoſtolicall, but Apoſtaticall. But when Iohn 23. was made Pope, and two more beſide, a Gregorie and a Benedict, the Cardinals concorded not in their election: Ergo, the Pope then was an Apoſtata.

Thirdly, Cauſ. 6. quæſt. 7. cap. 3. Gregor. 7. thus decreed, that if any Biſhop granted tythes or oblations, laicalibus perſonis, ſeu conſanguineis, to lay perſons, or his kinſmen, inter maximos hæreticos, & Antichriſtus non minimus haberetur, he ſhould be counted amongſt the greateſt heretikes, and not the leaſt Antichriſt, &c. But the Biſhop of Rome hath done this, by whoſe device many portions of tithes have beene appropriate to lay perſons: Ergo, he is an heretike and Antichriſt.

Fourthly, Decret. par. 2. cauſ. 24. quæſt. 1. cap. 25. that ſaying of S. Hierome is approved: Qui Chriſti non eſt, Antichriſti eſt: Hee that is not of Chriſt, is of Antichriſt. And againe hee ſaith, Adverſarius Chriſti & Antichriſtus eſt, &c. He is an adverſary to Chriſt, and an Antichriſt, whom Chriſts precepts offend, or diſpleaſe: Hieron. de ægrotat. Bleſill. But ſuch an one is the Pope, that altereth and changeth the precepts of Chriſt: for Chriſt ſaid, Feed my ſheepe, but hee preacheth not: Chriſt appointed the Sacrament in both kinds, hee commandeth it to bee uſed in one: Chriſt ſaid, beleeve in me: but hee would have us beleeve in the Virgin Mary: And many ſuch like precepts he hath contrary to Chriſt: Ergo, he is Antichriſt.

Fifthly, Cauſ. 25. quæſt. 1. cap. 5. Damaſus: In ſpiritum ſanctum blaſphemat, &c. Hee that violateth the Canons of the fathers is a blaſphemer againſt the ſpirit. But ſo doth the Pope, in calling himſelfe univerſall Biſhop, contrary to the Canons: diſtinct. 99. cap. 5. and in many other things he doth tranſgreſſe the Canons: Ergo, hee is a blaſphemer; and conſequently Antichriſt, who hath names full of blaſphemie, Apocal. 17. 3.

Sixthly, Ibid. cap. 11. Hadrian. Anathema, quicunque regum: Hee is an anathema, or accurſed, that doth violate the decrees of Kings. But ſo doth the Pope, whoſe Canons doe every where impugne the Civill conſtitutions: Ergo.

Seventhly, Cauſ. 35. quæſt. 5. cap. 3. Gregor. Vxorem propinqui mei, &c. The wife of my kinſman I muſt hold as neere unto mee, as if ſhee were my kinſwoman in the ſame degree, &c. whoſoever thinketh otherwiſe, is Antichriſt, &c. But the Pope ſo thinketh, that permitteth a brother to marry his brothers wife, which is as neere as his owne ſiſter by this Canon: Ergo, he is Antichriſt.

Eighthly, Decret.part.3.diſt.3.cap.12. Qui die ſabbati, &c. They that forbid to worke upon the Saturday, predicatores Antichriſti, are the Preachers of Antichriſt. But ſo doth the Pope, that enjoyneth Saturdaies to be as ſtrictly kept holy dayes, as the Lords day. Ergo.

Let us ſet in the laſt place the glorious teſtimonie of the holy Martyrs and confeſſors of Gods truth: Walter Brute proveth the Pope to be Antichriſt by this argument: He which eſtabliſheth his lawes, allowing warres and the ſlaughter of men in the warres, as well of Chriſtians, as of infidels, doth he not juſtifie things contrary to the Goſpell and law of Chriſt? therefore he is Antichriſt: but this doth the Pope, &c. Fox pag 487. col. 2. Pag.149.1.80.

Iohn Huſſe holy Martyr: the way of Antichriſt is wickedneſſe and ſinne, of the which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh to the Theſſal. &c. pag.617.col.2. But in Rome, even in the Popes chaire, all abomination, as Pag.568.1.1. pride, covetouſneſſe, ſymonie, are to be found, pag.628.col.1.Ergo, the Pope is Antichriſt. Pag 578.1.10.

Thomas Bilney holy Martyr: the Pope ſitteth in the temple of God: for the conſcience of man is the temple of the holy Ghoſt: as S. Paul ſaith, 1 Cor.3. The temple of the Lord is holy, which is you: but the Pope ſitteth in the conſcience, counting them guiltie of death, that breake his conſtitutions: therefore ſitting in the temple as God, he is Antichriſt, pag.1002.col.2. Pag.914.2.80.

Maſter Tindall Martyr: The Pope inferring a neceſſity of thoſe things, which Chriſt leaveth free and indifferent, what doth he elſe, but make himſelfe Antichriſt? pag.1251.col.2.artic.6. Pag.1140. 2.30.

For this truth alſo many beſides gave their lives: Thomas Benet burned at Exceter, for ſaying the Pope is Antichriſt, pag. 1037. col. 2. Iohn Stilman burned in Smithfield for the ſame, *p.*815. col. 2. Pag.946.2.30. Maſter Rogers holy Martyr, for affirming the Romiſh Church to be the Church of Antichriſt, p. 1488. Pag.746.1.10. *col.*1.

Adde hereunto, 1. That note of Antichriſt, which Tertullian giveth, who now with-holdeth? Niſi Romanus ſtatus, cujus abceſſio in decem reges diſperſa Antichriſtum ſuperducet: But the Romane ſtate, which being diſperſed unto ten Kings, ſhall bring in Antichriſt: Hee then which hath ſucceeded upon the ruines of the Romane ſtate, is Antichriſt: but that is the Pope, who hath riſen by the fall of the Empire: he then is Antichriſt. Pag.1352.1.85 Lib. de reſurrect. carnis.

2 Barlaam a Greeke Monke doth give this note: that if the Pope of Rome doe not obſerve the ancient Canons, He is to be ſhunned, as a Woolfe and as an enemie of the Church: That is a verie Antichriſt: and that the Pope doth tranſgreſſe the Canons, he ſheweth, in that he taketh upon him to bee preſident of Councels, to preſcribe lawes to the Church, to ordaine all other Patriarkes, all which things are contrarie to the ancient Canons. Lib. de principat. c. 16.

3 Let us ſee ſome demonſtrations uſed by the reformed Churches: As that ſeemeth to bee a lively deſcription of Antichriſt and his company, Apocal.9.21. as is excellently obſerved by the Royall Apologiſt of the Engliſh Church: they are deſcribed, by their worſhipping of Idols of gold, ſilver, Apolog. Reg. p. 88. braſſe, &c. which is the maine doctrine of the Romane Church: by their murther, that is, their perſecution and bloody maſſacres: by their ſorceries, as they ſay their agnus Dei will ſlake fire, they have their hallowed ſhirts and other reliques, and certaine prayers that will preſerve men from the violence of ſhot, of fire, ſword, thunder, &c. they are noted for their fornication, both ſpirituall in their idolatrie, and corporall, as appeareth by reſtraint of mariage in their Clergie, and the many orders of Monks: their theft is ſeene in heaping up their treaſure, with their jugling ware and merchandiſe of the ſoules of men, by Jubilies, Pardons, Reliques, and ſuch like.

So alſo in the 13. chapter every part of the deſcription ſheweth the Pope to bee Antichriſt. 1. He ſitteth upon a beaſt with 7. heads, that is, the great City ſituate upon 7. hilles. 2. Hee is likened to a Leopard, becauſe of the baſtard forme of government, in ſhew ſpirituall, but in deed temporall. 3. One of his heads of government, wounded (by the Goths and Vandals) was healed againe. 4. All that dwell in the earth, ſhall worſhip him, *verſ.*8. which worſhip Ethnik Rome never craved Apolog. 92 93. of any. 5 He hath two hornes like the Lambe, *verſ.*11. in outward ſhew pretendeth to be the ſpouſe of 94. Chriſt, but ſpeaketh like the Dragon, teaching damnable doctrine. 6. His power is as great as of the former Ethnik Empire, *verſ.*12. 7. All both great and ſmall muſt receive his mark. *verſ.*16. that is, be ſubject unto him. 8. The number of his name is 666. So the title of univerſall Biſhop was firſt given to Boniface the 3. anno 606. and confirmed and fully ſetled upon his ſucceſſors 60. yeeres after.

So alſo our Engliſh confeſſion holdeth the Pope to be Antichriſt: Art. 5. he doth give himſelfe, as is written by his owne companion Gregorie, A preſumptuous, profane, ſacrilegious, Antichriſtian name, that he is alſo the King of pride, that he is Lucifer, that he hath forſaken the faith, and is the fore-runner of Antichriſt. Harm. ſect. 11. p. 361.

With the Engliſh Church, other reformed Churches concurre. Confeſſ. of Bohemia, c.8. In Antichriſt we acknowledge a double overthwartneſſe, to wit, diſhoneſty and deceiving, &c. falſe doctrine, and corrupt life, &c. which in the Antichriſtian Church are openly practiſed. Belgia. artic. 36. That all idolatrie and counterfeit worſhip of God may be cleane aboliſhed, that the Kingdome of Antichriſt may bee overthrowne, and that the Kingdome of Chriſt may be enlarged. Harm. p. 318. Sect. 19. p. 388.

4 the Romaniſts themſelves are here plentifull witneſſes, to ſhew where Antichriſt is to be found, and by what markes to be diſcerned.

1 Bellarmine telleth us, that Antichriſt ſhall be the laſt King, that ſhall hold the Romane Empire, Lib 3. de Roman. Pontif. yet ſine nomine Romani Imperii, without the name of the Romane Empire, &c. But it is evident, that c. 15.

the Pope holdeth the Romane Empire, but under another name of ſpirituall juriſdiction : yea, hee ſucceedeth in ſome of the temporalities of the Romane Empire, as in the Citie of Rome, and other territories of Italie : as Azorius their Ieſuite teſtifieth, that after Gregorie the ſecond had excommunicated Leo the Emperour for pulling downe of images, and abſolved his ſubjects of their oath, the Romanes did ſweare fealty, and to become obedient to the Biſhop of Rome.

Azor. inſtit. Moral.p.2.lib. 4.c.20.

2 Gregorie ſaith, that Antichriſt, when he commeth, ſummas hujus ſeculi poteſtates obtinebit, ſhall have the chiefeſt power in earth, &c. and he ſhall ſeeke to draw men to his obedience, both miſſis prædicatorib, & commotis poteſtatib. both by ſending of Preachers, and ſtirring up of the powers, &c. See here this verified in the Pope, who challengeth both ſwords : as Boniface the 8. ſaith, Uterq; gladius eſt in poteſtate Eccleſi, ſpiritualis & materialis : both ſwords are in the power of the Church, the ſpirituall and materiall : and Gregorie the ſeventh ſaith, Imperia et regna, &c. auferre nos et dare poſſe, that he would give and take away Empires and Kingdomes &c.

Lib 33. in Iob c.20. Extravag. c. vitam ſanctam. Platina de vit. Gregor 7. Moral. in Iob c.16.

3 Gregorie giveth another note of Antichriſt : as Chriſt choſe for his Preachers ſimple men, ſo Antichriſt ſhall elect aſtutos et duplices miniſtros, crafty and doubling miniſters, which ſhall profeſſe the knowledge of the world : ſuch are the Popiſh Jeſuites, with their equivocating trickes : who profeſſe themſelves to be cunning ſtatiſts ; and hold it lawfull to ſay one thing with their mouth, and to meane another in their heart, which they call their mentall reſtruation : who elſe are thoſe doubling deceivers, then thoſe Popiſh claw-backes.

In Daniel c.11. lib.14 ſec. Nec priora. Platina de vit. Innocen. 8. Guicciard. de Alexand. 6. In Apocal. c.13. com. 1.

4 Pererius ſaith, that Antichriſt outwardly ſhall faine chaſtitie, but inwardly ſhall bee ſuper omnes libidinoſus, exceed all men in luſt, &c. This agreeth and ſuteth to the Popes, who forbid mariage to their Clergie, as pretending chaſtity, yet divers of them have lived uncleane lives, and have beene detected of adulteries.

5 Viega ſaith that Antichriſt Revel. 13.11. is deſcribed, to have hornes like a Lambe, that is, ſhall faine gentleneſſe, and innocencie, but he ſhall ſpeake like a Dragon, hee ſhall practiſe crueltie, &c. And are not their Popes ſuch, who pretend mercie, and love to the Church of Chriſt, but doe moſt cruelly make ſpoyle and havoke thereof by all kind of crueltie : they profeſſe themſelves to bee ſervants of ſervants in their ſtile, yet in their practice challenge to be Lords of the earth.

Lib. 3. de Roman. Pontif. c.12 ſect. de doctrina. Gratian. diſtinct. 96. Continuator. Friſingenſ. lib. 4.c.55.

6 Bellarmine ſaith, that Antichriſt affirmabit ſe Deum eſſe, ſhall affirme himſelfe to be God, &c. ſo Pope Nicolas uſeth this argument, why the Pope ſhould not be judged of any, becauſe God cannot be judged of men : and it is evident, Pontificem a pio principe Conſtantino Deum appellatum, that the Biſhop (of Rome) was called God of the godly Prince Conſtantine.

And to make up all, Alexander the third thus denounceth againſt Octavian the Antipope, That he prefigured the times of Antichriſt, and did ſo lift up himſelfe, that he ſate in the temple of God, ſhewing himſelfe as God, and many have ſeene not without abundance of teares, the abomination of deſolation ſtanding in the holy place, &c.

Now therefore ſeeing we have ſo many witneſſes, the Scripture, reaſon, experience, authorities, their owne witneſſes to prove the Pope Antichriſt : who will either be ſo ſimple, as ſeeing ſo good grounds, not to beleeve it ; or ſo ſcrupulous, having ſuch certaine evidence, to doubt thereof ? And thus at the length, by Gods gracious aſſiſtance, wee have finiſhed and brought this great queſtion concerning Antichriſt, to an end ; as alſo the whole controverſie as touching the Biſhop or Pope of Rome.

to yeeld due obedience unto them. But that the calling of the one before God in it ſelfe, is more meritorious than the other ; that we doe not, neither dare affirme.

Deut.18.2.

Argum. 3. The Levites in the time of the law, were ſevered out from the reſt of the Lords people, and he was their lot and inheritance, and they the Lords lot, *Deut.*18.2. And as the Levites were then, ſo are the Miniſters of the Goſpell now, Bellarm. ibid.

Exod.19.6. Revel.1.6. 1 Pet.2.9.

Anſ. Firſt, the Lord is rather ſaid to be their lot, becauſe they had the Lords portion, and lived of the Altar, than they are ſaid to be the Lords lot : for the whole nation was holy unto God, and a kingdome of Prieſts, *Exod.*19.6. Secondly, it followeth not, that becauſe there was a legall and ceremoniall difference then betweene the Prieſts and the people, that therefore it ought to bee ſo now : Nay rather the contrary followeth, becauſe there was ſuch a difference then, that therefor the Prieſthood of the law being ceaſed, there ought to be none ſuch now : for Chriſt had made us all Kings and Prieſts to God his Father, *Apocal.*1.6. And wee are all a royall Prieſthood and holy Nation, 1 *Pet.*2.9. Now, though there be a difference of callings amongſt men, yet before God we are all Prieſts alike; and there is but one Prieſt for us all to Godward, even Chriſt Jeſus our Lord.

The Proteſtants.

THe name of Clerks, or Clergie-men, if it be not uſed as a name in it ſelfe of greater holineſſe and merite, and ſo be in effect a proud excluding of the reſt of Chriſtians from the Lords inheritance ; we refuſe it not, though there are better names and titles, to call the Miniſters of the Goſpell by : yet being taken as it is in Poperie, we doe utterly refuſe and reject it.

1 Pet.5.3.

Firſt, 1 *Pet.*5.3. The Apoſtle exhorteth the paſtors and teachers to feede the flocke of Chriſt, non ut dominantes Cleris : Not as Lords over Gods Clergie and inheritance. Here S. Peter calleth the whole flocke, the Clergie : wherefore it appeareth, that this difference was not knowne in the Apoſtles time of lay and Clergie men. And it is againſt all ſenſe, that Saint Peter ſhould underſtand here the inferiour Miniſters, and ſo exhorteth the ſuperiour Paſtors and Biſhops to looke to their Clergie, as the Rhemiſts would have it. For S. Peter writeth not onely to Biſhops, but to all Presbiters, Paſtors or Elders, *verſ.*1. Secondly, *verſ.*3. That which he calleth the Clergie, or heritage, he expoundeth in the ſame verſe to be the Lords flocke : but the Clergie in their ſenſe is not the whole congregation or flocke. Thirdly, the Apoſtle would have them to feede the flock, that is, to teach and inſtruct them, but he was farre from allowing an ignorant Clergie, that need to be inſtructed and catechiſed, ſuch as for the moſt part the popiſh Clergie is.

Bellarmine anſwereth againe, that it may be granted alſo that the name of Clergie in ſome ſort, agreeth to the people, as being the Lords heritage ; but in a more excellent manner is it given to thoſe which ſerve at the alter : as all the Iſraelies were the Lords heritage, yet the Levites are more ſpeciallie ſo called, *Bellarmine lib.*1. *de Clericis. cap.*1.

Contra. Firſt, if the people may be called the Clergie, then is not this name peculiar to eccleſiaſtical perſons, which is the thing now in queſtion. Secondly, there is no ſuch legall difference now betweene the Prieſt and people, as was under the law, betweene the Levites and other tribes : for Chriſt hath now made us all Kings and Prieſts to God his Father. *Apocal.*1.6. Thirdly, we deny not, but that the Miniſters of the Goſpell have a more excellent office, than lay men, in reſpect of the policie and order of the Church, but not more meritorious in it ſelfe before God.

Galath.6.6. 1 Cor.14.16. Gal.3.28.

Argum. 2. Neither ſhall we find this word Clerus, the Clergie, properly applyed to the Miniſters, throughout the new Teſtament, let our adverſaries brag never ſo much of ſcripture as they do. S. Paul uſeth theſe, names of difference, κατηχῶν, κατηχούμενος, the teacher, and hee that is taught : and λαλῶν, the ſpeaker, and ἰδιώτης, the private or unlettered man. So that all their names are given in reſpect of their outward miniſtery and calling, not in regard of any difference before God. For before the Lord, as there is neither Grecian nor Jew, bond nor free, male nor femall ; ſo neither is their Clerke or Lay man.

1 Cor.12.20. Verſ.13.

*Argum.*3. S. Paul ſaith, *There are many members, yet one body, &c. verſ.*13. By one ſpirit, are wee all baptized into one bodie, &c. Like as then the parts of the ſame bodie, though they have diſtinct offices, and one more excellent than another, yet no part is deſpiſed or unneceſſary, but are all knit to the ſame head, and are partakers of the ſame life and ſpirit : ſo is it in the members of the Church, their offices are divers in the body of the Church, but all united by one and the ſame ſpirit to the head Chriſt : if they be all one body, then conſequently one entire inheritance of Chriſt. Auguſtine thus writeth concerning this name, *Cleros, qui ſunt in eccleſiaſtici miniſterii gradibus ordinati, ſic dictos puto, quia Matthias ſorte electus eſt, in Pſal.*67. Clerkes, which ſerve in the Miniſterie, I thinke, were ſo called, becauſe Matthias was choſen by lot, &c. See then, they are not called Clerkes, ſo much becauſe they are the Lords lot, but becauſe they are allotted and choſen out of the people for that ſervice : as the Levites are called the peoples gift, and the Prieſts office an office of ſervice ; not of more merite or holineſſe, or an office of Lordly preeminence, but of miniſterie and ſervice. Auguſtine therefore hath a notable ſaying : Non nos digni, qui pro vobis oremus ; nos indigni, qui pro nobis oretis, *Pſal.*68. Wee are not onely worthy to pray for you, and you unworthy to pray for us : Auditoribus ſuis, quibus verbum prædicavit, ſe commendavit Apoſtolus, ibid. The Apoſtle commendeth himſelfe to their devout prayers, to whom he preached, &c. By this their error is confuted, that thinke the prayer of a Prieſt to be the rather heard for the merite and dignitie of his calling, howſoever elſe he be affected in

THE FIFTH GENERALL CONTROVERSIE, CONCERNING SPIRITVALL PERSONS, COMMONLY CALLED THE CLERGIE.

HAving now ſufficiently handled the controverſie of the chiefe member of the Militant Church, which our adverſaries ſay is the Pope, we muſt come in the next place to ſpeake of the middle parts, which are thoſe whom they call Clericos, Clerks, and they are of two ſorts; Secular, which have any publike function in the Church; or Regular, which live according to ſome rule, and they are called Monachi, Monkes. Firſt then of their ſecular Clerkes. 72. Error.

This Controverſie containeth ſix queſtions.

1 Of the name and title of Clerkes or Clergie men.

2 Concerning the election of Biſhops and Miniſters: firſt, of all in generall: ſecondly, of the election of the Biſhop of Rome.

3 Concerning Eccleſiaſticall orders: firſt, in generall: ſecondly, of the difference of Biſhops and other Miniſters: thirdly, of Cardinals.

4 Concerning the keyes of the Church, and the power of binding and looſing: the queſtion divided into foure parts.

5 Concerning the mariage of Miniſters: three parts of the queſtion.

6 Of the Maintenance of the Church by tythes: in two parts.

The firſt Queſtion, concerning the name of Clerks or Clergie men.

The Papiſts.

THis name Clergie, in Latine, Clerus, is a name made proper to the Spiritualtie, by uſe of antiquity, and agreeably to Scriptures: they are ſo called, becauſe they are the Lords lot, and conſecrate to the divine ſervice: the reſt are called popular, or lay men, which meddle not with any function of the Church.

Argum. 1. This word (ſay they) hath beene uſed by all antiquitie, and thereby Church Miniſters, only ſignified; Ergo, it is a fit and decent name, Bellarmine lib. 1. de Clericis, cap. 1. Rhemenſ. 1 Pet. 2. 3.

Anſ. Firſt, the Fathers uſed this name Clergie, but not as it is now uſed of the Papiſts, which doe hereby as it were exclude the people of God from the Lords inheritance, counting them as Aſſes and Dogs, in reſpect of the Clergie: as one of their owne writers thus complaineth; Quomodo excuſandi vel ferendi hodierni in eccleſia præſules, &c. How can the Prelates of theſe dayes be excuſed, or ſuffered, which doe rule over men as beaſts in the Northerne parts; (he meaneth the Lapiani, and Pilapii people of thoſe countries) which doe lay ſuch grievous yokes upon thoſe ſimple people, as ſtray ſheepe, having no paſtor, that they cannot ſubmit themſelves to the Lords ſweet yoke, &c. Eſpenc. in 1 Tim. p. 312. f. Such diſtinction betweene the Clergie and Laitie the Fathers never allowed: they uſed it as a civill indifferent name, for an outward diſtinction of their callings, not as a name of more holineſſe, and ſo we refuſe it not.

2 What though by cuſtome and continuance this name hath beene ſomewhat abuſed, wee will learne herein to ſpeake of the Scriptures, and not of men.

Argum. 2. Secondly, we miſlike this name (ſay our adverſaries) becauſe wee would have no difference betweene the people and Clergie, Rhemiſt. ibid.

Anſ. It is a great ſlander: becauſe we make no ſuch difference, as they doe, as to make the Clergie onely Gods lot and portion, and to count the people as unholy, and to preferre every ignorant doltiſh Maſſe-prieſt, before the beſt and devouteſt of the people: therefore they imagine we make no difference at all. We doe diſtinguiſh the calling of the one, and the other: none of the Lay ſort to bee ſo hardie as to meddle with the Word or Sacraments, which are committed to the Miniſters, which you notwithſtanding permit them to doe: and the people every where to reverence their Paſtors, and his prayer. So the Rhemiſts ſay, that a prayer not underſtood profiteth by the vertue of the worke wrought, and the office of the Prieſt-hood, Annot. 1. Corinth. 14. ſect. 10.

Let us ſee the conſent of former times, Concil. Aquiſgranenſ. ex Iſidor. Clericos hinc appellatos doctores noſtri dicunt, quia Matthias ſorte electus eſt: Our Doctors hold that Clerkes are ſo called, becauſe Matthias was choſen by lot: not that they were by any ſuch lot of difference ſevered from the reſt of the people. So is the name Clergie expounded in the Civill law. lib. 1. tit. 6. leg. 32 authentic. 3. 1. Cleros dicitur, &c. They are ſo called becauſe they muſt be choſen be lot, as Matthias, that is, by divine election, not humane knowledge: So decret. 21. c. 1. the like notation is given out of Iſidor.

Colonienſ. part. 2. cap. 2. Clerici dicuntur, quia de ſorte domini ſunt, &c. Non quidem quòd à ſorte domini laicos ſecludamus, omnes enim qui Chriſto per Baptiſmum & fidem concorporati ſumus populus acquiſitionis ejus ſumus, ſed quod Clerici peculiari quadam ratione miniſterio Dei & Eccleſiæ dedicati ſunt: Clerkes are ſo called becauſe they are of the Lords lot, not that we doe exclude the Lay ſort from Gods lot, for all that by Baptiſme and faith are incorporate into Chriſt, are the people of God, but becauſe Clerkes after a more peculiar manner are conſecrate to the Miniſterie of God and his Church, &c. This Councell preferreth Clerkes before others, only in reſpect of their outward function in the Church, not for any greater merite or holineſſe.

The ſeale of the holy Martyrs and confeſſors of Gods truth followeth: Walter Brute holy confeſſor: of the Chriſtian Prieſt-hood Chriſt in expreſſe words ſpeaketh but little, To make any difference betweene the Prieſts and the reſt of the people; neither yet doth hee uſe this name of ſacerdos, or presbyter in the Goſpell, but ſome he calleth diſciples, ſome Apoſtles, &c. And Saint Paul ſpeaking of Prieſts to Timothie and Titus, ſeemeth not to mee to make any difference betweene the Prieſts and the people, but that he would have them to ſurmount other in knowledge and perfection of life, Fox pag. 496. col. 2. P. 457. 2. 26.

Iohn Lambert holy Martyr: All Chriſtian people in Scripture are called Prieſts, as Apocal. 1. Hee hath made us Kings and Prieſts to God his Father: yet ought not all to preach in generall conventions, yet privately are they bound for inſtruction of their ſervants, children, kinsfolke, &c. Fox pag. 1113. col. 1. reſponſ. ad articul. 22. P. 1016. 2. 20.

That the name and externall function of Clerkes and Clergie men is not in it ſelfe of more holineſſe and merite, wee want not teſtimonie from other Churches. 1. Ieremie Patriarch of Conſtantinople alleageth to this purpoſe out of Gregorie Nazianzene: who thus ſpeaketh of the calling and function of Miniſters: Primum ipſum purgari oportet, tum allios purgare, &c. primo ſanctificari, tum demum alios ſanctificare, He muſt firſt purge himſelfe, then purge others, firſt be ſanctified, then ſanctifie. And then he reproveth the great abuſe of the ſudden calling of ſome to the miniſterie! Qui nihil dignum ſacerdotio ſecum afferunt, &c. which bring nothing worthy of the Prieſt-hood, they purge others before they be purged themſelves; yeſterday out of ſacred orders, to day miniſters of ſacred things, veteres vitio, pietate recentes, old in vice, and freſhmen in pietie: whoſe dignitie and vocation ſeemeth rather to be the markes of humane invention, than of the inſpiration of the ſpirit, &c. The name then and outward vocation of the Clergie, doth not adde more holineſſe to them. Cenſur. Oriental. Eccleſ. cap. 14. ex Nazianz. Apologet.

2 The Aethiopike Church aſcribeth no ſuch holineſſe to the name onely and externall function of the Clergie: for with them a Clergie man, if he have a concubine, res divinas amplius tractare non poteſt, can no more meddle with holy things: and if he be knowne to have a baſtard, ſacris ordinibus abdicatur, he is deprived of his orders: if he be found guilty of adulterie, murther, robberie, perjurie, hee is ſpoiled of his orders, & ut cæteri malefici punitur, and is puniſhed as other malefactors. Thus Zaga Zabo an Aethiopian Biſhop confeſſeth of their Church. There is not then any ſuch diſtinction of more holineſſe, in reſpect of the orders themſelves of the Clergie. Damianus a Goes de Æthiop. morib.

3 The writers of other reformed Churches conſenting with us further miſlike, that there ſhould be any ſuch difference of perſons among the Chriſtian people, as ſome to be called the Clergie, ſome the Laitie, ſome anointed, ſome ſhaven, &c. Likewiſe Calvin, hæc appellatio aut ex errore, aut prava affectione nata, &c. This name ſprung either of error, or corrupt affection, ſeeing Peter calleth the whole Church (the Clergie) that is, the lot and inheritance of God. Lib. 1. de Miſſ. privat. abrogand. pag. 1. Inſtitut. lib. 4. cap. 4. ſect. 9.

Some of their owne ſide have thus deſcribed the popiſh Clergie. Aventinus: The Pope ſetteth over the flocke of Chriſt, goates, wolves, luſtfull perſons, adulterers, raviſhers of virgins, cookes, muleters, theeves, bankers, uſurers, letcherous, perfidious, ignorant perſons, &c. Albertus Magnus, They which rule in the Church, bee for the moſt part theeves and murtherers, oppreſſors rather than Paſtors, perverters rather than teachers, &c. Such is the popiſh Clergie, to the which they challenge ſuch diſtinction of holineſſe, and greater merite. Annal. lib. 6. pag. 481. In Evangel. Ioann. cap. 10.

THE

The ſecond Queſtion, concerning the election and inſtitution of Biſhops and Paſtors.

THis queſtion hath two parts: Firſt, of the election generally of Paſtors and Miniſters: Secondly, of the election of the Biſhop of Rome.

The firſt part, concerning the election generally of all Biſhops and Paſtors.

The Papiſts.

73.Error. THey ſay that the election of Biſhops neither belongeth to the Clergie, nor the people, but wholly appertaineth to the Biſhop of Rome: as for the people, they have (they ſay) nothing at all to doe in the election of their Paſtors, or ordaining of them, that neither their ſuffragium, conſilium, or conſenſus, ſuffrage, counſell, or conſent is to be required, *Bellarm. de clericis lib.*1. *cap.*7.& 8.

*Argum.*1. That the people are to be utterly excluded, thus they would prove it: Aaron was onely elected of Moſes, without conſent of the people: ſo were the Apoſtles by our Saviour: Ergo, the peoples conſent is not required, Bellarm.

Anſw. Who ſeeth not, that there is great difference betweene ordinary and extraordinary callings? ſuch as the calling of the Apoſtles was, and Aarons at the firſt, though the office of the high Prieſt afterward became ordinary. Alſo it followeth not, the Apoſtles were choſen without conſent of the people, when there were yet no faithfull and Chriſtian congregations, and becauſe they were paſtors of the whole world: Ergo, as well the peoples conſent may be wanting in the election of ordinarie Biſhops and Paſtors, which have their peculiar and proper charges, and there being now many faithfull and well inſtructed congregations. It is one thing to appoint Paſtors for the Church not yet planted, and another thing to conſtitute them in a Church already reformed and inſtructed: for wee read of nations that have beene converted to the faith, by thoſe that had no calling of the Church, as a great nation of the Indians was by Ædeſius and Frumentinus, Ruffin. lib. 1.9. and the Iberians by a captive woman, *Ruffin.*1.10.

*Argum.*2. The people cannot judge who are fit to be paſtors, and their elections are tumultuous, as we may read, how in the election of Damaſus there were 137. perſons ſlaine; and therefore it is not meet, nor convenient, that the matter ſhould be committed to the people, either to elect, or ordaine: but whatſoever they did in times paſt, it was either by ſufferance or negligence of the Biſhops, *Bellarm.cap.*7.

Anſw. Firſt, meere popular elections were never allowed in any well ordered Church, neither was the allowance of their paſtors wholly referred to the people, neither did they beare the chiefe ſtroke, but the election was moderated by the wiſdome and gravitie of the Clergie, Fulk. Tit. 1. ſect. 2. Secondly, the queſtion is not betweene us, concerning the ordaining of paſtors, for that belonged onely
1 Tim.4.14. to the Eldерſhip, and was done by laying on of their hands, but concerning the electing and chuſing of them. Thirdly, neither doe wee diſpute, whether it be convenient and neceſſary at all times, but whether it be lawfull: for neither doe wee affirme, that it is of the eſſence and ſubſtance of the calling of Fulk.Act.14.22. Miniſters to be choſen by the voyces of the people: as though they were no Miniſters, but uſurpers and intruders that are not ſo called: but whether it hath beene at any time, and may yet bee lawfull, to require the conſent of the people. Fourthly, it is falſe, that the people had this right by uſurpation, or elſe ſufferance of the paſtors: for Cyprian ſaith, it did, *De divina authoritate deſcendere, lib.*1.*Epiſtol.*4. That this cuſtome was grounded upon divine authoritie, &c. yea it was eſtabliſhed by the lawes of Kings: as there was a law made by Lodovicus Pius King of France, that Biſhops ſhould be ordained by the free election of the Clergie and the people.

Argum. 3. Therefore (ſay they) elections of Biſhops ought to be at the Popes aſſignement: for unto Peter was committed the care of the univerſall Church, when he bade Peter feed his ſheepe. Hereupon they are bold to affirme, that we have neither true Biſhops nor Miniſters, becauſe they are not lawfully ſent, that is, as they interpret it, from the Sea Apoſtolike, *Bellarm.lib.*1 *cap.*3.8.*Rhemiſt. Rom.*10.ſect 5.

Anſ. Firſt, the charge given to Peter beareth no ſuch ſenſe: that becauſe Chriſt bade him feed his ſheepe, therefore hee and his ſucceſſors ſhould onely have authoritie to conſecrate Miniſters: for if Peter had it by this grant, other Elders and Paſtors had it in like ſort, to whom it as well appertained to 1 Pet.5.2. feed the flocke of Chriſt, 1 Pet. 5. 2. And againe not Peter onely, but the reſt alſo of the Apoſtles did ordaine and conſecrate Paſtors and Elders, as it ſhall bee ſhewed afterward.

Secondly, neither is it a good reaſon to condemne our Miniſterie, becauſe it hath not the Popes allowance: for every Church hath a lawfull calling within it ſelfe, without ſending to forraine Prelates for their approbation. And if you aske us by whom our Miniſters were firſt called, ſeeing there were none but Popiſh Biſhops in every Church: wee anſwer; that ſome had their calling in the Popiſh Church, which afterward being more effectually called of God, became profitable teachers of the Goſpell. Neither is it neceſſary, that the Church ſhould alwayes be bound to an ordinary calling; when as the ſtate of the Church is ſo corrupted, and the government thereof, that no good calling can be obtained: for then the Lord raiſeth up ſome extraordinarily for the reformation of the Church, ſuch as we doubt not, but Luther was. In which and the like caſes, the ordinary impoſition of hands by the Paſtors of the Church, being heretikes and Idolaters, as it was in time of poperie, is not to be expected or ſtaied for: Plura apud Fulk. annot. Rom. 10. ſect. 5.

The Proteſtants.

CОncerning election or choice to be made by the people, we are to put three caſes. Firſt, meere popular elections, wherein the people by multitude of voyces ſhould carry all away, are in one caſe, nor at any time to be allowed. Secondly, for the people to give their voices in elections, which are moderated and governed by the grave and wiſe Paſtors and Elders, it hath beene uſed in times paſt, and may be againe, and is in ſome places, where the ſtate of the Church, the condition and qualitie of the people will beare it. Thirdly, though the people neither beare ſway in the election, nor give their ſuffrages and voices, yet it is convenient and requiſite, that their conſent ſhould be had, and publike teſtimony: for the Miniſters ſhould be ſuch as have a good report of all, 1 Tim. 3. 7. Fulk. Act. 14. ſect. 3. But as for the Pope, let him keepe himſelfe, as a Biſhop in his owne Dioceſſe, he hath nothing to doe with ordaining or electing of Miniſters in other Churches.

Argum. 1. Eleazer was made Prieſt in Aarons place, in the ſight of all the congregation: Ergo, Miniſters ought to be ordained publikely in the ſight of the congregation: not in corners or private places, as they uſed to doe in time of Poperie, yea it is recorded of Pope Iohn the thirteenth, that he ordained Deacons in a ſtable. And herein they offended manifeſtly againſt their owne rules. For their decree is, Nullus invitis detur Epiſcopus, ſed Clerici & plebis conſenſus & deſiderium requiratur: Let no Biſhop be thruſt upon any againſt their wills, but let the conſent and deſire of the people and Clergie be knowne. Numb. 20. 27. Ex Celeſtin. Pap. diſtin. 63. cap. cleri.

Argum. 2. We have the example of the Apoſtles: When Matthias was elected, the whole multitude was called together; the Deacons were choſen by the whole multitude: Ergo, the people had an intereſt in times paſt in the election of Church officers: and this example of the Apoſtles may ſafely and lawfully be followed of the Church, when time and place ſerveth. Acts 1. 14. 23. Acts 6. 5.

Bellarmine anſwereth: Firſt, the election of Deacons and Paſtors is not all one, neither is there the like reaſon. Anſw. They are both publike officers for the good of the Church; and therefore if the people have any intereſt in the one, why not in the other? Secondly, this was done by the grant and ſufferance of the Apoſtles. Anſw. Yea the Apoſtles called them together, but by the direction of the holy Ghoſt: as Acts 15. when the Church was aſſembled together upon another occaſion, it is ſaid, it ſeemed good to us and the holy Ghoſt. Againe, in the election, beſide impoſition of hands, prayer was uſed, which was a chiefe part of that action: but the people had their intereſt in publike prayers as being part of the congregation, and were not admitted thereunto at the pleaſure and will of men: wherefore it is not true, that it was a meere grant of men, that the people might be preſent at elections, but it ſo ſeemed good to the Apoſtles thereto directed by the ſpirit of God.

Now, whereas Bellarmine gave us this anſwer before, concerning the election of Deacons, that the reaſon is not alike betweene them and Paſtors: we doe oppoſe the election of Matthias into the, place of Iudas, no Deacon, but an Apoſtle, that it was done by the conſent and ſuffrage of the whole Church. Ergo, the conſent of the people is requiſite in the election of Miniſters.

Bellarmine anſwereth, Firſt, this was done not of neceſſitie, but by toleration from Peter.

Contra. 1. Three things are ſet downe, which were done in this action by the whole aſſemble. Verſ. 23. They preſented two; verſ. 24. They prayed: verſ. 26. They gave forth their lots; if any one of theſe was by permiſſion or ſufferance, then the reſt alſo: if they preſented by leave, then they prayed alſo by licence, which were very abſurd. Againe, it is too great boldneſſe for them to imagine a licence granted from Peter, where the Scripture maketh no mention of any ſuch thing; and to the Apoſtles here aſſembled, which in commiſſion were equall unto Peter.

Secondly, ſaith he, this was not ſo much an election, as a poſtulation or requeſt unto God, that one might be choſen in Iudas place.

Contra. There is both an election and a poſtulation: the election is of two, which were preſented out of the whole number; the poſtulation is, that God would declare his will concerning thoſe two, which of them ſhould have Iudas Apoſtleſhip.

Thirdly, ſaith he: one example doth not prove a thing to be de jure divino, by divine right: Bellarmine ibid.

Contra. Firſt, as one precept of Scripture as well proveth, as many precepts of the ſame thing: ſo alſo one act and example of the Apoſtles is of divine authoritie, as well as many in the ſame caſe: for their acts proceeding of the ſame ſpirit, are every one of the ſame power: unleſſe they will ſay, the Apoſtles erred in ſome of their acts, wherein they were directed by the ſpirit of God, as they were in this, and by the warrant of Scripture. Secondly, if one example out of Scripture prove not the lawfulneſſe of the act; then both Chriſts fact in whipping out of the Temple, and Pauls reprehenſion of Peter may be doubted of, being both but once done; and many other things beſide, whereof wee find but ſingle examples in Scripture: which were a great blaſphemie to ſay. Thirdly, yet to ſatisfie them to the full, wee have more than one example for the election of the people: as Acts 6. The Deacons were ſo elected: Acts 14,23. Elders ordained by election, in every citie.

Acts 14.23.

*Argum.*3. But as for the right of elections in the Pope, it hath no ſhew of reaſon: for be it that Peter had onely the right of conſecration amongſt the Apoſtles, you doe but flatter your ſelves in thinking, that whatſoever right was in Peter it muſt needs be in the Pope; for he is not Peters ſucceſſor, as we have ſhewed before at large. But we will hold you rather to this point: that all the Apoſtles had as full right to ordaine and conſecrate by laying on of hands, as Peter had. Looke Act. 6. 6. and *Act.*13.3. and Act. 14. 23. And if the Pope cannot have all that which Peter had, much leſſe can he be capable of that which Peter never had.

Acts 6.6.
Acts 13.3.
Acts 14.23.

*Argum.*4. Wee have had good experience in England, of the Popes great diſcretion and wiſdome, in collation of ſpirituall preferments, and ordaining of Biſhops. About anno. 1253. the Pope wrote a very imperious and commanding letter to the good Biſhop of Lincolne, Robert Groſthead, to beſtow a Canonſhip in Lincolne upon his nephew, a boy; for ſo the Popes call their baſtards: but hee ſuffered the repulſe for that time. In the time of Edward the third, and Richard the ſecond, a certificate was ſent up into the Chauncerie, of ſuch Eccleſiaſticall dignities, as were poſſeſſed by ſtrangers not inhabiting the land: and there were found above forty Deanries, Archdeaconries and Prebends, and thoſe not the worſt, ſome worth one hundred, ſome two hundred, nay ſome foure hundred pound by the yeere: the Archdeaconrie of Canterburie was vallued at ſeven hundred florences by the yeere, which a Cardinall of Rome had: And there were above a dozen Cardinals reſiant at Rome, that had at once the beſt and richeſt dignities in the land: beſide a great ſort of Italian Prieſts, and others, that were beneficed in England. By this it may appeare, what good choyce the Pope-holy father of Rome was wont to make in beſtowing Church dignities: and it were pitie but he ſhould have the ordering of them ſtill, he did ſo well diſpoſe of them when he had them.

Fox pag. 323.
Fox pag. 429.

5 Let Auguſtine ſpeake, who growing now old, was deſirous to know his ſucceſſor while he lived: he went not to Rome for the matter; but aſſembling the Church together at Hippo where hee was Biſhop; in the preſence of two Biſhops beſide, and ſeven Presbyters or Elders, Aſtante clero & frequenti populo, The whole Clergie, and a great ſort of people ſtanding by: Auguſtine himſelfe began firſt and ſaid, Preſbyterum Eradium mihi ſucceſſorem volo: I would have Eradius Presbyter to bee my ſucceſſor. Afterward, hearing how the people did approve and like of his motion, hee deſired them to ſubſcribe to that which was done: Rogo, ut dignemini geſtis ſubſcribere, qui poteſtis. And when they held their peace, he urged them further, ſaying, Hic mihi reſponſione veſtra opus eſt, de hac aſſenſione aliquid acclamate: I muſt needs have you make ſome anſwer, and teſtifie your conſent by your acclamation: A populo acclamatum eſt, fiat, fiat, dictum vicies quinquies: The people cried out, let it be as thou haſt ſaid, let it be, and this was repeated five and twentie times: *Auguſtin. Epiſt.*110. By this example it appeareth, though the people made not the choyce, yet their conſent was demaunded. And thus a Biſhop was ellected, and no word ſent up to Rome at all.

Neither was it the cuſtome of the Church ſo to doe in thoſe dayes: for whereas the Donatiſts objected againſt Cecilianus Biſhop of Carthage, becauſe he ſtayed not to be ordained of the chiefe Biſhop of Numidia, Ut princeps Epiſcopus á principe ordinaretur: That one chiefe Biſhop might be ordained of another: Auguſtine anſwered, that there was another cuſtome of the Catholike Church, Ut non Numidia, ſed propinquiores, Epiſcopi, Epiſcopum eccleſia Carthaginis ordinarent: That not the Biſhop of Numidia, but thoſe Biſhops that were neereſt at hand, ſhould ordaine the Biſhop of Carthage, &c, So we ſee, they were not only bold to chuſe an inferiour Biſhop, as was Eradius of Hippo, without the Popes conſent: but they would adventure to ordaine a chiefe Metrapolitane Biſhop even of Carthage, without the Popes leave.

Brevicul. collation 2. cap 5.

The teſtimonie of antiquitie herein is plentifull: Anacletus epiſtol. 2. Ejectionem ſummorum ſacerdotum ſibi Dominus reſervavit, licet electionem illorum bonis ſacerdotib. & ſpiritualib. populis conceſſiſſet: God hath reſerved to himſelfe the election or depoſition of the chief Prieſts, though hee hath granted the election of them to good Miniſters, and faithfull people.

Concil. Carthaginenſ. 3.can. 22. Nullus ordinetur Clericus non probatus vel Epiſcoporum examine, vel populi teſtimonio: Let none be ordained a Clergie man, unleſſe he be firſt ordained of the Biſhop, or approved by the teſtimony of the people.

*Leo epiſtol.*90 *cap.*1. Nulla ratio ſinit, ut inter epiſcopos habeantur, qui nec à Clericis ſunt electi, nec à plebib. ſunt expetiti. There is no reaſon, that they ſhould be counted Biſhops, which are neither choſen of the Clergie, nor deſired of the people.

Concil. Parrhiſienſ. can. 8. Nullus civib. invitis ordinetur epiſcopus, niſi quem populi & Clericorum electio pleniſſima quæſierit voluntate: Let no Biſhop be ordained againſt the will of the people or Citizens, but ſuch an one, as the Clergie ſhall chooſe, and the people deſire. By theſe teſtimonies of Councels, and of the Biſhops of Rome themſelves, and many more, which might be alleaged, it doth and may further appeare, that the intereſt of election is not in the Pope, but that in former times both the voyce of the Clergie, and aſſent of the people was required.

Wee have here alſo teſtimony of both the lawes: for although tumultuous, turbulent and meere popular elections are condemned, as Cod. lib. 9. tit.30.l.2. Leo the Emperour made a law, that hee which did tumultuouſly gather voyces of the multitude to obtaine any dignitie, ſhould both loſe the place he ſought, and be ſeverely puniſhed likewiſe: diſtinct.63.c.6. Non eſt permittendum, turbis, &c. The election of Clerks muſt not be left to the multitude. 1. decret. Gregor. lib. 1.tit.6.c.2. Electus ad clamorem populi,&c. He that is choſen by the confuſed noyſe of the people muſt not be confirmed: for the rude multitude may eaſily be corrupted.

Although then meere popular elections are not to bee approved: yet that both the whole Clergie and the people ought to give conſent in the election of their Paſtors, it is conſonant to both the lawes: Cod. lib. 1. tit. 6. leg.11. Arcadius, ad eccleſiam ſunt promovendi, &c. They muſt be preferred to the government of the Church, that are of the ſame citie, as (they no doubt) which are beſt knowne to the people.

Now the Canon law is moſt pregnant, not only requiring the preſence of the people, as reſpecting their deſire, but their conſent alſo and election. Diſtinct. 61.c.13. Nullus invitis detur Epiſcopus. No Biſhop ought to be thruſt upon a people againſt their will; the conſent of the Clergie and people muſt be required: Celeſtin. diſt.63.11. Gelaſius, Vniverſi in unum conſentiant: All muſt conſent to elect one. cap. 12. Stephan. Convocato Clero & populo: The Clergie and people being called together, let ſuch an one be choſen, &c. and many ſuch Canons there are beſide.

The holy Martyrs alſo conſent with us. Thomas Benet: If the Biſhop of Rome would doe all things after Gods ordinance, then would I beleeve him to bee a good Biſhop over his owne Dioces, and to have no further power. Fox pag.1039. col.2. Pag 948.2.7.

Maſter Philpot holy Martyr: By the word of God the Biſhop of Rome hath no more authoritie than the Biſhop of London hath, pag. 1811. *col.*1. He hath therefore no right to meddle in the election of other Biſhops, that belong not to his charge. Pag.1644.1.55.

Concerning the teſtimonie of other Churches, that the election of Biſhops and Paſtors hath no dependance of the Pope, ſee before Contr.4. queſt.7.err.56.in fine.

The ſecond part, concerning the election of the Pope.

The Papiſts.

THey ſay, that the ſureſt and ſafeſt way and ſimply the beſt, is that which is now uſed, to chuſe the Pope by, namely, by the Colledge of Cardinals: That whoſoever is by two parts of the ſaid Cardinals elected, is rightly the ſucceſſor of S. Peter, and the undoubted Pope of Rome. 74. Error.

Argum. 1. None can better judge who is fitteſt for the Papacie, than they which are the Popes Counſellors, and know the affaires of the Church: Ergo, the Cardinals the meeteſt men. Bellarm. lib. 1. *de Clericis, cap.*9.

Anſw. Firſt, you take that for granted, which wee inſtantly denie, that the Cardinals of Rome are alwayes the wiſeſt and moſt learned: as though a Cardinals hat doth bring with it ſuch abundance of vertue and learning: nay a title of a Cardinalſhip is ſooner obtained by favour than deſert, by maſſes of money, than weight of learning. And good reaſon, ſeeing that the Cardinals make a gaine of the Papacie: For an Aſſe loaden with gold ſhall ſooner enter into the Caſtle of Saint Angell, than any other comming with a cart load of bookes: they that read Cardinall Wolſeyes inſtructions ſent to Steven Gardiner at Rome, what great promiſes of money and preferment, may eaſily underſtand the diſpoſition of the Pope-holy electors of Rome: Seeing they make a gaine of the Pope, why ſhould he not ſet Cardinalſhips to ſale? For if Iacobus Archbiſhop of Mentz paied 27000. florences for his pall, what thinke you a Cardinals hat is to be valued at, which is a higher degree than either Biſhop or Archbiſhop? Fox pag 992. col. 1. Pag.904.2.50. edit. ult.

Wee ſay then, that there may be wiſer and more learned men of the Clergie in Rome than the Cardinals: and that the whole Clergie may better judge, than a few ambitious Cardinals, and are freer from corruption: and as concerning the affaires of the Church, Biſhops are like to know better, what appertaineth to the office of a Biſhop, than Prieſts and Deacons, as moſt of the Cardinals are. Fox pag.794. col. 1. Pag.728.2.60. edit. ult.

Secondly, how fit the Cardinals for the moſt part are, to manage the government of the univerſall Church, it may appeare by the notable choyce that the Popes have made of their aſſiſtants. Sixtus the fourth made Petrus Riarius his nephew a Cardinall, a young man of 26. yeeres: who in riot and wantonnes in two yeeres ſpent upon harlots two hundred thouſand crownes, and died miſerably, being waſted and conſumed by his inordinate luſt. Ex Baleo, Functio, & aliis.

Leo the tenth was made Cardinall, being but thirteene yeeres old, by Innocentius the eighth: Paulus the third made Alexander Farneſius his ſonne or baſtard Cardinall being a very youth, to whom he appointed a Tutor and governour. Iulius the third brought Innocentius a ſtripling his minion, that kept his Ape, into the order of the Cardinals, who when they ſaid unto him, What doe you ſee in this young man, worthie of this honour? he anſwered, What did you ſee in me, when you choſe mee to be Pope? Think you not now that theſe Cardinals, both for their youth, being void of experience, and for their lewd diſpoſition, being without any good inclination, were very meet and fit perſons to be employed in the weightie regiment of the Church?

Argum. 2. It appeareth by the continuance to bee the beſt: for it hath now endured foure hundred yeeres: and by the effect, for the Sea of Rome hath never beene freer from Schiſmes, than ſince this order was taken for the Popes election, Bellarm. cap. 9.

* That is, till a thouſand yeers after Chriſt, either all thoſe formes of election, or ſome of them. See this place excepted againſt and anſwered, Retect. pag. 15. Fox pag. 434.

Anſw. Firſt, how can it be of ſuch long continuance, ſeeing by your owne confeſſion, it exceedeth not foure hundred yeeres? Nay who will not grant, that the ancient order of election of the Biſhop of Rome by the whole Clergie, and conſent of the people of Rome, with the confirmation of the Emperour, which laſted * a thouſand yeeres, till this new device came in place, was farre more ancient and durable? Secondly, how well the Cardinals election hath kept the Sea of Rome from Schiſme, experience of former times teacheth us: In Pope Urbanus time the ſixth, there were two Popes many yeeres together; and one did ſo deadly purſue the other, that Pope Urbane at once cut off five of the Cardinals heads: might they not have great joy, thinke you, in chuſing ſuch a Pope? In the time of Pope Iohn the 23. there were three Popes at once. In the Councell of Baſile Pope Eugenius was depoſed, and counted an heretike. And yet for all this, the Cardinals are the onely preſervers and maintainers of the peace of the Apoſtolike Sea.

The Proteſtants.

Though it doe not greatly concerne us, what manner of election is uſed at Rome: (for unto us the election of the meaneſt Biſhop in the land is as much, yea and more, than the glorious enthronizing of the Pope:) yet it ſhall not be amiſſe briefly to ſhew, how theſe great antiquaries are become enemies of antiquitie, refuſing the ancient manner of election, which was uſed in Rome for one thouſand yeeres together, namely, that the Biſhop there ſhould be elected by the whole Clergie, with the conſent of the people and confirmation of the Emperour.

Argum. 1. It is a plaine caſe, that till the yeere 695. or thereabout, in all their elections, they waited for the authoritie of the chiefe Magiſtrate, the Emperour, or the Deputie of Italie. But then came in the conſtitution of Conſtantine the 4. that their elections ſhould be firme without the conſent of the Emperour. Yet for all this conſtitution, anno 810. Pope Adrian gave unto Carolus magnus full authoritie to elect the Biſhop of Rome: and anno 961. Leo the ninth made the ſame grant to Otho firſt Germane Emperour. This continued in force till Alexander the ſecond his time, who was elected firſt without the Emperours conſent, but afterward repenting of it, he proteſted openly, that he would bee no longer Pope, unleſſe he had the Emperors conſent; and thereupon he was depoſed by Hildebrand, and throwne into priſon. This was more than 1000. yeeres after Chriſt: ſince that time the Emperor hath beene excluded, and ſhut out from their elections: But all this while notwithſtanding, though the Emperours conſent ſometime was not neceſſary, yet the Clergie of Rome, and the people retained their ancient privilege ſtill. So we ſee by this new erection of the College of Cardinals, there is great injurie offered to three eſtates, the Emperour, the Clergie of Rome, the people.

Fox pag. 4, 5.

Argum. 2. This new forme of election hath not ſtood continually in force, ſince it was firſt founded. For in the councell of Conſtance, ſeſſ. 40. they proceed to the election of a new Pope, not ſtaying for the reſt of the Cardinalls, but appointing other electors in their roome. In the Councell of Baſile, the Duke of Savoy was elected Pope, by other electors than Cardinals: Nay there was but one Cardinall, namely, Arelatenſis, the reſt were Biſhops, Doctors, and others. And though they will ſay perchance that this Pope was choſen in a ſchiſme, for they hold the Councell of Baſile to be ſchiſmaticall: yet they cannot, neither doe denie, but that Pope Martin the 5. who was choſen at Conſtance, was rightfully Pope.

Gregorie the 7. was eſtabliſhed in the Papacie, and yet not one of the Cardinals conſented to his election. Iohn the 24. became a Pope after this manner: When the Cardinals were aſſembled together to chuſe them a Pope, they deſired him to nominate whom he would to be Pope, for they feared him: then he made this anſwer, Date mihi chlamydem Petri, & ego dabo pontificem futuro, Give mee S. Peters robe or cloak, and I will give it to him that ſhall be our Biſhop: and ſo he put it upon his owne ſhoulders, and ſaid, Behold your Pope: ex Balao, Functio, & aliis. Thus we ſee that the Popes and Papiſts themſelves have beene the chiefe overthrowers and perverters of this new forme of election by the Cardinals.

3 In Auguſtines time the reſt of the Biſhops of Italy neere unto Rome, ſhould ſeeme to have had ſome intereſt in the election of the Biſhop: Romana eccleſia Epiſcopum non ordinat Epiſcopus aliquis Metropolitanus, ſed de proximo Oſtienſis Epiſcopus: The Biſhop of Rome is not ordained by any Metropolitane, but by the Biſhop of Oſtia that is neere at hand: Brevicul. collation. 3. cap. 5.

Other monuments alſo of antiquitie wee have for this matter: When as Sylverius was made Pope without the Emperours conſent, Sacerdotes ſecundum morem antiquum non ſubſcripſerunt: The Clergie men, according to the old cuſtome, refuſed to ſubſcribe to his election: anno 537. ex pontifical.

Hadrianus 1. anno 796. gave unto Charles the Emperour, poteſtatem eligendi Papam, power to chuſe the Pope. Gregorie the 4. confirmed the ſame grant, anno 830. and refuſed to bee Pope, till the Emperour had confirmed his election.

Alexander the 2. who a little before in a Councell held at Mantua, had decreed that the Pope ſhould be choſen onely by the Cardinals; yet afterward repented him, and publikely in a Sermon profeſſed, that he would not continue in the Papacie without the Emperours licence. Gregorie the 7. the greateſt enemie to the Imperiall crowne and dignitie, who utterly excluded the Emperour from the election of the Pope, yet lying on his death-bed repented him, and deſired a Cardinall to goe to the Emperour, and crave pardon of him for all the wrongs he had done him: Sic Antoninus, Vincentius, de actis hujus Papa.

We have alſo evident teſtimonie herein of their owne law, that the Biſhop of Rome ought not to be elected without the conſent of the Emperour, the Clergie and people.

Firſt, for the right and authoritie of the Emperour in the election of the Pope: Hadriane, with the conſent of a great Synod, conſiſting of an 153. Biſhops and Abbots, aſſembled in the Palace of Laterane, did give unto Charles the Emperour, poteſtatem eligendi pontificem, power to chuſe the Biſhop of Rome, diſt.63.ca.22. So likewiſe Leo Biſhop of Rome in a Synod at Rome, with the conſent of the Clergie and people of Rome, did give the ſame authoritie to Otho the Emperour, diſt.63.cap.23.

And for the conſent of the whole Clergie, and not of the Cardinals onely, wee read, diſt.79.c.1. Nicholaus 2. in this manner, Si quis Apoſtolica ſedi, &c. If any man be inthronized into the Sea Apoſtolicall, without the generall conſent of the Cardinals, and of other religious Clerks, he is not Apoſtolicall, but an Apoſtata.

And thirdly, the intereſt of the people together with the Clergie in the election of the Pope, is warranted by their owne Canons: Cauſ. 7. quaſt. 1. ca. 5. Cornelius was choſen, de Clericorum pene omnium teſtimonio, de plebis qua tunc affuit ſuffragio, &c. by the teſtimonie of the Clergie, and the ſuffrage of the people that was preſent. And diſtinct.26.ca.1. there is a latter decree of Pope Nicholas, that beſide the choyce of the Cardinals, reliquus Clerus & populus ad conſenſum nova electionis accedat: the reſt of the Clergie & people ſhould give conſent to the new election. Thus we ſee that this new device of electing the pope by cardinals, is againſt the ancient practice of the church & their own canons.

Iohn Wicklif holy confeſſor, holdeth Cardinals to be one of the 12. diſciples of Antichriſt, Fox p.414. 2.20. and conſequently it will follow the election made by them to be of the ſame ſort. Seeing then we have both the teſtimonie & practice of Popes to the contrary, againſt this manner of election by Cardinals, and the truth alſo ſealed by holy men; we have no reaſon but to reject the ſame as an innovation.

And for further evidence: 1. The Greekes have no ſuch inſtance of electing their Patriarke, by any ſuch College of ſelected perſons, as the Pope is choſen by Cardinals: but as Barlaam ſaith, everie one of the Patriarkes is appointed by his owne Biſhops.

ἐψηφίζετο ὑπὸ τῶν οἰκείων ἐπισκόπων.

2 So alſo the South Church had this cuſtome of old: Epiſcopum ab omnibus qui ſunt in Provincia Epiſcopis ordinari, That the Biſhop ſhould bee ordained of all the Biſhops in the Province: So was it decreed in the 4. Canon of the firſt Nicene: Whereunto with the reſt of the acts of that Synod, Alexander Patriarke of Alexandria ſubſcribed. And at this day, the Patriarke of Æthiopia is elected by the Æthiopian Monkes at Jeruſalem, and is confirmed by the Patriarke of Alexandria. Zaga Zabo, in his confeſſion of the Ethiopike faith.

Damianus a Goes de morib. Æthiop.

3 The reformed Churches ſet downe one manner of election of all Miniſters and Paſtors: That they ought to be called to that function by the lawfull election of the Church, &c. And after the order and manner ſet downe in the word of God. Confeſſ. of Belgia, artic. 30. The Miniſters muſt be choſen religiouſly by the Church, or of thoſe which are appointed thereunto, by the Church. Confeſſion of Helvetia c.18. But the election of the Pope is by uſurpation of the Cardinals, not any lawfull deputation by the Church, or ordinance of God.

Harmon. ſect. 11. p 363.

Ibid. p. 340.

4 As their Victoria confeſſeth, that the election of the Pope as it is now uſed, is not jure divino, by divine right, becauſe ordo Cardinalium non eſt de jure divino, The order of the Cardinals, that doe elect the Pope, is not by divine right or inſtitution. Polydore Virgil ſheweth the originall of the Cardinals: how Marcellus firſt appointed 25. Cardinals or principall Prieſts, which ſhould have the chiefe care of baptizing infants, & burying the dead: afterward when Phocas obtained of the Emperour to have prerogative over other Biſhops, then he began to advance his College and Senate of Cardinals, this was about anno 605. Of ancient time then this election of the Pope by his Cardinals was not in uſe. Eſpenceus a Popiſh Biſhop ſheweth what reckoning is to be made of this new office of Cardinals, thus confeſſing of himſelfe, that when Paulus the 4. did purpoſe to make him one of the College of Cardinals: I gave immortall thanks (ſaith he) unto God, Quod mihi tantum, non dicam boni, ſed mali non permiſit: becauſe he permitted not (I ſay not ſo great good, but) ſo great evill to fall upon me, for what ſhould I doe at Rome? mentiri neſcio, I cannot lie, &c.

The third Queſtion, concerning degrees and orders of Eccleſiaſticall Miniſters.

THis queſtion hath three parts: firſt, of the ſeven degrees of Popiſh Prieſthood. Secondly, of the difference and diſtinction of Biſhops and other Miniſters. Thirdly, of the inſtitution of Cardinals, a new degree of the Popiſh Clergie.

The firſt part of the ſeven degrees or orders Eccleſiaſticall.

The Papiſts.

17 Errour

THough they have divers degrees of dignitie in the Church, as Popes, Cardinals, Patriarkes, Primates, and ſuch like: yet they make but ſeven Eccleſiaſticall orders, which are conferred ſolemnly by certaine rights and ceremonies by their Biſhops: And they are theſe, Oſtiarii, doore-keepers, Exorciſtæ, Exorciſts, Lectores, Readers, Acolythi, Attenders, Subdiaconi, Subdeacons, Diaconi, Deacons, and the higheſt degree, Sacerdotes, Prieſts; unto the which all the other are but riſes and ſteps. All theſe they maintaine to be Eccleſiaſticall orders, and to be retained in the Church, *Bellarm.cap.*11. *Rhemiſt.1.Tim.3.ſect.*7.

They have no proofe nor warrant out of Scripture for theſe frivolous orders, but onely a ſhew of antiquitie, as they alleage certaine Canons out of the fourth Councell of Carthage, where ſuch offices are reckoned up, Rhemiſt.ibid.

Anſwer. Firſt, to let paſſe this, that the Councell may be ſuſpected for the credit thereof, ſeeming wholly to be patched out of the Popes decrees: And whereas Auguſtine with other is ſaid to have ſubſcribed to this Councell, therein appeareth ſome forgerie: for *Can.*104. it was thus decreed, Crimine adulterii notabuntur,&c. They are touched with the crime of adulterie, that having devoted themſelves unto God, doe afterward runne to ſecular mariage. Yet Auguſtine is of another judgement, Non ipſæ nuptiæ talium damnandæ judicantur: The Marriages of ſuch we condemne not or diſanull, but their fraudulent purpoſe, *de Bon. viduitat.cap.*9. But he that ſaith, ſuch are adulterers, diſanulleth their marriage: therefore Auguſtine would not againſt his owne judgement have agreed to this Canon. Secondly, wee denie not but they had ſuch offices, as Readers, to read the text of the Scriptures; Exorciſts to caſt out devils, which was an extraordinarie gift for the time; Acoluthiſts, young men appointed to attend upon the Biſhop for their better inſtruction; Doore-keepers that kept the entrie of the Church, that no heathen perſon or excommunicate ſhould enter. But theſe were both divers offices than are now appointed fos them in the Popiſh Church: for they make them now, all or the moſt, miniſters and ſervitors for the idolatrous ſervice of the Maſſe, which in thoſe dayes was not heard of: neither though there were ſuch offices and ſervices in the Church, were they made orders and degrees of the Miniſterie. Thirdly, they had other offices beſide, which now are not in uſe, no not amongſt the Papiſts: for they had alſo ſingers, labourers, confeſſors, diggers or Sextons. Concil. Carthag. 4. *can.*12. there is an eighth degree of Pſalmiſts added. *Concil.1.ſub Silveſtro* 1. there is another order found out, which are there called cuſtodes Martyrum, keepers of the Martyrs. There were alſo foſſarii, diggers and labourers, as appeareth in the Epiſtle of Ignatius. So that if you will make all thoſe offices uſed in time paſt in the Church, ſo many orders of the miniſterie, you muſt make ten or eleven; more than you doe acknowledge, or uſe in your Church.

The Proteſtants.

THe queſtion is not betweene us and our adverſaries in this place, concerning the titles and dignities annexed to the Miniſterie, as of Biſhops, Archdeacons, Deacons, Provoſts, but of the ſeverall orders of the Miniſterie: for Biſhops and other Miniſters doe not differ in order, but in office of government. They hold that there are ſeven ſeverall ſuch orders, which have their ſeverall rites of conſecration, and peculiar offices in the Chutch allotted them. But we content our ſelves with thoſe orders onely and degrees as neceſſarie, which the holy Scripture hath commended.

Ephеſ.4.11.

*Argum.*1. As for the names and offices of Subdeacons, Readers, Exorciſts, Acolythi, Doore-keepers, we have no ſuch warrant out of the Scripture, to make them orders of the Church: and therefore we condemne them. All neceſſary orders for the edyfying and building of the Church, the Scripture hath preſcribed us, *Epheſ.*4.11. there are all offices ſet downe needfull for the doctrine, inſtruction and edifying of the Church, *Fulk.Epheſ.4.ſect.*4. Wherefore away with theſe Popiſh orders invented by men. But as for other offices and ſervices, which ſhall be thought meet for the affaires and buſineſſe of the Church, they may be retained and kept, but not as new orders of the Miniſterie.

*Argum.*2. Theſe offices are firſt Idolatrous, as they are now uſed among the Papiſts: for the Deacons, Subdeacons, Acolythi, were to attend upon the Prieſt at Maſſe. Secondly, ſome of their offices were ridiculous; as to ſweepe the Church, to drive out dogs, and to hold a flye-flap of Peacocks feathers, to keepe the flyes from falling into the Communion cup. Thirdly, they were diſtinguiſhed, by ridiculous ornaments and attire, which were proper to every one of them: as it ſhall appeare now in their deſcription.

Clemens conſtitut.lib.8. cap.15.

From the Prieſt when he was degraded, they tooke the Chalice, patine, and hoſt, that hee ſhould have no power any more to offer ſacrifice: they ſcraped his nailes with a peece of glaſſe, and ſo tooke away his anointing: and laſtly, they tooke away his prieſtly ornaments, the Cheſile, which ſignified charitie; the Stole, that repreſented the ſigne of our Lord. From the Deacons in their degradation, they tooke firſt the booke of the Goſpels, and ſo all power to read the Goſpels: Then they tooke away his Dalmatike, a ſigne of his Leviticall office, and the white Stole behind his back that ſignified innocencie.

From the Subdeacon they tooke the booke of the Epiſtles, that he ſhould have no more power to read them ; alſo the emptie Chalice, and Subdeacons veſture : his office was to ſerve and miniſter to the Deacons at the Altar.

The Acolythi did light the candles in the Church, and brought wine and water to the Altar in Pitchers and Bottles : and in his degradation there was taken from him, an emptie flagon or bottle, and a candleſtick, with a wax candle put out.

The order of exorciſme was taken away, by depriving him from power to read in the booke of Exorciſmes.

From the Reader they tooke the booke of Church-lectures or leſſons. Laſt of all, from the Doore-keeper was taken the keyes of the Church : And ſo was hee deprived of all power to open or ſhut the Church doores, and to ring the bels, *Ex Fox pag.*2134. Pag 1932.

Thus we ſee, how much theſe offices are degenerate from the ancient uſe: Firſt, they are all but Miniſters and attendants for the abominable ſacrifice of the Maſſe, which in thoſe dayes was not knowne: for the Acolythus or waiter waiteth upon the Subdeacon, the Subdeacon upon the Deacon, and all of them upon the Prieſt at Maſſe. Secondly, whereas then the Exorciſts had a peculiar grace of God to caſt out devils : their Exorciſts doe but read certaine exorciſmes in bookes : their Readers only read the text of Scripture : now they read the Legends of Popiſh Saints. Then in time of perſecution, when Chriſtians aſſembled in the night, the waiters had the charge to light the candles : but now they doe light them at noone day.

Argum. 3, Theſe offices have not beene in uſe theſe many yeeres among the Papiſts themſelves : for many times the Sexton or his boy, doe execute the charge both of Acolythiſts, Oſtiaries, and Readers, yea of Deacons and Subdeacons alſo, when the Prieſt with his boy can diſpatch a Maſſe. Neither are theſe orders retained amongſt them, for any ſpeciall ſervice or office, but onely as preparatories, and ſteps and degrees to the Prieſthood, Fulk. annot. 1 Timoth. 2. ſect. 7

Let us now conſult with antiquitie : Damaſus ſometime Biſhop of Rome, thus ſaith : Non amplius, quàm duos ordines, &c. Wee know but two orders to have beene among the Diſciples of our Lord : that is, 12. Apoſtles, and 70. Diſciples, Epiſtol. 4. And it followeth, Vnde iſte tertius proceſſerit, ignoramus : From whence this third order hath proceeded, we know not. And that which is brought in without reaſon, muſt be rooted out, diſtinct. 68. cap. 5. If Damaſus, miſliked of a third order, much more of ſix or ſeven new orders : and theſe being invented without any cauſe or reaſon, by his rule muſt be extirped and rooted out.

And what is to bee thought of theſe Popiſh degrees, the Councell of Colen adviſeth us, Part. 3. cap. 31. Iam eo ventum eſt, ut 4. illi minores ordines Oſtiarii, Exorciſtæ, Pſalmiſtæ, Lectores, præter nomen nihil in eccleſia retinerent, illorumque loco tennes aliquot homines laici per eccleſiæ prælatos minoris compendii gratia ſubrogantur : It is now come to paſſe, that the foure leſſe orders of Doore-keepers, Exorciſts, Pſalmiſts, Readers, beſide their name, have no other office in the Church, and in their ſtead ſome ſilly poore fellowes of the lay ſort are appointed by the Prelates, by a more compendious way, &c. How then call you thoſe orders, which have a name without office, and whereof the lay ſort are capable, as it is now practiſed in Poperie ?

Let us further ſee how theſe ſeven Popiſh orders may ſtand by their law : Cod. lib. 1. tit. 5. l. 3. Honorius. In eccleſia non debet eſſe major numerus, &c. There muſt not be a greater number in the Church, than the goods thereof or reveneweſ will ſuffice to maintaine, &c. but few Churches are able to maintaine ſo many orders, nay ſome Churches have not left ſo much, as to keepe one poore Vicar; how then ſhould ſo many unneceſſary orders be maintained ?

And concerning their owne Canons, beſide the decree of Damaſus, alleaged before, diſt. 68. c. 5. the like decree hath Innocent. 3. decret. Gregor. lib. 1. tit. 14. ca. 9. Sacros ordines dicimus diaconatum & preſbyteratum, &c. Sacred orders we call Deacons and Presbyters, for theſe two the Primitive Church is found onely to have had : and in the ſame place he denieth Subdeacons to be numbred amongſt the ſacred orders. The very like words hath the Maſter of Sentences, lib. 4. diſt. 24. I. That the Primitive Church had but two orders : & de his ſolis præceptum Apoſtoli habemus : and the Apoſtle giveth charge concerning no more, &c.

Of Doore-keepers.

Now concerning theſe orders in particular : Firſt, that the office of Doore-keepers is not now neceſſary, but had then ſome uſe, when as Jewes and Gentiles dwelt amongſt Chriſtians : ſee the judgement of your owne writer, Eſpenc. 1 Tim. p. 226. g. And in the ſame place he ſheweth out of Chryſoſtome, how it belonged to the office of the Deacon, to admit into the Church, and ſhut out. Alſo your owne Maſter of Sentences ſaith, that Chriſt tooke this office upon him, when he whipped the buyers and ſellers out of the temple, 1. and that Chriſt when he ſaid, I am the doore, ſhewed himſelfe to be the Doore-keeper, lib. 4. diſt. 24. f. But if Chriſt were a Doore-keeper, what reaſon have they to make it the leaſt office in the Church ?

Readers.

The ſecond degree is of Readers ; which is not a diſtinct office in the Church : for in ſome places it was the office of the Deacon, in ſome of the Miniſter, in ſome it belonged to the Biſhop to read the Scriptures, eſpecially on Feſtivall daies, Hiſtor. Tripart. lib. 9. cap. 39. And Chriſt, whom your Maſter ſaith did fulfill the office of a Reader in his owne perſon, after he had read in the booke, did interpret and expound it : ſo that to read Scripture and expound it, doth belong to the ſame office. And though we deny not, but that it is lawfull and many times convenient, for one to read, and another Act.13.15. to preach, as S. Paul did, Acts. 13. 15. yet for this cauſe they need not bring in a new office into the Church of onely Readers.

Exorciſts. The third degree is of Exorciſts: whoſe office was to exorcize infants in baptiſme, that were vexed of evill ſpirits, by adjuring them. Firſt, we ſay that this miraculous gift is now ceaſed in the Church, and the bare name and title thereof onely remaineth. Secondly, this office of exorcizing, S. Chryſoſtome ſaith belonged unto Deacons: ſic Eſpenc. 1 Timoth. p. 227. i. ſo that a ſpeciall office needed not for that ſervice. Thirdly, and Origen ſaith, Iudaicum eſt adjurare dæmonia: It was a cuſtome among the Jewes to adjure ſpirits, Tract. 35. in Matth. And your owne gloſſe ſaith, that Salomon found out a certaine kind of exorcizing, *diſtinct.*21.*c.*1. then can it not be an office of the Goſpell. Fourthly, Iſidore ſaith, it belonged to Exorciſts to looke to the fabrike and ruines of the Church, *de Eccleſiaſt. offic. cap.*13. So that they themſelves are uncertaine what the office of Exorciſts ſhould be.

Acolythites. The fourth degree is of Acolythites, which are interpreted followers: for ſo the Greeke word ἀκόλουθος, ſignifieth, whoſe office (they ſay) is to attend upon the lampes or lights of the Church. Firſt, whereas your Maſter ſaith, that they in the old Teſtament did ſhew a forme of this office, that dreſſed the lampes in the Temple, *lib.*4.*diſt.*24.f. then can it not be a calling in the new Teſtament, being inſtituted in the old. Secondly, he ſaith in the ſame that Chriſt did beare this office, where he ſaith, I am the light of the world: by the ſame reaſon the Apoſtles alſo were Acolythi, to whom Chriſt ſaid, you are the light of the world. Who ſeeth not what ſimple grounds they have of their ſuperſtitious and ſuperfluous offices? Thirdly, theſe Acolythi, or Miniſters, or attendants. were ſuch as waited upon the Biſhop in his domeſticall offices, both for greater honour, and to avoide further ſuſpition, they being alwayes witneſſes of the Biſhops acts: which function of the Acolythi, Bellarmine ſaith, that Calvin found out of his owne braine: yet is the ſame alleaged by, Eſpenc. out of the Canons, 1.Timoth. p. 215. b.

Subdeacons. Fifthly, concerning the office of Subdeacons: firſt it is certaine, that they were imployed as carriers of letters under the Biſhops, by whom they ſent their epiſtles and meſſages, as Eſpenc. ſheweth out of S. Cyprian. Comment. in 1. *Timoth. p.*214.a. But this was no Eccleſiaſticall function, and therefore they were no Eccleſiaſticall officers. Secondly, I have ſhewed before out of the decree of Innocentius, that Subdeacons in times paſt were not counted amongſt the ſacred orders.

Thus we ſee what ſmall warrant the Church of Rome hath for theſe five ſuperfluous orders: as for the other degrees of Deacons and Miniſters, we refuſe them not, though we deny them to have any ſuch office to ſerve at the Maſſe Altar: whereof I ſhall have occaſion to ſpeake afterward in the Controverſie as touching the Sacrament of Order: and therefore of Purpoſe I doe forbeare in this place.

What the holy Martyrs, their opinion was of theſe Popiſh orders, and their ridiculous apparell, it appeareth by Doctor Taylor holy Martyr, who when the Biſhop came to degrade him, utterly refuſed to put on the Popiſh prieſtly garments, calling them apiſh toyes, and toying trumperie, fit for boyes to Pag.1385.1.4. laugh at, *Fox pag.*1324 *col.*1.

Biſhop Ridley Martyr, in the like caſe alſo refuſed, calling the aforeſaid veſtures, whereby the Po-
Pag 1604.1.76. piſh orders are diſtinguiſhed, fooliſh and abominable, and too fond for a vice in a play. pag. 1767. col. 2.

Biſhop Cranmer alſo, as Boner was buſie in degrading him from the higheſt degree to the loweſt, Pag.1709 2.56. he mildly ſaid, All this needed not, I had my ſelfe done with this geare long agoe, pag. 1883. col. 2. Wherefore together with theſe holy Martyrs, we condemne theſe deviſed degrees of Popiſh orders, with their fooliſh appurtenances, as ſuperſtitious, ſuperfluous, and unneceſſarie.

Now for further evidence. 1. Nilus a Greeke Archbiſhop citeth Dyoniſius, who divideth all the

Lib. 2. de primat.

2 David Emperour of Æthiopia in the end of his Epiſtle written to Iohn the 3. King of Portugall, anno 1524. ſaluteth the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Prieſts, and Deacons, and nameth no other Eccleſiaſticall orders. Zaga Zabo an Æthiopike Biſhop, nameth Prieſts, Deacons, and Subdeacons among them, and addeth no more: in the confeſſion of the Æthiopike faith.

3 Confeſſion of Helvetia the latter *c.*18. The Church Miniſters, that now are, may be called Biſhops, Elders, Paſtors, Doctors: but in proceſſe of time, there were many moe names of Miniſters brought into the Church, for ſome were created Patriarkes, &c. Archprieſts, Deacons, Subdeacons, Acoluthes, Exorciſts, Quiriſters, Porters, and I know not what a rabble beſide, Cardinals Provoſts, Priors, Abbots, &c. but touching all theſe, we paſſe not a ruſh, what they have beene in time paſt, or what they are now: it is ſufficient for us, that for as much as concerneth miniſters, wee have the doctrine of the Apoſtle, &c.

4 The judgement of ſome of the Romane Church, we have ſeene before as of Damaſus, the Councell of Colen. Eſpenceus. See alſo further afterward. Error.77. in the end.

The ſecond part, of the difference of Biſhops and other Miniſters.

The Papiſts.

WE differ from them in two points: Firſt, they ſay, that Biſhops are not onely in a higher degree of ſuperioritie to other Miniſters, but they are as Princes of the Clergie, and other Miniſters as ſubjects, and in all things to be commanded by them. Secondly, they affirme that Biſhops are onely properly Paſtors, and that to them onely it doth appertaine to preach, and that other Miniſters have no authority without their licence or conſent, to preach at all, and that not principally or chiefly, but ſoly and wholly to them appertaineth the right of conſecrating and giving orders. *Bellarm.lib.*1. de Clericis,c.13.14. 78.Error.

For the firſt, for the princely authoritie of Biſhops, whom they would have obeyed in all things; they wreſt theſe and ſuch like places of Scripture, as 2 Cor. 1.9. I write unto you, to know whether you will be obedient in all things: Ergo, they muſt be abſolutely obeyed. 2 Cor.1.9.

Anſ. The Apoſtle challengeth only obedience in ſuch things as he ſhould command agreeable to Gods word: For if I my ſelfe (ſaith he) preach another Goſpell, hold me accurſed, *Gal.*1.Fulk.annot. 1 Cor.2.ſect.3.

Argum.2. Againſt an Elder receive no accuſation under two or three witneſſes, 1 Timoth.5.19. Ergo, the authoritie of Biſhops is abſolute and princelike: Videmus Epiſcopum judicem eſſe presbyterorum, proinde verum principem: Wee ſee the Biſhop is the Judge of the Elders: Ergo, a prince over them, Bellarm.cap.14. 1 Tim.5.19.

Anſw. Firſt, it followeth not, Biſhops have juriſdiction and authoritie over other Miniſters: Ergo, they are princes over them. Can there be no preeminence and ſuperioritie in the Church, but it muſt needs be princelike? Is every Judge a prince over thoſe which are brought before him to be judged? 2.Timothie had no ſuch princelike authoritie, for here it is reſtrained and limited, a rule is ſet downe by the Apoſtle which he muſt obſerve: Ergo, his authoritie was not abſolute. Thirdly, S. Paul was ſo farre off from making Timothie a prince in the Church at Epheſus, that he would rather have him not to rebuke, but to exhort the Elders as fathers, the younger men as brethren; chap.5.1. Where now is his princely authoritie become, whereas he maketh his ſubjects (as our adverſaries call inferiour Miniſters) his fathers and brethren? 1 Tim.5.1.

For the ſecond, they reaſon thus: the Apoſtles properly had the preaching of the word committed unto them, Acts.6. For other were choſen to attend upon tables: the Apoſtles alſo only had the right of laying on of hands. Acts 14.23. Ergo, It is proper onely to Biſhops to preach, and to ordaine, who are the Apoſtles ſucceſſors: Bellarm.cap.13.& 14. Act.6.2.

Anſw. Firſt, Bellarmine denieth that Biſhops doe properly ſucceed the Apoſtles, de pontifice lib. 4.25. becauſe he would magnifie the Pope his ghoſtly father above all Biſhops: but now forgetting himſelfe, he ſaith, Epiſcopi propriè ſuccedunt Apoſtolis, Biſhops doe properly ſucceed the Apoſtles, chap. 14. and ſo by this reaſon everie Biſhop hath as full authoritie as the Pope. Secondly, every godly and faithfull Biſhop is a ſucceſſor to the Apoſtles, we denie it not, and ſo are all faithfull and godly Paſtors and Miniſters: for in reſpect of their extraordinarie calling, miraculous gifts and Apoſtleſhip, the Apoſtles have properly no ſucceſſors, as Maſter Benbridge Martyr ſaith, that he beleeved not Biſhops to be the ſucceſſors of the Apoſtles, for that they bee not called as they were, nor have that grace: Fox pag. 2046. artic.6. That therefore which the Apoſtles were eſpecially appointed unto, is the thing wherein the Apoſtles were properly ſucceeded; but that was the preaching of the Goſpell: As Saint Paul ſaith, hee was ſent to preach, not to baptize, 1 Corinthians 1. 17. This alſo the Prophet Eſay ſheweth, where hee ſaith in the name of the Lord: My words, which I have put in thy mouth, ſhall not depart out of thy mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy ſeed, nor of thy ſeeds ſeed: Eſay 59.verſe 21. The promiſe of ſucceſſion, wee ſee, is in the preaching of the word, which appertaineth as well to other Paſtors and Miniſters, as unto Biſhops, as afterward ſhall bee declared. Againe, ſeeing in the Apoſtles time Epiſcopus, and Presbyter, a Biſhop, and a Prieſt, were neither in name nor office diſtinguiſhed, as Maſter Lambert Martyr proveth by that place of Saint Paul, Tit.1. where the Apoſtle calleth them Biſhops, verſ.7. whom before verſ.5. he had named Presbyters, Prieſts, or Elders. To this agreeth the Councell, Aquiſgranenſ. cap.8. collecting thus out of this place: Paulus Apoſtolus Presbyteros, ut vere ſacerdotes, ſub nomine Epiſcoporum adſeverat: Paul the Apoſtle doth affirme the Elders or Presbyters to be true Prieſts or Paſtors under the name of Biſhops. It followeth then, that either the Apoſtles aſſigned no ſucceſſion while they lived, neither appointed their ſucceſſors, or that indifferently all faithfull Paſtors and Preachers of the Apoſtolike faith are the Apoſtles ſucceſſors.

Tit.1.5 7.

Thirdly, at that time when the Deacons were elected, the congregation was at Jeruſalem, neither were there as yet any other Paſtors ordained; and therefore the Apoſtles onely attended upon preaching of the word: but afterward when they had ordained Paſtors in other Churches, to them alſo fully was committed the word of reconciliation, Epheſ.4.11. Chriſt hath given ſome to be Apoſtles, Epheſ.4.11.

ſome Prophets, ſome Paſtors and Teachers: So that Paſtors and Teachers, though ordained firſt by the Apoſtles, yet had their calling of God: and together in their calling authoritie and commiſſion to preach; neither being once ordained, needed they to expect any further licence from the Apoſtles.

Act.13.4.

And as for the right of ordaining and impoſition of hands, though it were chiefly in the Apoſtles, yet the Paſtors and Elders together with them laid on their hands, *Act.*13.4. Yea the Rhemiſts confeſſe as much, that when a Prieſt is to be ordered, the reſt of the Prieſts together with the Biſhop doe lay on their hands, Annotat. 1 *Tim.*4.11. What doth this elſe ſignifie, but that they have ſome intereſt in ordaining together with the Biſhop?

The Proteſtants.

First, though we doe admit, that for avoyding of Schiſme, the Church hath thought it meet, there ſhould be difference in degree, and a ſuperioritie among Miniſters, yet your princely dominion which you doe urge, in no wiſe muſt be admitted.

Luk.22.25.

*Argum.*1. It is contrarie to the rule of Chriſt, Luk. 22. 25. The Kings of the nations are Lords over them, and they that have authoritie over them are called Benefactors. Here our Saviour forbiddeth, that there ſhould be any ſuch princelike and pompous preeminence among eccleſiaſticall perſons, as there is among ſecular and civill governours. A ſuperioritie may be granted, but not as the Prince is over his ſubjects: it was ſo in time of poperie, that the people were halfe ſubjects to the Prince, and halfe ſubjects to their ſpirituall governours: But though wee acknowledge other eccleſiaſticall fathers and paſtors, yet we are ſubjects onely to our Prince.

1 Pet.5.3.

Argum. 2. S. Peter alſo is flat againſt this princely rule and dominion, Feed the flock, (ſaith hee) not as Lords over Gods heritage, but that you may be enſamples. But are not they, I pray you, Lords over the flock, that challenge to be Princes?

Let us ſee what antiquitie ſaith: Concil. Carthag. 4. can. 34. Epiſcopus in quolibet loco ſedens, ſtare presbyterum non patiatur: Whereſoever the Biſhop ſitteth, he muſt not ſuffer a ſimple prieſt to ſtand before him: and this canon is confirmed in the decrees: diſtinct. 95. c. 9. Againe can. 35. Epiſcopus in conſeſſu presbyterorum ſublimior ſedeat, intra domum verò collegam presbyterorum ſe eſſe cognoſcat: The Biſhop in the aſſemblie of Prieſts, ought to ſit in the higheſt place; but within the houſe let him know that he is but their fellow, &c. This canon alſo is ratified in the decrees, *diſt.*95.*c.*10. Theſe ancient Canons, as they gave unto Biſhops over their brethren ſome preeminence to avoid confuſion, ſo they allow them not a princely or lordly authoritie, to ſtay their ambition. See alſo for this point, your owne decrees: diſtinct. 95. *c.*7. Epiſcopi ſacerdotes eſſe noverint, &c. Let Biſhops know, that they are Miniſters, not Lords; let them honour their Clergie, as the Clergie, that they againe may bee honoured of them, as Biſhops. And againe, Cauſ. 8. qu. 1. cap. 20. Illud inferendum eſt, &c. This may be alleaged againſt thoſe, Qui de Epiſcopatu intumeſcunt, which doe ſwell with pride becauſe they are Biſhops, thinking that they have gotten not a miniſteriall, but an imperiall office, &c.

Fox pag.454.

Secondly, concerning the power of preaching, we affirme, that every Paſtor once ordained, hath ſufficient authoritie to preach in his owne flocke and charge, as Iohn Huſſe notably proved to their face, out of a certaine gloſſe in the fifth booke of the decretals, that when as the Biſhop ordaineth any prieſt, he giveth him alſo therewithall authoritie to preach. We denie not, but when there is juſt occaſion, this authoritie may be reſtrained by the Church governours, and ſo alſo may an evill Miniſter be ſuſpended from his whole miniſterie. But the power before ſpoken of, he hath at his firſt receiving of orders: we thus ſhew it.

Whatſoever belongeth to the office of a Miniſter ſet over a flocke or charge, hee receiveth the power thereof when he is ordained: But to preach the word, belongeth to the office of ſuch: for preaching is properly the feeding of the people.

But ſee the abſurditie of the Papiſts: they ſay it is not proper to the Prieſthood to preach, but onely to have power to ſacrifice the body of Chriſt: yet it is proper to the Biſhop, ſay they, to preach. We anſwer: Firſt, then the Biſhop is properly the paſtor of every flocke and congregation in his dioceſſe, for he that properly feedeth, is properly the Paſtor: And he that is properly the Paſtor, hath the charge of ſoules properly; yea more than hath the particular Paſtor: for he is improperly their Paſtor, but as it were the Biſhops ſubſtitute and Vicar. But what Biſhop in the world is able to beare ſo great a burthen, to have the eſpeciall and proper charge of all the ſoules in his dioceſſe? It is not to be denied, but hee hath a charge of their ſoules, as a Chriſtian Prince hath in ſome reſpect of his ſubjects: but to ſay, he is the proper Paſtor, and hath the proper and principall charge of ſoules in teaching and feeding of them (for the queſtion is now of preaching, not of governing) it is too heavy a charge. Secondly, our Rhemiſts tell us another tale, that many that are not able to preach, are meet enough to be Biſhops, 1 *Tim.*5.*ſect.*13. Ergo, it is not proper to Biſhops neither to preach. I pray you then, for whom is it proper? if neither for Biſhops nor inferiour paſtors, then for none. Thirdly, they make but ſeven orders of Eccleſiaſticall Miniſters, and the prieſthood is the chiefe: for a Biſhop and a Prieſt make but one order, as Bellarmine confeſſeth, chapter 11. But to none of all theſe orders it is proper to preach: for ſeeing it is not proper to the prieſt, none of the inferiour orders can challenge it. See then what goodly orders theſe are, which leave the very chiefe part of the miniſterie undone, which is the preaching of the word. I thinke their meaning is, that this preaching is not ſo neceſſary a duty, but may bee well ſpared in the Church.

Argum. 2. That which a man is bound to doe under paine of the curſe of God, that hee may lawfully performe in due order without the leave of men: but a woe is laid upon them that preach not the Goſpell, where they are bound, 1 Corinthians 9. 16. Ergo. Argument. Wicliffi.

1 Cor.9.16.
Fox pag.453.

*Argum.*3. A man is bound to give corporall almes to the poore, the needy, the hungrie, the thirſtie, neither is he to crave leave of any: Ergo, much more to teach the ignorant, to comfort the weake, and doe other duties appertaining to his charge. Argum. Wicliffi.

To theſe agree the decrees of former times: Concil. Aquiſgranenſ. cap. 8. ex Iſidor. Presbyteris, ſicut epiſcopis, diſpenſatio myſteriorum Dei commiſſa eſt; præſunt enim Eccleſia Chriſti, & in confectione dominici ſanguinis, &c. conſortes cum epiſcopis ſunt, ſimiliter & in doctrina populorum, & officio prædicandi, &c. Unto Prieſts, as well as to Biſhops, is committed the diſpenſation of Gods myſteries, for they are ſet over the Church of God, and are partakers with Biſhops, both in the confection of the ſacrament of Chriſts blood, &c. and in the teaching of the people, and office of preaching.

*Conſtantinop.*8. *can.*8.9. It was decreed thus, that whereas Photius the ſchiſmaticall Biſhop of Conſtantinople, who did uſurpe that Sea, did extort writings from the Clergie, under their owne hands, wherein they promiſed to cleave to him, and he againe gave them writings, authorizing them thereby to preach: the councell thereupon thus determined, Vt liceat omnibus idoneis docere libere ſine facultate per chirographas, That it ſhould bee lawfull for all that were fit, to preach without licence under hand-writing.

Likewiſe in their owne decrees, *diſtinct.*95.*c.*6. wee thus reade: Nemo hinc Epiſcoporum iraſcatur, &c. Let not the Biſhops from henceforth be offended, if the Presbyters or Miniſters exhort the people, if they preach in the Church, &c. He that will not have them to doe that which is commanded of God, let him ſay, is any man greater than Chriſt? if the Miniſter doe conſecrate the body of Chriſt, and bleſſe the Sacrament, ought he not to pronounce the bleſſing upon the people? &c. And it followeth in the ſame place. Thus by your commandement (O unequall prelates) the Miniſter of God doth loſe his office, is deprived of the uſe of his tongue, he is maimed, he hath only the name of a Miniſter, but the fulneſſe and perfection thereof, which appertaineth to his conſecration, he holdeth not: much more followeth in the ſame place, which may bee applied againſt Popiſh Biſhops, that cut the inferiour Miniſters ſhort of the better part of their office, which is to preach the word of God.

Againe: *ibid. diſtinct.*95.*c.*7. Peſſima conſuetudinis eſt: It is a very bad cuſtome in certaine Churches, for Prieſts to hold their peace in the preſence of the Biſhops, as though they did either envie, or ſcorne to heare them, contrary to the Apoſtle, which ſaith, If any thing be revealed to another ſitting by, let the firſt keepe ſilence. Thus farre that decree out of S. Hierome.

Maſter Lambert Martyr. It is lawfull for all Prieſts freely to preach the word, and that at all times, in all places, and to all perſons, although they be not ſent: for all ſuch are choſen to be preachers, and therefore ſent: for of this ſpeaketh Gregorie in his paſtorals, ſaying, Prædicationis officium ſuſcipit, quiſquis ad ſacerdotium accedit: Whoſoever taketh prieſthood upon him, taketh upon him alſo the office of preaching: *Fox pag.*1111.reſponſ. ad articul. 22.*col.*2.

P.1016.1.34.

Maſter Tindall Martyr, there is but one ſpeciall office that pertaineth to thine orders, and that is to preach the word of God, *pag.*1253.*artic.*12.*col.*1.

P.1141.2.86.

Concerning the power of giving orders: As S. Paul ſpeaketh of the laying on of his hands, 2 Tim. 1.6. ſo he maketh mention of impoſitions of hands by the Elderſhip, 1 Tim 4 14. And the Rhemiſts upon that place miſlike not the practice of the Church, that their Prieſts doe lay on their hands together with the Biſhop, upon his head that is to be ordained.

2 Tim.1.6.
1 Tim.4 14.

*Concil. Carthaginenſ.*4.*can.*3. Omnes presbyteri, qui præſentes ſunt, manus ſuas juxta manum epiſcopi ſuper caput presbyteri ordinandi teneant; Let all the Prieſts that are preſent, hold their hands next to the Biſhops hand upon his head that is to be ordained. Againe can 24. of the ſame Councell; Epiſcopus ſine concilio Clericorum Clericos non ordinet: The Biſhop muſt not give orders, but in the preſence and aſſemblie of the Clergie. By this then it is manifeſt, that impoſitions of hands doth not wholly and ſolie belong to the Biſhop, ſeeing the reſt of the elders were wont to lay on their hands likewiſe, or the Biſhops in the name of the reſt, *Fulk. annot. Tit.*1.*ſect.*2. So that the Elders were not excluded.

Now further concerning the office of preaching: the Greekes make it an eſſentiall part of the office and calling of presbyters, as Ieremie Patriarch of Conſtantinople thus writeth to the Miniſters of Germanie: Sicut mihi prædicandi neceſſitas incumbit, &c. As a neceſſitie of preaching lieth upon mee, and woe is me if I preach not the Goſpell: ita vobis idem ſtudium & periculum: ſo the ſame care and danger hangeth over you, if you be ſlothfull, &c. And in another place he citeth Gregorie Nazianzen, who ſaith that Paul preſcribed a rule both to Biſhops and Presbyters, ut ſint docendi periti, that they ſhould be skilfull to preach.

Cenſura Oriental.cap.10. C.14. & Nazianzen. Apologet.

2 In the Aethiopicke Church, the chiefe charge of preaching lyeth upon their Presbyters: They have preachers every where in her to inſtruct the people in the faith, ſuch as are choſen out of the order of the Presbyters and Monkes, and are held to be learned.

4 Eſpenceus much complaineth of their unpreaching Biſhops: that whereas it was defined in the Councell of Trent, ſeſſ.4. to be the chiefe office of a Biſhop to preach: yet none of the Biſhops at that Councell were knowne to preach: yea he ſaith he knew many Biſhops himſelfe, who did denie they were bound uti ſe ad iſtam docendi ſervitutem demittant, ad iſtas ſordes deſcendant; that they ſhould abuſe themſelves to this ſlaviſh and ſordid kind of teaching, &c. If then Popiſh Biſhops think ſcorne to preach themſelves, neither will they have it belong unto Presbyters, they will ſhortly bring their popiſh Church to the Muſcovia faſhion, who have no Preachers, nay, concionari in ſuis eccleſiis obſtinate prohibent, &c. They obſtinately forbid any to preach in their Churches, for by this meanes they are free, they ſay, from hereſies and divers opinions, which ariſe by preaching and diſcourſing.

An appendix to this part, whether the difference betweene Biſhops and other Miniſters be grounded upon the Law of God and inſtitution of the Apoſtles.

The Papiſts.

77. Error,

B*Ellarmine* affirmeth, that the juriſdiction of Biſhops, as now it ſtandeth in their Church, and the difference betweene them, and other Presbyters, is, jure divino, grounded upon the Law of God, and of ſuch neceſſitie, that he holdeth the contrarie to be hereſie, and thoſe to be heretikes that hold this difference to ariſe rather of a politike conſtitution of the Church to avoid Schiſme, than of the inſtitution of the Apoſtles: lib.1. de Clericis c. 14. Yea they hold them to be no Churches at all, which are not under the government of Biſhops, but of other overſeers, and ſuperintendents: Sanè ego, nec eccleſiam ibi intelligere poſſum, &c. Surely I ſee not (ſaith one) how there can be any Church, where there is no Biſhop: Eſpenc. in 1 *Tim.*194.b. And ſo is it in a late decree of theirs out of the Councell of Paris: diſtinct. 93.*c.*8. Nulla ratione Clerici, &c. They in no wiſe are ſaid to be Clerkes, or prieſts, that are not governed under the diſcipline of any Biſhop; for ſuch the Church in former time called Acephali, men without an head, &c. Which decree if it be ſo underſtood, that no Church ought to be without an head, that is, ſome commendable forme of diſcipline and government, then may it well be received: but if it be taken ſtrictly, that no Church can be without ſuch Biſhops as they have, this were both to condemne the Churches of Geneva, and divers in Germanie, which have Superintendents, and no Biſhops at all, as alſo the Church of England, that hath Biſhops, but not ſuch as theirs are. Let us ſee ſome of their arguments, for the neceſſary difference and preeminence of Biſhops by the law of God.

Argum. 1. In the old Teſtament, there was the high Prieſt as chiefe, upon whoſe ſentence every matter depended, and other inferiour prieſts under his obedience: in the new Teſtament, Biſhops are as the high Prieſts then; and presbyters now, as the inferior prieſts then. Ergo, by the Law of God there is a difference. Bellarm.

1 Pet. 5.4.

Anſw. Firſt, the high Prieſt in the Law was a figure of Chriſt, who is the high Prieſt of the new Teſtament, and chiefe Shepheard, 1 *Pet.*5.4. and therefore this type being fulfilled in Chriſt, cannot properly be applyed to the externall Hierarchie of the Church. Secondly, if every Biſhop bee this high Prieſt, then have you loſt one of your beſt arguments for the Pope, whom you would have to be the high Prieſt in the Church. Thirdly, a difference notwithſtanding we grant of prioritie and order, but not of princely dominion, both in the Prieſts of the old law, and the Miniſters of the Goſpell. Fourthly, it is untrue that all things were governed onely at the will of the high Prieſt, for the other Prieſts alſo were his aſſiſtants, and did debate matters in Councell with them. And this was that συνέδριον, the

Acts 5.34.

Sanedrim or Councell, *Act.*5.34. wherein together with the high Prieſts were aſſembled other Elders alſo, called Presbyteri, Presbyters, Act. 4. 8.23. And this one of your owne writers confeſſeth: Et Synagoga, & poſtea Eccleſia ſeniores habuit, &c. Both the Synagogue and afterward the Church had certaine Elders, without whoſe counſell nothing was done: which Seigniorie, by what negligence it was growne out of uſe, S. Ambroſe modeſtly confeſſeth he knew not; Eſpenc. in 1 Tim. c. 5. verſ. 1. Fifthly, S. Hierome reaſoneth thus, that if Moſes, qui potuit ſolus praeeſſe, that if Moſes, who might himſelfe onely have beene Ruler of the people, yet choſe unto him 70. Elders, together with whom hee judged the people: ſo ſhould Biſhops and Presbyters in commune regere, governe the Church in common, imitating Moſes; Hieron. Evag. If Moſes had partners in the government of the civill ſtate, there is no queſtion, but the high Prieſt had likewiſe in the eccleſiaſticall.

Argum. 2. Chriſt ordained 12. Apoſtles, and 70. Diſciples beſide, betweene whom there was great difference; the Biſhops ſucceed the Apoſtles, the Prieſts come in the place of the Diſciples, Ergo.

Anſw. Firſt, Bellarmine here diſputeth not to the point, for he is not onely to prove a ſimple difference and diſtinction, which wee grant: but a Princely preeminence, which he ſhall never ſhew. Secondly, not onely Biſhops, but all faithfull Paſtors and Miniſters are the Apoſtles ſucceſſors: as Ignatius witneſſeth epiſtol. ad Trallianos. Subditi eſtote, &c. Bee yee ſubject to the Colledge of the Presbyters, as to the Apoſtles of the Lord: though in the ſame place he compare the Biſhops to Chriſt, the Prieſts to his Apoſtles, as noting a difference; yet it is ſufficient, for that purpoſe we alleage it, that they alſo are reſembled to the Apoſtles. Thirdly, that Prieſts ſucceed in the place of the Apoſtles, and that Deacons are in ſtead of the ſeventie Diſciples: and not, as he ſaith: thus it is evident out of their owne decrees, diſtinct.68.c.5. Dumtaxat, non amplius, quam duos ordines, &c. We read but of two orders among the Diſciples of Chriſt, that is, of the twelve Apoſtles and the ſeventie Diſciples: And who are now in the place of thoſe, Innocentius ſheweth, decret. Greg. lib.1. tit. 14. c. 9. Hos ſolos Primitiva Eccleſia, &c. The primitive Church only had theſe two ſacred orders of Prieſts and Deacons. Fourthly his argument concludeth not, Apoſtles were above Diſciples: Ergo, Biſhops, &c. unleſſe he doe aſſume thus, but Biſhops are Apoſtles: which is denied by Ignatius, who though he were neere to the Apoſtles time, being the third Biſhop of Antioch after Peter, and had ſeene Chriſt after his reſurrection; yet writing to the Antiochians, ſaith, Hac non uti Apoſtolus pracipio: I doe not command theſe things as an Apoſtle.

Argum. 3. S. Paul ſaith to Timothie: Receive no accuſation againſt an Elder but under two or three witneſſes, 1 *Tim.*5. Here Timothie Biſhop of Epheſus, is made judge of the Prieſts and Miniſters, Ergo, in the Apoſtles time a difference, &c. Bellarm. ibid.

1 Tim.5.19.

Anſw. Firſt, it may be doubted whether Timothie were ſo ordained by the Apoſtle Biſhop of Epheſus, as now a Biſhop is ſet over his dioceſſe: for then the Apoſtle would never have called him ſo often from his charge as he doth, and employed him in the ſervice of other Churches, as he ſendeth him to Corinthus, to the Theſſalonians to confirme their faith, and to other Churches beſide. It is moſt like, that Timothie had the place and calling of an Evangeliſt, whoſe office was to ſecond the Apoſtles into their Miniſterie, and to water that, which the Apoſtles had planted. And that the calling of Evangeliſts and Biſhops, which were Paſtors, was divers, it appeareth by S. *Paul. Epheſ.*4.11. Hee hath given ſome Apoſtles, ſome Prophets, ſome Evangeliſts, ſome Paſtors, &c. And that Timothie was ſuch an Evangeliſt, it may be gathered, for that the Apoſtle biddeth him doe the work of an Evangeliſt, 2 Timoth. 4.5. Secondly, ſeeing that Timothie was ordained by the authoritie of the Eldership, 1 *Tim.*4.14. which they themſelves tranſlate the Prieſthood; and the Rhemiſts expound it of the ancient practice of the Church, when the Prieſts together with the Biſhop lay their hands upon him that is ordained: ex Concil. Carthag. 4. c. 3. and ſo alſo Iohan. Gropperus their owne bird doth underſtand it, to whom alſo conſenteth Eſpencaus in his Comentarie upon that place: how then could Timothie be a Biſhop ſtrictly and preciſely taken, being ordained by Presbyters? Thirdly, but to admit that Timothie was a Biſhop, or at the leaſt, which is all one to the matter in hand, greater than a Biſhop: yet cannot hee conclude from hence the princely preeminence over prieſts as their ſubjects, and an abſolute and plenary power in them, the other excluded: for hee biddeth Timothie not to rebuke but to exhort the Elders as Fathers; which Epiphanius underſtandeth of elder Miniſters: whereby he giveth no princely dominion to Timothie, but a brotherly ſuperioritie in gentle admonition. Againe, where he ſaith, Receive no accuſation, &c. though he ſpeake by name to Timothie, directing his ſpeech to him as the chiefe, yet he excludeth not the reſt: as the holy Ghoſt writing to the Angels and chiefe Paſtors of the ſeven Churches, Apoc. 2. 3. implyeth the reſt of the Miniſters and Church there, as may appeare by the matter of the Epiſtles, wherein the faults of the whole Church are reproved, and their vertues commended. Neither can it be gathered by thoſe words of the Apoſtle, Lay hands ſuddenly upon no man, &c. that Timothie had this ſole power in himſelfe: for the Apoſtle would not give that to him, which he did not take to himſelfe, who aſſociated unto him the reſt of the Presbyterie in the ordaining of Timothie, 1 Tim. 4. 14. but hee ſpeaketh to him as the chiefe. Wherefore whatſoever yet hath beene alleaged, this champion hath failed in the proofe of the princely Monarch of his mitred Biſhops by the word of God: I will come now to deliver our owne opinion.

The Proteſtants.

OF the difference betweene Biſhops and Prieſts there are three opinions: the firſt of Aerius, who did hold that all Miniſters ſhould be equall, and that a Biſhop was not, neither ought to be ſuperiour to a Prieſt, neither that there was any difference at all betweene them: which opinion of his, was counted among other hereſies: *Auguſtin. de hereſib. cap.*53. Epiphan hereſ. 75. The ſecond opinion in the other extreame is of the Papiſts, as wee have ſeene, that would have not onely a difference, but a princely preeminence of their Biſhops over the Clergie, and that by the word of God: and they urge it to be ſo neceſſary, that they are no Churches, which receive not their pontificall hierarchie. The third opinion is betweene both, that although this diſtinction of Biſhops and Prieſts, as it is now received, cannot be directly proved out of Scripture: yet it is very neceſſary for the policie of the Church, to avoid ſchiſmes, and to preſerve it in unitie. Of this judgement Biſhop Iewel againſt Harding ſheweth both Chryſoſtome, Ambroſe, and Hierome to have beene: *Defenſ. Apolog. pag.*248. And amongſt the reſt, S. Hierome thus writeth: Apoſtolum perſpicue docere, &c. That the Apoſtle teacheth evidently, that Biſhops and Prieſts were the ſame: Yet he holdeth this diſtinction to be neceſſary for the government of the Church: Quod unus poſt electus eſt, qui cæteris præponeretur, in ſchiſmatis ſactum eſt remedium: That one afterward was choſen, to be ſet over the reſt, it was done to bee a remedie againſt ſchiſme: ad Evag. To this opinion of S. Hierome ſubſcribeth Biſhop Iewel in the place before quoted, and another moſt reverend Prelate of our Church, in theſe words: I know

know theſe names be confounded in the Scriptures, but I ſpeak according to the manner and cuſtome of the Church ever ſince the Apoſtles time: Defenſ. anſw. admonit. pag. 383. Which ſaying is agreeable to that of S. Auguſtine: Secundum honorum vocabula quæ eccleſiæ vſus obtinuit &c. According to the names of honour, which the uſe or cuſtome of the Church hath obtained, a Biſhop is greater than a Prieſt. So that Auguſtine himſelfe, who was no Aerian, doth ground this diſtinction rather upon ancient cuſtome, than the Scripture. Now then of theſe three opinions, the two firſt we reject, the one of the Papiſts we have already confuted; the other of Aerius commeth now to be examined: the third followeth by our arguments to be confirmed.

That Aerius was juſtly condemned of the Church for bringing in a popular equalitie of Miniſters into the Church (though he deſerved not for this opinion onely, to be counted amongſt heretikes) thus we make it plaine.

Argum. 1. There was an order and prioritie amongſt the Apoſtles themſelves, though in reſpect of their Apoſtleſhip they were all of one authoritie: much more therefore ſhould there be an order and degree amongſt the Miniſters of the Church, who are inferiour to the Apoſtles.

Galath. 2.7, 8.

The firſt part is thus proved: Act. 1. The prioritie of ſpeaking is given to Peter, in the election of Matthias, Act. 15. The definitive ſentence is pronounced by S. Iames. Galath. 2.7.8. Saint Paul is ordained the chiefe Apoſtle of the uncircumciſion, and S. Peter of the circumciſion. And amongſt the Apoſtles themſelves, ſome were counted the chiefe and eſteemed as pillars, as Iames, Cephas, Iohn, Galath 2.2.9. We alſo grant, that Peter, when he confeſſed Chriſt for and in the name of the reſt, had a primacie of order, and a prioritie at that time, who alſo for and in the name of the reſt firſt received the keyes of the Church. And thus much Cyprian acknowledgeth: Hoc erant cæteri Apoſtoli, quod fuit Petrus, &c. The reſt of the Apoſtles were the ſame that Peter was, having like fellowſhip of power and honour: but the beginning is from one, that the Church may appeare to be one, de ſimplicit. prælator. Wherefore if that among the Apoſtles an order and prioritie may be granted, how much more amongſt other Miniſters is a difference to be admitted?

1 Cor. 12.28.

Argum. 2. Saint Paul ſaith, God hath ordained in the Church, firſt Apoſtles, ſecondly Prophets, thirdly teachers, then them that doe worke miracles, after that the gifts of healing, &c. The Apoſtle here aſſigning to ſome the firſt place, to others the ſecond, to ſome the third, and ſo to the fifth, evidently ſheweth, that there was a difference and a preeminence in the gifts and callings of the Church. And ſeeing it cannot bee denied, but that the Apoſtles were chiefe and ſuperiour to all other Miniſters: it followeth, that the Apoſtles themſelves allowed a ſuperioritie in the Miniſters of the Church. And although their calling was extraordinarie, and therefore they were the chiefe; yet after their calling ceaſed, and they were tranſlated, an order ſtill for government was to remaine in the Church.

1 Cor. 14.40.

Argum. 3. 1 Cor. 14.33. the Apoſtle ſaith, God is not the author of confuſion, or diſorder: but to have a popular equalitie amongſt the Miniſters, were the next way to bring in confuſion, if none ſhould be ruled or directed by other. As S. Hierome well ſaith, Si tollis ordinem tabernaculi: If you take away the order of the Tabernacle, if all ſhould be as one mixt body, and as the ſaying is, ἓν κόνιον, one heape of duſt, or as we ſay, an hodgepoch: then to ſmall purpoſe are Biſhops, Prieſts, Deacons, &c. lib. 2. adverſ. Iovinian. His meaning is, that like as where a building is not diſtinguiſhed into the parts, but lyeth altogether in a rude heape, it falleth quickly to ruine and duſt; ſo the Church being without order, ſoone commeth to confuſion. Wherefore as the Apoſtle concludeth, Let all things be done comely and in order: So, whoſoever goeth about to breake the order of the Church, as Aerius, or whoſoever elſe, is a diſturber. And this may ſuffice by the way for the confutation of Aerius ſchiſmaticall opinion. Now for the confirmation of Hieromes judgement.

Acts 10 17 23.

Tit. 1.5.

1 Pet. 5.1.

Argum. 1. Saint Hierome alleageth divers places of Scripture, to ſhew that a Prieſt and a Biſhop in the Apoſtles time were all one: as Acts 20. verſ. 17. thoſe whom the Apoſtle calleth Elders or Presbyters, verſ. 28. he nameth Biſhops, or overſeers. Tit. 1.5. I left thee in Crete for this cauſe, to ordaine Elders or Prieſts: and then he ſheweth what manner of perſons the Elders ſhould be, verſ. 7. for a Biſhop muſt be blameleſſe, &c. Likewiſe Saint Peter, 1. epiſt. 5.1. exhorteth the Presbyters or Prieſts to feede the flock, ἐπισκοποῦντες, that is, overſeeing, from whence the name of Epiſcopus, a Biſhop, is derived. Hence he concludeth thus, Idem ergo presbyter & Epiſcopus, &c. Therefore a Biſhop and Prieſt are all one, Hieron. ad Evag.

To theſe teſtimonies of Scripture divers anſwers are framed: Firſt, Epiphanius anſwereth, that the Apoſtle calleth Biſhops Prieſts, becauſe in many Churches, for the want and penury of ſufficient Miniſters, there were no Prieſts but Biſhops, who alſo did the office of Prieſts.

Philip. 1.1.

But Bellarmine miſliketh this anſwer: for the Apoſtle in his Epiſtle to the Philippians, writeth to the Biſhops and Deacons there, 1. chap. verſ. 1. but in one city there could be but one Biſhop: and it is more like that there might be many Prieſts, than Biſhops in one city.

Philip 2.25.

Secondly, Theodoret anſwereth, that in the Apoſtles time the Biſhops were called Apoſtles, and the Prieſts Biſhops, as Epaphroditus is called the Apoſtle of the Philippians, and therefore the office of Prieſts is deſcribed under the name of Biſhops.

Anſ. Firſt, it is more probable, that Biſhops ſhould be called Apoſtles after the Apoſtles time, than while they lived, becauſe that while the Apoſtles remained, the calling of Biſhops is not thought then to have been ſo neceſſary as afterward : but yet after the Apoſtles were departed the ancient Biſhops refuſed to be called Apoſtles, as before I ſhewed in Ignatius. And S. Cyprian thus writeth, Me nullius ſuadela poteſt inclinare, &c. No man can perſwade me, that there are now other Apoſtles, &c. de ſingularitat. clericor. Secondly, concerning the inſtance of Epaphroditus, he is called their Apoſtle, that is, meſſenger, becauſe he brought the benevolence of that Church unto Saint Paul, Philip. 4.18. Philip.4.18. and ſo this word, Apoſtle, is taken both in the Civill and Canon law, in ſo much, that letters dimiſſorie granted in the cauſe of appeale, by him, from whom the appeale is made, are called, (Apoſtoli) letters of diſmiſſing, or ſending the cauſe to him, to whom the appeale is made, Decret.p.2.cauſ.2. quaſt.6.ca.24.ſext. decret.lib.2.tit. 15.c.1. Thirdly, we denie not, but that the Miniſters and Paſtors of the Church were alſo called Apoſtles, in reſpect of their paſtorall office, 1 *Cor.*8.23. but not in that 1 Cor..23. ſenſe, as the twelve Apoſtles were ſo called, but in a larger ſenſe and more generall uſe of the word: As the word Deacon or Deaconſhip is likewiſe taken ſometime ſtrictly for a ſpeciall office of the Church, as *Act.*6. there were ſeven Deacons elected ; ſometime more largely for any office, or miniſterie, as the Apoſtleſhip is called διακονία, *Act.*1.25. a Deaconſhip ; and Timothie an Evangeliſt is called a Deacon, that is, a Miniſter, 1 *Theſſ.*3.2. As the Apoſtles then in a generall acception of the word were called Deacons, ſo we denie not but that Biſhops and Paſtors might be called Apoſtles. Fourthly, that none in the Apoſtles time were uſually and properly knowne by that name, but the twelve only, to whom were afterward adjoyned Paul and Barrabas, it is manifeſt out of the Scripture, *Luk.*6.13. Chriſt choſe twelve, whom he named Apoſtles : the name therefore of Apoſtle, muſt be of Chriſts giving. And S. Paul ſaith, 1 *Cor.*12. verſ. 28. *Epheſ.*4.11. that God hath given ſome to be Apoſtles, ſome Paſtors and Doctors : *and all are not Apoſtles, verſ.*29. If then ſome were Apoſtles, not all, ſome other Paſtors, the Paſtors were not Apoſtles. This anſwer therefore is inſufficient.

Acts 1.25. 1 Theſſ.3.2. Luke 6.13. 1 Cor.12.28.29. Epheſ.4.11.

Thirdly, Michael Medina a Papiſt thinketh, that both Hierome, Ambroſe, Auguſtine, Chryſoſtome, were in the ſame hereſie with Aerius.

This erronious judgement of his is confuted by Bellarmine : and it may eaſily be diſproved. Firſt, ſeeing Auguſtine with the reſt held Aetius to be an heretike, how could they condemne that for an hereſie in him, which they themſelves maintained ? Secondly, it is not like that the Church, which hath condemned that for hereſie in Aerius, would tolerate it in the reſt. Thirdly, there is great difference betweene Aerius opinion, and theirs : for he would have no difference at all betweene a Biſhop and a Prieſt : the fathers allowed a difference, holding it to bee profitable for the peace of the Church : they only affirmed, that this diſtinction was rather authorized by the ancient practice of the Church, than by any direct place of Scripture.

Fourthly, Bellarmine alleageth the opinion of one Delphinus a popiſh writer, lib.2.de eccleſ. that by the ſentence of Hierome, in the beginning the ſame men were both Biſhops and Prieſts, not that the office of both was the ſame, but that then both were joyned together in one man : and afterward ſome were made Biſhops only, ſome Prieſts only.

Bellarmine alſo confuteth this opinion, and ſheweth, that Hierome his meaning was, that the office of a Biſhop and a Prieſt in the Scripture are taken to be all one, and not for that they might bee, or were ſometime in one man : for thus Hierome ſaith, epiſt.ad Evag. Quid facit excepta ordinatione, &c. What doth a Biſhop, beſide giving of orders, that a Prieſt doth not ? And againe, Communi presbyterorum conſilio, &c. The Church was governed in time paſt by the common counſell or advice of the Presbyters. Whereby it is cleere that Hierome ſpeaketh not of the perſons, but of the office. And yet more plainly, Epiſcopum & presbyterum unum eſſe, aliud nomen officii, &c. That a Biſhop and a Prieſt are all one, the one being a name of office, the other of age. So he thinketh the office to be the ſame, the names divers.

The fifth and laſt anſwer to the places of Scripture propoſed is Bellarmines : who thinketh that in the Apoſtles time the names of Biſhops and Prieſts were confounded, being common to all Miniſters : but that the offices and functions themſelves were diſtinguiſhed.

Anſw. Firſt, Saint Hierome ſheweth out of Saint Paul, 1 Timoth. 3. where he deſcribeth the office of a Biſhop, that not only the name of a Biſhop and a Prieſt was taken for the ſame, but the office alſo : becauſe the Apoſtle requireth the ſame properties and qualities in them both : De presbytero reticetur, quia & in Epiſcopo presbyter continetur : There is no mention made of a Prieſt, becauſe he is contained under a Biſhop, Hieron. Evag. And in the ſame Epiſtle he urgeth that place, Titus 1.5.7. Tit.1.5.7. where the Apoſtle doth not onely give the name of Biſhops to Prieſts, but requireth the ſame gifts and qualities in them both. Secondly, S. Chryſoſtome uſeth the ſame reaſon, *Hom.*11.in 1. ad Timot. Inter Epiſcopum & presbyterum intereſt ferè nihil, &c. There is almoſt no difference betweene a Biſhop and a Prieſt, becauſe that unto Prieſts the care of the Church is committed, and that which the Apoſtle ſaid of Biſhops doth agree unto Prieſts. Thirdly, Saint Ambroſe alſo upon the ſame ground thus writeth : Comment. in 1 Timoth. 3. Poſt Epiſcopum diaconatus ordinationem ſubjecit, &c. He doth place the ordination of a Deacon after a Biſhop : why ? becauſe there is but one ordination of a Biſhop and a Prieſt : for both of them is a Miniſter (Sacerdos) yet the Biſhop is the firſt among the Prieſts. Fourthly, likewiſe *Concil. Aquiſgran. cap.*8. in theſe words out of Iſidore they conclude thus : Vnde ad Timotheum de ordinatione, &c Hereupon the Apoſtle writing to Timothie of the ordination of a Biſhop and a Deacon, ſpeaketh nothing of Prieſts, becauſe he comprehendeth them under the name of Biſhops: ſecundus etenim gradus penè conjunctus eſt primo: for the ſecond degree is almoſt all one with the firſt. Thus by the judgement of theſe learned fathers, there was ſmall difference, as betweene the names, ſo betweene the offices of Prieſts and Biſhops in the Apoſtles time. And thus much concerning the teſtimonies of Scripture.

Argum. 2. Archbiſhops and Primates have the ſame right of juriſdiction over other Biſhops, which Biſhops have over ſimple Prieſts: but their authoritie and juriſdiction is rather grounded upon the ancient cuſtome of the Church, than any Apoſtolicall injunction or inſtitution in Scripture. Ergo.

The ſecond part of the reaſon is proved by the authoritie of S. Hierome, or who elſe was the author of the booke de 7. Ordinib. Propter hoc eſt nuper Epiſcopalis electio, &c. For this cauſe alſo, that is, the preſerving of unitie, the election of the Biſhop is referred to the Metropolitane, &c. and now the chiefe Prieſts begin to endure another Prieſt above them, non ex jure, ſed neceſſitate, rather of neceſſity, than equitie. Alſo the decree of Nicholaus the Pope, Can. 3. de Patriarch. Primates vel Patriarchas nihil habere privilegii, &c. We doe determine, that Primates and Patriarkes have no priviledge before other Biſhops, niſi quantum, but as farre as the ſacred Canons doe grant, and ancient cuſtome of old time hath given unto them. This alſo is affirmed by that reverend and learned Prelate B. Iewel out of Hierome, Defenſ. Apolog. p. 123. that Biſhops are ſubject to Primates rather by continuance of cuſtome, than by precept of Scripture.

Argum. 3. Biſhops are ſaid to ſucceed the Apoſtles, as S. Cyprian witneſſeth, lib. 2. epiſt. 10. ad Cornel. Hoc vel maxime frater, &c. Brother, we muſt chiefly labour for this, that we may retaine unitie, delivered by our Lord and his Apoſtles to us their ſucceſſors. But a ſucceſſor commeth not in place, till the predeceſſor be gone: Decret. part. 2. cauſ. 7. quaeſt. 1. c. 5. Vivente Epiſcopo, &c. As long as the Biſhop liveth, no man can ſucceed him. And can. 41. In una eccleſia, &c. There cannot be two Biſhops in one place: Ergo, the Apoſtles could properly have no ſucceſſors while they lived: and they being the chiefe Paſtors and Biſhops of every Church, there could be no other chiefe beſide them. And although they might commit the chiefe overſight of ſome Churches to ſome ſpeciall men in their abſence, as to Timothie at Epheſus, to Titus in Creta: yet could they not then be ſaid properly to be the Apoſtles ſucceſſors; and the Apoſtles yet being alive, the office of Biſhops was leſſe needfull, as a reverend Prelate hath written. So then I conclude out of the Councell Aquiſgran. cap. 9. ex Iſidor. Apoſtolis decedentibus, ſucceſſerunt Epiſcopi: The Apoſtles deceding or departing, the Biſhops ſucceeded. Wherefore it is probable, that while the Apoſtles lived, Biſhops were not in their full office, but after their departure. The diſtinction then of Biſhops and other Miniſters, ſeemeth not to have been in the Apoſtles time.

Argum. 4. If the diſtinction of Biſhops and Prieſts were by the commandement and inſtitution 2 Theſſ. 2. 15. of Chriſt and his Apoſtles, it ſhould neceſſarily be enjoyned unto all Churches: for all the precepts and ordinances of Chriſt and his Apoſtles are of neceſſitie to be kept. 2 Theſſ. 2. 15. Hold the ordinances which you have beene taught, &c. But this cannot without prejudice of many reformed Churches, be affirmed, which have no Biſhops, though they have other Overſeers in their ſtead. And although it cannot be denied, but that the government of Biſhops according to the uſe of the primitive Church, is very profitable for the preſerving of unitie; yet dare we not condemne the Churches of Geneva, Helvetia, Germanie, Scotland, that have received another forme of Eccleſiaſticall government: as the Papiſts proudly affirme all Churches, which have not ſuch Biſhops as theirs are, to be no Churches. Wherefore I cannot conclude that this ſpeciall forme of Eccleſiaſticall government is abſolutely preſcribed in the word: for then all thoſe Churches, which have not that preſcript forme, whether of Biſhops, or other, ſhould be condemned as erroneous Churches. So then here is the difference betweene onr adverſaries the Papiſts and us: they ſay it is of neceſſity to ſavation, to be ſubject to the Pope, and to Biſhops and Archbiſhops under him, as neceſſarily preſcribed in the word: but ſo doe not our Biſhops and Archbiſhops, which is a notable difference betweene the Biſhops of the popiſh Church, and of the reformed Churches: Defenſ. anſw. admonit. p. 382. Wherefore, as wee condemne not thoſe reformed Churches, which have retained another forme of Eccleſiaſticall government; ſo neither are they to cenſure our Church, for holding ſtill the ancient regiment of Biſhops, purged from the ambitious and ſuperſtitious inventions of the popiſh prelacie. Let every Church uſe that forme which beſt fitteth their ſtate: in externall matters every Church is free, not one bound to the preſcription of another, ſo they meaſure themſelves by the rule of the word; for if any Church ſhall ſeeme to preſcribe unto another in thoſe things wherein they are left free, that ſaying 1 Cor. 14. 36. of the Apoſtle may be fitly applyed againſt them, 1 Cor. 14. 36. Did the word of God ſpring from you, or came it unto you onely? God may give unto one Church wiſdome out of the word, to know what is beſt for their ſtate, as well as to another. And ſo I conclude this point, with that ſaying of Saint Auguſtine to the Donatiſt Biſhops: Tenete quod tenetis, &c. Hold that which you hold; you have your ſheepe, I have my ſheepe, be not troubleſome to my ſheepe, I am not troubleſome to yours, expoſit. 2. in Pſal. 21. So may we ſay to our ſiſters the reformed Churches, and they likewiſe to us: let them hold that government they have, we doe not moleſt them in their conrſe, neither let them moleſt us in ours.

Thus hitherto have I ſhewed the grounds of Hieromes opinion concerning the diſtinction of Biſhops and other Miniſters, which is alſo ratified by their owne decrees, diſtinct.95.c.5. Olim idem erat, &c. In times paſt a Prieſt was the ſame, that a Biſhop: and before that by the inſtinct of the devill ſects entred into Religion, communi presbyterorum concilio; The Church was governed by the common councell of the Presbyters: and diſtinct.93.c.24. quod poſteà unus electus eſt, &c. that afterward one was choſen to be preferred before the reſt, it was done to be a remedie againſt ſchiſme: likewiſe that ſaying of Auguſtine, ſecundum honorum vocabula; That according to the titles of honour, which the uſe of the Church hath obtained, a Biſhop is greater than a Prieſt; is confirmed, par.2.cauſ.2.qu.7.c.34. And ſo their owne decrees conclude this matter againſt themſelves, diſtinct.95.c.5. Sicut ergo presbyteri, &c. As Prieſts therefore doe know, that they by the cuſtome of the Church are ſubject to him, who is ſet over them; ſo let Biſhops underſtand, that they alſo by the ſame cuſtome, rather than by vertue of the Lords diſpenſation, are greater than Prieſts, &c. But Hierome thus writing, giveth no encouragement to inferiour Miniſters, to caſt off the yoke of their ſuperiours: but exhorteth them willingly to ſubmit themſelves; Sta ſubjectus pontifici, &c. Be ſubject to thy Biſhop, and receive him, as thy ſpirituall father. Likewiſe he exhorteth Biſhops, Honorent clericos, &c. Let them honour their Clergie, as the Clergie, that their Clergie may honour them, as their Biſhops, diſtinct.95.c.7. And thus the ſame learned father concludeth with his exhortation to them both: that they not reſpecting their titles, ſhould labour together for peace, and to profit the Church: Quomodo in legionibus & exercitu, &c. Like as in the Armie, ſome are Generals, ſome Centurions, ſome Tribunes, but the battell being once joyned, titles of honour ceaſe, only valour is required: ſo in this field and battell, wherein we fight againſt the devill, not names and titles are to be ſought for, but godly endevour, &c. lib.1. adverſ.Iovinian. that whether Biſhops as ſuperiours, or Miniſters as inferiours, they muſt joyne together in the Lords worke, like as the Captaine and ſouldier fight together, the maſter builder and the labourer build together.

Now to conclude this whole queſtion, and to ſpeake diſtinctly of every point, that it may appeare how farre this difference in Eccleſiaſticall functions is divine, and wherein humane: this I judge may ſafely without any contradiction be affirmed, that in this diſtinction of the Miniſters of the Church, there is ſomewhat apoſtolicall, ſomewhat alſo politicall: and in the Popiſh Prelacie, ſomething alſo Antichriſtian and diabolicall: as I will now briefly ſhew in every point, by particular induction.

Firſt, in the calling of Biſhops, as they are now ordained in ſome reformed Church, there is ſomewhat divine and Apoſtolicall: for it cannot bee denied, but that to have order in the Church, and to have diverſitie of degrees and miniſtrations to avoyd confuſion, proceedeth from the inſtitution of Chriſt: And thus farre the preface to the 21. diſtinction may be received and allowed; which thus determineth, Majorum & minorum ſacerdotum, &c. The diſtinction of the greater and leſſe Miniſters tooke beginning from Chriſt in the new Teſtament, who did inſtitute 12. Apoſtles as the greater and higher ſort of Miniſters, and 72. Diſciples as the leſſe. This then we ſay, is agreeable to the inſtitution of Chriſt, that there ſhould be not a popular equalitie, but a convenient ſuperioritie and prioritie in the Miniſters of the Goſpell, as S. Paul alſo ſheweth, firſt Apoſtles, ſecondly Prophets, &c. as I have proved at large before. 1 Cor.12.28.

Secondly, there is ſomewhat politicall: and that of two ſorts, as touching the policie Eccleſiaſticall, and Civill.

To the Eccleſiaſticall policie in the advancing of the dignitie of Biſhops theſe things doe appertaine: Firſt of all S. Hierome ſaith of confirmation committed only to Biſhops, Diſce hanc obſervationem ad honorem potius eſſe ſacerdotii, &c. Know that this obſervation is rather for the honour of their Prieſthood, than by neceſſitie of any law, Hieron.adverſ.Luciferian.

Secondly, the Councell of *Aquiſgrane, ca.*8. ſaith, that the ordination and conſecration of Miniſters is now reſerved to the chiefe Miniſter, ſolum propter authoritatem, only for authoritie ſake, leſt that the diſcipline of the Church being challenged by many, ſhould break the peace of the Church.

Thirdly, the author of the booke under Hieromes name de 7.ordinib. ſaith, that the conſecration of Virgins, which is not now in uſe in the reformed Churches, was reſerved to the Biſhop, for concord ſake.

Fourthly, the juriſdiction of the Church, which in time paſt Hierome ſaith was committed to the Senate or College of the Presbyters, was afterward to avoyd ſchiſme, devolved to the Biſhop: *Diſtinct.*95.5. Antequam, &c. Before ſects entered into religion, the Church was governed by the common councell of Presbyters. And of this Senate mention is made in the decrees: Cauſ.16.quaſt.1.c.7. Senatum Romani, &c. As the Romanes had their Senate, by whoſe counſell every matter was diſpatched; ſo we have our Senate the companie of Elders.

Fifthly, S. Ambroſe ſaith, 1 Tim.3. Epiſcopi & presbyteri, &c. A Biſhop & a Presbyter have but one ordination: for they are both in the Prieſthood. Whereby it may appeare, that the ſpeciall conſecration of Biſhops was ſince ordained for the dignitie of that calling. And S. Hierome ſaith, That in the Church of Alexandria, the Presbyters did make choyce of one, whom they placed in a higher degree and called him their Biſhop; like as if an Armie ſhould chuſe a Generall, or the Deacons ſhould chuſe an induſtrious man, whom they make their Archdeacon, Hieron.ad Evagr. So it ſhould ſeeme that the very election of a Biſhop in thoſe dayes without any other circumſtances, was his ordination.

Sixthly, in Hieromes time it was lawfull for Prieſts and Miniſters to preach without further licence obtained from the Biſhop: as it may appeare diſtinct.95. c.6. Qui non vult presbyteros, &c. Hee that will not have a Miniſter to doe that which is commanded him of God (that is to preach) would bee greater than Chriſt, &c. And a little after: Wherefore let it be lawfull for them to doe that in the Churches which they are ſuffered to doe at Rome, in Creete, Cyprus, Italy: nay, which is more, in heaven, &c. But ſince, to ſtay the humour of contentious and ſchiſmaticall preachers, it hath ſeemed good to the Church to referre the allowance of preachers to the Ordinarie: according to the decree of the Laterane Councell, ſub. Innocent.3. cap.3. Præter authoritatem, &c. Hee that preacheth privately or publikely without the authoritie of the Biſhop, let him be excommunicate.

Seventhly, for the better diſtinction of the offices, and diſcerning of their perſons, it hath beene though meete by the Church, that Biſhops ſhould have their ſeverall habit and attire: *Concil. Aquiſgran.c.*113. out of Auguſtine: Offeratur mihi birrhum pretioſum, &c. If a coſtly garment be offered me, it may become a Biſhop, though it beſeeme not Auguſtine, a poore man borne of poore parents, ſuch a garment as a Presbyter or Deacon may weare, ſuch an one will I have, &c. Though Auguſtine in modeſty refuſe to weare a Biſhops habite, yet it may be gathered, that ſome veſture was ſeemely in them, that became not inferiour Miniſters.

Eighthly, divers other conſtitutions have beene made in eccleſiaſticall policie, for the maintaining of the dignitie of Biſhops: as Cauſ. 2. quæſt.5.c.1. that an oath ſhould not be miniſtred to a Biſhop, but in a matter of faith: and whereas one common witneſſe was not taken to bee ſufficient in any cauſe: Cauſ.4.quæſt.3.cap.3. yet the teſtimony of a Biſhop was ſufficient, Cauſ.11.qu.1.c.36. Likewiſe two or three witneſſes were received againſt a Presbyter, Cauſ.2.quæſt.4.c.1. but a Biſhop could not be condemned by fewer than twelve Biſhops, ibid.cap.3. Theſe and ſuch like immunities have beene in Eccleſiaſticall policie annexed to the dignitie of Biſhops.

So alſo the Civill ſtate hath augmented and inlarged the priviledges and immunities of Biſhops, which they have rather by the munificence of Princes, than by divine authoritie: and this was the aſſertion of Marſilius Patavinus, that, wherein Biſhops are greater than ſimple Prieſts, and Primates than Biſhops, illud ex gratuita, &c. that it proceeded from the franke gift of the Prince, Præfat.in concil. Senonenſ.

As firſt, the diviſion of Provinces and Cities, unto Archbiſhops and Biſhops, and the limitation of their juriſdiction was brought in by the conſent of Princes: as diſtinct.99. Provinciæ &c. Provinces were for the moſt part divided before the comming of Chriſt, &c. And where of late the ſecular Primates were placed, to whom appeales were made, when they could not travell to the Emperours Court, there now Eccleſiaſticall Primates are ſeated, &c.

Secondly, the revenewes and lands of Biſhopricks have beene given by devout and religious Princes unto Biſhops and their ſucceſſors, and divers imperiall lawes have bin made in favour of the maintenance of the Church: as Cod.lib. 8.*tit.*54.*l.*34. Iuſtinian. That a gift exceeding three hundred ſhillings, being made without inſinuation, that is, inrolling and recording of it, ſhould not be good, but to the Church. And *leg.*35. A ſimple gift without ſtipulation, or tradition, that is, unleſſe it were either delivered, or warranted, was not good, but to the Church. Likewiſe Cod.1.tit.5.l.19. Whereas the preſcription of twentie or thirty yeeres might be urged againſt a private man, the Church might lay claime to the poſſeſſions thereof after an hundred yeeres. And thus by the favourable lawes and bountifull gifts of Princes, the revenewes of Biſhops have beene enlarged.

Thirdly, the titles of honour annexed to Biſhopricks, as that they are created Barons, and made Lords of the Parliament houſe here in England, have beene beſtowed by the liberalitie of the Kings of this Realme, not yet above 400. yeeres ſince. And whereas by the Imperiall law Advocates were made equall to Knights, as may appeare by the law of *Leo: Cod.lib.2.tit.7.leg.*14. Non minus providens, &c. They which take upon them the defence of cauſes, doe no leſſe profit mankind, than if they did defend their Countrey by warre and weapons, &c. By the ſame reaſon alſo ſpirituall Paſtors ſhall be preferred before both, which doe not defend mens bodies as Captaines, nor their goods as Advocates, but watch over their ſoules. And as it followeth in the ſame law: Nec enim ſolos noſtro Imperio militare credimus, &c. Neither doe wee thinke that they only fight for our Empire, that uſe ſwords and ſhields, but advocates alſo, &c. yea and much more ſpirituall paſtors doe fight and ſtrive by their ſpirituall weapons of teares and prayers, &c. So that by the equitie of this law, the Paſtors of mens ſoules are not to be held inferiour to Lords and Knights.

Fourthly, the judgement of matrimoniall and teſtamentarie cauſes, and of other ſuch like matters, hath beene reſerved unto Biſhops by the Civill and Imperiall authoritie, as may appeare by theſe particular grants.

1 *Cod.lib.1.tit.6.leg.*28. Anthemius made this law, that if a ſtranger died, giving towards the redeeming of captives, if he appoynted no executor, the Biſhop of the place ſhould take upon him to execute the Teſtators will to the aforeſaid vſe, &c.

2 *Cod.lib.6.tit.*54.*leg.*10. authentic. If a ſtranger dye inteſtate, his goods ſhall be delivered to the Biſhop to be kept for the next heire.

3 Cod.lib.1.tit.7.leg.1.Valentinian. It is referred to the care of Biſhops, that victuals be not ſold at exceſſive prices in the time of dearth.

4 *Cod.lib.*1.*tit.*7.*leg.*10.Honor. It is committed to the Biſhops to call upon the Judges, that the priſoners be provided for.

5 *Ibid.leg.*12. it belongeth to Biſhops, to take order for captives redeemed, that they be not wronged, or moleſted after their returne,

6 *Ibid.leg.*11. Biſhops have charge to ſee the bookes of Sorcerie burned, and what other bookes ſo ever tending to impietie.

7 *Ibid.leg.*18. If a man confeſſe he have received a peece of money, being promiſed it onely, and afterward receive it not, he may make his complaint before the Biſhop of that place.

8 *Lib.*3.*tit.*1.*leg.*14. authentic. If the ordinary Judge be ſuſpected, the Biſhop of the place ſhall heare the cauſe together with the Judge, and ſo determine it.

9 *Lib.*3.*tit.*43.*leg.*15.Iuſtinian. A law is made againſt dice-play, and the charge thereof is committed to Biſhops.

10 *Cod.Theodoſian.lib.tit.de Epiſcopal.judic.leg.*1. It was lawfull to any man in the wager of law, yea upon the point of ſentence, to referre his cauſe to the judgement of the Biſhop, and they were to ſtand unto it, though his adverſarie gain-ſaied.

Thus wee ſee alſo how in Civill policie the dignitie of Biſhops, by the favour of Chriſtian Emperours, hath beene enlarged: And hitherto I have ſhewed, what is to bee judged politicall in the diſtinction of Biſhops from the reſt of the Clergie, both as touching the civill and eccleſiaſticall policie.

Now in the laſt place I will briefly declare, what hath beene brought in beſide the firſt inſtitution of Biſhops, by ambition and pride into the Popiſh prelacie.

Firſt, the Biſhops of ancient time were diligent Preachers, *Diſtinct.*43.*c.*5.Nicholaus. Diſpenſatio,&c. The diſpenſation of the heavenly ſeed is committed to us; woe unto us, if we ſow it not, if we hold our peace, &c. But they allow unpreaching Prelates, and ſay, that want may bee recompenced with other gifts of government, *Rhemiſt.annot.*1 *Tim.*5.*verſ.*17.

Secondly, Biſhops in times paſt did ſhew themſelves humble and lowly in their apparell, diet, family: For apparell, Auguſtine ſaith, Fateor vobis de preſcioſa veſte erubeſco,&c. I confeſſe unto you, I am aſhamed of a coſtly garment, it becommeth not this profeſſion, ex concil. Aquiſg.ca. 113. For diet, order was taken: *Lateran. ſub Alexand.c.*10. that Prelates, tria tantùm fercula haberent, ſhould have but three diſhes of meat. And concerning their traine, it was decreed, *Concil. Baſilienſ. append.ca.*4. That Cardinals ſhould have but ten; Patriarkes eight; Archbiſhops ſix, to goe before them in the ſtreet, whether they went a foot, or on horſeback. But now who ſeeth not, how farre the ambition of Popiſh Prelates hath exceeded theſe ancient rules: for coſtlineſſe of apparell, their Clergie hath beene ſo wanton, that they were conſtrained to decree, that none of the Clergie ſhould weare any gilt ſpurres, or buttons, or ſhooe bands of gold; *Concil.Lateran. ſub Innocent.*3.*cap.*16. Ruffius the Cardinall under Sixtus 4. did weare cloth of gold, and uſed bed coverings of gold, and had ſilver baſons for his privie uſe: And their ſtatelineſſe was ſuch, that upon feſtivall daies, the Biſhop comming forth in proceſſion, would be carried upon mens ſhoulders; againſt the which uſe there is a decree extant, *Concil.Bracarenſ.*3.*can.*5. And thus hath the Popiſh prelacie degenerated from the ancient ſimplicitie.

Thirdly, in former times Biſhops depended not as ſervants and ſubjects one upon another, but were as the chiefe Paſtors in their ſeverall Churches and charges. *Diſtinct.*93.*ca.*24. Ubicunque fuerit Epiſcopus,&c. Whereſoever a Biſhop is, whether at Rome, Eugubium, Conſtantinople, they are all of the ſame merit or worthineſſe, and of the ſame prieſtly authoritie, &c. But now Popiſh Prelates are all ſubjects and ſlaves to the Pope, being bound unto him by oath of obedience and fealtie.

Fourthly, Biſhops of former times had their ſingular circuits and dioceſes allotted them in ſuch ſort, that they might themſelves have the overſight of them: for they were bound by the Canons to viſit every pariſh Church every yeere in their dioceſſe, *Cauſ.*10. quaeſt. 10.*c.*11. *ex concil. Toletan.*4. And againe, *Extravag. commun. lib.*1. *tit.*6.*c.*1. *Ioann.*22. ſheweth a reaſon why hee divided certaine dioceſes ſome into two, ſome into more, Quod in earum ſingulis ſingulorum vultus nequibat, ut deceret, unicus paſtor inſpicere &c. Becauſe one Paſtor or Biſhop was not able to know the face of every one: that is, to have a particular knowledge of the pariſhes in his dioceſſe. But ſince thoſe times Popiſh Prelates have ambitiouſly ſought to enlarge their dioceſſe, and to incroach upon the limits of others, reſpecting more the largeneſſe of their juriſdiction, than the diſcharge of their Epiſcopall duty. This enormitie miſliked ſome of their owne Popes and chiefe patrons: and therefore Iohn 22. divided the Biſhoprick of Tholouſe into five dioceſſes, *Extrav.commun. lib.*3.*tit.*2.*c.*5. giving this reaſon thereof, Quia durum erat & difficile,&c. Becauſe it was an hard and difficult matter, that in ſo large a dioceſſe recourſe ſhould be had to one man, &c.

Fifthly, the Biſhops of the Primitive Church were ready to forgive, and were full of mercy, and did make interceſſion to the Magiſtrate for offenders, yea for ſchiſmatikes: as *Cauſ.*23.*quaeſt.*5.*c.*1. Auguſtine is a mediatour to Marcellinus for the Donatiſts: Sic ſuccenſe iniquitati,&c. So puniſh iniquitie, as you forget not humanitie. And Cyprian excellently ſaith, *lib.*1.*epiſtol.*3. Remitto omnia, &c. I remit every thing, I diſſemble many things; yea ſins committed againſt God, I doe not ſtrictly examine; yea in remitting of offences I my ſelfe doe almoſt offend, &c. But Popiſh Prelates are of a contrary ſpirit, who were moſt cruel ſuckers of the blood of the Saints, condemning them to death, & delivering them over to the ſecular power to be executed, as the high Prieſt did Chriſt to Pilate to be crucified: contrarie to their owne Canons, Cauſ.33.qu.3.diſt.1.c.23. Qui hominem tradidit,&c. Hee that delivereth or betraieth a man, killeth him, as our Lord ſaith, Hee hath the greater ſinne that hath delivered me unto thee.

Sixthly, in the former ages of the Church, Chriſtian Biſhops did not hold themſelves exempt from the ſecular power; Cod.lib.1.tit.6.leg.34. Omnes,&c. All, of what condition ſoever, whether Biſhops or Clerkes, or monkes, are ſubject, juriſdictioni præſidali, to the juriſdiction of the preſident. But now Popiſh Prelates challenge a privilege to be freed from the Civill juriſdiction, according to the proud decree of Boniface,cauſ.11.qu.1.ca.8. Nullus Epiſcopus, That no Biſhop ſhould be convented before a ſecular Judge neither in civill nor criminall cauſes.

Seventhly, in elder times a Biſhop could not, ſine concilii examine deiicere presbyterum, without the examination of a Councell deprive a Prieſt, Concil. Hiſpalenſ.2.can.7. Solus honorem dare poteſt,&c. The Biſhop may conferre Prieſthood alone, but hee cannot take it away alone, diſtinct.67. c.2. and the ſame is ratified by Innocentius 3. decret. Gregor.lib.1.tit.7.ca.2. But of late daies Popiſh Ordinaries tooke upon them, ex officio, in their Conſiſtories, by their ſole authoritie to deprive the Miniſters of the Goſpell both of their living and life to, contrary to their owne Canons.

Eightly, the ancient Biſhops did account of Prieſts as of their colleagues, diſtinct.95.c.10. And Concil.Carthag.4.c.34. it was decreed, that a Biſhop ſitting ſhould not ſuffer a Presbyter to ſtand before him,&c. But the Popiſh Prelates challenge to be Princes and Lords over their Clergie, as we have ſeene before, and call the Clerkes under their juriſdiction, their ſubjects.

Ninthly, the Biſhops of former times did admit Prieſts to ſit in councell, and give voices with them, Decret.p.1.diſtinct.95.c.6. Presbyteri intereſſe ſacerdotum concilio, &c. It was lawfull in times paſt for Prieſts to be preſent in the Councell of Biſhops,&c. But now the contrarie is practiſed by Popiſh Prelates, who doe proudly exclude their Clergie from giving voice in their Synods, and doe juſtifie their doing therein.

Tenthly, the Biſhops of the Primitive Church did not take upon them the judgement of ſecular matters: Cauſ.11.qu.1.c.29. Neque judicem, &c. Chriſt hath not appointed thee either a Judge, or inquiſitor of ſecular buſineſſe. Likewiſe, Decret. Gregor.lib.3.tit.50.c.4. Alexander 3. decreed, Ne Clericus juſticiarius fiat principis,&c. That a Clergie man ſhould not be adminiſtrator of juſtice to the Prince. And againe, ibid.c.5. he thus writeth: Cantuarienſ. Archiepiſcop. Ne quis ſacerdos officium habeat vicecomitis, aut præpoſiti ſecularis,&c. That no Biſhop ſhould beare the office of a Vicount, or of a ſecular governor, &c. But it was an uſuall thing for popiſh Prelates to be Lord Treaſurers and Chancelors unto Kings, and beare other more ſecular offices.

Hitherto as I have ſhewed, how Popiſh Prelates have ſwarved from the ancient Canons; ſo will I briefly declare, how they have degenerated from that perfect paterne and forme of a Biſhop, according to S. Pauls deſcription, 1 *Timoth.*3.

1 Tim.3.1.2.3. First, S. Pauls Biſhop might be but the husband of one wife: which is not ſo to be underſtood as 11 though he could be no Biſhop that had beene twice married, but not ſuch an one as had two or three wives at once, according to the corrupt uſe of the Jewes, and ſo S. Hierome expoundeth it, as ſhall be ſhewed afterward: it was lawfull then in the Primitive Church for Biſhops to be married. And in the Councell of Gangra, rehearſed alſo in the decrees, diſt.28.c.15. it was decreed under paine of anathematiſme, that no man ſhould make any difference between a married and unmaried Prieſt. But the practice of Popiſh Prelates is otherwiſe, who cannot abide honeſt matrimonie, yet have beene knowne to reſort unhoneſtly to concubines: as two of their Biſhops, that were at the Councell of Trent, were ſlaine being deprehended in adulterous acts, ex Proteſtat. Concionat. German.adverſ.concil.Tridentin.

12 Secondly, S. Paul requireth, that his Biſhop ſhould be vigilant and diligent in his charge: and accordingly the Canons of the Church have provided Sardicenſ.can.14. Epiſcopus,&c. That a Biſhop ſhould not be abſent from his Church above three Lords daies. And Concil. Carthag.5.can.5. Placuit ut nemini,&c. No Biſhop ſhall have licence, leaving his Cathedrall Church, to make his aboad in any other Church, no not within his dioceſſe. And it is memorable, which is recorded of Pope Gregorie 11. that as he admoniſhed a Biſhop to goe home to his Church, and he againe replying, ſaid: Why he, that was to give example to others, did not returne to Rome; for at that time the Pope had his ſeat in France: the Pope thereupon removed his Court to Rome out of France, where the Popes had ſojourned by the ſpace of 74. yeeres. But now it is uſuall for Popiſh Prelates, both Cardinals and others, to follow the Popes Court, and very ſeldome to viſit their Churches.

13 Thirdly, S. Pauls Biſhop muſt be given to hoſpitalitie: ſo likewiſe the ancient Canons require diſtinct.83.c.1. Epiſcopus pauperibus, The Biſhop muſt miniſter meat and rayment to the poore that are not able to labour with their owne hands, &c. But it hath beene the uſe of ſome Popiſh Prelates, in ſtead of the poore and impotent, to keepe Horſes, Hawkes, and Hounds: as William Longchampe, Chancellor and chiefe Juſtice to King Richard the firſt, is reported to have brought with him where he lodged, in any religious houſe or other, ſuch ſuperfluitie of Horſes, Doggs, and Hawkes, that the Pag.223.2.46. place was worſe three yeeres after, Fox.pag. 246. fol. 2. ex Matth.Pariſienſ. Likewiſe Lodovicus Cardinall Aquileg under Eugenius 4. is ſaid of the goods of the Church to have kept in the ſtead of the poore, Horſe and Hounds, ex Balæo & aliis.

Fourthly, S. Pauls Biſhop muſt be διδακτικὸς, a man of ſufficiencie, apt to teach, both able and willing: 14 but of willingneſſe and diligence in preaching ſee before artic.1. So alſo their decrees, diſtinct.36.c.2. Zozimus: Qui eccleſiaſticis diſciplinis, &c. He that is not endued with eccleſiaſtical learning, ought not to be preferred to be a Biſhop, &c. Decret.49.c.2.Cæcum offert, &c. He offereth a blind ſacrifice, that admitteth one that is unlearned. But ſuch ignorant popiſh prelates did and doe yet abound amongſt them; ſuch as the Biſhop of Cavaillon was, who thus ſaid to the Merindolians, That it was not neceſſary to ſalvation to underſtand the articles of the Creed: for there were many Biſhops, and Doctors of divinitie, whom it would trouble to expound the pater noſter and the Creed. Fox p.949. Such an one alſo was the Biſhop of Dunkelden in Scotland, who finding great fault with Thomas Forret Martyr, becauſe he preached every Lords day to his Pariſhioners, ſaid unto him; I thanke God, I never knew what the old and new Teſtament was, I will know nothing but my portous and pontificall. Of theſe words roſe a common by-word in Scotland, yee are like the Biſhop of Dunkelden, that knew neither old nor new Law, p. 1266. ex Regiſtris Scotiæ. And leſt that this ſingular ignorance might ſeeme onely a perſonall fault in this Biſhop, he ſaith in the ſame place; We are not ordained to preach, ſpeaking of the popiſh prelacie it ſelfe: and no marvell, that their Biſhops were ſo ignorant; for Alphonſus ſaith, that divers of the Popes were ſo ignorant, that they knew not their Grammar. Yet it is contrarie to their owne Canons, decret.Gregor.lib.1.tit.14.c.15. Honorius the 3. depoſeth a Biſhop, ob defectum Grammaticæ, becauſe he knew not his Grammar, neither had read ſo much as Donatus.

Fifthly, S. Pauls Biſhop muſt not be αἰσχροκερδὴς, given to filthy lucre, according alſo to their owne 15 canons, Cauſ. 10.qu.3. c.7. In lucris animarum, &c. Let the Biſhops ſeeke rather the lucre of mens ſoules, than to prey upon their goods. But who liſt to read the grievances exhibited by the States of Germanie, at the aſſembly of Norenberge, anno 1523. ſhall ſee how the practices of popiſh Prelates tended all to this end, to rake commoditie to themſelves: they made gaine of mariages, of pardons, excommunications, hallowing of Churches, chriſtening of bells, burials, licenſing of concubines, Fox p.862. they made gaine of dedicating of Churches, giving of orders, for the which a proviſo was made, they ſhould take nothing, concil.Cabilonenſ.ſub Carol.cap.16. Biſhops exacted yeerely penſions of their Clergie, which is prohibited in the ſame councell, cap.17. they let out their juriſdictions to farme, which enormitie is redreſſed, concil.Lateranenſ.p.1.c.15. And in the councel held at Oxford under Stephen the Archbiſhop, it was decreed, that no Archdeaconrie or other ſpirituall office ſhould be let out to farme: they alſo made gaine of licences to teach; which is forbidden, concil.Lateranenſ.p.1.c.18.Pro licentia docendi, &c. That no man ſhould take any thing for a licence to teach, &c. In theſe and many ſuch like things, their greedy covetouſneſſe appeareth, contrarie to the Apoſtles rule.

Sixthly, S. Pauls Biſhop muſt be, ἐπιεικὴς, gentle, courteous, not cruell and uncharitable in purſuing 16 every offence, and that unto death. But the practice of theſe bloody popiſh Biſhops hath been too well knowne in England: their owne law ſaith, that when a Clerke is degraded, effectuall interceſſion muſt be made for him, ut citra mortis periculum, &c. that he might be puniſhed without danger of death, decret. Greg.lib.5.tit.40.c.27.Innocent.3. And concerning Lay-men, they ſhould proteſt, quod pœnam ſanguinis, &c. That they deſire not or intend their blood, ſext.decret.lib.5.tit. 4.c.2. Bonif.8. But it is certaine, in the late perſecutions here in England, they intended nothing elſe but blood.

Seventhly, S. Pauls Biſhop muſt be ἄμαχος, a man not given to fight, or contend, not warlike: and 17 their Canons agree. Cauſ.23.qu.8.c.19. Nicholaus, Epiſcopi non debent militaribus. Biſhops muſt not be occupied in militarie affaires, &c. but popiſh biſhops have often, and yet doe take upon them to be Captaines, and generals of the field; as I have given an inſtance before in Hugh Spencer Biſhop of Norwich, who was Pope Urbane the 6. his Champion to warre againſt the Antipope; and in Cardinall Ballua, who was chiefe muſter maſter under Lodovic.11. And a Cardinall at this time, or very lately, was the King of Spaine his Lievtenant generall in the Low-countries.

Eightly, S. Pauls Biſhop muſt be φιλάγαθος, a lover and patron of good men, Tit.1.8. as your Tit.1.8.
owne Canons alſo, diſt.86.c.14. Primum opereris, &c. Firſt of all do good to the houſhold of faith: it is a great ſin, if a faithfull man doe want, and thou knoweſt of it: but popiſh Prelates were perſecutors of good men, as Sanpaulinus for reproving one for ſwearing, was ſuſpected for a Lutherane, and ſuffered at Paris, anno 1551. Fox p.904.vol.1. Tomkins was a godly man, who when any man Pag.825.1.86.
came to him about any buſineſſe, would alwaies begin with prayer, yet was he moſt cruelly handled of Boner, firſt his hand burned, afterward all his body, p.1533.col.2. And their owne conſcience will tell Pag.1393.2.56.
them that Maſter Bradford was an holy and innocent man, yet by them cruelly ſlaughtered: by theſe and infinite examples more, we may ſee how well they loved good men.

Ninthly, S. Pauls Biſhop muſt be δίκαιος, juſt, Tit.1.8. But their proceedings were moſt unjuſt and 18 indirect: firſt their owne law ſaith, Ne judicium fiat in tenebris, &c. That no judgement ſhould be given ſecretly, in the darke, &c. decret.Greg.lib.1.tit.29.c.24. Yet their Spaniſh Inquiſition is al in ſecret and ſilence, nothing done openly, till the Innocents are brought forth to execution. Againe, Cauſ.2.q.8.c.3. Eutychian. Qui crimen intendit, &c. He that will accuſe muſt come openly into judgement, &c. Their owne law in capitall matters enforceth an accuſer to be produced, but they have proceeded unto ſentence of death without either accuſer or witneſſe. Againe, their owne law ſaith, Innocentes ad paria cum nocentibus : Innocents ſhould not have like puniſhment to offenders, extrav. communi lib. 3.tit.9.c.1. Ioan.23. But they have condemned Innocents, as children, mad men, and ſuch as recanted, and ſubmitted themſelves, as afterward *Error.*111.of this firſt Centurie, it followeth to be declared more at large.

20 Tenthly, and laſtly, S. Pauls Biſhops muſt not be ἀνυπότακτος, diſobedient, or rebellious, *Tit.*1.7.which qualitie, as the Apoſtle requireth in the ſame place in the children of Biſhops, that they ſhould be obedient aud dutifull ; ſo much more is it requiſite in Biſhops themſelves to bee ſubject to their higher powers alſo, as the Apoſtle teacheth, *Rom.*13.1. And hereunto agree their owne Canons, *cauſ.*11 qu. 1.*c.*20. Iſtud eſt, &c. This is that which we require of you, that you ſend under ſafe cuſtodie Paulus Biſhop Aquileienſ. and the Biſhop of Millaine to the moſt gentle Emperour, &c. Gregor. This Canon ſubjecteth Biſhops to the civill Majeſtie : yet popiſh Prelates have continually ſhewed themſelves ſtubborne againſt their Soveraignes ; as Thomas Becket Archbiſhop of Canterburie did worthily procure the Kings diſpleaſure, which was Henrie the 2. and thereupon was exiled, becauſe he would not yeeld obedience to the Kings lawes, but conditionally, Salvo ordine ſuo, Saving the privileges of his order : ſee the ſtorie, Fox p.207.c.2. Such another ſtout Champion was William Longchampe, Chancellor and chiefe Juſtice, and Viceroy to King Richard the 1. while he was at the ſiege of Ieruſalem : who being in his ruffe, regarded not the Kings letters ſent unto him, but impriſoned, and otherwiſe ſhamefully uſed the Kings brother, cauſing him to be halled and drawne thorow the mire in the ſtreets. plur. apud Fox p.247.c.1. Like unto theſe was Hugo Biſhop of Lincolne, who traiterouſly joyned with Lewes the French Kings ſonne againſt King Iohn, and afterward Henrie the 3. his ſonne ; and therefore was put to a fine of 1000. markes for his Biſhopricke : ſee more p. 258. c. 1. And other ſuch like treacherous prankes this popelike Biſhop played againſt his Soveraigne, and for his manlie acts was canonized a Saint in the Popes callendar, as traiterous Becket was before ; and this is that goodlie S. Hugh that ſhould have his day the 17. of November, whereat the Papiſts ſtorme, that the coronation of Q. Elizabeth was placed in his ſtead : for which joyfull day of her happy initiation, the Church of England ſhall have juſt cauſe to praiſe God while the world endureth. And thus have I ſhewed how far popiſh Prelates have departed from the firſt inſtitution of a Biſhop : And thus much concerning the diſtinction and degree of Biſhops, both what therein is divine and Apoſtolicall, what humane and politicall.

And that the diſtinction of Biſhops and Presbyters, as it is now in uſe in the Church of Rome, which giveth not onely a prioritie or ſuperioritie in cauſes Eccleſiaſticall, but the ſole juriſdiction to the Biſhop, is granted rather upon humane and poſitive conſtitutions, than divine and Apoſtolicall inſtitution, it is further proved by the conſent of other Churches. 1. For the Greeke Church ſhal be produced Ignatius, the third Biſhop of Antioch after S. Peter, who thus writeth in his Epiſtle ad Trallian. Epiſcopo ut Domino, &c. presbyterorum collegio, ut Domini Apoſtolis. &c. Epiſcopus patris univerſorum typus eſt, presbyteri Dei conſeſſus & cœtus Apoſtolorum Chriſti, ſine his eccleſia electa non eſt, non congregatio ſancta, &c. Obey yee the Biſhop as the Lord ; the college of Presbyters as the Apoſtles of the Lord : the Biſhop is as the type of the father of all, the Presbyters the aſſembly of God, and company of the Apoſtles of Chriſt, without theſe the Church is not elect, nor the congregation holy, &c. Origene, who lived an 100. yeeres after Ignatius hom.3.in Cantic. thinketh the Biſhop to be trabes cypreſſinas, the beames of Cyprus, as in whom is more ſtrength : Secundo loco presbyteri tigna cedrina dei domum tegunt, & ſuſtentant Eccleſiam : In the ſecond place the Presbyters, as the rafters of Cedar do cover the houſe, and uphold the Church. Thus we ſee what was the practice of the Greeke Church, though they yeelded the ſupremacie to the Biſhop as the chiefe, yet the Presbyters were joyned with them in the regiment of the Church ; the ſole adminiſtration of the keyes was not in the Biſhop.

2. The ſame alſo was the cuſtome of the South Church : as Hierome writeth : how in Alexandria from Marke the Evangeliſt unto Heracleas and Dionyſius, Presbyteri ſemper unum ex ſe electum in excelſiori gradu collocatum epiſcopum nominabant : The Presbyters did call one choſen from amongſt them, and placed in an higher degree, their Biſhop : Hieron. Evagr. by the which it appeareth, that the college of the Presbyters did elect and chooſe their Biſhop, and hee was as a prime man among them : but the other were not excluded. Ambroſe teſtifieth as much of the cuſtome of the Ægyptian Church : Primi presbyteri epiſcopi appellabantur, &c. The firſt Presbyters were called Biſhops, and the firſt removing, the next ſucceeded : in Ægypto presbyteri Epiſcopo non præſente, conſignant, &c. In Egypt the Presbyters, the Biſhop being not preſent, did confirme, but becauſe the next Presbyters were found unworthie ad primatus tenendos, to hold the primacie or firſt place, immutata eſt ratio proſpiciente Conſilio, the manner was changed by the proviſion of a Councell, that not order, but merit and worthineſſe ſhould make a Biſhop : in 4. ad Epheſ. It ſeemeth then that the cuſtome of the Egyptian Church at the firſt was to make the Biſhop onely the prime or firſt man of the presbyterie : the change that followed, was by ſynodicall conſtitutions. And ſome evidence yet remaineth of that ancient Eccleſiaſticall government to this day in the Æthiopike Church, where the Patriarke hath alwaies twelve Eccleſiaſtical perſons his aſſiſtants, cum quibus de eccleſiaſticis negotiis communicat, with whom he communicateth touching eccleſiaſticall affaires.

3 The reformed Churches alſo conſent herein : Confeſſion of Bohemia, cap. 14. This power of his ſcepter and ſpirit, hath the Lord granted and delivered to the holy Apoſtles, and in them to all Miniſters of Churches lawfully ordained, &c. A manifeſt example of the power of the keyes is laid out in that ſinner of Corinth, whom S. Paul together with the Church of that place, &c. threw out from thence and delivered to Satan, &c. Engliſh confeſſion, artic.5. Seeing the key whereby the way to the kingdome is opened to us, is the word of the Goſpell, &c. And ſeeing one manner of word is given to all, and one only key belongeth to all, we ſay, there is but one onely power of all Miniſters, as concerning opening and ſhutting. Ibid.pag.362.

4 We want not evidence from the Romane Church. Gratia.diſtinct.21.c.60. thus writeth, Ordines ſacros dicimus diaconatum, & presbyteratum, hos ſiquidem ſolos primitiva legitur habuiſſe eccleſia: The ſacred orders, we call the Deaconſhip and Presbyterſhip; for the primitive Church is read to have had only theſe two. To the ſame purpoſe alſo, in the ſame words the Mr. of ſentences, for theſe two borrow one of another, as he is cited by Eſpenceus. Cardinal Arelatenſis in the Councell of Baſil, proveth the joynt government of Biſhops and Presbyters, and their joynt authoritie in having deciding voices in Councels, by the preſident of the Apoſtolicall Councell, Act. 15. where it is ſaid, it ſeemed good to us, that is, the Apoſtles and Presbyters ſpoken of before, quid prohibet concilium Apoſtolorum imitari: what letteth us to follow an Apoſtolike Councell? And he further ſheweth, how in the Nicene Councell, Athanaſius being but a Presbyter, ſolus Arrianorum argumenta diſturbabat, did alone overthrow the arguments of the Arrians. And in the Councell of Conſtance, the Piſane and Laterane, presbyteros judicaſſe cum Epiſcopis non eſt ambiguum: it is evident that the presbyters judged together with the Biſhops.

Ex Ænea Sylvio de geſtis Baſil.Conſil.

The third part, concerning the office and title of Cardinals.

The Papiſts.

BEllarmine would faine have the office of Cardinals as ancient as the Apoſtles times: and the name to be worthily appropriated to the Sea of Rome, that as the Pope himſelfe by his prudence and holineſſe, is tanquam cardo Eccleſia. to the Church as the hingell to the doore, upon the which it is turned and borne up: ſo his Counſellers and aſſiſtants ſhould be called Cardinals, having the care of the Univerſall Church: but the Jeſuite, beſide ſome vaine ſhew of moth-worme antiquitie, hath not one good argument to prove the name and office of Cardinals, to be either ancient or commendable. Their eſpeciall office, as they are Cardinals, is to elect and chuſe the Pope, and to be aſſiſtant unto him in Councell, for the government of the univerſall Church, and in this reſpect the Cardinals are preferred before Biſhops, Bellarm.cap.16. 78.Error.

For the firſt, hee ſheweth the office of the Cardinals in being aſſiſtant to the Pope in the affaires of the Church to be moſt profitable and commodious in three reſpects.

Firſt, that by this meanes the Pope hath his Senate or Councell alwayes readie, with whom he may conſult every day if he will for the affaires of the Church: Secondly, for that Biſhops could not be aſſembled without detriment of their Churches, from the which they cannot bee conveniently abſent. Thirdly, the Cardinals are more exerciſed and experienced in matters of State.

Contra. Firſt, for the ſpace of 800. yeeres by his owne confeſſion, the Church of Rome was governed by the counſell and advice of the Clergie there without theſe Cardinals; and it was as well governed or better, than ſince; why might not the Pope content himſelfe as well with that courſe, as his predeceſſors? Secondly, the Pope buſieth himſelfe with more than he need, to entermeddle with other Churches, of which unneceſſary buſineſſe if he would exonerate himſelfe, hee ſhould as little need a College of Cardinals as other Biſhops, if he would hold himſelfe contented with his owne dioceſſe. Thirdly, ſome of your Cardinals are Biſhops, and have dioces, al of them have titles belonging to their charge, therefore they can no better be abſent than Biſhops, without detriment of their Churches. Fourthly, whereas he ſaith Cardinals are exerciſed in State matters: indeed they know too much of Princes ſecrets: neither is it their calling to ſtudie ſuch matters, but ought rather to give themſelves to preach the Word according to their office: and as for the managing of Civill and State buſines, it belongeth to the Senate of Rome: they ſhould onely deale with Eccleſiaſticall affaires.

For the ſecond: though Biſhops in reſpect of their Epiſcopall juriſdiction are before Cardinals, yet they for the regiment of the univerſall Church, and for that they only elect the univerſall Biſhop, are preferred before Biſhops, Bellarm.cap.14.

Contra. Firſt, in that Cardinals meddle with the buſineſſe of the univerſall Church, therein they are but intruders: for every dioceſſe ſhould be left to the proper Biſhops thereof. Secondly, in that they take upon them to elect the Pope, they are but therein uſurpers, and doe apparent wrong to three ſtates, the Emperour, Clergie, People, as I have ſhewed before. Thirdly, it is contrarie to the ſeventh Canon of the Trullane Councell; that a Deacon in any office of the Church, ſhould be preferred before a Presbyter, and ſo conſequently, not a Cardinall Deacon ſhould in that behalfe be excepted.

The Proteſtants.

THat neither the name of Cardinals, as proper to Rome, is ancient, nor their office, or either of them lawfull or commendable, but uſurped and Antichriſtian: thus briefly it is ſhewed.

1 In Auguſtines time it was a common name, uſually applyed, both in the good and evill part, to chiefe and principall men of any place, or ſect, as he calleth the ringleaders of the Donatiſts, Cardinales Donatiſtas, Cardinall or captaine Donatiſts, de baptiſm. lib. 1.*c.*6. Surely, if it then had beene onely due to the aſſiſtants of the Roman Biſhop, Auguſtine had beene much to blame to applie the name to Heretikes. Alſo there were not only Cardinals in the Church of Rome, but in other Churches alſo, as diſt. 71.*c.*5. Gregorie giveth licence to the Biſhop of Naples, ad Gratianum cardinandum, to make one Gratian a Cardinall of that Church. And *diſt.*74.*c.*6. the ſame Gregorie licenceth the Biſhop of Syracuſe, conſtituere presbyterum Cardinalem, to make one Coſmas a Presbyter Cardinall there. Onuphrius alſo a witneſſe of their owne doth teſtifie for us in this point, that Cardinall prieſts, and Cardinall deacons were ſo called, becauſe they were ſet over other Prieſts and Deacons of the ſame Church: de Cardinal. titulis. So then this name or title of Cardinalſhip is not proper or peculiar to the Church of Rome.

Epiſtol. 19. 2 Auguſtine thus writeth to Hierom: Quamvis ſecundum honorum vocabula, ſaith he, Epiſcopatus presbyterio major ſit, tamen in multis rebus Auguſtinus Hieronymo minor eſt: Though according to the cuſtome of the Church, a Biſhop be greater than a Prieſt, yet Auguſtine a Biſhop in many things is inferiour to Hierome a Prieſt. Now Hierome was a Prieſt of Rome, and a Cardinall, as ſome of our adverſaries thinke, and therefore they picture him commonly in a red gowne and habit of a Cardinall: yet you ſee Auguſtine as a Biſhop was before him, though for his great learning he putteth himſelfe behind him.

Bellarmine here telleth us very boldly, that Hierome was a Prieſt of Antioch, not of Rome; though he helped Damaſus to write letters there: and therefore Auguſtine doubted not to preferre a Biſhop in degree before him, c.14.

Contra. Firſt, whereas he alleageth the 61. epiſtle of Hierome, to prove him a Prieſt of Antioch, there is no ſuch thing: but hee only ſaith, Ego Antiochiam deſerui, &c. I left Antioch. Secondly, herein Bellarmine is contrary to the common opinion and tradition of their Church: for they uſe commonly to picture Hierome with a red hat and gowne, like a Cardinall of Rome. Thirdly, this bold aſſertion of his without ground is contrarie to Hierome himſelfe, who thus writeth, Præfat. ad Paulinian. Dum in Babylone verſarer, & purpurata meretricis, &c. While I was converſant in Babylon, and a tenant to the purple whore, I began to mutter ſomewhat of the holy Ghoſt: but the whole Senate of the Phariſees gainſaid me, &c. and I ſtraitway returned to Jeruſalem, &c. By this it appeareth, that Hierome was not onely a young Scholler at Rome, but then began to be a profeſſor, and diſputer, and moſt like to have entred into orders: for without a calling hee would not have offered himſelfe to publike conference and diſputation; and when he left Rome, immediately he went to Jeruſalem, and there continued: It is not like then he could be a Presbyter at Antioch. Fourthly, Hierome himſelfe condemneth that diſorder at Rome for Deacons to be preferred before Prieſts: Quid mihi profers unius urbis, &c. What doe you tell me of the cuſtome of one city? Hieron. Evagrio. Fifthly, Auguſtine alſo in another place complaineth of one Falcidius a Deacon of Rome, qui duce ſtultitia, ſaith he, diaconos presbyteris coæquare contendit: Who being led or carried away with folly, did goe about to make Deacons equall unto Prieſts. Is not the ſame folly now generally practiſed in Rome, or a greater? for they doe not onely preferre Cardinall deacons before Prieſts, but even before Biſhops and Archbiſhops: in Auguſtines time this was counted a great folly. Quæſt. vet. & nov. Teſta. 101.

Laſtly, if we looke back into former times, we ſhall find that neither the office nor dignitie of the Cardinals, nor any part thereof is of any great antiquitie.

As concerning their office, it is to be aſſiſtant to the Pope in the regiment of the univerſall Church, and to make choyce of a new when the Sea is void: As for the firſt, it was impugned, anno 402. by the ſixth Councell of Carthage, who write thus to Celeſtinus Biſhop of Rome concerning the ſending abroad of his legates: Executores veſtros Clericos quibuſque potentibus nolite mittere, nolite concedere, ne fumoſum typhum ſeculi in eccleſiam Chriſti videamur inducere: They of the Clergie your agents, we pray you ſend not, neither grant at every great mans requeſt, leſt the ſecular vaineglorious pompe ſhould be brought into the Church, &c. Their meaning is, that it was not ſeemely for a Biſhop to ſend forth his legates and meſſengers, as temporall princes have their ambaſſadours.

*An.*1159. Frederike that famous Emperour ſent this meſſage to Adrian the fourth: Cardinalibus veſtris civitates noſtra non patent, quia non videmus eos prædicatores, ſed prædatores; non pacis corroboratores, ſed pecuniæ raptores, &c. Wee ſhut up our cities againſt your Cardinals, becauſe we ſee that they preach not, but prey upon the people; they do not ratifie peace, but rake together pence. Non orbis reparatores, ſed auri inſatiabiles corroſores; They doe not repaire the world, but empaire their wealth.

Now concerning the other part of their office in electing the Pope, it is but an uſurpation, and that of no great antiquitie: for in times paſt the Clergie and people of Rome were wont to chuſe their Biſhop, and the Emperour confirmed him. But afterward as the ambition of the Popes increaſed, ſo alſo by degrees the ancient forme of election was altered: Firſt, anno 817. the Emperour was excluded by Stephanus the fourth, from the election of the Pope, but not from his conſecration: then came Phaſchalis the firſt, who deprived the Emperour of all right either in electing, or conſecrating the Biſhop of Rome. For by his ſubtil allurement the Emperour Lodovicus reſigned his intereſt in ſuch elections to the Romans. After him Adrianus the third, Leo the ninth, Alexander the 2. Gregorie the ſeventh, Calixtus the ſecond, did one after another as by violence thruſt the Emperour from having any authoritie in electing the Pope: thus was the Emperour excluded. As for the conſent of the people it was cleane cut off, anno 1000. by Pope Iohn 19. The Clergie yet had their voice, which was empaired at the firſt, when Nicholas the ſecond made a decree, that the Pope ſhould not be choſen without the conſent of the Cardinals, anno. 1060. but afterward it was altogether taken away by Alexander the ſecond, who decreed that the Pope ſhould be choſen only by the Cardinals: And about this time the Cardinals began to grow in credit.

Concerning the dignitie of the Cardinals, and their priviledges, they are but very young: Anno 1245. it was firſt deviſed by Innocentius the fourth, that Cardinals ſhould weare red hats and robes, and ride upon their footclothed and ſtrapped horſe. Anno 1538. And whereas others kiſſe the Popes foot, the Cardinals are admitted to kiſſe his hand and mouth: Lorinus Ieſuit in Act.6. When Paulus the third held the Papacie, a complaint was made to the Pope about ſome abuſes of the Cardinals, and one chiefe was this, that the Cardinals did hold certaine biſhopricks, whereas Cardinalatus officium, & Epiſcopi officium incompatibilia ſunt, the office of a Cardinall, and of a Biſhop are unmatchable: ſic Contaren. Sadolet. Polus. Cardinales. ſuggeſtion ad Paulum. 3.

Now whereas the Cardinals though they bee but Deacons, doe ſit above Prieſts, Biſhops, and Archbiſhops: this alſo doth overthrow the ſeventh Canon of the ſixth generall Councell Trullane, which determineth thus, Statuimus ut diaconus, in quovis ſit eccleſia officio ante presbyterum non ſedeat: We enact, that a Deacon in what place or office of the Church ſoever, doe not ſit before a Prieſt.

Laſtly, that the office and calling of Cardinals, as it is now currant in Rome is altogether unlawfull and againſt all antiquitie, I will produce their owne witneſſes, that have found out theſe ſeverall faults in the Cardinals.

Firſt, that they buſie themſelves altogether with ſtate matters, neglecting the office of preaching, to the which they are called. Eſpencæus thus writing to the Cardinall of Lorrane, ſaith: Væ ac male tibi futurum: Woe and evill ſhall be unto you, if you doe not proceed to preach the Goſpell. But ſome man will ſay, avaunt with this thy neceſſitie of preaching; and not much better one ſaid unto me of a mitred Biſhop, now an hatted Cardinall: Wouldeſt thou have a Biſhop or Cardinall preach? I pray, who elſe, &c. and yet this prelate was of their number, that would be called reverend Fathers, Vicars of Chriſt, ſucceſſors of the Apoſtles: ſic Eſpenc. præfat ad Carol. Lotharing.

Secondly, they are reproved for haunting the Courts of Princes, and leaving their owne charges: and they take upon them, ad inſtar proconſulum, like to the old Romane Proconſuls, for ſo is the decree of Clemens. 4. ſect. decret. lib. 1. tit. 15. *c.*2. to have their circuites and provinces. Of this matter thus freely the ſame author uttereth his mind: Sicut me miſit pater, &c. As my father ſent me, ſaith Chriſt, ſo ſend I you, not governors of politicall, but reformers of eccleſiaſticall matters; Paſtors, not theeves; not Potentates, but Evangeliſts; not law-makers, but law-keepers; not Captaines of ſouldiers, but fiſhers of men, Eſpenc. ibid.

Thirdly, hee findeth fault, becauſe many beardleſſe youths were made Cardinals: as aleaging an ancient Canon of Sylveſter, he thus inferreth: Eccleſia Romana &c. In times paſt the Church of Rome had no Cardinals under 60. yeeres old: which Canon would now be revived, there being in theſe daies ſo many beardleſſe, or but young bearded Cardinals, Eſpenc. comment ar in 1. Timoth. p. 238. b.

Fourthly, the Cardinals of Rome are ſometime more, no fewer alwaies than ſix Cardinall Biſhops: by which meanes the Churches, whereof they are Biſhops, are neglected: which alſo is contrarie to their owne Canons, Decret. Gregor. lib. 5. c. 3. Innocentius. 3. would not ſuffer a Cardinall of Rome to be Biſhop of Ravenna, though he were deſired of the Clergie there, quia preſentia eius utilior, &c. becauſe his preſence is more profitable to the Church of Rome, than Ravenna.

Fifthly, another notable abuſe in Cardinals is this, that whereas ſome of them are but Deacons, yet they ſit and take their place before Prieſts and Biſhops. Hereof complained Bernard in his time to Eugenius the Pope, de conſiderat. lib. 4. Ridicule miniſtri veſtri, &c. It is very ridiculous, that your Miniſters or Deacons take upon them to be preferred before your Prieſts. To this effect alſo there owne decrees, diſt. 93. c. 15. Non oportet, &c. It becommeth not a Deacon to ſit in the preſence of a Prieſt. Ibid. c. 17. Diaconi, Let Deacons know that they are the Prieſts miniſters, as well as the Biſhops. But leſt it might be here anſwered, that all Deacons of other Churches are tied to this rule, but the Cardinall deacons of the Church of Rome are exempted: it followeth, diſt. 93. c. 26. Præcipimus, &c. We command, that no Deacon, in what dignitie or office ſoever he is, ſhall ſit before a Prieſt. So likewiſe, part. 2. cauſ. 2. qu. 4. c. 2. Præſul non damnabitur, &c. A prelate ſhall not be condemned but with 72. witneſſes; a Cardinall Prieſt with 44. a Cardinall Deacon of the citie of Rome with 27. witneſſes. By this Canon a ſimple Prelate or Biſhop is preferred before a Cardinall prieſt or Deacon. Thus we ſee how enormous, unlawfull and repugnant to the Canons the office of Cardinals is: but I have ſtaied to long in this argument, I will therefore proceed. Further evidence herein from forraine teſtimonies, ſee before error 74.

The fourth Queſtion, concerning the keyes of the Church, committed for the execution to the Paſtors and Governors thereof.

THis queſtion hath foure parts. Firſt, wherein the authority of the keyes conſiſteth: ſecondly, to whom they are committed: thirdly, whether there is abſolute power of binding and looſing in the Church, or miniſterially only: fourthly, whether they that have the diſpenſation of the keyes, doe alwaies neceſſarily binde and looſe before God: of theſe in order.

The firſt part, wherein the authoritie and power of the keyes conſiſteth.

The Papiſts.

79. Error. John 20.23. BY the Keyes and power of binding and looſing, they chiefly and principally underſtand the cenſures of the Church, as Excommunications, Anathematiſmes, Suſpenſions, Degradations, and the whole Eccleſiaſticall juriſdiction, Rhem. Annot. Matth. 16.*ſect.*14. *Bellarm. lib.*1.*de pontif. cap.*13. Secondly, they tie remiſſion and retaining of ſinnes to their imagined and deviſed ſacrament of penance, ſaying, that where Chriſt gave authoritie to remit ſinnes to his Apoſtles, *Ioh.*20.23. he inſtituted the ſacrament of penance, Rhemiſt. Ioh. 20. ſect. 3. The ſacrifice alſo and ſacraments of the Church, ſay they, are miniſtred for remiſſion of ſinnes, Rhemiſt. 2. *Corinth.*5.*ſect.*3. Thirdly, they ſeeme to grant in words, that by preaching alſo of the Goſpell, ſinnes are retained, and remitted, ibid. but they make ſmall account thereof: for as we have heard, they make it not of the eſſence of their prieſthood to preach, neither doth it properly appertaine unto that office; yea, ſay they, abſolution cannot be rightly ſought for at the Prieſts hands, but by confeſſion of our ſinnes, which is done in penance: *Rhemiſt.Ioh.*20.*ſect.*5. This then is their opinion, that by their deviſed ceremony and Sacrament of penance, ſins are properly forgiven, and that the preaching of the word is not thereto neceſſary.

John 20.23. Their chiefe argument is, by wreſting that place, *Ioh.*20.23. where they ſay Chriſt inſtituted the Sacrament of penance, when he gave power to his Apoſtles to remit and retaine ſinnes.

Anſw. Firſt, your Sacrament of penance is neither grounded upon this, nor any other place of Scripture: here in the words of Chriſt there is no inſtitution of a Sacrament, becauſe there is no viſible element given, whereunto the word being added, may make a Sacrament. Secondly, here the commiſſion is but renewed, which was granted before to his Apoſtles and their ſucceſſors, *Matth.*18. 18. *Fulk. Annot. Ioh.*20.*ſect.*3.

The Proteſtants.

THe Keyes of the Church, that is, the power to bind and looſe ſinners, to open or ſhut unto them the kingdome of God, conſiſteth both in the externall diſcipline and government of the Church lawfully executed according to the word of God, as alſo in preaching of the Goſpell, by aſſuring in Chriſts name all faithfull and penitent perſons remiſſion and forgiveneſſe of their ſinnes, and in denouncing and threatning the wrath of God againſt the diſobedient and impenitent: Alſo as the Sacraments are joyned to the word, as ſeales and pledges of the promiſes thereof, ſo by the right adminiſtration of the Sacraments together with the preaching of the word, ſins are retained or remitted.

The Rhemiſts therefore doe us great injurie, in falſely charging of us, that we ſhould hold that the ſpirituall power of the Church ſtandeth only upon the preaching of the word: whereas we grant, that it is exerciſed alſo in the Eccleſiaſticall government of the Church, both in puniſhing, excommunicating and cenſuring of offenders, which is the binding of them, and in releaſing and abſolving them againe, which is the other power of looſing: *Rhemiſt.*2.*Corinth.cap.*10 *ſect.*1. Leaving now this part of ſpirituall power in Eccleſiaſticall diſcipline, which is not in this place in queſtion betweene us, we muſt touch that other part, which is exerciſed in the word and Sacraments.

1 Cor.11.29. 1 That the Sacraments doe bind and looſe, it is proved out of the word of God: they doe bind, Whoſoever eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh his owne damnation. They doe alſo looſe; As oft as ye ſhall eat this bread, and drink this cup, you ſhew the Lords death till he come: *verſ.*26.

1 Cor.11.23. But here is a double caution and condition to be annexed. Firſt, that all Sacraments worke not this effect, but onely thoſe of Chriſts inſtitution, which are but two, Baptiſme and the Supper of the Lord: for Paul ſaith, I have received of the Lord, that which I delivered unto you. If the Apoſtles would not, neither might deliver any Sacraments, but thoſe which were inſtituted of Chriſt; what great preſumption is it in any other to doe it? Secondly, we muſt not thinke, that remiſſion of ſinnes is neceſſarily tied to the Sacraments, as though there could bee no remiſſion without them, for the grace of remiſſion may be effectuall in the name of Chriſt, by the preaching of the word without a Sacrament, *Ioh.*20.*ſect.*4.Fulk. For the word may be preached without a Sacrament, but the Sacrament canot bee miniſtred without the word: for that were as though a man ſhould deliver a ſeale without a writing. Neither it is our meaning, that as the Rhemiſts cavill with us, the Sacrament cannot be adminiſtred without a ſermon of the death of Chriſt: for though that were alwaies to bee wiſhed, yet where it cannot be had, there muſt and ought to be a briefe ſhewing and declaration of the death of Chriſt out of the word, ſo oft as the Sacrament is adminiſtred, as it is obſerved in our Church, Fulk. annot. 1. Corinth. 11. ſect. 15.

And as touching this conveniencie, and in ſome ſort neceſſitie of having ſermons and admonitions before the Sacraments, our adverſaries have no cauſe to miſlike our opinion, ſeeing it hath been of late yeeres by themſelves in ſome of their Councels ſo decreed: As in the Councell of Colen, anno 1549. Parochus ſub adminiſtrationem cujuſlibet ſacramenti ſacra concione breviter populum admoneat, quid ea in re agatur: Let the pariſh Paſtor in the adminiſtration of every Sacrament briefly admoniſh the people what is done there in. Likewiſe, Synod. Auguſtenſ. anno 1548. Volumus populum, quid in cujuſque ſacramenti collatione agatur in conſcionibus & ſacramentorum adminiſtratione frequenter doceri: We would have the people taught often in ſermons, and in the adminiſtration of the Sacraments, the meaning thereof: now to returne to the matter.

Secondly, wee muſt take heed we conceive not thus, as though the Sacrament gave grace by the work wrought, and that by the very uſe, forme, and externall act of the Sacrament we obtaine remiſſion of ſinnes, as the Rhemiſts would beare us in hand, 1 Corinth. 11. ſect. 15. But the Sacraments are onely effectuall to the worthy receivers, and to the worthy receiving faith is requiſite, as S. Paul willeth all men to examine themſelves, which is, as he himſelfe interpreteth it, to prove whether they be in the faith. Theſe conditions then being obſerved, we denie not, but that there is an exerciſe of the keyes even in the Sacraments.

1 Cor. 11. 28.
2 Cor. 13. 5.

But chiefly and principally, is this power diſpenſed by the preaching of the word, as S. Paul ſaith, We are the ſavour of death unto death, unto ſome: there is the binding: And to other the ſavour of life unto life: there is the looſing. So our Saviour Chriſt ſaith, He that refuſeth me, the word that I have ſpoken ſhall judge him in the laſt day. Here is the power of binding. Againe, the truth ſhall make you free: Here is the power of looſing. Who therefore can doubt of this, that the preaching of the word is the moſt proper and principall way and meane, for the exerciſing of this Eccleſiaſticall power? for ſeeing faith is the key of heaven, whereby we have free acceſſe unto the throne of grace, Rom. 5. 2. and faith commeth by hearing, Rom. 10. 17. and hearing by the word: It remaineth that by the word the keyes are diſpenſed.

2 Cor. 2. 16.
Iohn 12. 48.
Iohn. 8. 32.
Rom. 5. 2.
Rom. 10. 17.

Auguſtine alſo ſubſcribeth unto this: for ſpeaking of reformation of life and repentance with remiſſion of former ſinnes, thus he ſaith: Quid empturus es ut facias, qua emplaſtra quaſiturus? &c. ecce cum loquor, muta cor, & factum eſt, quod iam ſape & tam diu clamatur, ut fiat. in Pſal. 63. What medicine or plaiſter wilt thou buy to heale thy ſinne? Behold even now, while I preach unto thee, chang thy heart, and it is already done, which we ſo often call upon you to be done, &c. See then by the preaching of the word our heart is changed, our life amended and our ſin remitted.

Thus alſo it was decreed Concil. Colonienſ. part. 10. cap. 6. Nihil gladio illo ſpiritus, qui eſt verbum Dei, potentius ad deiiciendos, ac viciſſim conſolandos animos noſtros, &c. Nothing is more mighty or powerfull either to caſt downe, or againe to comfort our ſoules, than the ſword of the ſpirit, which is the word of God: to caſt downe is to binde, to comfort that is to looſe.

Their owne Canons alſo here helpe us: Cauſ. 33. diſtinct. 1. c. 50. Verbum Dei dimittit peccata, &c. The word of God doth forgive ſins, &c. And diſtinct. 20. c. 1. There were two keyes given to Peter, clavis ſcientia, the key of knowledge to diſcerne, clavis poteſtatis, and the key of powre to bind or looſe. And this is confirmed, Extrav. Ioann. tit. 14. c. 5. Reſtat quod ad aliquid definiendum, &c. It remaineth, that to determine the buſineſſe of the Church, both keyes are neceſſarie, the key of diſcerning, and the key of determining, &c. that like as the materiall eye doth direct the materiall key, ſo the ſpirituall eye of knowledge, &c. Whereupon I conclude, that if ſpirituall knowledge be one of the keyes, and true knowledge cannot be had without the word; For the not knowing of the Scriptures is the cauſe of error, Mark 12. 24. then it doth neceſſarie follow, that the keyes conſiſt in the knowledge of the word.

The holy Martyrs have ſealed this doctrine; Walter Brute: The keyes of the kingdome of heaven are not knowledge to diſcerne, and power to judge, becauſe theſe nothing availe in baptiſme, by the which the kingdome of heaven is opened: therefore in my judgement, it ſeemeth, that the keyes of the kingdome of heaven, are faith and hope; for by faith in Jeſus Chriſt, and hope in him for remiſſion of ſinnes we enter the kingdome of heaven, Fox pag. 492. col. 1. But faith commeth by the word: Ergo, in the power of the word doe the keyes conſiſt.

Pag. 453. 2. 20.

George Wiſehart holy Martyr: I ſay, that an unlearned man not exerciſed in the word of God, &c. whatſoever ſtate or order he is of, hath no power to bind or looſe, ſeeing he wanteth the inſtrument, by which he bindeth or looſeth, that is to ſay, the word of God, pag. 1270. col. 1. art. 9.

Pag 1156. 2. 80.

And that the power of the keyes chiefly conſiſteth in the preaching of the word, ſee the judgement of other Churches: 1 Nilus ſpeaking of the power which the Pope challengeth to have received from the Apoſtles, wiſheth him to uſe it for the edifying of the Church, and to that purpoſe alleageth that ſaying of S. Paul, Though I ſhould boaſt, &c. of our power, which God hath given us for edification, tion, not for your deſtruction, &c. which power the Apoſtle ſheweth to conſiſt in the preaching of the Goſpell, verſ. 14.

2 In the 6. generall Synode, c. 19. it was ordered, that Biſhops ſhould preach unto the people every day, but ſpecially upon the Lords daies: and the reaſon is given in the ſame Canon, becauſe by this meanes the people comming unto knowledge, vitam in melius componerent, doe order their life the better, &c. & imminentium ſuppliciorum metu, &c. and by the feare of imminent puniſhments doe procure their ſalvation. Here is an apparent effect of the keyes in looſing the ſinnes of the people by the preaching of the word, in the reformation of their lives unto everlaſting ſalvation. To the decrees and acts of this Councell ſubſcribed Petrus a Presbyter of the Church of Alexandria in the name of the Patriarke there,

The Papiſts.

80. Error. THe authoritie and power of excommunication, ſay they, is not in the whole Church, but only in the Prelates: neither was the power of binding and looſing given unto the whole Church: but in their owne name, not in the name or right of the Church, doe the Paſtors and Prelates exerciſe this power, Rhemiſt. 1. Corinth. 5. ſect. 3. Bellarm. lib. 1. de Clericis, cap. 7. The Church is ſaid to binde and looſe, becauſe the Prelates doe binde and looſe, as a man is ſaid to ſpeake, and ſee, though hee only ſpeake with the tongue, and ſee with the eyes: Bellarm. ibid reſp. ad argum. Illyrici.

Argum. 1. They ſeeme to prove it by S. Pauls example, 1 Cor. 5. I abſent in body, but preſent in ſpirit, have decreed. Saint Paul uſeth here his Apoſtolike power, in ſending his letters and Mandatum, to have the inceſtuous perſon excommunicate: Ergo, the right was in him and not in the Church, and ſo conſequently in the Biſhops his ſucceſſors.

Anſw. Firſt, Saint Paul ſendeth no Mandatum, but ſheweth his Apoſtolike power, in decreeing the inceſtuous perſon worthy of excommunication, and requiring the ſame to bee executed by the Church, Fulk. 1. Cor. 5. ſect. 2. Secondly, though Paul gave the ſentence, yet was it done both in the power of Chriſt and the name of the whole Church: for hee had decreed only that he ſhould bee excommunicate: it was not actually done, but to the due performing thereof there is required the congregating of the Church in Chriſts name, the preſence of Paul in ſpirit by his Apoſtolike power; and that it ſhould be done in the name of Chriſt. All this ſheweth, that Paul gave ſentence in the name of the whole Church. Thirdly, the words of the text are plaine, that the power was given to the whole Church: for that power, whereby he was delivered to Satan, was the power of Jeſus
1 Cor. 5. 4. Chriſt, 1 Cor. 5. 4. but the power of the Lord Jeſus was committed to the whole congregation: When yee are gathered together and my ſpirit, in the name of the Lord Ieſus Chriſt: that is, in the power of the Lord Jeſus. So that this place which they urge for themſelves, affordeth a better argument for us.

Argum. 2. Paul (they ſay) by the preeminent power of his miniſtery, pardoneth the inceſtuous perſon whom he had excommunicate, Rhemiſt. argument. in 1. ad Corinth.

2 Cor. 2. 10. Anſw. The text is plaine, that he conſenteth the Church ſhould pardon him, 2 Corinth. 2. 10. To whom you forgive any thing I forgive alſo. Here not Paul only, but the whole Church pardoneth.

Againe, the Jeſuites ſimile may be returned upon his owne head: for as the eye and tongue in the bodie are but inſtruments of the life and power of the ſoule, which quickeneth the whole bodie: ſo the governours of the Church doe execute the diſcipline of the Church by the ſpirit of Chriſt, which is given to the whole body.

The Proteſtants.

THe authoritie of excommunication pertaineth to the whole Church, although the execution and judgement thereof, to avoid confuſion, be committed to the governours of the Church, which exerciſe that authoritie, as in the name of Chriſt, ſo in the name of the whole Church, Fulk. totidem verbis annot. 1 Cor. 5. ſect. 3.

Matth. 18. 17. Argum. 1. Matth. 18. 17. If hee will not heare thee, tell the Church: This place proveth, that although the exerciſing of the keyes be referred to the governours of the Church; yet the authoritie and right is in the whole Church: for the keyes were given to the whole Church. The Paſtors and governours though they be excellent and principall members of the Church, yet are they improperly called the Church: Argument. Illyrici.

Their anſwer here commonly is, that dic eccleſia, tell it to the Church, may be underſtood of the Prelates of the Church: yea Bellarmine will have it beare this ſenſe, that to tell the Church, is to referre it to the ſentence of the Pope: So that in effect he maketh the Pope the Church.

Anſwer. Firſt, that the Prelates and Paſtors of the Church, have the adminiſtration of the keyes committed unto them for order ſake, wee denie not; yet the right and power thereof reſteth in the whole Church: and to them offences are to be brought, as the Miniſters and officers of the Church. Secondly, how ridiculous a gloſſe that is, that, dic eccleſia, ſhould be all one as to ſay, dic Papa, tell it to the Pope, as though one man ſhould be the Church. Saint Hierome ſheweth in the like caſe concerning a great man in his time, Iohn Patriarch of Jeruſalem: An tu ſolus eccleſia es, &c. Are you onely the Church, that whoſoever offendeth you, is ſtraightway excluded from Chriſt? ad Pammach. adverſ. Iohan.

Argum. 2. Wee conclude the ſame alſo out of S. Pauls words, 1 Cor. 3.21. All things are yours, whether Paul, Apollos, or Cephas, whether things preſent, or things to come, and ye are Chriſts, and Chriſt Gods: Ergo, whatſoever power is in the Church, it is the Churches, not onely the common uſe and the benefit thereof, (becauſe it may be anſwered, that although the keyes be only granted to the Prelates yet they uſe them to the good of the Church) but the right alſo and poſſeſſion thereof, even as the Church is the inheritance and proper poſſeſſion of Chriſt. 1 Cor. 3.21

3 Auguſtine conſenteth: Eccleſia, quæ fundatur in Chriſto, claves ab eo regni cælorum accepit in Petro. Tract. in Iohann. 124. The Church, which is founded upon Chriſt, received in Peter the keyes of the kingdome of heaven: But the whole Church, and not onely the Paſtors, is founded and builded upon Chriſt: Ergo.

Interrelig. Cæſarea. cap. 9. Ad Eccleſiam pertinet verbum Dei, pertinent ſacramenta, pertinent claves ligandi & ſolvendi: Unto the Church appertaineth the word of God, the Sacraments, the keyes alſo of binding and looſing. From hence we reaſon thus, to whom the word and the Sacraments belong, to the ſame alſo appertaine the keyes: but they belong to the whole Church: Ergo.

And yet more evidently out of their owne decrees: Cauſ. 24. qu. 1. c. 6. Petrus quando, &c. Peter, when he received the keyes, ſignified the whole Church: Si hoc Petro, &c. For if it were ſaid only to Peter, then the Church doth it not: but if the Church binde and looſe, &c. And cap. 20. Domus eccleſiæ, &c. The houſe of the Church received the keyes. And your Maſter of Sentences, lib. 4. diſt. 19. c. out of Hierome: Habet omnis eccleſia in Epiſcopis & presbyteris: The whole Church hath this power in Biſhops and Prieſts: that is exerciſed by them, yet the power is in the whole Church.

Walter Brute holy confeſſor of Gods truth, who lived in the reigne of Richard the ſecond, thus teſtifieth with us: In the 20. of Iohn our Saviour Chriſt ſaith, Receive you the holy Ghoſt, whoſe ſins you remit, they are remitted, &c. Seeing therefore that all Chriſtians that are baptiſed in the name of the Father, the Sonne, and holy Ghoſt, receive the holy Ghoſt, it appeareth that they have power given them of Chriſt to remit ſinnes, Fox pag. 492. His argument is this: to whom the holy Ghoſt is given, to them alſo is given the power and right of binding and looſing: but to the whole Church and all faithfull Chriſtians is the holy Ghoſt given: Ergo, &c. And therefore the Paſtors and Miniſters doe execute this power in the name of the whole Church. Pag. 453. l. 85.

And further, yet this is more evident, 1 Nilus ſheweth the opinion of the Greeke Church: for whereas the keyes are given to Peter, when Chriſt ſaid, upon this rocke will I build my Church, hee ſaith, that Chriſt built his Church upon Peters confeſſion, and upon all, which ſhall keepe the ſame confeſſion: the right then of the keyes is granted to all thoſe upon whom the Church is built, that is to all beleevers. Math. 16.18. οἱ τ̃ τοιαύτης ὁμολογίας φύλακες ἔσονται. Nil. lib. 1. de primat.

2 Zaga Zabo an Æthiopike Biſhop ſaith: Confeſſores omnium peccatorum dant nobis ex Eccleſiæ poteſtate abſolutionem, The confeſſors doe give us abſolution of all our ſinnes by the power of the Church, &c.

3 Confeſſ. of Sweveland. artic. 15. They which doe earneſtly labour in the word and doctrine, doe repreſent the Church, and may doe all things in the name thereof. Confeſſ. of Bohemia. c. 14. which power is committed to the Church of Chriſt, and to the Miniſters thereof to the end of the world. Harm. ſect. 10. p. 335.

4 For the Latine Church, ſee the decrees of Gratian and of the Interreligion, cited before.

The third part, whether the Paſtors of the Church have any abſolute power to remit ſinnes, otherwiſe, than as Miniſters onely.

The Papiſts.

They ſpare not to ſay, that Prieſts have full right to remit ſinnes, and are not miniſters onely thereof, and diſpenſers, but have full power as Chriſt had, and he that doubteth of their right herein, may as well doubt whether Chriſt had authoritie as man to remit ſinnes, Rhemiſt. annot. Ioh. 20. ſect. 3. And againe, they call it an expreſſe power and commiſſion, yea a wonderfull power which is given unto Prieſts to remit ſinnes, and therefore it followeth neceſſarily, that men ſhould ſubmit themſelves to their judgement, for releaſe of their ſinnes. Annot. Ioh. 20. ſect. 5. 81. Error.

Iohn.20.21. *Argum.*1. They reaſon thus out of our Saviours owne words, *Ioh.*20.21. As my father hath ſent mee, ſo I ſend you. Hee ſheweth his fathers commiſſion given to himſelfe, and then in plaine termes moſt amply imparteth the ſame to his Apoſtles: But Chriſt had full right to remit ſinnes: Ergo, alſo the Apoſtles and their ſucceſſors: for they have the ſame power that Chriſt had, *Rhemiſt annot. Ioh.*20. *ſect.*3.

Anſwer. Firſt, it is great preſumption, and ſpoken without any ground, to ſay, that Chriſt by ſending his Apoſtles into the world, gave them as full, large, and ample commiſſion, as hee himſelfe had: for neither the Pope, in whom remaineth, as they ſay, the Apoſtolike authoritie, by their owne confeſſion, can doe all that Chriſt did, as to ordaine and inſtitute Sacraments: and Chriſt (ſay they) might forgive ſinnes without the Sacraments, which the Pope cannot doe, and ſo conſequently neither the Apoſtles, whoſe full juriſdiction they ſay he hath, in this behalfe, *Bellarm. de Pontif. lib.*5. *cap.*4. Secondly, the power here granted to the Apoſtles, is in the name of Chriſt, to declare and pronounce remiſſion of ſinnes, according to the will of God, not properly in their owne power to releaſe or abſolve ſinners.

*Argum.*2. He breathed upon them, and gave them the holy Ghoſt, verſ. 22. Therefore he that denieth the Prieſts authoritie to forgive ſinnes, he muſt denie the holy Ghoſt to be God, and not to have power to remit ſinnes, *Rhemiſt. ibid. ſect.*4.

Anſwer. What a blaſphemous conſequent is this? The holy Ghoſt hath abſolute power to forgive ſinnes: Ergo, the Apoſtles alſo, and all other Prieſts have the ſame power. Firſt, by this meanes they make no difference betweene the fulneſſe of power in our Saviour Chriſt, and the comunication of that power to other Miniſters: of Chriſt it is ſaid, that the Spirit was not given him by meaſure, *Ioh.*3.34. and that the holy Ghoſt dwelleth in him bodily: but it were great blaſphemie ſo to ſay of any man, Apoſtle, or Miniſter beſide, which have received of the ſame grace, but not in the like meaſure that Chriſt hath; but the ſpirit is given to every one in meaſure, as they have need in their ſeverall places and callings. Secondly, though we ſhould grant, that the Apoſtles had the full authority of Chriſt actually to remit ſinnes, which they ſhall never prove, yet it may be doubted, whether all Miniſters, whom they call Prieſts (which name we refuſe not, if it be taken according to the ſenſe of the originall word Presbyter, and not for a ſacrificing Prieſthood) have as full power, in this caſe, as the Apoſtles had, nay it is plaine they have not: for the Apoſtles and other in the Primitive Church had power to diſcerne ſpirits, 1 *Cor.*12.10. and after a ſtrange manner to exerciſe power over their bodily life, as Peter did upon Ananias and Sapphira, *Act.*5. Yet we rather ſtand upon this point, that neither the Apoſtles nor any other Miniſters have power actually to remit ſinnes, than onely as diſpenſers and ſtewards in the name of Chriſt.

Iohn.3.34. Coloſſ.2.9. 1 Cor.12.10.

The Proteſtants.

ALL the power of binding and looſing committed to the Apoſtles and to the Miniſters of the Word and Sacraments, is, by declaring the will and pleaſure of God out of his word, both to pronounce forgiveneſſe of ſinnes to all that are truly penitent, and the retaining of them to the obſtinate and impenitent, *Fulk. annot. Ioh.*20. *ſect.*3. So that Miniſters are not made Judges in this caſe, but onely, as the Lords ambaſſadours, to declare the will of God out of his word.

2 Cor.5.18. Argum. 1. There is a notable place for this purpoſe, 2 Cor. 5.18. God hath reconciled us unto himſelfe through Ieſus Chriſt, and hath given us the miniſterie of reconciliation. So then Chriſt is the only author of reconciliation, the Apoſtles are but Miniſters: how then ſay the Rhemiſts that Chriſt himſelfe is but a miniſter alſo of our reconciliation, yet a chiefe miniſter, whereas the Apoſtle maketh him the author? *God was in Chriſt reconciling the world to himſelfe, verſ.*19. Wee are but ambaſſadours for Chriſt, and pray you in Chriſts ſtead to be reconciled unto God. This then is the office of Miniſters, not to reconcile men unto God, but to pray them to be reconciled through Chriſt: Chriſt onely is the reconciler, they but Miniſters of reconciliation, they are but meſſengers and ambaſſadours, onely to declare their Princes pleaſure; their commiſſion is certaine, beyond that they cannot goe. Wherefore that is a blaſphemous decretall, and cleane contrary to the Scripture, which is aſcribed, but falſly, to Pontianus Biſhop of Rome, which ſaith, that God hath Prieſts ſo familiar, that by them he forgiveth the ſinnes of others, and reconcileth them unto him. But S. Paul ſaith, that God onely by Chriſt reconcileth us unto himſelfe.

Sermon de remiſſion peccator. *Argum.*2. Auguſtine doth very freely utter his mind concerning this matter, who putteth this objection: If men doe not forgive ſinnes, then it ſhould ſeeme to be falſe which Chriſt ſaith, Whatſoever you binde in earth, is bound in heaven. He anſwereth: Daturus erat Dominus hominibus ſpiritum ſanctum, &c. God was to give unto men the holy Ghoſt, by whom their ſinnes ſhould bee forgiven them. Spiritus dimittit, non vos; ſpiritus autem Deus eſt; Deus ergo dimittit, non vos: The ſpirit therefore remitteth ſinne, and not you: And this is recited in the decrees, Cauſ. 1. qu. 1. cap. 82. the ſpirit is God; God fogiveth ſinnes, and not you. Here is one argument, God onely forgiveth ſinnes: Ergo, not man. Againe, Quid es homo niſi ager ſanandus? vis mihi eſſe medicus? mecum quære medicum: O man what art thou that takeſt away my ſinnes, but a ſicke man thy ſelfe? wouldeſt thou be my Phyſitian? nay, let us both together goe ſeeke a Phyſitian that may heale us. Loe, another argument: Hee cannot be a Phyſitian to others, that needeth a Phyſitian himſelfe: he cannot reconcile others to God, who hath himſelfe need of a reconciler. Further, he ſaith: Qui dimittit per hominem, poteſt dimittere prater hominem : non enim minus eſt idoneus per ſe dare, qui poteſt per alium dare : Hee that can forgive ſins by man, can forgive alſo without man : for he may as well forgive by himſelfe, as he can doe it by another,&c. Here is then the third argument : If man doe actually forgive ſinnes, then Chriſt ſhould not forgive ſins without man : for the whole power is committed to man. Yea, the Rhemiſts affirme the ſame, that it is neceſſarie we ſhould ſubmit our ſelves to the judgement of the Prieſt for releaſe of our ſins : if it be neceſſarie, then ſinnes cannot be remitted without the Prieſt : then is Chriſts power limited, he cannot forgive without man, which is contrarie to that Auguſtine affirmeth here.

To this agreeth the Councell *Cabilonenſ.ſub Carolo,can.*33. in theſe words : Confeſſio qua Deo fit, purgat peccata; qua ſacerdoti fit, docet, qualiter ipſa purgentur peccata : Deus enim ſalutis & ſanitatis largitor & author, plerunque hanc prabet ſua potentia inviſibili adminiſtratione, plerunque medicorum operatione : The confeſſion which is made to God, purgeth our ſin; that which is made to the Prieſt, ſheweth how our ſinne ſhould be purged : for God the author and giver of health and ſalvation, doth many times ſave by his inviſible power, and many times by the worke or labour of the Phyſitian, &c. Hence we learne, that the Miniſter doth heale the ſinnes of the ſoule no otherwiſe than the Phyſitian doth cure the diſeaſes of the body, that is, miniſterially onely: and that he actually forgiveth not ſinnes, but onely ſheweth and declareth how they are forgiven.

We have plentifull teſtimonie from their owne Canons: *Decret.p.*2.cauſ 11.*qu.*3. *c.*87. Petra tenet,&c. It is the rocke (that is Chriſt) which retaineth ſinnes, the rocke remitteth ſinnes. *Part.*3.*diſtinct.*4.*c.*141. Nemo tollit, &c. No man taketh away ſinne but onely Chriſt, which is the Lamb that taketh away the ſinne of the world.

Their Maſter of Sentences alloweth that ſaying of S. Ambroſe : Ille ſolus peccata, &c. He only forgiveth ſinnes, that dyed for our ſinnes, *lib.*4.diſtinct. 18.d. And againe, ibid.f. Sacerdotibus tribuit poteſtatem, &c. Chriſt giveth power to Prieſts to bind & looſe, that is, oſtendendi,&c. to ſhew or declare that they are bound, or looſed: like as the Prieſts in the law had power to diſcerne betweene leper and leper. And *diſtinct.*19.c.Sacerdotes non propria virtute,&c. Miniſters doe not bleſſe by their owne power, but as they beare the figure of Chriſt, that is, repreſent Chriſt; Ergo, the Miniſters of the Church not judicially, but miniſterially, only forgive, or retaine ſinnes, that is, onely declare them ſo to be.

This truth hath beene ſealed by the blood of holy Martyrs : George Carpenter burned in Bavaria, anno 1527. for this article with others, that he did not beleeve that a Prieſt could forgive a mans ſinnes : that is, by any actuall or inherent power in himſelfe. *Fox p.*884.*col.*1.

Pag.807.2.60.

Iohn Lambert holy Martyr : I ſay, that only Chriſt looſeth a ſinner, which is contrite, by his word and promiſe, and the Prieſt doth nothing but ſhew and declare that word. And this teſtifieth S. Paul in the 2. to the Corinthians, ſaying, God hath reconciled us unto him through Chriſt Ieſus : See, it is God that through Chriſt, looſeth our ſinne. And he hath (quoth S. Paul) ordained us miniſters of the ſame attonement. See how Chriſts Apoſtles called not themſelves the authors of binding and looſing, but Miniſters, *Fox pag.*1105.*col.*2.

Pag.1010.1.8.

And for further evidence. 1. Ieremie Patriarke of Conſtantinople, alleageth thus out of Chryſoſtome, who citeth that ſaying of the Prophet Iſay 43.25. I am he that putteth away thine iniquitie for mine owne ſake : Whereupon he inferreth, Hoc eſt meum proprium, hoc mea bonitatis peculiare opus : This is proper unto me, and a peculiar worke of my goodneſſe. The power then of looſing and binding is onely in Chriſt, the reſt are but miniſters thereof.

Cenſur. Oriental.Eccleſ.c.6.

2 Zaga Zabo ſaith that their Patriarke granteth no indulgences, Id ad Deum ſolum ſpectare credimus : we beleeve it belongeth onely unto God.

Damianus a Goes de morib.Æthiop.

3 Latter confeſſ. of Helvetia,c.18. Chriſt doth not lay the government on other mens ſhoulders, but doth ſtill keepe and uſe his owne power, &c. There is another power of dutie, or miniſteriall power limited by him, who hath full and abſolute power, and this is more like a miniſterie, than a dominion.

Harm.ſect.11. p.343.

4 For the Romane Church, ſee before the decrees of Gratian, and the Maſter of Sentences.

The fourth part, whether ſtraightwayes whatſoever be looſed or bound by the miniſterie of men upon earth, be ſo in heaven.

The Papiſts.

AN expreſſe power (ſay they) is given unto Prieſts to remit and retaine ſinnes : And Chriſt promiſeth, that whoſe ſinnes ſoever they forgive, they are forgiven of God, and whoſe ſinnes ſoever they retaine, they are retained of God, *Rhemiſt. annot.Ioh.*20.*ſect.*5. Whereby this appeareth to bee their opinion, which is manifeſt alſo by the practice of their Church, that at the will and pleaſure of every Prieſt exerciſing the keyes upon earth, men are bound and looſed in heaven.

82.Error.

They ground this their opinion upon the generalitie of the words : Whoſoever ſinnes you remit, they are remitted, *Ioh.*20.23. and *Matth.*18.18. Whatſoever you binde in earth, ſhall bee bound in heaven.

Iohn.20.23.
Matth.18.18.

Anſ. Theſe places are not ſo to be underſtood, as though God were bound to ratifie every decree of men upon earth : for firſt this power is given to all lawfull Paſtors which doe hold the Apoſtolike faith, not to Idolatrous, ignorant, and blaſphemous Prieſts, ſuch as moſt, if not all, of the Popiſh ſort are. Secondly, they muſt decree in the earth according to Gods will: Wherefore Iohn 20.22. firſt Chriſt breatheth his ſpirit upon his Apoſtles, and then giveth them their commiſſion, ſignifying hereby, that they muſt execute this power as they ſhall bee directed by Gods ſpirit: and Matth. 18. 20. it followeth, that they muſt be aſſembled in the name of Chriſt; that is, according to Chriſts rule and the direction of his word, they muſt binde and looſe, and not at their owne diſcretion.

The Proteſtants.

THat no ſentence or decree of men bindeth or looſeth before God in heaven, but that which is pronounced according to the will and pleaſure of God, and by the warrant of his word, the Scripture every where teacheth us.

Pro.26.2. Iſay 5.20. Pro.17.15. Argum. 1. Proverbs 26.2. *As the ſparrow by flying eſcapeth, ſo the curſe that is cauſeleſſe ſhall not come. Iſay.*5.20. *Woe unto them that ſpeake good of evill, and evill of good. He that juſtifieth the wicked and condemneth the juſt, they are both an abomination to God, Prov.*17. 15. Wherefore a Prieſt binding a penitent man, and looſing a wicked man, doth flatly tranſgreſſe the law and rule of Gods word; neither ſhall his ſentence be ratified in heaven.

*Arg.*2. In ſaying that whoſoever ſinnes the Prieſt bindeth or looſeth, his ſentence ſtandeth in effect before God, they muſt needs admit one or both of theſe abſurdities; either to grant, that a Prieſt cannot erre in diſpenſing of the keyes, which were too ſhamefull a ſaying, to give ſo great a priviledge to every ignorant and ſimple Prieſt, (ſuch as their Church hath great ſtore of) which no mortall man can have; S. Paul giveth warning to Timothie, who was more than a common or ordinarie Miniſter, that 1 Tim.5.22. he lay not his hands ſuddenly upon any. But if Timothie, ſo excellent a man, had been free from erring in executing his function, this exhortation of S. Paul had beene needleſſe and ſuperfluous. Or elſe they muſt ſay that the judgement of mens ſoules is committed unto them: for if, as they pronounce upon men on earth, even ſo it fareth with them before God; then the ſalvation and damnation of men dependeth of their ſentence. But the Scripture ſaith, Doe not judge thy brother, for we ſhall all appeare
Rom.14.10. *before the judgement ſeat of Chriſt, Rom.*14.10. Men therefore are not Judges to pronounce who are ſaved or damned, but the judgement muſt be committed to Chriſt.

But who knoweth not that the Popiſh Church doth arrogate unto themſelves this power, to define who are Saints in heaven, and whoſe ſoules are tormented in hell? thus they dealt with Iohn Huſſe, having condemned him, they ſet a crowne of paper upon his head pictured with devils, ſaying unto him; Now wee commit thy ſoule to the devill. At the burning of that worthie ſervant of God and bleſſed Martyr Iohn Frith, one Doctor Cooke, a foule mouthed Papiſt, bid the people to pray no more
Fox pag.1036. col.2. for him, than they would for a dogge. And thus they take the Lords office out of his hand, in taking Pag.946.1.4. Edit. ultim. upon them to be judges of men.

Argum. 3. I will conclude with Auguſtines words, Gratia tua & miſericordia deputo, quod peccata mea tanquam glaciem ſolviſti: I doe impute it to thy grace and mercie, that thou haſt reſolved my ſins as yce: *Confeſſ.lib.*2.*c.*7. it is then Gods grace and mercie, not mans miniſterie that remitteth ſins.

With Auguſtine accordeth antiquitie, *Concil. Aquiſgranenſ. cap.*37. Tunc vera eſt abſolutio præſidentis, cum æterni arbitrium ſequitur judicis, ut Lazarum prius Chriſtus mortuum vivificavit, qui vivus egreſſus poſtea à diſcipulis ſolutus eſt: Then the Rector abſolveth aright when he followeth the will of the eternall Judge, as Chriſt firſt did revive Lazarus being dead; and then bad his Apoſtles looſe him.

Nicholaus 1. epiſt. ad Michaelem: Qui ligati ſunt ligare, & qui ipſi mortui ſunt alios mortificare non poſſunt: They cannot binde others that are bound themſelves, nor mortifie others being dead themſelves. But many Prieſts themſelves are dead and bound in their ſinnes; how then can they binde others?

*Leodienſ.epiſtol.cont.Paſchal.*2. Dicimus cum Gregorio legandi & ſolvendi poteſtate ſe privat, qui ſubjectos pro ſuo velle, non eorum merito ligat, aut ſolvit: We ſay with Gregorie, he doth deprive himſelfe of the power of binding and looſing, which doth bind or looſe his inferiours after his owne fancie, not according to their deſert.

This alſo is the ſentence of their decrees: *Cauſ.*11.*qu.*3.*c.*46. Gelaſius; Neminem poteſt iniqua gravare ſententia: An unjuſt ſentence can hurt no man: therefore he need not deſire to be abſolved from that ſentence, wherewith he is not bound. Cap 62.Gregor.Tum vera eſt abſolutio, &c. Then the abſolution of the Preſident or Prelate is good, when he followeth the will of the eternall Judge.

Likewiſe the Maſter of Sentences, diſtinct. 18.*lib.*4.h. Interdum qui foras mittitur, &c. Sometime he that is thruſt out of the Church is within, and he that is within, is out of the Church.

Walter Brute holy confeſſor, ſheweth how that Prieſts taking upon them to be judges of men, doe more than Chriſt did in the daies of his fleſh, who would not take upon him to be a Judge, or to puniſh ſinners according to the quantitie of their ſinnes, but hath reſerved that for his ſecond comming:
1 Cor.4.5. And againſt ſuch he applyeth that ſaying of S. Paul, 1.Cor.4. *Judge not before the time, untill the comming of the Lord, who ſhall diſcloſe the ſecrets of hearts, &c. Fox pag.*492.

Iohn Lambert holy Martyr: The declaration or miniſterie of the Prieſt doth not any thing availe to looſe any perſon, unleſſe he that ſhould be looſed give credence unto the word miniſtred or ſhew-
Pag.1010.1.2. ed by the Prieſt, Fox pag 1105. *col.*2. Ergo, the ſentence of the Prieſt doth not abſolutely binde.

Other Chriſtian Churches herein conſent: 1. Ieremie Patriarke of Conſtantinople, thus confeſſeth: Ipſa peccata dimittendi poteſtas non ſimpliciter, neque abſolute conceſſa eſt, ſed in reſipientis, obedientia, &c. This power to remit ſinnes is not ſimple or abſolutely granted, but it conſiſteth in the obedience of the penitent, conſenting with him, to whom the charge of his ſoule is committed: as it is thus written, I ſay unto you, that whatſoever two of you ſhall agree upon one earth, &c. whatſoever they aske, it ſhall be given them of my father.

Cenſur. Orien-tal. Eccleſ. c. 3.

2. Zaga Zabo confeſſeth, that it belongeth to the Patriarke to proceed in excommunication, but it is adverſus contumaces, againſt the ſtubburne and obſtinate: where wicked obſtinacie is not found, there the ſentence of excommunication bindeth not.

Damianus a Goes de morib. Æthiop.

3. Confeſ. of Bohemia, artic. 5. they bring in that ſaying of Ambroſe, that if a man at the poynt of death be abſolved, that ſought it not before, I dare not ſay (ſaith he) that he departeth hence in good caſe, &c. remiſſion then of ſinnes doth not alwayes follow before God, upon mans abſolution here: and againe in the ſame confeſſion cap. 9. Prieſts ought not to uſe the keyes of the Lord otherwiſe, than according to the meaning and will of Chriſt, &c. leſt that bee fulfilled, which the Lord ſaith by his Prophet, I will curſe your bleſſings.

4 For the Romane Church, ſee the decrees of Gratian alleaged before.

The fifth queſtion, concerning the lawfulneſſe of marriage in Miniſters.

THis queſtion hath three parts: firſt, whether it be expedient or requiſite that all Miniſters ſhould be tied unto ſingle life. Secondly, whether men twice married are to be admitted into the Miniſterie. Thirdly, whether Miniſters having entred into holy orders, ought to renounce the ſocietie of their wives before married.

The firſt part, whether it be lawfull for Miniſters to marrie.

The Papiſts.

BEllarmine confeſſeth, that ſingle life is not impoſed upon Miniſters by the law of God, for there is no precept either in the old or new Teſtament, that forbiddeth Miniſters to marrie: but it is a poſitive law of the Church, moſt ancient and moſt juſt, kept and obſerved even ſince the Apoſtles time. And therefore it is not now lawfull for Miniſters to marrie, cap. 18. lib. 1. de Clericis.

83 Error.

Argum. 1. 1 Tim. 2. 3. The Apoſtle ſaith, that no man that warreth, entangleth himſelfe with the affaires of this life: But to be married and to have care of houſhold, are counted amongſt the affaires and buſineſſe of this life: Ergo, a Miniſter who is the Lords ſouldier, ought not to entangle himſelfe therewith, Bellarmine.

1 Tim. 2. 3.

Anſ. Firſt, the Jeſuite before confeſſed, that they had no Scripture againſt Miniſters marriage, how is it then, that now he pleadeth Scripture? Secondly we muſt put the Jeſuite in mind of his owne expoſition of this place, lib. 5. de pontif. c. 10. where, this place being alleaged againſt the temporall dominion of Eccleſiaſticall perſons, he anſwereth, that this place only forbiddeth negotiationes, and mercimonia, merchandiſe and trafficke in the world, not regimen politicum, politicall regiment. If then the politicall care of a Citie, Province, or Common-wealth be no impediment, in his judgement, to the ſpirituall warfare: much leſſe, without all queſtion is the domeſticall care of one familie, the charge of wife and children. Thirdly, we utterly denie, that marriage is an hinderance or let to the calling of Miniſters: nay, we ſay, that it is an helpe and comfort to thoſe that have not the proper gift of continencie.

Argum. 2. Saint Paul would not have women admitted to be widowes of the Church, that had a purpoſe to marrie, 1 Tim. 5. 11. much leſſe they that are married ſhould be admitted to miniſter the Sacrament, Rhemiſt. annotat. ibid.

1 Tim. 5. 11.

Anſ. Firſt, the reaſon is not alike: for ſuch women as had no husbands were fitteſt for the ſervice of the Church, becauſe they were free from other domeſticall attendance, as wives are not, which muſt wait of their husbands: but marriage in this behalfe is no impediment to Miniſters, but rather an helpe, while they have one at home that careth for their domeſticall affaires. Secondly, if the married eſtate be not fit to miniſter or receive the Sacrament, then in thoſe Churches where they received the Sacrament every day, there ſhould have bin no marriage at al. Thirdly, S. Paul would have no widow choſen under 60 yeeres, in which age, the heat of luſt being abated, there is no need of marriage: but the caſe is otherwiſe in Miniſters, who in the ſtrength of their age are admitted, and had need of that remedie, if they be not endued with the gift of continencie. But if it were ſo, that a Miniſter ſhould not be admitted before 70. or 80. yeeres, which in a man is no more, in reſpect of procreation then 50. or 60. in a woman, the injunction then of ſingle life would not ſeeme ſtreight. Thus then is this argument anſwered.

Argum. 3. The Jeſuite giveth divers inſtances, wherein marriage is a let and impediment to Miniſters: As, it hindereth their prayer, their preaching, their almes and liberalitie to the poore, for they have wife and children to care for, Bellarmine.

Anſw. Firſt belike you eſteeme of marriage, as of an unholy and unpure thing, that a man can neither pray, nor doe the office of a Chriſtian, performing the dutie to his wife: and indeed one of your companions calleth marriage a prophanation of ſacred orders. Greg. Martin. diſcovet. cap, 15. ſect. 11. Heb.13.3. Whereas the Apoſtle calleth it an honourable ſtate. And it was inſtituted in Paradiſe, whereas before the fall of man there was no uncleane thing. Secondly, we denie not, but that abuſe of marriage both in Miniſters and other Lay-men, is an impediment to all holy actions: and therefore S. Paul giveth generall counſell to all, 1 Cor.7.19. both Miniſters and others, that they which have wives ſhould be as though they had none, that is, ſhould live ſoberly in marriage, and not give themſelves to the wantonneſſe of the fleſh. Thirdly, neither doth marriage hinder hoſpitalitie: for S. Paul requiring that a Miniſter ſhould 1 Tim.3.2. be harborous, 1 Tim. 3. 2. giveth alſo rules concerning the government of his familie, his wife and children, verſ. 4. 11. For to whom may he better commit the care of houſhold affaires than to his wife? And that family which is guided by a carefull and godly huſwife, we ſee by experience, to yeeld more reliefe to the poore, and give entertainment to ſtrangers, than thoſe houſes which have none. And where it is objected, that Miniſters will care altogether for their children: It hath bin ſeene that ſingle Prieſts in time of Poperie, have been more covetous and greedy to enrich their kindred, than married Miniſters have cared for the proviſion of their children. And hereupon divers Canons were made to reſtraine their covetous deſires to advance their kindred; as Cauſ. 12. qu. 1. c. 27. Pelag. 2. Nulli Epiſcopor. &c. It ſhall not be lawfull for any Biſhop to convert the moveable or immoveable things of the Church to his owne uſe. Cauſ. 16. qu. 7. c. 3. Gregor. 7. decreeth againſt ſuch Biſhops, as did conferre oblations upon their ſervitors, and kinſmen. And as for a moderate care to be taken to make proviſion for wife and children, your owne Canons allow it, Cauſ. 12. qu. 1. c. 19. Epiſcopi de rebus propriis, &c. Biſhops may leave to their heires their owne gotten goods: and c. 21. Poteſtatem habeat moriens, &c. A Biſhop dying hath power to diſpoſe of his proper goods to whom he will; Fortaſſis uxorem habet, &c. It may be he hath a wife, children, kinſmen, or ſervants.

Argum. 4. Single life by the Apoſtle is preferred before the married eſtate, and therefore 1 Cor.7.33. fitteſt for Miniſters: for he that is married careth for the things of the world, 1 Corinth. 7. 33. Rhemiſt.

Anſ. Firſt, ſingle life is preferred before marriage in all men, and not only in Miniſters: And therefore as Lay-men are not bound to ſingle life though it be in it ſelfe more convenient, ſo neither ought miniſters to be. Secondly, though a thing in it ſelfe be beſt, yet is it not univerſally beſt for every man: as riches are better than povertie, becauſe they are Gods bleſſing; yet is it not beſt for every man to be rich; God ſeeth it good, that ſome men ſhould be poore: So ſingle life is the beſt for thoſe that have the gift of chaſtitie, that can with a quiet conſcience live ſingle: otherwiſe matrimonie were much better: for Saint Paul, that wiſheth that every one would live ſingle as he did, yet afterward ſaith, It is better to marrie than to burne. So that by the Apoſtles judgement, to marrie is beſt for him that hath not the gift of continencie, Iewel. pag. 232. defenſ. Apolog.

Argum. 5. Wincheſter reaſoneth thus, As a father may forbid certaine of his children to marrie, ſo may a King in his kingdome forbid certaine of his ſubjects to marrie, that is, all the Prieſts of the Realme, Fox pag. 1793.

Anſw. Firſt, the father hath no ſuch power to keepe his child from marriage, if need require: for the fathers will herein dependeth upon the neceſſitie which his child hath to marrie, as S. Paul teach- 1 Cor.7.37. eth, 1 Cor. 7. 37. Secondly, that which the word of God hath left free for all men, by the law of the Prince cannot be reſtrained: and if the King may forbid marriage to any, he may as well enjoyne laymen ſingle life, as prieſts: but ſuch a law to reſtraine the lay ſort from marriage, were manifeſt tyranny, and therefore the other reſtraint would ſeeme hard and unjuſt. Thirdly, by this argument it appeareth, that theſe cruell prohibitions of marriage are built upon the lawes only and ordinances of men, neither warranted by Gods word, nor allowed by the ancient practices of the Church, as our adverſaries would beare us in hand.

Bellarmine here countenanceth out this matter with great ſhew of antiquitie; and firſt he produceth divers Canons of Councels, which I will briefly take a view of. Firſt, Ancyran. concil. c. 10. it was decreed, that deacons in their ordination not proteſting that they would marrie, ſhould not be ſuffered afterward; but if they did proteſt to marrie, they might, for they are therein diſpenſed with by the Biſhop.

Anſw. Firſt, this Canon maketh more againſt them for Miniſters marriage, which is here upon proteſtation permitted, which is not ſuffered now in the popiſh Church. Secondly, if the Biſhop may diſpenſe with marriage of Miniſters, then is it not a divine or apoſtolicall, but an humane and politicall device. Thirdly, it is not the diſpenſation of the Biſhop that maketh marriage free, but the libertie granted by the Apoſtle, which is not to be abridged, as diſtinct. 27. cap. 5. it is alleaged out of the Toletan Councell, that ſubdeacons being asked in their ordination, of their deſire or purpoſe of marriage, ſhould not be denied, conceſſam ab Apoſtolo licentiam, the licence granted unto them by the Apoſtle. Fourthly, Marriage was then free by proteſtation, but now, velit, nolit, will they, nill they, the decree of Pope Martin is in force, a man is not left to his choiſe, decret. Martin Cauſ. 27. qu. 1. c. 8. Why doe they then alleage antiquitie, and yet take away the privilege of antiquitie?

Secondly, he objecteth the Councell of Neocæſarea, can.1. Presbyter ſi uxorem, &c. If a Presbyter marrie a wife, he ſhall be depoſed from his order.

Anſw. Firſt, this Canon may be ſuſpected, for how is it like that the Greeke Church would decree againſt the marriage of Prieſts, ſeeing that Stephanus before this affirmeth in his decrees, Aliter ſe habet Orientalis, &c. The Eaſt Churches have another tradition than the Romane Church? for their prieſts, deacons and ſubdeacons are coupled in marriage: either Stephanus muſt be accuſed of untruth, or this Canon is forged. Secondly, though this Synod permit not prieſts to take new wives, yet they forbid them not to retaine their old, *can.*8. Hee that keepeth an adulterous wife, muſt not miniſter: they might then keepe a wife, not an adultereſſe. Thirdly, this Synod, *can.*7. ſeemeth to condemne ſecond marriage: they forbid the Miniſter conſentire, to conſent to ſecond marriage, or to be preſent at the marriage feaſt. Fourthly, this Synod was provinciall, conſiſting of 17. Biſhops, and ſeemeth to be of no great authoritie.

Thirdly, he urgeth the Nicene Councell 1. which was generall, *can.*3. Interdixit ſancta Synodus: The ſacred Synod forbiddeth a Biſhop, Prieſt or Deacon, to have any woman in their houſe, beſide their mother, ſiſter, Aunt: a wife is not here mentioned.

Anſw. Firſt, this Synod forbiddeth them to have, mulierem extraneam, vel ſubintroductam, any ſtrange woman ſecretly or by ſtealth brought in, beſide thoſe which are named: now the wife is no ſtrange woman, and therefore not forbidden. Secondly, if the Councell had concluded againſt marriage, they had done contrary to the ancient tradition, which was and is yet in force in the Greeke Church, as Stephanus ſaith in his decree, which is not like. Thirdly, *Socrates lib.*1.*c.*8. reporteth how that the Synod would have decreed againſt the marriage of Miniſters, but was ſtayed by Paphnutius, who ſhewed the inconvenience thereof, whoſe ſentence the whole Synod commended: and therefore it cannot be, that any ſuch thing was decreed. Fourthly, the Canons of the Nicene Councell may be ſuſpected, that they are not the right Canons; for Athanaſius ſaith, there were 70. Canons of this Synod, diſtinct. 16.*c.*12. but now there are but 20. And cap. 13. Stephanus ſaith, that many of them are loſt: and beſide it appeareth to be ſo, becauſe there is not one Canon extant againſt the Arrian hereſie, for the which the Synod was chiefly aſſembled: as alſo another notable thing concluded in the Nicene, was as touching the uniforme obſervation of Eaſter, whereof there is not any mention in theſe 20. Canons: ſo that it is very like that theſe ancient Canons are changed and altered, and as ſome have beene left out, ſo other are put in their ſtead.

Fourthly, the Trullane Synod being the 6. generall, *can.*6. decreeth, that neither Biſhops, prieſts, deacons or ſubdeacons, ſhould after their Ordination take them wives.

Anſw. Firſt, this Synod, can. 13. permitteth Prieſts and Deacons to have the companie of their wives, whom they married before, and thoſe that would ſeparate them, they decree to be depoſed: and this the Synod agreed upon, though they knew the cuſtome of the Romane Church to bee contrary; ſo that this Synod maketh more for the marriage of Miniſters than againſt it. Secondly, Bellarmine, though he be now contented to urge this Councell againſt us, yet at other times taketh to himſelfe great libertie to confute and reject it: And indeed it ſeemeth to be of no great authoritie: for *can.*2. they allow the Canon of Cyprian for rebaptizing of heretikes: And this Synod hath beſide ſome ridiculous Canons, as *can.*56. they forbid the eating of cheeſe and egges in Lent, *can.*67. Damnamus eos, &c. We doe condemne them that doe by any kind of act dreſſe the blood of beaſts, and ſo eat it: they forbid the eating of blood. Thirdly, *can.*55. this Synod preſcribeth a law to the Romane Church, that whoſoever ſhould faſt Saturdayes, ſhould be depoſed: if this Synod ſerve their turne againſt marriage, it ſerveth our turne as well againſt their Saturday faſt. Fourthly, *can.*12. this Councell forbiddeth Biſhops the company of their wives, contrarie to the 5. Canon of the Apoſtles, and they take upon them in direct words, to correct the Apoſtles Canons: Non divinis Apoſtolis, &c. We doe not contrarie the Apoſtles, thus decreeing, but willing to bring the Church to a better order, &c. They do take upon them to make better orders for the Church than the Apoſtles, which is great preſumption. We ſee then, what is to be thought of this Councell, yet it maketh as much for us, as againſt us.

Fifthly, he objecteth Carthag. 2.*can.*2. Carthag. 5.*can.*3. *& concil. African. can.*37. in all which Canons, Biſhops, prieſts, deacons, are enjoyned to abſtaine from their wives.

Anſw. Whether ſhall we take to be of greater authoritie, the Canons of the Apoſtles, or the Canons of Councels, generall Synods or provinciall? The 6. Canon of the Apoſtles decreeth Biſhops and Prieſts to be excommunicate if they refuſed their wives: *Trullan.*6.*general.can.*13. decreeth them to be depoſed, that forbid Prieſts or Deacons the company of their wives: they only reſtraine Biſhops. But theſe Africane Councels make a generall reſtraint for Biſhops, prieſts and deacons. Secondly, they notwithſtanding give libertie to all other degrees, ſubdeacons, and other; as *African. can.*37. Cæteros autem Clericos, &c. But other of the Clergie we will not have compelled to forbeare their wives, but let the cuſtome of every Church be obſerved: but afterward ſubdeacons alſo were reſtrained. Thus we ſee how theſe Councels are contrary one to another.

Sixthly, he produceth *concil.*1. *ſub Silveſt.can.*1. *Arelatenſ.*2.*can.*2. *Turonenſ.*2.*can.*20. *Agathenſ. c.*9. *Aurelianenſ.*3.*can.*2. in all which Canons it is not permitted, that any of the Clergie from ſubdeacons upward, ſhould either marrie wives, or companie with their wives, if they had any.

Anſ. Firſt, ſome of theſe Synods are thought to be depraved and corrupted: as firſt, the Councell held at Rome under Silveſter,firſt, it ſaith,*can.*1.that Conſtantine, was baptized by Silveſter,whereas other ſtories ſay, that he was baptized by Euſebius Biſhop of Nicomedia. *Theod.lib.*1.*c.*32. Secondly,this Councell is ſaid to have been celebrate the very ſame time, that the Nicene councell was held; and that Conſtantine was preſent, and ſubſcribed to this Councell, and 133. Biſhops of the Greeke Church beſide: but how could they be there,and here too at the ſame time? Thirdly c.1.it is decreed, that none of the lay ſort ſhould be preſent, and yet *cap.*10. Calphurinus Preſident of the Citie, was preſent and ſubſcribed. Fourthly, this Synod beareth date *cap.*20. 3 Calend. of Iune, when Conſtantinus and Priſcus,or rather Criſpus were Conſuls: the Niceno beareth date when Paulinus and Iulianus were Conſuls,which was the yeere after: ſo that this ſynod by this account, ſhould goe before the Nicene,which is untrue, for that was the firſt generall, and the Epitomizer of the Councels confeſſeth in theſe words, In exemplaribus, &c. In the copies of this Romane ſynod there is intolerabilis depravatio, an intolerable depravation: Barthol. Caranza. Fifthly, if there were ſo many Biſhops of the Greeke Church preſent, it is not like that they would agree to any ſuch Canon contrary to the cuſtome of their owne Church. Sixthly,can. 2. Silveſter approveth all the acts of the Nicene Councell, whereof this was one, that they would not preſcribe ſingle life to the Clergie at the motion of Paphnutius, how then is it like that he would decree the contrary in this Romane Synod? Seventhly the inhibition for the marriage of ſubdeacons was not generall,no,not in the Latine Church,till Gregorie his time: for in Sicilie till then they had a cuſtome for their ſubdeacons to marrie: as it may appeare *diſtinct.*32.c. But ſuch a cuſtome contrary to a decree of a generall Councell at Rome could not have ſo long continued.

Concerning the ſecond Councell of Arles:firſt,I anſwer, that many things therein may be thought to be forged; for it is ſaid to have been celebrate in the time of Sylveſter: yet *Can.*28, mention is made of the Vaſenſian Councell,which was held under Leo 1. above an hundred yeere after, Secondly, Can. 3. this Councell only inhibiteth the company of women, à gradu Diaconatus, from the degree of Deaconſhip and upward: ſo that Subdeacons are exempted. Thirdly, it giveth leave, that they may have, in ſolatio ſua, for their ſolace in their houſe,their mother,ſiſter,daughter,neece, & uxorem converſam,and their wife converted: But what ſolace ſhould they have in their wives, if it were not lawfull to enjoy them as their wives.

Now to the Councell of Turone we anſwer: Firſt, it doth mitigate certaine Canons made before againſt the marriage of the Clergie. *Can.*2. Ut ſacerdoi,vel Levita,&c. That a Prieſt or Deacon, that begetteth children,ſhould not be barred from the Communion,as our predeceſſors have decreed:but we willing to moderate the ſtrictneſſe of this conſtitution,doe decree,that ſuch be not promoted to a higher degree,&c. Thus it doth appeare to be but an humane conſtitution,which they did ſometimes mitigate, ſometimes aggravate as they thought good. Secondly, in the decree againſt Miniſters mariage,they doe abuſe that place of Scripture,qui in carne ſunt, They that are in the fleſh, cannot pleaſe God: which have no ſuch meaning: and in their ſenſe then, none that are married,that is,in the fleſh, can pleaſe God. They alſo call married Miniſters, coinquinatos, & contaminatos, defiled and contaminate:but contrary, the Apoſtle calleth the marriage bed undefiled, *Heb.*13.4.I think the Papiſts themſelves are aſhamed of ſuch ſtuffe. Thirdly, it was but a provinciall Councell of eight Biſhops, and of no great authoritie.

Heb.13.4.

Concerning the Councell of Agatha,We anſwer: Firſt, it hath divers Canons againſt ſome ſuperſtitions of Poperie: as *Can.*19.they admit no women to profeſſe,ſingle life before 40.yeeres.*Can.*56. they condemne the idle life of Monkes. *Can.*61. they account it inceſt for a man to marrie his couſin germane,or brothers wife,contrary to the practice of the Church of Rome. If this Councell ſerve their turne againſt us in this point of marriage, we will oppoſe it againſt them in the reſt. Secondly, they only enjoyne Prieſts and Deacons to abſtaine from their wives, no mention is made of Subdeacons, Thirdly, *Can.*10.they allow Miniſters to have their neece with them in the houſe, and by the Popes law a man may marrie his neece, though the woman cannot marry her nephew. Now, who ſeeth it not how unreaſonable a thing it is, that a ſtrange woman ſhould be received into a Miniſters houſe, and his owne wife excluded? it is evident that ſuperſtition was working even in thoſe dayes.

In the ſeventh place, he alleageth, *Concil. Elibertin. c.*33. *Toletan.*2.*cap.*1. *Toletan.*4.*cap.*26. *Toletan.*8. cap. 6.in all which Canons both Biſhops, Prieſts, Deacons, and Subdeacons are forbidden the uſe of their wives.

Anſ. Firſt, concerning the Elibertine Councell, we anſwer: firſt, it is not like,that this Councell being kept not long after the Nicene,which at the motion of Paphnutius,would decree nothing concerning the abſtaining of Clergie men from their wives, ſed hoc in uniuſcujuſque voluntate dimiſſit, but left every man to his owne will: as Gratian witneſſeth, *diſtinct.*31.cap. 12. that this provinciall would decree againſt a generall. Secondly, whereas the 6. Canon of the Apoſtles doth excommunicate them of the Clergie,that ſeparate their wives from their companie, as the 6. generall Trullan expoundeth that Canon: how dare any provinciall conclude againſt the Apoſtles, whoſe Canons, they ſay, they are? And this anſwer may ſerve in generall to the reſt of the Spaniſh Councels urged by Bellarmine. Thirdly, this Synod ſeemeth to be contrarie to it ſelfe: for *can.*65. Hee of the Clergie, that doth not projicere,caſt of his wife, committing adulterie, ſhal be put from the Communion: for whereas, *can.*33. they would have them refraine their wives company, what is that elſe, but to give them occaſion to commit adulterie ? and what need they now caſt off their wives for diſhoneſtie, whereas they are commanded before to caſt off their honeſt wives ? theſe things agree not. Fourthly, this ſeemeth to be an erroneous Councell, and may be thought to condemne Magiſtracie as a prophane thing: for can.56. the Magiſtrate, during the yeere of his office, is forbidden to come to the Church, as though the Church were by his preſence prophaned.

Secondly, the ſecond Toletan Councell maketh nothing againſt the marriage of Miniſters, but only forbiddeth the familiaritie of women, cap.2. And cap.1. it decreeth rather the contrary, that both Clergie men which were ordained to that profeſſion by their parents in their infancie, and Monkes alſo at eighteene may marrie, if they will.

Thirdly, the fourth Toletan, cap.43. decreeth againſt thoſe Clerkes that doe marrie, ſine Epiſcopi conſultu, without the leave or advice of the Biſhop, ſo that with his leave it might be lawfull for them to marrie. And cap.26. which is alleaged by Bellarmine Prieſts and Deacons are required, when they are ordained to make profeſſion to the Biſhop, ut caſte & pure vivant, to live chaſtly and purely, which may be done in marriage. And then it followeth, ut dum eos talis profeſſio obligaverit, that their profeſſion may binde them ; ſo then their promiſe only and profeſſion bindeth them, not the law of God. Therefore by this Canon, where no ſuch promiſe or profeſſion is made by Miniſters at their ordination, they may lawfully marrie.

Fourthly, to the eighth Councell Toletan our anſwer is this: Firſt, we doe not greatly force of this Councell, being after the yeere of our Lord 640. when as ſuperſtition began to gather ſtrength. Secondly, as it may appeare by this, that this Synod ſeemeth to make the marriage of Miniſters worſe than fornication: can.6. Relatum eſt nobis, It is told us, that certaine ſubdeacons are not onely defiled with the uncleaneſſe of the fleſh, but alſo (which is a ſhame to ſpeake) are coupled to new wives. This parentheſis, dictu nefas, (it is a ſhame to ſpeake) and the other clauſe, but alſo, being referred to their marriage, and not to their fornication, doe ſerve to aggravate the firſt, and extenuate the other. So Toletan.9.can.10. they call the marriage of Miniſters deteſtandum, deteſtabile, and their children, proles pollutione nata, borne in pollution, or uncleaneſſe, which is a foule aſſertion, and not farre from blaſphemie. I marvell Bellarmine would conceale this ſtuffe that maketh for him. Thirdly, this Synod, can.7. impoſeth ſingle life upon Clerkes againſt their will, contrary to all ancient Canons: as cap.7. it decreeth againſt thoſe, Quiquoniam, &c. Who, becauſe when orders were impoſed upon them, they pretended it was againſt their will, therefore they will not forſake their former marriage: the Synod decreeth thus ; That as baptiſme is imparted to many both unwilling, and not knowing what is done unto them, and yet it holdeth ; ſo orders alſo, will they, nill they, ſhould hold. It is againſt all reaſon, that either orders or ſingle life ſhould be impoſed upon any againſt their will : as for the compariſon of baptiſme, the caſe is not like. Firſt, baptiſme is Gods ordinance for all both men and children ; ſo is not ſingle life for Miniſters. Secondly, children are baptiſed, not knowing any thing becauſe they are infants, and yet underſtand not, but orders are not fit for children. Thirdly, that any againſt their wils are baptiſed, it can no way be juſtified : if they meane children, it is an improper ſpeech to ſay they are unwilling, having as yet no uſe of their will: if they ſpeake of men, none are to be baptiſed but upon confeſſion of their ſinnes, and profeſſion of their faith, Matth.3. which ſheweth they are willing. And herein this Councell is directly contrary to the ſecond Toletan, cap.1. which giveth libertie to Subdeacons, if they proteſt, at the time of their ordination, that they will marrie, they gave them leave ſo to doe: and this is ratified in your owne decrees, diſtinct.28. c.17. And Gregorie alſo is more equall, who thus writeth of certaine Subdeacons in Sicilie, that were married : Durum & incompetens, &c. It ſeemeth to me an hard and incovenient thing, that hee which never promiſed chaſtitie, ſhould be compelled to be ſeparated from his wife, diſtinct.31.c.1. Wherefore this decree is hard and intolerable, that impoſeth ſingle life, where they proteſted the contrarie. Fourthly I doe oppoſe againſt this 8. Councell Toletan, the firſt Toletan, which as it was more ancient by more than two hundred yeeres, ſo is it of greater authoritie ; there in the preface of the Synod, Patronus the Preſident thus proteſteth, Mihi placet, &c. I thinke it meet that we keepe the ſtatutes of the Nicene Synod, and depart not from the ſame. But the Nicene decreed nothing as touching the ſingle life of the Clergie, but left it free. Againe, in the 21. Canon, Qui dixerit conjugia hominum, &c. He that ſaith the marriages of men, which are lawfull by the divine law to be execrable, accurſed be he. But the marriages of Miniſters are lawfull by Gods law ; this, our adverſaries doe confeſſe, making it but a conſtitution of the Church : Ergo, they which condemne their marriages, are under this curſe. And thus I think we have ſufficiently anſwered the Jeſuites oppoſitions out of the Councels: which I have ſhewed either to be forged, or elſe erroneous, or contrary one to another, or concluding directly againſt Scripture. Now it followeth for further anſwer, that the Canons alſo which doe eſtabliſh and ratifie the marriage of Miniſters, be likewiſe produced, which I have inſerted in the end of our arguments that here follow.

The Proteſtants.

THat it is not only lawfull but convenient, that all men both Miniſters and others, that have not received a proper gift of continencie, ſhould marrie ; and that it is agreeable and conſonant to the word of God ; thus we ſhew it.

1 The Scriptures are moſt plaine for the marriage of Miniſters, 1 Tim.3.2. S. Paul ſaith, a Biſhop 1 Tim.3.2.

and generally every Miniſter, may be the husband of one wife : and *verſ.*11. their wives are deſcribed how they ought to behave themſelves : Let their wives be honeſt : Ergo, it is lawfull for them to be married. Bellarmine anſwereth, that S. Paul ſpeaketh of the wives which they had before their calling and ordaining, not thoſe which they ſhould marrie after. But there appeareth no ſuch thing out of the text, but rather the contrarie. Firſt, the Apoſtle ſaith, *verſ.*2. Oportet Epiſcopum eſſe,&c. A Biſhop muſt be the husband of one wife : he ſheweth not what he hath beene, but what he is, not of Verſ.11. the wife which he had, but now hath. Secondly, *verſ.*11. Hee deſcribeth what manner of women their wives ought to be, indued with like qualities to their husbands : but if they were not ſtill as their wives, what are they more to them, than other women ? neither ſhould they need to be otherwiſe qualified, than all other Chriſtian women. Thirdly, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of hoſpitalitie, of bringing up of Children, of well governing his houſe, and of Biſhops wives ; how then can he be otherwiſe underſtood, but that their wives ſhould be with them, as helping toward all thoſe domeſticall duties ? Fourthly, S. Paul alſo ſheweth in another place, that he had libertie as well as others, To 1 Cor.9.5. leade about a ſiſter a wife, even after he was an Apoſtle, 1 *Cor.*9. Wherefore it is as lawfull afterward as afore. Bellarmine anſwereth: We muſt thus reade, a Siſter a woman : and it is like they were women, that did miniſter unto the Apoſtles and followed them. We replie : Firſt, the word Siſter doth implie a woman, and therefore it had beene an improper and needleſſe ſpeech, to ſay, a Siſter a woman : therefore we muſt rather reade, a Siſter a wife. Bellarmine replyeth : Firſt, if the Apoſtle underſtood a wife, he would have ſet downe the Greeke word with an article, τὴν γυναῖκα. Anſw. This is a 1 Tim.3.2. 11.12. falſe obſervation, for the Apoſtle, 1 *Timoth.*3.2.11.12. making mention of Biſhops wives, leaveth out the article. Secondly, S. Paul ſaith, a Siſter a woman, inverting the order, for a woman a Siſter, as Acts 1.16. *Peter Act.*1. ſaith, Viri fratres, Men and brethren. Anſw. Indeed your Latine tranſlation hath preſumed to correct the text reading thus : a woman a Siſter : but what boldneſſe is this, when you have no other ſhift, to take upon you to amend the text ? and ſeeing the Apoſtle ſaith, a Siſter a wife, or as you would have, a woman, in the ſingular ; it muſt needs implie a wife : for they had other women, more than one, that miniſtred to them. Secondly, if they were other women which miniſtred of their ſubſtance, what need the Apoſtles to be maintained of the Churches ? If they miniſtred but in their ſervice and attendance, who were more fit to doe it and to follow it from place to place than their wives ? And beſide, if the Apoſtle did meane other women beſide wives, how could hee alleage this inſtance to ſhew that he departed from his right? for he himſelfe refuſed not the miniſterie and bene-Rom.16.1,2. volence of other women ; as of Phebe, *Rom.*16. 1.2. Wherefore this libertie, which the Apoſtle uſed not, was as concerning wives. Thirdly, the phraſe of leading about a Siſter, importeth a ſuperioritie and authoritie, ſuch as the husband hath over his wife. Bellarmine replieth, the Apoſtles had this power over theſe women, not as husbands over their wives, but as teachers over their Diſciples. 1 Cor.7.4. Anſw. Firſt, the Apoſtle uſeth the ſame word, 1 Cor. 7. 4. The woman hath not power over her owne bodie, &c. The uſe of the word ſheweth, what power he meaneth. Secondly, the Apoſtle only had not power, but indeed did uſe that power over both men and women, as his Diſciples, as it may ap-Acts 16.13. peare, Acts 16.13. but here he ſpeaketh of a power, which he uſed not. Laſtly, S. Hierome, though in other places he varieth from himſelfe, yet giveth this rule for the underſtanding of this word : *Tom.*3. ad Ocean. Mulierem autem, &c. A woman (which word is ambiguous in the Greeke tongue) in all theſe places underſtand a wife. Saint Ambroſe alſo Comment. in 1 Tim. 3. upon theſe words, having children, expoundeth it of Biſhops joyned in marriage : Ideo inferiorem poſuit, &c. The Apoſtle put the caſe of the inferiour order, that is, ſuch as were married ; that no man might doubt of the ſupe-Heb.13.3. riour, that is, ſuch as were not coupled in marriage. Another place we have, *Heb.*13.3. Marriage is honourable among all men : Ergo, amongſt Miniſters. Bellarm. If it were meant of all marriages, then to marrie within the degrees of Conſanguinitie, were alſo honourable. Anſw. This is a meere cavill : Firſt, he might have read further, and the bed undefiled : S. Paul therefore ſpeaketh of lawfull marriage. And indeed the other joyning and coupling of men and women together contrary to Gods law, is not to be counted Matrimonie or Wedlocke, but Inceſt rather and Fornication, as the brother to marrie his brothers wife, and ſuch like. Secondly, S. Paul ſaith, not all marriages are honourable, but marriage is honourable for all men ; the generalitie is not of the thing, but of the perſons : wherefore we doe fitly conclude out of this place, that marriage is lawfull and commendable even among Miniſters : argum. Calvin.

1 Cor.7.2. Further, S. Paul ſaith, for avoyding of fornication, let every man have his owne wife, 1 *Cor.*7.2. Here is no reſtraint for Miniſters. Bellarmine : This is to be underſtood of thoſe that have not made a vow of continencie. Anſw. Firſt, our Saviour Chriſt commandeth no ſuch vowes : it is a cruell Antichriſtian yoke laid upon Miniſters, to binde them, when they receive orders, to vow ſingle life : and therefore your Antichriſtian decree ought not to abridge the generall libertie granted by the Apoſtle. Secondly, the end of marriage is generall, to avoid fornication, and therefore the remedie alſo is generall : for every man having not a proper gift of continencie, may be in danger of that inconvenience, if he be denied the ordinarie helpe : Melanct. Secondly Bellarm. This is not a precept of the Apoſtle, but a permiſſion & libertie, that they which feared to fall into fornication, ſhould be joyned to their wives. Anſ. If then the Apoſtle gave libertie to marrie, where fornication is feared ; how dare you abridge that libertie, which God hath made common and free for all ? as it is recited in your owne decrees, *diſtinct.*28.*c.*5. out of the ſecond Toletan Councell, Conceſſum ab Apoſtolo licentiam, &c. The licence to marrie granted by the Apoſtle, we cannot take away, &c. And the Councell there ſpeaketh of the marriage of Miniſters, confeſſing that this libertie to marrie is generall to all, both Miniſters and others.

Againe, 1 *Tim.*4. to forbid marriage is called a doctrine of devils: but the Popiſh Church forbiddeth marriage. Bellarm. We doe not forbid marriage to any, but we require ſingle life of all that are entred into orders: which, it is at their owne choyce to receive or to refuſe. Anſw. Firſt it is neceſſarie that ſome ſhould receive orders, and be conſecrate to the Church miniſterie: wherefore requiring this condition of all ſuch to live ſingle, though particularly you prohibit not this man or that man to marrie, yet generally you prohibit the whole calling, which is worſe. Secondly, if you ſay you do not forbid marriage ſimply to all: no more did the Manichees, for they ſuffered their Schollers and auditors to marrie. And Saint Auguſtines words are generall: Ille prohibet matrimonium, qui illud malum eſſe dicit: Hee forbiddeth marriage, that thinketh it is evill: you therefore forbidding marriage, muſt needes hold opinion that it is wicked and evill. The Councell of Turone, *Can.*2. calleth married Miniſters, contaminatos, contaminate, or defiled, *Toletan.*8.9.20. Deteſtandum connubium, ſaith their marriage is deteſtable. The Papiſts allow theſe Councels, and ſo conſequently condemne marriage in this caſe as evill, counting that unholy and uncleane, which the Lord hath made holy and honourable. There is a ſevere decree againſt ſuch, *Toletan.*1.*can.*21. Qui dixerit conjugia hominum, &c. He that ſhall ſay that the marriages of men, which are lawfull by the divine law, are execrable, is accurſed, &c. But ſo doe the Papiſts count the marriages of Miniſters prophane and uncleane, which are lawfull by the word of God: Ergo, they are accurſed.

Cont. Fauſt. lib.30.cap.6.

*Argum.*2. This reſtraint of the marriage of Miniſters hath not been of ancient time in the Church, but impoſed upon the Church of late, 1000. yeeres after Chriſt: Polycrates Biſhop of Epheſus anno 180. had ſeven of his progenitors before him Biſhops of the ſame Sea. In the Nicene Councell Paphnutius ſtood up, and ſtayed the decree that ſhould have paſt, for reſtraining of the marriage of Miniſters, and it is ſaid, Synodus laudavit ſententiam Paphnutii: The Synod commended Paphnutius ſentence. *Sozomen.lib.*1.*cap.*11. Bellarmine here ſetteth a good face upon it, and ſtoutly denieth the ſtorie, and maketh the author a liar that reporteth it. Thus, when they have no other ſhift, they will refuſe authors bookes, antiquitie. But Gratian doth report it for a true ſtorie, *diſtinct.*31.12. who is of better credit, I thinke with Papiſts, than any of this upſtart popiſh ſect.

Gregorie the father of Gregorie, was biſhop of Nazianzum. Symphoroſa, which was put to death with her ſeven ſonnes under the perſecution of Adrian the Emperour, was the wife of one Getulius Miniſter in the Citie of Tyber, *Fox pag.*45. Cheremon Biſhop of Nilus, under the tyrannie of Maximinus fled with his wife into the Mountaines of Arabia, and was never ſeene againe, *Euſeb. lib.*6. *cap.*42. Fabianus Biſhop of Rome and Martyr was a married man. Saint Cyprian maketh mention of one Numidicus a Presbyter, that was married; *lib.*4. epiſtol. 10. Likewiſe *epiſtol.*8. ad Cornelium, he reporteth thus of Novatus a Prieſt, uterus uxoris, &c. He ſtrooke his wife with his heele being with childe, and killed the child, that ſhe went with: yet he findeth no fault with him for being married, but for abuſing his wife. Divers of the Biſhops of Rome beſide were Biſhops and Prieſts ſonnes: Bonifacius the firſt, the ſonne of Iucundus a Prieſt: Felix Presbyter, the father of Felix the third: Agapetus the firſt, Gordianus his ſonne a Prieſt: Sylverius the ſonne of Hormiſda Biſhop of Rome: Theodorus Pope, ſonne to Theodorus Biſhop of Jeruſalem: Hadrianus ſecond ſonne to Talarus, Biſhop Benedictus the 8. and Iohn 21. his ſucceſſor, both ſonnes to Georg. Epiſcop. Portuenſ. And divers other of them beſide. The Jeſuite can anſwer here nothing elſe, but that theſe ſonnes of Prieſts were borne before their fathers prieſthood: But this is their vaine ſurmiſe and conjecture, ſeeing no ſuch thing is mentioned in the ſtorie. And this ſurmiſe is taken away by the direct words of *Gratian.diſtinct.*56.*c.*2. where after he had rehearſed the names of the aforeſaid Biſhops of Rome, concludeth thus: Quamplures etiam alii inveniuntur de ſacerdotibus nati, &c. And many beſide are found to have governed the Apoſtolike Sea, being borne of Prieſts or Miniſters: which is more than to have ſaid, ſonnes of Prieſts; for they might be Prieſts ſonnes, though borne before their prieſthood: but to be borne of Prieſts, implyeth, that they were at the time of their birth, Prieſts.

Peg.37.1.30.

Ex pontif. Damaſi.

The Greeke Church never yet received this popiſh decree of ſingle life, and their Biſhops are maried at this day. Bellarmine ſaith, that the Church of Rome hath diſpenſed with them, *cap.*18. Ergo, if the Pope would diſpenſe with the Latine Church, it might be lawfull enough then for Miniſters to marrie; wherefore it is but a humane conſtitution. Againe, it is falſe that they have diſpenſed with the Greeke Church: they care not for their diſpenſations, but uſe their owne Chriſtian libertie: neither was the Greeke Church ever ſubject to the Biſhop of Rome. This alſo may appeare by the 13. Canon of the Trullane Synode the 6. generall, where it was decreed, that notwithſtanding the contrary cuſtome of the Church of Rome, Prieſts and Deacons might enjoy the company of their wives. And *Innocent.*3. ſaith, Orientalis eccleſia votum continentia non admiſit: The Eaſt Church hath not admitted or received the vow of continencie, *decret.Greg.lib.*3.*tit.*3.*c.*6. Wherefore it is untrue that the Greeke Church alloweth the marriage of their Miniſters by vertue of the Popes diſpenſation, they doe it without and beſide his leave. And we ſhall finde few ages, wherein ſome Prieſts, notwithſtanding ſo many prohibitions, were not married. In Gregorie the 7. his time, who by excommunication forced Miniſters from their wives, there were 24. Biſhops with their Clergie that ſtood in defence of their marriage. Anno 1191. the nation of the Danes gave licence to their Miniſters to marrie, and were for that cauſe excommunicate by Clemens the 3. ex Balao. Anno 1372. the Archbiſhop of Colen was married : ſic Pramonſtratenſ. Paulus 2. is ſaid to have taken advice about the reſtoring of the marriage of Miniſters. ex Balao.

Thus we ſee, that in times paſt marriage was lawfull for all men, untill Pope Nicholas the ſecond, Alexander the ſecond, and Gregorie the ſeventh, that notable ſorcerer and adulterer : for theſe three comming together, one not long after another, began by publike decree to reſtraine Prieſts marriage : not long after them, Anſelme began to play the Rex here in England, anno. 1104. who ſtoutly proceeded in his ungodly purpoſe, and enacted that married Prieſts ſhould either leave their wives, or their benefice. At which time two hundred Prieſts at once came barefoot to the Kings palace to make complaint : and for all Anſelmes Pope-like and outragious proceedings againſt married Prieſts, yet they continued married well nie two hundred yeeres after Anſelmes time, doe what he could : and thus it is manifeſt, that the reſtraint of Miniſters marriage is no ancient thing, but then began moſt to be urged, when Antichriſt fully was revealed to the world, when as the orders of Friers came in and were confirmed and priviledged under Boniface the 8. about anno 1300.

Argum. 3. What better argument can we have againſt this Popiſh decree, than the great uncleannes, and foule enormities that have been brought, by the meanes thereof, into the Church ? In the time of Gregorie the firſt, who enjoyned his Clergie to live ſingle, commanding on a time his ſervants to catch him ſome fiſh, out of his Motes and Ponds, in ſtead of fiſh they brought unto him 6000. heads of young children : whereupon, he fetching a great ſigh with himſelfe, commended then the ſaying of the Apoſtle, It is better to marrie than to burne. Bellarmine hath no better anſwer than to denie the ſtorie, which notwithſtanding is found in the epiſtle of Hulderieus Biſhop of Auguſta, which he ſent to Pope Nicholas : Fox pag. 1155. col. 1.

In Anſelmes time, after the reſtraint of Miniſters marriage, great rumours, and complaint was brought to him, of the execrable vice of Sodomitrie, which began to reigne in the Clergie. Pope Pius the ſecond ſaid, he ſaw many weightie cauſes, why wives ſhould be taken away from Prieſts, but he ſaw more why they ſhould be reſtored to them againe. The ſame Pope Pius alſo diſſolved certaine houſes of the Brigidines, bidding them to goe forth of their cels, ne amplius urerentur, that they ſhould no longer burne in luſt, ex Balao. Bernard ſaith, Tolle de Eccleſia honorabile conjugium, &c. Take from the Church honorable Matrimonie, ſhall you not repleniſh it with inceſtuous perſons, concubinaries, Sodomiticall vices ? Hereupon the popiſh Catholikes ſeeing their owne infirmitie, began thus to ſalve up the matter, Si non caſte, tamen caute : If thou deale not chaſtly, yet deale charily. Yea they are not aſhamed thus to write, if any of the Prieſts ſhould be *found imbracing of a woman, it muſt be expounded and preſuppoſed, that he doth it to bleſſe her.

Reade Maſter Bales preface to his booke intituled, De actis Romanor. pontificum : there you ſhall find how that the Kings viſiters appointed to viſite the Abbeyes, anno 1538. found in ſome irreligious houſes five, in ſome ten, in ſome twenty Sodomites and adulterers : whereof ſome kept five, ſome ſeven, ſome twenty harlots. O filthy uncleanneſſe unſpeakeable ! Who would not now thinke, that it had been much better for theſe profeſſed votaries to have married ? This was well foreſeene of that good man D. Collet, founder of Pauls Schoole, who wiſhed that the Maſter and Uſher of the Schoole ſhould be rather of married men, than ſingle prieſts : Fox pag. 839. col. 1.

Pag. 766. 2. 60.

Among the Helvetians it was an ancient uſe and cuſtome, that when they received any new prieſt into their Churches, they would premoniſh him to take his concubine, leſt he ſhould attempt any miſuſe with their wives and daughters : Fox pag. 866. col. 2. Theſe things conſidered, who cannot but approve and highly commend the ſaying of Pope Pius, before alleaged, if hee had done as he ſaid ?

Pag. 791. 2. 60.

I but (ſaith Bellarmine) theſe are the abuſes of ſingle life, will you condeme a good thing becauſe of the abuſe ? by the ſame reaſon (ſaith he) calum & terra tollenda ſunt, Heaven and earth muſt be taken away, becauſe they were abuſed of the heathen and taken for Gods, cap. 21.

Anſw. Firſt, wee ſay not, that theſe be the fruites of ſingle life, which S. Paul commendeth in all thoſe that have the gift, but of this coacted and conſtrained popiſh virginitie, which is impoſed indifferently upon all, and cannot have any good uſe. Secondly, when you can prove that reſtraining of Miniſters marriage is of Gods ordinance, as it is certaine heaven and earth are of his making, then we will grant unto you, that it may have a right uſe, and for the abuſe ought not utterly to be aboliſhed.

Saint Auguſtine alſo ſaith, Quæ nubere volunt, & ideo non nubunt quia impunè non poſſunt, melius nuberent, quàm urerentur, id eſt, quàm occulta flamma concupiſcentia in ipſa conſcientia vaſtarentur : Thoſe Virgins, which would marry, but cannot, becauſe of reſtraint, and reproch, might better marrie than burne, that is to ſay, than with the ſecret flame of concupiſcence to be waſted and conſumed in their conſcience, &c. Wherefore it followeth, that all they, both Miniſters, votaries and Virgins, that have not power to abſtaine, ſhould doe better, for all their profeſſion and vow, to marrie, than to burne.

De ſanct. Virgin. cap. 34.

Argum. 4. The teſtimony of antiquitie is very full and plentifull for the lawfulneſſe of Miniſters marriage: Stephanus Biſhop of Rome, Decretal. Aliter ſe habet orientalis Eccleſiæ traditio, aliter Romana Eccleſia: Nam illorum ſacerdotes, diaconi & ſubdiaconi Matrimonio copulantur: The tradition or cuſtome of the Eaſt Church is divers from the uſe of the Roman Church: for their Prieſts, Deacons, and Subdeacons are married, &c. See then, how is this like to be an Apoſtolike tradition, that Miniſters ſhould live ſingle, ſeeing it was never univerſally received? And Cardinall Campeius is here found to be a liar, who was not aſhamed openly to ſay in the aſſembly at Noremberg, anno 1524. that the Greekes did not permit their Prieſts to marrie, Fox pag. 865. col. 1.

Pag. 790. 1. 88.

Bellarmine anſwereth, firſt, that this Canon of Stephanus is of no authoritie, being not found in any of his Epiſtles, &c.

Contra. Thus he taketh to himſelfe great libertie in denying of authorities alleaged, refuſing his owne authors; as he denieth the ſtorie of Pope Ioane, witneſſed by 13. authors of account, as I have ſhewed before: he giveth no credit to Sozomena his report of Paphnutius: the Epiſtle alſo of Hulderic Biſhop of Auguſta written to Pope Nicholas, is of him refuſed: and now he giveth Gratian the lie, the compiler of their owne decrees; theſe are but beggerly ſhifts.

Secondly, ſaith hee, the Canon is to be underſtood according to the practice of the Greeke Church, that it is not lawfull for their Prieſts to marrie new wives, but onely being married before, to uſe and exerciſe that marriage, which cuſtome notwithſtanding the Church of Rome condemneth.

Contra. Firſt, the words of this decree are plaine, Matrimonio copulantur: The Prieſts, Deacons and Subdeacons in the Eaſt Church are coupled or joyned in marriage: which ſheweth a libertie as well to take wives as to uſe wives. Secondly, the ſame alſo is affirmed by Clement. 3. decret. Greg. lib. 5. tit. 38. c. 7. Sacerdotibus Græcis legitimo matrimonio uti licet: The Greeke Prieſts may uſe lawfull marriage: If marriage be lawfull, then both before their Prieſthood and after. Thirdly, Innocentius 3. thus teſtifieth; decret. Gregor. lib. 3. tit. 3. cap. 6. Orientalis in minoribus, &c. The Eaſterne Churches doe contract matrimonie in the lower degrees, and in the higher degrees they uſe matrimonie alreadie contracted. Wherefore it is untrue that Bellarmine ſaith, it is not lawfull in the Greeke Church for any, in ſacris exiſtentes, that are in orders to marrie wives. Fourthly, neither doe they contract marriage in the lower degrees onely, but in the higher alſo; as Deacons are counted amongſt the greater orders: for whom by the Ancyrane Councell, it was lawfull to marrie, can. 10. as it is alleaged in the decrees, diſtinct. 28. c. 8. If the 6. Canon of the Trullane be objected, that maketh it unlawfull for Deacons to marrie; wee anſwer, firſt, that the Ancyrane Councell is more ancient by more than 300. yeares, being celebrate anno 308. the other about 670. and therefore to be preferred. Secondly, the Ancyrane is confirmed can. 1. of this Trullane Synod, and therefore therein the Synod is contrarie to it ſelfe. Thirdly, as this Synod prohibiteth Deacons to contract marriage, ſo can. 12. it forbiddeth Biſhops to uſe marriage contracted, contrarie to the generall uſe of the Greeke Church.

Concil. Ancyran. an. 308. can. 10. Diaconi, ſi in ordinatione proteſtati ſunt, ſe non poſſe continere, & velle uxores ducere, hi poſtea, ſi ad nuptias venerint, maneant in miniſterio, &c. Deacons, which when they are ordained, doe proteſt that they cannot containe, but doe purpoſe to marrie, if afterward they marrie, let them continue ſtill in their miniſterie.

This Canon is alſo alleaged by Bellarmine, to prove that marriage is not lawfull for Miniſters, unleſſe they be diſpenſed with by the Biſhop; becauſe it followeth in the Canon, Quia Epiſcopus, &c. Becauſe the Biſhop gave them leave, that is, Deacons to marrie they may be ſuffered ſo to doe.

Anſw. Firſt, if the Biſhop may diſpenſe with the marriage of Miniſters, then is it no Apoſtolicall conſtitution; for then it were not in the Biſhops power to diſpenſe. Secondly, the marriages then of the Miniſters of the Goſpell by your owne Canon are lawfull, becauſe both they and their Biſhops are enabled to marrie by the law of the Prince; which is more than the diſpenſation of a Biſhop. Thirdly, it is not the diſpenſation of the Biſhop, but the libertie of the Apoſtle, that maketh the marriage of Miniſters lawfull, as diſtinct. 27. c. 5. ex Toletan. 2. cap 1. conceſſam ab Apoſtolo licentiam, &c. We cannot take away the licence or libertie of marriage granted by the Apoſtle.

Concil. Gangrenſ. cap. 1. Qui mulierem fidelem cum viro ſuo dormientem, abominandam crediderit, anathema eſto: He that abhorreth a faithfull woman becauſe ſhe ſleepeth with her husband, accurſed be hee. And more apertly chap. 4. the Councell approveth the marriage of Miniſters, decreeing thus: Si quis diſcernit Presbyterum conjugatum, tanquam occaſione nuptiarum, quod offerre non debeat, & ab ejus oblatione ideo ſe abſtineat, anathema: If any man make queſtion of a married Prieſt, that by reaſon of his marriage, he ought not to miniſter, and therefore refraineth from his oblation and ſervice, let him be accurſed, &c. This Canon alloweth as well of the ſervice of a married Miniſter, as of a ſingle: And although this were a provinciall Councell, yet is it confirmed concil. Roman. 6. ſub Symmacho, and in the 6. generall Trullane Councell, Can. 1.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that they are condemned, which condemne marriage in Miniſters as ſimply evill, as can. 1. and this Canon ſpeaketh of him Qui habuit uxorem, that had, not hath a wife.

Anſw. Firſt, the firſt Canon of this Synod condemneth thoſe that diſpraiſe marriage as evill, but in this 4. Canon, it alſo decreeth againſt them that miſlike marriage in Miniſters; ſo that theſe being two divers Canons, they cannot be thought to decree one and the ſame thing. Secondly, the words are plaine, Tanquam occaſione nuptiarum, If by occaſion of marriage, they ſay not as evill, a man diſcerne betweene a Prieſt married and unmarried ; they ſay not, condemne, but preferre one before another, for that onely, that he is married : but thus doe the Papiſts, occaſione nuptiarum, by reaſon of marriage, put Miniſters by from miniſtring : Ergo, they are anathema. Thirdly, the right tranſlation is, Presbyterum coniugatum : as Peter Crab readeth, a married Presbyter, which implyeth the preſent time, not one which had a wife, which is your owne gloſſe, and contrary to the cuſtome of the Greeke Church, who ſuffered their Miniſters to hold their wives. Alſo your owne decrees doe thus read, diſtinct. 28.cap.15. Si quis diſcernit presbyterum coniugatum : If any man diſcerne a Prieſt married, the Greeke word is γεγαμηκότος, married or joyned to a wife, not which had a wife, ſo that the reading in their owne Canons doth overthrow this new tranſlation of theirs.

Concil.Lateranenſ.ſub Alexandro 3.part. 18. cap.4. Si ſubdiaconi contraxerint matrimonium, eos, dummodo ante tales fuerint, quod timendum ſit, ne pro una pluribus abutantur, diſſimulare poteris cum ſuis uxoribus remanere, quia tolerandum eſt malum, ut pejora vitentur : If Subdeacons marrie, if they were ſuch before, that it is to be feared, leſt in ſtead of one they would abuſe many, you may winke at them, and ſuffer them to enjoy their marriage : for an inconvenience muſt be ſuffered to prevent a miſchiefe.

Ibid.cap.4. Nullus veſtrum eum à contracto matrimonio prædicti ordinis obtentu, prohibere præſumat, nec ſibi propter hoc moleſtiam aut gravamen inferat : Let none of you hinder him (meaning a certaine Subdeacon) from his marriage contracted, under colour and pretence of his orders, nor for that reſpect moleſt or grieve him any way, &c. Farre off were thoſe times, though evill enough, from ſuch crueltie and outrage, as of late many have ſeene and felt, when the marriage of Miniſters was made felonie, by that bloodie act of the ſix articles, Fox pag.1135.col.2.

Argum.5. In the fifth place, that the impoſition of ſingle life upon the Clergie is no Apoſtolike inſtitution it may appeare, both becauſe the authors and firſt deviſers of this hard conſtitution may bee aſſigned, as alſo, for that the obſervation thereof is divers, and not uniformly kept.

For the firſt, Syricius is held to have beene the firſt impoſer of this yoke, who was Biſhop of Rome almoſt foure hundred yeere after Chriſt : which although it be ſtoutly by Bellarmine denied, cap.19. lib.1 de Cleric. yet it is by Clictoveus, a Popiſh writer of great credit amongſt them, affirmed, and by Innocentius the 3. who, although the other bee by Bellarmine rejected and confuted, ought to beare more ſway with him : he thus writeth, diſtinct.82.c.2. Si ad aliquos forma illa Eccleſiaſtica vita, &c. If that forme of Eccleſiaſticall converſation and diſcipline, which was ſent from Biſhop Syricius to the Provinces, doe appeare not to have come to the knowledge of ſome, to thoſe that are ignorant, pardon ſhall not be denied, &c. By this it is evident, that this injunction of ſingle life firſt proceeded from Syricius, both becauſe he is ſaid to have preſcribed a certaine forme of life, and for that many were ignorant thereof : whereby it is manifeſt, that it is not Apoſtolicall, for then no Church could have pretended ignorance.

Clictov. de continent. Sacerd.c.4.

This Syricius onely inhibited Biſhops, Prieſts, and Deacons to marrie ; for Subdeacons it was yet free, till Pelagius the 2. his time, who was Biſhop of Rome about the yeere 580. as Gregorie the firſt thus teſtifieth, diſtinct.32.c.2. Wee have heard by the relation of many, that your Subdeacons doe companie with their wives : which thing that no man ſhould afterward preſume to doe, it was prohibited by the authoritie of our predeceſſour, which was this Pelagius. And the ſame decree againſt the marriage of Subdeacons is againe revived by Gregorie diſtinct.31.cap.1.

Againe, it ſhould ſeeme that the marriage of Presbyters was not generally inhibited till the firſt Toletan Councell, which was celebrate about anno 407. in the which ſynode, Can. 1. it is thus decreed : Si quis Presbyter ante interdictum : That if any Presbyter, yea before the interdiction, had begotten children, he ſhould not be preferred, &c. So that it ſeemeth, that marriage began then firſt to be interdict, or forbidden.

Secondly, the diverſitie hath beene very great, and much alteration in the urging of this inhibition.

1 The Greeke Church alloweth their Clergie to enjoy their wives before married, but ſome of them are not permitted to marrie againe : the Latine Church inhibiteth both the one and the other : So witneſſeth Innocent.decret.Gregor.lib.3. tit.3.c.6.

2 The Greekes alſo differ much in their opinion and practice : firſt, Deacons were ſuffered to marrie after their ordination, if they made ſuch proteſtation, when they received orders : Concil.Ancyran. can.10.ann.308.

3 Biſhops were firſt inhibited in the Greeke Church the companie of their wives before married, in the Trullane Synod, Can.12. whereas it was lawfull before : which Synod was celebrate about the yeere 673.

4 In the Latine Church Subdeacons were not a long time prohibited to marrie, as it may appeare concil.Carthag.5.c.3. which was about the yeere 438.

5 At the firſt they were not enforced to make profeſſion of ſingle life at the receiving of their orders, but it was left free, as it is extant, concil.Tolletan.2.c.1. about the yeere 530. but afterward it was decreed, that Prieſts and Deacons ſhould make ſuch promiſe and profeſſion, Toletan.4.c.26. anno 680.

6 Marriage was free in the Latine Church for all the inferiour orders and degrees of the Clergie, under Subdeacons, more than a thouſand yeeres, as it is extant in the decree of Leo the ninth, anno 1049. *diſtinct.*32. *c.*14. But about an hundred yeere after, Alexander the third decreed, that if any of the lower degrees did take a wife, he ſhould be deprived of his benefice, decret. Gregor. lib. 3. tit. 3. *cap.*3.

Thus, as we ſee, there hath beene great difference in the Church, concerning the degrees of the Clergie, which of them ſhould be reſtrained marriage: firſt, Biſhops were inhibited, after that Prieſts and Deacons, then next Subdeacons, and laſt of all the inferiour orders alſo, as of Readers, Exorciſts, and the reſt: Whereby it appeareth, that this inhibition of marriage was not Apoſtolicall, for then it ſhould have beene knowne at the firſt, to whom the inhibition did appertaine. And as the diverſitie hath beene great concerning the degrees, ſo the cenſures alſo of the Church as touching the marriage of miniſters have beene as divers.

7 Firſt, they that were married, and had children after their ordination, were but forbidden to aſcend to a higher degree, as concil. Taurinat. c. 7. anno 400. or thereabout.

8 Afterward, anno 438. in the 5. Councell of Carthage, *Can.*3. Clergie men, not abſtaining from their wives, were decreed to be removed from their office: but yet they were not ſuſpended from the Communion, *Aurelianenſ.*5. *cap.*4.

9 Then the cenſure was aggravated, and Miniſters that were married, were deprived of the Communion: which heavie decree is reverſed: Concil. Turonenſ. 1. c. 2. anno 480. or thereabout, they decree, that they ſhould not be kept from the Communion, but onely deprived of their office.

10 As yet Miniſters, though they were enjoyned abſtinence, yet were not forbidden cohabitation with their wives, as concil. Arelatenſ. 2. *can.*3. it was lawfull for a Miniſter to have his wife with him in the houſe, as well as any other kinſwoman: but afterward they were commanded to be ſeparated from their wives, anno 680. in the 4. Toletan. Can. 43.

11 Yet was it put to the Miniſters choiſe, whether they would leave their wives, or be ſuſpended from their office: as Gregor. 1. maketh mention of one Specioſus a Subdeacon, that was content to leave his calling, rather than to forſake his wife, and ſo maintained himſelfe being a Notarie, diſtinct. 32. *c.*2. and this was *an.*600. or thereabout: But afterward Gregor. 7. an. 1070. did enforce Miniſters by excommunication to leave their wives, not leaving them to their choiſe at all.

12 All this while they only proceeded againſt the marriage of Miniſters by Eccleſiaſticall cenſures, as yet no civill or corporall puniſhments were deviſed, till Urbanus 2. anno 1086. who decreed, that it might be lawfull for the Prince mancipare ſervituti, &c. to make Miniſters wives bondwomen, diſtinct. 32. *c.*10.

13 But hitherto the life of married Miniſters was not touched till of late it was made felonie, by the bloodie act of the ſix articles, Fox pag. 1135. ſuch was the crueltie of Papiſts. Thus we ſee how variable and divers the conſtitutions of former times have beene concerning the marriage of Miniſters: whereby it is evident, that the Apoſtles have not impoſed this yoke of ſingle life; for their conſtitutions are generall, and ought uniformely to be kept of all Churches.

Now becauſe Bellarmine taketh upon him to juſtifie this laſt heavie cenſure of the marriage of Miniſters, which doth ſuſpend them not from their livings only, but from their life, I cannot paſſe over with ſilence ſo great impietie, that it may appeare how this blood-ſucking generation of vipers intendeth nothing but crueltie.

His reaſons, for the juſtifying of this cruell law, are two: the firſt, that married Miniſters are worthie to die, becauſe they doe breake their vow: the ſecond is taken out of the ſaying of Hierome, that a Biſhop begetting children, quaſi adulter damnabitur, ſhall be condemned as an adulterer, and not reputed as an husband: but adulterie (ſaith he) in Hieromes time was death: Ergo, married Biſhops and Miniſters are worthy of death, *cap.*21. reſp. ad ultim. argument. Philippi.

Anſwer. To the firſt reaſon our anſwer is this: firſt, if not the marriage of Miniſters, but the breaking of the vow be worthy of death, then have you dealt moſt cruelly with many Miniſters of the Goſpell, which were never votaries, and yet have been condemned and put to death for their marriage. Secondly, marriage after a vow made is permitted both by the Civill and Canon law, and therefore the ſentence of death is unjuſt, and againſt law in this caſe. Firſt, the Civill law permitteth, that if a widow have taken a ſolemne oath that ſhee will not marrie againe, may notwithſtanding that oath, goe unto ſecond marriage: *Cod. lib.*5. *tit.*35. Valentin. Theodoſ. In optione hujuſmodi nulla cogatur: Let no woman be compelled, but left to her choiſe, &c. If this be lawfull after an oath, there is the ſame reaſon of a vow: for a vow doth not more binde before God, than an oath.

2 Your owne Canons alſo doe warrant marriage after a vow, as *decr. Gregor. lib.*4. *tit.*6. *c.*5. Alexander the 3. thus reſolveth concerning a woman that had made a vow not to marrie, Nos attendentes, &c. We conſidering, that it is more ſafe for the woman after a vow ſimply made to contract marriage, than incurre the guilt of fornication, &c. It will here be anſwered, that after a ſimple vow marriage may be tolerated, but not after a ſolemne: they call that a ſimple vow, when the partie neither changeth habit, nor place, profeſſing to live ſingle.

Contra. Firſt, Celeſtinus the third of this matter thus decreeth: Simplex votum non minus, &c. A ſimple vow doth no leſſe binde before God, than a ſolemne, *decr. Greg. lib.*4. *tit.*6. *cap.*6. Wherefore if marriage be lawfull after the one, then after the other likewiſe: for they both binde alike before God.

Thus it appeareth, that to marrie after a vow made, is agreeable to your owne Canons; and authoriſed alſo by the Civill law: and therefore cannot be judged worthy of death.

To the ſecond reaſon collected out of S. Hierome, our anſwer is: firſt, he doth not directly affirme, that a married Biſhop is an adulterer: ſed quaſi adulter, but as an adulterer. Secondly, there is no great heede to be taken what Hierome ſaith, for he many times in his heat is ſo carried away with the commendation of virginitie, that hee miſliketh not only the marriage of Miniſters, but condemneth generally, both firſt and ſecond marriage; as of the married eſtate he thus ſpeaketh: Fœminæ maritatæ tumentibus uteris præferunt fœditatem: epiſtol. ad Lætam. Married women with their great bellies bewray their filthineſſe. And writing to Furia: An vereris ne ex te parens tuus non habeat puſionem, &c. Art thou afraid leaſt thou ſhouldeſt not being to thy father a little Dwarfe, to creepe upon his breaſt, & cervicem ejus ſtercore linat, and to beray his ſhoulder? Thus unreverently he ſpeaketh of children which are the fruit of marriage: and yet I doe not tranſlate his words as they are ſet downe. And againe, ad Gaudentium: Servos carnis, &c. Paul calleth them that are married, ſervants of the fleſh. Thus he wreſteth Scripture to ſerve his turne; thus he counteth marriage, filthineſſe, uncleanneſſe, fleſhlineſſe. And hee is no more equall toward ſecond marriage, as thus he noteth upon theſe words of the Apoſtle, 1 Timoth. 5. I will younger widowes to marry, for certaine are turned back after Sathan: Maritum potius accipiat, quam diabolum: Let younger widowes rather chuſe an husband, than the devill: a goodly matter, and much to be deſired, that is received in compariſon of the devill, ad Salvinam. If Hierome had this conceit of ſecond marriage, making it in the next degree to the devill, I doe not marvell, that he calleth the Marriage of Miniſters adulterie. But Hierome himſelfe hath given us a rule, what we ſhould doe in this caſe: Non conſuevi eorum inſultare erroribus, quorum miror ingenia: I doe not uſe to rejoyce in their errors, whoſe wits I commend, Pammach, & Ocean. that libertie then, which Hierome had in judging of others, is not denied to us in diſcerning of him.

Thirdly, Hierome ſaith thus of himſelfe, in another caſe, Imitati eſtis errantem, imitamini & correctum: As ye followed me when I erred, ſo imitate me now being corrected. So I would wiſh Bellarmine, as he is ready to take hold of this unequall ſentence of Hierome pronounced of the marriage of Miniſters, ſo to give him the hearing, where he ſpeaketh in favour, as he thus writeth: Qui dixit, unius uxoris virum, ipſe mandavit, &c. He that ſaid, a Biſhop muſt be the husband of one wife, he alſo ſaid, he muſt be without reproofe, ſober, wiſe, apt to teach, &c. Ad hæc omnia, &c. We winke at all this, onely we can ſee their wives: they paſſe by that which they ought not, & objiciunt quod conceſſum eſt, and they object that wich is granted, Hieron. Ocean. Here he directly affirmeth that it is granted unto Miniſters to have wives.

Fourthly, he urgeth the cuſtome of Hieromes daies, when adulterie was puniſhed with death, which cannot be denied: but hee is not able to prove that the marriage of Miniſters was then puniſhed by death: Ergo, it was not reputed for adulterie. And I would aske him this queſtion: whether he approve that law or not that judgeth adulterers worthy of death: if he doe, why is it not practiſed in Poperie? if he doe not, how can it ſerve his turne againſt the marriage of Miniſters? Againe, and doth this Popiſh champion ſpeake as he thinketh? would he have married Miniſters put to death? what then are adulterous and fornicating Prieſts worthy of? doth hee thinke marriage a greater ſtaine to orders, than fornication? But your fornicators, inceſtuous, or adulterous Prieſts, were not adjudged to death: the heavieſt cenſure againſt them, was to be depoſed from their office, diſtinct. 81. c. 12. and afterward this cenſure was thought to be ſomewhat too hard, and therefore was mitigated, and changed into certaine yeeres penance, diſtinct. 82. c. 5. If then by your owne law adulterous and fornicatorious Prieſts are not to die, how much leſſe married Miniſters? for they doe tranſgreſſe Gods law, the other breake but a conſtitution of your Church. Thus we ſee, how by the practice of the Popiſh Church, in puniſhing more cruelly the honeſt marriage, than the uncleane converſation of Miniſters, they doe preferre the one before the other: and thus, as S. Hierome ſaith, Lupanaria thalamis præferentur, Brothel-houſes ſhall be preferred before the marriage bed. And thus much by the way for the anſwer to Bellarmines unjuſt defence of their cruell proceedings againſt the marriage of Miniſters even unto death.

Fifthly, and laſtly, I will ſhew the conſent both of the Civill and Canon law, for the lawfulneſſe of Miniſters marriage.

Firſt, Cod. lib. 5. tit. 27. leg. 1. Conſtantin. That they, quos ſacerdotii ornamenta condecorant, which are honoured by the Prieſthood, ſhould not marrie any abject or vile perſons: they are not forbidden ſimply to marrie, but preſcribed of what condition. But if it be anſwered, that this word Sacerdotium, Prieſthood, is here taken for an office or place of government, as ſome thinke; though that uſe of the word cannot be proved in the Civill courſe, there are other lawes beſide to ſtrengthen this: as Cod. lib. 1. tit. 6. leg. 2. Conſtantius: Clerici, conjugia, & liberi immunes, &c. Clergie men, their wives and children are freed from baſe ſervices. And leg. 20. Clericorum bona poſt liberos & uxorem ad eccleſiam deferuntur: Clergie mens goods, after their children, and wife, muſt be given to the Church, Theodoſ. Ergo, by the Imperiall law it was lawfull for Miniſters to be married. It will be here anſwered, that they are called their wives, whom they had married before their ordination, but had now left their companie. Contra, Firſt, the law ſaith, conjugia, not conjuges, the marriages or the wedlock of Miniſters, not their wives, muſt be free, ſhewing a preſent uſe of mariage. Secondly, if they had now left their wives, being married to the Church, then the Church ſhould have been preferred before their wives, to inherit their goods: but now their wives were preferred before the Church, and ſo they are in the neereſt degree to them that might be: and therefore they are their wives ſtill, as before. Thirdly, the law being generall of all Miniſters wives, not excluding them that are married after, no more than the firſt, it muſt be ſo underſtood, unleſſe by the law it ſelfe, they could ſhew a reſtraint: for the law muſt be taken according to the letter.

I come now to their owne Canons: firſt, Innocentius 3. diſtinct.26.c.3. thus teſtifieth, Uxorem ducere, non eſt crimen, &c. It is no fault to marrie a wife: if it be a ſinne, the author of marriage ſhould be in fault. And againe, Nuptiarum copula Dei mandato perficitur: The Marriage bond is perfected by Gods commandement. If then it be no ſinne to marrie a wife, it is not ſinfull in a Miniſter to take a wife. Decret.p.2.cauſ.12. qu.1.c.21. Poteſtatem habet Epiſcopus, &c. A Biſhop when he dieth hath power to leave his goods to whom he will, &c. fortaſſis enim uxorem habet, &c. It may bee hee hath wife, and children: the Canon ſaith not, habuit, he had a wife, but he hath. Sext.decret.lib.3.tit.2. Bonif. 8. Clericus conjugatus, &c. A Clergie man, that is married, doth enjoy the privilege of the Clergie, &c. Their marriage then is lawfull, for otherwiſe they could not enjoy their Clergie.

We have alſo direct places of the Canons, that doe affirme the marriage of the Clergie, Legitimum, to be legitimate, or lawfull: as concil. Lateranenſ. ſub Alexand. 3.c. 2. In ſacerdotio geniti, &c. They which are borne in the Prieſthood, may be admit to be Prieſts: But none which were not borne in lawfull marriage, could bee preferred to be Biſhops or Prieſts, part.3.cap.3. Ergo, marriage in the Prieſthood is lawfull. Likewiſe Lateran.ſub Innocent.3.cap.14. Clerici, &c. Clergie men falling into fornication, ought to be more grievouſly puniſhed, Cum legitimo matrimonio poſſint uti, ſeeing they may uſe lawfull matrimonie, decret.Gregor.lib.5.tit.38.c.5. Clemens 3. Græcis legitimo matrimonio uti licet: The Greekes may ſafely uſe lawfull Matrimonie. In all theſe places, the marriage of the Clergie is called lawfull.

Now I will ſhew in particular, that it hath beene lawfull for the ſeverall degrees of the Clergie to marrie: for Biſhops, Prieſts, Deacons, Subdeacons, Readers, Exorciſts, Singers and the reſt: firſt, for the foure inferiour orders, of Doorekeepers, Lecturers, Exorciſts, Acolythi, that they may take a wife, the decree of Leo the 9. is extant, diſtinct.32.c.14. Secondly, Subdeacons are permitted to marrie, diſtinct. 84.4. out of the Councell of Carthage 5.*c.*3. Thirdly, it was lawfull for Deacons alſo to marrie, diſtinct.27.c.7. Gregorie maketh mention of one Ioannes a Deacon, Qui parvulam habuit filiam, that had a little daughter, whom the Citizens of Naples elected to be their Biſhop: the young infant was begotten in his Deaconſhip: for it is not like they would chooſe one to be their Biſhop, that had bin Deacon but a while. Fourthly, Prieſts alſo were married diſtinct. 28. *c.*17. Nicholas thus writeth to the Bulgarians, Dejicere non debetis, &c. I would not have you to deprive him of his place, ſpeaking of an Elder or a Prieſt that was married. Fifthly, for the lawfulneſſe alſo of Biſhops marriage, we have a direct Canon, diſtinct.28. c.13. where Pelagius conſenteth to the election of a married Biſhop elected to Syracuſa, though he deferred it a whole yeere, yet at the length gave conſent. Thus have we the teſtimonie of their owne Canons for the approbation of Miniſters marriage.

Let us adde the ſeale of Martyrs, M. Lambert Martyr out of S. Paul thus ſaying, They that cannot abſtaine let them marrie, &c. 1 *Cor.*7.9. inferreth thus, this proveth well, that all Prieſts wanting continencie of heart, had need to marry to avoid burning luſt, *Fox pag.*1104.*col.*1.

P.113[illegible].60.

Concerning the conſent of other Chriſtian Churches, it is here very pregnant: 1. For the Eaſt Churches, Ieremie telleth us what the uſe of the Greeke Church is: We give unto thoſe Prieſts, which cannot continue virgins, uxores accipiendi poteſtatem, power to take wives, but before they are made Prieſts, and are conſecrated, for God hath appointed matrimonie: and we are not ignorant, that much uncleanneſſe is practiſed among them, qui ſacerdotes uxores accipere prohibent, which denie Prieſts to take wives: Nilus alſo ſheweth how in the 13. Canon of the ſixth generall Councell, that cuſtome of the Roman Church is condemned, who required of ſuch as were to bee made Prieſts and Deacons, that they ſhould profeſſe, quod non ultra ſuis copulentur uxorib. that they ſhould no longer keepe company with their wives: and they decree ſuch marriages to remaine in force, not [a] diſſolving their ſocietie with their wives. 2. The Muſcovites doe herein follow the Greeke Church: [b] they condemne the Romane Prieſts, becauſe they bend themſelves by oath to a ſingle life: ſeeing the Councell of Gangea, can 4. denounceth, anathema againſt him, qui ſpernit ſacerdotem uxorem habentem, which deſpiſeth a Prieſt having a wife. Nay yet more, [c] neminem uxore carentem, &c. they admit none unto the Prieſthood, that hath not a wife: [d] though they allow not their Prieſts to marrie againe, their firſt wives being dead. 3. [e] The Prieſts in India are married, and neverthel eſſe ceaſe not to execute their duties. 4. [f] The Prieſts of the Armenians are married. 5. [g] In Syria the Prieſts are married as in Greece. 6. [h] In Cyprus the Biſhops in all ages have beene married, as well as the Prieſts.

And this cuſtome he ſaith prevailed till the time of the Nicen Councell. That Pope Syricius was the firſt that enjoyned Prieſts ſingle life, is affirmed by Polydore: yet he could not cleane take away marriage from them, till Gregory the 7. came to be Pope, anno 1074.

The ſecond part, whether any ought to be admitted to the Miniſterie after ſecond marriage.

The Papiſts.

84. Error.

THey deny not, but that Biſhops and Miniſters having beene once married, are rightly ordained, ſo that afterward they doe not company with their wives: but they which have beene either themſelves twice married, or have married a widow, which had a husband before, are utterly uncapable of holy orders, Bellarm. cap. 23. Rhemiſt. Timoth. 3. ſect. 4. And this they call Bigamie.

1 Tim. 4. 2.
1 Tim. 5. 9.

Argum. 1. They reaſon thus out of S. Pauls words, 1 Tim. 4. 2. A Biſhop muſt be the husband of one wife: that is, ſay they, that no kind of way was Bigamus, or had two wives either at once, or one after another. And they prove their interpretation thus. Firſt, as S. Paul deſcribeth a widow of the Church, 1 Tim. 5. 9. that hath been the wife of one husband, ſo here he ſaith of a Biſhop, that he ſhould be the husband of one wife: but that is meant, ſucceſſivè, of one husband after another: for it was never ſeene that one woman ſhould have more husbands than one at once, nor never ſuffered either amongſt the Jewes or Gentiles: therefore it muſt be ſo taken here, a husband of one wife, that is, who hath beene but once married, as it is taken there, a wife of one husband, that never had more, not only ſimul, at once, but not ſucceſſivè, not ſucceſſively one after another, Bellarm. cap. 23.

Anſw. Firſt, there were many women both among the Jewes and Gentiles, that had forſaken their firſt husbands, and were unlawfully coupled to others, and ſo had moe husbands at once; and likewiſe many men that had done the like to their wives, but afterward repented, and were converted to the Chriſtian faith; but yet were not admitted to any publike office in the Church, becauſe of their former infamous life. Of ſuch the Apoſtle ſpeaketh in both theſe places, and not of thoſe that married one wife, or one husband after another. It is therefore great boldneſſe, and a greater untruth to ſay, that there were none ſuch heard of in thoſe dayes: for although it were neither lawfull then nor now, yet both many ſuch were heard of in thoſe daies, and it were no hard matter to find out ſome now among the Papiſts, that have had more than one wife at once.

Secondly, the Jeſuite might have remembred himſelfe, how elſewhere, helping to excuſe the Councell of Neocæſarea, which decreed thus, Can. 7. Presbyterum convivio ſecundarum nuptiarum intereſſe non debere, That a Prieſt ſhould not be preſent at a ſecond marriage feaſt; hath deviſed this ſhift, Concilium loqui de eo, qui duas ſimul Uxores habet, That the Councell calleth that ſecond marriage, when as a man hath two wives together, Bellarm. de conciliis lib. 2. cap. 8. Why then ſhould hee thinke it ſtrange, that we ſo underſtand Saint Paul, as giving a caveat againſt ſuch as had two wives together?

Thirdly, Saint Hierome thus expoundeth the Apoſtle, writing in this manner: Hoc, quod dicit unius uxoris virum, &c. This, which the Apoſtle ſaith, the husband of one wife, may be otherwiſe expounded: the firſt Church of Chriſt did conſiſt of the remnant of Iſrael: the Apoſtle did know that it was tolerated in the law to have children by divers wives, yea, the Prieſts themſelves uſed that libertie: wherefore he commandeth, that the Miniſters of Chriſts Church ſhould not challenge the ſame licence, that they ſhould have two or three marriages together, but at one time every man his ſingle wife; *Hierom. Ocean.tom.*3.

Fourthly, he is not to be counted Bigamus, or Digamus, that is coupled and joyned to one wife after another lawfully, but he that unlawfully at once enjoyeth more than one, Fulk. annot. 1. *Tim.*5.*ſect.6.& cap.*3.*ſect.*4.

To this agreeth that decree of Nicholaus the firſt: Ut Laicus Uxorem ſimul & concubinam habens non communicet Eccleſia, That a lay man, keeping a wife and a concubine together, ſhould not communicate with the Church. And againe, Decret.ſeptim.de regibus. An non diſtricta ultione feriendus es, qui in duabus uxoribus adulterium & flagitium Lamech imitatus es? Are you not ſeverely to bee cenſured, which have plaied the adulterer with two wives? &c. Thus he writeth to King Lotharius, who had two wives together, Teberga, and Gualdreda: And ſuch as theſe are truly called Bigami. And thus is this word taken both in the Civill and Canon law: as *Cod.*5.*leg.*2.Dioclet. Binas habens uxores eſt infamis: He that hath two wives (that is, at once) is infamous. And to this agree the Canons, *decret. Greg. lib.*1.tit. 21. *c.*4. *Innocent.*3. Qui duas ſimul uxores habet, &c. Hee is counted infamous, that hath two wives at once. And in the ſame place, Licet in veritate non ſit Digamus, &c. A Clergie man twice married, though in truth he be not Bigamus; yet incurreth the penaltie of Bigamie, &c. Here in direct termes ſecond marriage is denied to be Bigamie. So alſo in the Decrees, *cauſ.*31. qu 2.*cap.*10. Primus Lamech, &c. Firſt the homicide Lamech brought in two wives; Fratricidium & Digamium: But the ſame puniſhment of the Deluge, did meet both with his Fratricide and Digamie, &c. Here Lamech is called Digamus, having two wives at once. Againe Innocent. 3. decreeth, that he is not to be counted Digamus, that hath many concubines, one after another, *decret Gregor. lib.*1.*tit.*21.*c.*6. How much leſſe is he Digamus that hath had many wives, one after another? unleſſe they will preferre whoredome before marriage.

*Argum.*2. Againe ſay they, the high Prieſt in the law was not permitted to marrie a widow, Levit 21.13. Which law being obſerved in the high Prieſt, ought much more to bee kept now, Rhemiſt.

Levit.21.13.

Anſw. That law concerning the high Prieſt, did only appertaine to himſelfe, who was a figure of Chriſt, neither can it be extended to the miniſters of the Goſpell, no more than any other parts of his office, that were peculiar to that ſtate and calling. Secondly, in the ſame place the Prieſt is enjoyned to marrie a Virgine: if then the prieſthood of the law is for them againſt the marrying of a widow, it maketh alſo with us for the marrying of a Virgine.

The Proteſtants.

THat it is not by the word of God forbidden, that any man ſhould marrie the ſecond, yea the third time, after the deceaſe of his wife, neither that he is to be counted unchaſte or given to wantonnes in ſo doing (much leſſe he that in his firſt marriage taketh a widow,) neither that, to have beene twice married ought to be a barre or a ſtop from entering into the ſtate and calling of the Miniſterie, if otherwiſe the man be qualified and furniſhed with ſufficient graces for that calling; thus it is proved.

Argum. 1. They that cut off ſuch, as have beene twice married, from having any calling in the Church, doe ſavour of the hereſie of Montanus, into the which alſo Tertullian fell, who condemned ſecond marriage: for if once marriage be no impediment nor prejudice to him that is to be ordained, but ſecond marriage be; then doe they diſallow ſecond marriage, (becauſe a man is thereby diſabled to be a Miniſter) if not ſimply, yet they make it leſſe lawfull, nay more offenſive, and ſubject to obloquie and reproach. But the Scripture maketh no difference betweene firſt and ſecond marriage: S. Paul ſaith, For avoyding of fornication, let every man have his wife: he ſaith not, his firſt wife; but generally: ſo that it is lawfull for avoyding of fornication to marrie the ſecond or the third wife, as well as the firſt.

1 Cor.7.2.

*Argum.*2. If it be as lawfull to marry the ſecond wife, as the firſt, if it be for avoyding of fornication; then ſecond marriage doth no more hinder the receiving of orders than the firſt: but the antecedent is true: for what ſhould make the ſecond marriage leſſe lawfull? not any dutie that the wife or the husband oweth to the partie deceaſed: for they are free in that reſpect, and ſet at libertie, Rom. 7.3. Neither is the end of marriage made fruſtrate more now than before: for he that marrieth the ſecond time, may have as good cauſe to doe it, for avoyding of fornication, as he had at the firſt.

Rom.7.3.

*Arg.*3. Second marriage, make the worſt of it you can, is not ſo great a blot as fornication, or adulterie, or to have a Concubine: but theſe were no lets of Prieſthood in poperie: Nay, we reade that Auguſtine in the purer age of the Church, that confeſſeth he had two Concubines, yet afterward was made presbyter, and at the laſt a Biſhop for all that. Wherefore, there is no reaſon that exception ſhould be taken againſt a twice married man, ſeeing a fornicator is free. And by this reaſon, if after a ſecond concubine a man may be admitted to orders, but not after a ſecond wife: then as S. Hierom ſaith, Conjugales ergò tabula, non coitus, &c. Not unlawfull company, but the marriage bond ſhould be by the Apoſtle condemned: Imputatur infalicitas uxori mortua & libido meretrica coronatur: Then a wife ſhould be counted unhappie, and whoriſh luſt crowned. *Hieron. Ocean, Tom.*3. Wherefore if Pelagius the Pope admitted one to be made a Deacon, who had a concubine after his firſt wife, *diſtinct.*33.*c.*7. with how much greater reaſon may he be admitted, that had one lawfull wife after another?

Confeſſ.lib.6. cap.15.

De Bon.viduitat.c.12.

Laſtly, of this opinion Auguſtine ſeemeth to be: That it is as lawfull to marrie the ſecond time and the third, as the firſt. Ait Apoſtolus, mulier alligata eſt viro, quamdiu vir ejus vivit; non dixit primus, ſecundus, tertius, aut quartus: The woman is bound (ſaith the Apoſtle) ſo long as her husband liveth; he ſaith not, the firſt husband, ſecond, third, or fourth, &c. So the woman is as free after the firſt or ſecond husbands death, as when ſhe was a Virgin. Yet if ſhee can content her ſelfe with her widowes eſtate, and have the gift of continencie, ſhe ſhall doe better not to marrie: but if ſhe have not, it is better to marrie (S. Paul ſaith not, the firſt, ſecond, or third time, but ſo often as ſhe hath need) rather than to burne.

Concerning twice married Miniſters, though ſome in times paſt thought it inconvenient, yet were they not ſo fierce againſt them, as our adverſaries now are, to thinke ſuch unworthy their calling, and to deprive them both of office and maintenance. Concil. Arelatenſ. 2. can. 26. Clerici quibus duplicata inciderint matrimonia, non ultra ſubdiaconatum Eccleſiaſticas capiunt dignitates; Clerkes, that chance to be married twice, let them not be capable of any Eccleſiaſticall dignitie more than the ſubdeaconſhip.

Concil. Agathenſ. can. 1. Placuit ut digami, &c. Presbyteri vel diaconi nomen obtineant, officium non exequantur: It ſeemeth good to us, that they which are twice married in the Miniſterie, ſhould retaine the name of Prieſt, or Deacon, though they execute not the office, &c. yet this is not ſo hard, as to be deprived both of name, office and dignitie.

But we have yet clearer teſtimonies: Innocentius 1. Epiſtol. 25. can. 2. reaſoning againſt thoſe, which counted it not bigamie, if a man had one wife before Baptiſme, and another after, Quia in Baptiſmo, inter cætera crimina dimiſſum eſt, Becauſe it is forgiven them amongſt other crimes in Baptiſme, ſay they: he thus writeth, Uxorem ducere crimen eſt, an non eſt crimen? ſi crimen, author eſt in culpa qui conſtituit, ut crimen in paradiſo conſtitueretur: quod Deus ergo conjunxit nefas eſt appellare, &c. Is it a ſinne to marrie a wife, or is it none? if it be a ſinne, the author is to be blamed, who ordained ſin in Paradiſe: therefore that which God hath joyned together, it is not lawfull to call ſinne, &c. Hence we gather thus: ſecond marriage is it a ſinne or no? if it be a ſinne, then the blame reſteth upon God, which were blaſphemie to thinke; if it be no ſinne, why ſhould it be an hinderance to the calling of a Miniſter? How can he be polluted, and made unapt for that calling, by an act not ſinfull?

Leo Epiſtol. 90. hath this ſaying: Ancillam à toro abjicere, & uxorem certæ ingenuitatis accipere, non duplicatio eſt conjugii, ſed profectus honeſtatis: For a man to barre a bondwoman or concubine from his bed, and to take a free woman to his wife, is no doubling of marriage, but a profiting in honeſtie, &c. Say then, is it an honeſt part after a man hath knowne a concubine, to get a wife? And is it not a like honeſt part, after a man hath had one wife, to marrie if need require, another? If it be then profectus honeſtatis, a profiting in honeſtie, to marrie a ſecond wife for neceſſitie, as it is to take a wife after a concubine: for otherwiſe we make marriage worſe than fornication: Why ſhould not a man profiting in honeſtie, that is twice married, be admitted to the miniſterie?
